As the students and other teachers leave, he slips a prototype upon Neville's hand. After a few minutes, the collapsed professor gets up with a smirk. "Better then I could hope for." The defense teacher muses without stuttering at all.

They wait until the man has left the Great Hall before following after. He takes his wand and casts a silencing charm upon their feet before they left the Great Hall altogether. They silently walked after the turban wearing man with about twenty feet between them.

They arrive at the third floor and witness the confrontation between Ex and the stuttering man. The three headed dog lunges towards the two men and without thinking, he silently stuns the defense professor and watches with a bit of horror as one of the heads bites the stunned man's head off.

His horror deepens as some kind of wraith exits out of the body and begins to drift towards Ex. His old scar throbs like nothing before but he grinds his teeth together as he takes out another prototype, only this one was meant to do something to ghosts, stun them he had hoped not that he had a chance to test it as he tosses it at the wraith and as it sails through it to land upon the floor, the little box suddenly explodes.

Ex and the wraith cry out in pain when the light touches them. The three headed dog doesn't pause and bites Ex upon the shoulder. The light dies and the wraith glares about before fading through the floor while Ex is shaken about until the arm comes right off of Ex.

He uses his wand and casts a powerful sleeping charm upon the canine. Neville charges forth to attend to Ex. He takes out the alarm coin and activates it before tossing it upon the ground. Seconds later, his dad and Padfoot arrive.

"Harry! You ok?" His dad asks, it seems that the illusion charm vanished when Neville broke from him.

"I'm kind of ok... I think I caused somebody to die tonight and another to be crippled for life." He says numbly and his father pulls him in and strokes his back while uncle Padfoot moves to stabilize Ex.

What happened when his other uncle and mother arrived became a blur as he somehow ended up tearing up. He dimly recalls his mother screeching at the arriving headmaster about something while comforting Neville, who sports blood upon his robes. He kind of recalls both Neville and him answering questions, particularly about what came out of the dead teacher's body and how it was driven off, although he doesn't know if he ever mentioned that he created that little box or that he stunned the defense professor...

All he became aware of was finding himself in the medical wing with Hermione to his left and Neville to his right. It also seems to be morning. He sits up and glances around in confusion before he recalls what happened and manages to vomit upon the floor instead upon the bed.

"Harry?" He hears Moony asks and he glances up to find his uncle sitting upon a chair at the end of his bed. He flushes while Moony smiles a sad knowing smile. It didn't take long before his uncle vanishes the vomit.

"Have some chocolate, Harry." Moony says, taking out what appears to be a box of M&Ms. "Thank you." He says in a raspy voice and he can still taste the vomit. Wordlessly, his uncle also motions to the water pitcher resting next to his bed.

He pours himself a glass of water and drinks it, it helps wash away the foul taste. "How is Ex... Professor Snape." He asks after eating three handfuls of the chocolate pieces.

"Going as well as to be expected. We managed to recover his arms and they're working to reconnect it. He won't be able to teach for a real long time but I'm sure that the student body will be happy to have a different teacher pick up the class." Uncle Moony says and then asks, "Ex?"

"Short for Ex-Corpse Eater." He admits shyly and his uncle chuckles softly, not wanting to wake the other two. "Why is Hermione here?" He asks after finishing the M&Ms. "She wasn't with us when we..." His jaw clutches down as the urge to vomit returns.

"The troll wasn't in the dungeon." His uncle sums up and he decides not to push it. "Why didn't Dumblies follow regulations? We weren't meant to leave the Great Hall. We were safer staying put behind its doors then not." He asks and his uncle's eyes flash.

"Really? Where did you learn that?" Moony asks and he answers, "It's in Hogwarts Emergency Protocols manual. You can find it on the same shelf as the book listing point earning of the current and previous years, the detention book, and on the thin book that contains the charter and the primary rules that the school was founded on. There's another book there detailing the state of Hogwarts wards but it's charmed locked so you can't read it."

"Are you sure you were sorted correctly? It sounds as though Ravenclaw would have suited you more." Uncle Moony muses with a smile and he snorts, before frowning as he realized that he didn't get a suitable answer concerning Hermione.

"I wanted to know what to expect during an emergency. I pointed Cold to said books too." He explains. "And what do you mean the troll wasn't in the dungeon? If it weren't, then why aren't there more students injured from the troll?" He asks.

"Hermione didn't attend the feast. It seems that some of your house-mates drove her to lock herself in the girls bathroom." Moony explains and he just ohs.

"I didn't know. I thought she was late because she was in the library. She does spends a lot of time in there and following Cold." He tells his uncle before adding, "She's a tab of a stickler for the rules and doesn't seem to know how to 'play' with others."

He hears Hermione roll over, confirming that she has been awake likely from the very beginning. He glances over to stare at her back for a few seconds. "At least you didn't see..." He couldn't finish it as what happened last night suddenly gets replayed within his mind. He swallows hard as he glances down at his hands, he knew logically that it was a good thing that the defense professor wasn't alive to be possessed by that wraith but it doesn't change the fact that he is the reason the man was dead and another maimed.

"What is hidden on that floor? Why is it there, Moony, in this school?" He finally asks after he hears Neville begin to wake.

"We don't know. The headmaster is being very tight lip about it." His uncle admits.

"Then involve the ICW! Whatever it is, it cause that stupid wraith to possess that teacher, thus endangering us, the students!" He exclaims, his self-pity turning into out rage at the idea that Dumblies was playing some game. One that had caused Neville and him to witness what they did last night.

"Dumblies is suppose to put our safety before all else! He didn't and because of that, somebody was killed, another crippled, and students traumatized!" He says and Moony nods in agreement.

"Sadly, Dumblies, as you call him, has a lot of political clot. He will likely receive a slap upon the wrists and only coming out a tiny bit tarnished." Moony explains and he knew his uncle was right.

"But the board of directors!" Hermione butts in and Neville softly snorts. "Shouldn't they be able to do something?" The muggle raised witch asks.

"I really don't want to think of who they would replace. There are ex-Corpse Eaters upon the board after all. Better the devil you know then the devil you don't." He informs Hermione firmly and the girl gives Moony a pleading look, begging for his uncle to say that wasn't so.

"For somebody who skips out on our political studies, you're very well informed." His uncle muses and he replies, "Cold doesn't put locking charms on his drawers. So it's not that hard to read through his notes and homework."

He glances over to find Hermione very pale and clearly ill looking. "But... this is Hogwarts! It's suppose to be..." Hermione trails off, it looks as though she's about to cry.

"Authority figures in the Wizarding world aren't like those in the muggle one, Ms Granger. They have no incentive to fix the corruption that rewarded them with their high ranking positions." His uncle explains in an apologetic tone. "The Wizengamot seats are typically inherit and has a lot to do concerning the selection of the Minster of Magic."

"This body is made up of pure-bloods I take it?" Hermione asks and he nods while Moony says, "Yes it is."

"But... but... but!" Hermione stutter out and he sighs. He really hated to break it to her but she really needs to hear it, if only to begin looking into researching this herself if only to provide him wrong.

"Whatever picture the professor painted for you and your family... It won't happen, Hermione. The pure-bloods are in decline so Hogwarts has become dependent upon muggle raised wizards and witches getting enrolled here. It's to the point where all promising muggled raised graduates automatically leave the UK, leave Europe all together, to get promising jobs. Only those marrying into old families can expect to raise up from the typical jobs the muggle raised are forced into." He tells her.

"Like your mother." Hermione states as an example and he nods. "But that's discrimination!"

"Our world is filled with it." Neville replies. "And it'll remain like that until it breaks under it."

"You make it sound as if the Wizarding world is dying!" Hermione exclaims and he grins. "Here in the UK? Most definitely." Neville says with a sigh.

"Then why isn't anyone doing anything?" Hermione asks and Moony replies, "Because most wizards and witches prefer to do what's easy instead of what's right."

Silence hangs in the room until the doors open and the rest of his family, with the exception of Colin, comes to visit him and Neville. Hermione returns to laying down upon the bed, more then likely brooding over what she has heard.

- [T] -

"How did I get involve in this again?" Hermione wonders as they walk on top of the snow. He managed to convince his two uncles to part, temporarily, with their ice skimmers so that Neville and Hermione can join him on finding the cave in which the Acromantula spend the winter in.

"Cause you followed Neville, who was following my brother." Colin explains. He really didn't know how Colin discovered his plans but it seems that for once, Colin wasn't going to ruin them by telling an adult.

"And we're..." "Here to..." "Supervise!" The Weasley twins say while riding upon brooms.

"I thought it was because of the money you can get from helping to harvest Acromantula venom." Neville pipes in, his best friend is carrying two wooden spears, each tipped with flint and covered in Acromantula killing runes. Hermione carries another while Cold has his spare bow and quiver of Acromantula killing arrows. The older twins didn't bring anything other then larger packs, their own empty vials, wands, and the brooms.

"Hey look! Unicorns!" He says as he pauses to watch as a small family unit walk through the meadow to his far right. They seemingly appearing out of nowhere and doesn't seem to mind the party of students trailing through the forest. The others pause to watch the herd, he hears Hermione sighing at the sight.

They resume trekking through the forest, he uses his wand to help locate the nest. It was around noon did they finally locate a cave entrance. He touches the block to find that the webbing is firm, very firm.

"Trap door spiders do something similar." Hermione says and he nods while studying the 'cork'. "What now?" The only witch in the party asks.

"We burn a good size hole into it. It should be made up of webbing, branches, and leaves." He muses. "Forge, Gred? You think you can handle this?" He asks the twins hovering over the snow covered ground.

"But of course!" The two say at the same time. He moves back to give the pair more room. Within seconds a good size hole is made and he takes out a few muggle flares, breaking them before tossing them into the hole.

He doesn't hear anything from within the cave in regards to the flares. He moves forward after readying his bow and an arrow. His ice skimmers clicking upon the rocky floor after he drops about four feet down from the hole.

"Don't see any." He says to the group as he rummages through his pack for one of those hovering Fae lights, a spare from when he was setting up his yurt. The fist size crystal slowly comes to life as the rest of the party enters into the cave.

Once fully lit, the Fae light takes to hovering above his head. "Fae light. Flare gave me a few extra ones when he gifted that yurt to me." He explains on seeing the others looks towards the light.

"I didn't know he could fashion them." Colin muses and he gives his twin a bemused grin. "You'd be surprise at what Flare can do."

"Who's Flare?" Hermione asks and Neville replies, "Flare is the house elf the Potters hired a few weeks after what happened that one Halloween. I think muggles call them Brownies."

He takes point and glances at the Weasley twins. "Just stay on those brooms, gentlemen. Carrying those brooms will only cause you to be clumsy." He informs them and they get back onto the brooms.

They slowly walk through the cave, Neville and Colin walk a bit behind him and to either side of him, causing a V like formation to form. They come upon a chasm that seems to feature a firm dome of webbing. It takes him a few seconds to realize that there were Acromantula upon the dome.

"We need to build a blind so that when they swarm, they don't get us from above or from the sides." He says after considering the best way to handle this. "They haven't been hibernating long so they would be easy to wake as soon as an alarm rings out." He adds.

"You act like this is an everyday occurrence for you." Hermione says dryly and he replies, "No, I've just been reading hunters journals, be they muggle or otherwise."

He takes out a box and after setting it down, taps his wand to activate the enlarging charms. Within seconds, it has become glued to one side of the wall and expands a good ten feet wide and six feet in height. There are arrow slits along the sides and the runes of shielding slowly begin to glow as he touches the blind.

It takes a few seconds before a door opens to allow them in. "Sweet!" The Weasley twins sum up as they enter. Once everyone else was in it, he enters it and the door closes behind him.

He waits as everyone gets as comfortable as they can, Neville offering his second spear to one of the twins, Fred he believes. "I didn't know you were profound with runes." Colin muses and he shrugs.

"Why else do you think I don't require glasses like you do?" He points out and Colin looks startled. He holds up his left wrist that has all of his enchanted leather bracelets upon it. "Created a scheme to correct it. I even made one to improve your night vision, although it does cause your eyes to be a little too light sensitive though."

"Wick!" "Impressive." Seems to be the general census.

"We're so going to have a long talk about what other innovations you've created, brother." Colin says as he takes a position at the front.

"Just as long as we have it outside of Hogwarts, I'll be happy to have it. I also have a few extra mind protecting bracelets that I should give you guys before we're done with this adventure." He says before adding, "And no taking them apart to discover the rune schematic either." He directs this towards the twins.

"Wouldn't..." "Dream..." "Of it!" The two red heads say with grins. He just sighs and watches as the others take up positions, although George doesn't really have anything other then his wand to use as a weapon.

He aims high and watches as the arrow soars towards the middle of the massive collection of spiders. A screech is heard and its followed by clicking and hissing. As predicted, the mass of spiders wake and begin to swarm all over the place, looking for the source of the arrow.

He fires three arrows at three massive draft horse size spiders, they died with a screech. He figured that its their size that has allowed them to make death knells. It wasn't long before the blind is covered in spiders and the others get their chance to kill the Acromantula.

They spent hours within the protective box with only spider blood being able to enter into the box through the arrow slits. The spiders do try and move the box but it's firmly planted in the ground and to the wall. Death threats also stream from the spiders and he even gets a chance to kill the likely father of all of the spiders.

During brief pauses, he would use his wand to check and see if there were still Acromantula. It wasn't until close to midnight that there wasn't a living one within the space beyond the blind. They nap a bit for a few hours before leaving the box.

"This is going to take a while." He muses as he glances around the thick lay of dead spiders. None of the others argued and thus, they started upon their gruesome task of gathering venom and gathering their silk from their spinnerets.

He doubts they killed the whole population of these magical spiders, just culled the larger, more aggressive members of the colony. It'll take a few years before they are exterminated. Still can't believe Hagrid was allowed to let loose the first pair of Acromantula in this forest, especially so close to the only totally wizard town in the UK.

He's thankful for the general anti-poison potions they brought with them as more then a few other ended up getting nicked and having some venom entering into their systems. But then, what could he expect? They were all worn out from having so much adrenaline pumping through them for over ten hours, thus they weren't as careful as they could be since their arms would sometimes shake or their fingers cram up on them.

- [T] -

"I need to give you a nickname." He informs Hermione as they wait for the train to arrive to take them home. They were fairly much alone since his elder brother is currently in the middle of his fans, Neville is talking 'shop' with some Hufflepuffs about plants, and the twins weren't here since their parents and sister left to visit their brother Charlie, the dragon handler.

"I'm not getting a say in this, do I?" The girl asks and he snorts. "Thought so." Hermione sighs.

"Hmmm, Wei got a ring to it. Then again so does Farsiris." He says, grinning as Hermione flushes. "But you're as fiery enough to go by Kaida but then with the spiders... Kainda would be so much more descriptive."

"Kyden." He decides after a few minutes. "It follows my own nickname since both of our names start with H. It means Narrow little fire, which fits since you can be so narrow minded and very passionate too."

"Do this means for friends whom's names begin with C you'll be sticking to C nicknames and for M you'll be looking for nicknames beginning with L." Hermione sums up and he shrugs. The train whistles loudly and suddenly out of the snow storm, the train can be seen as it comes down the track.

"My lade?" He says with a wide smirk as he waves Hermione forward. Hermione huffs softly, he couldn't see her face cause of the scarf but he's certain that she's blushing slightly as she moves to step up onto the steps.

I wonder what her reaction will be when she discovers that for her Christmas gift, I set up an Inheritance test? He wonders, his mother had gone through one when he was seven and it turned out have a great-grandmother who was a Squib from an half-blood family who was killed during the 70s.

Which means that his mother brought in a reasonable size vault to be added to the Potter fortune, no property since that had been liquidated by the Ministry. He's not sure why his mom even went through with the test but he's sure she had her reasons, even if she hasn't revealed them.

- [T] -

"How did you time in that room go?" Colin asks him as he walks into their shared hotel room. He sighs as he flops down upon his bed after walking to it.

"Tiring." He replies and Colin sighs. "But I won the trust of two. Managed to get my head to fully transform before I left the room. It's not your four, but I'm satisfied with them."

"Must be some two." His brother muses and he gives his brother a wide grin. "They are, oh boy, they are." He tells his brother.

"Better then a jackal or a owl or a seal or even a snow leopard?" Colin asks and he props himself up upon his elbows. He studies his brother for a few seconds.

"How does a hyena and one of the North American breeds of dimar(search DeviantArt for images) sound?" He asks his brother and Colin's eyes bug out when he mentioned the dimar then the hyena. "Not bad, eh? One normal form with the second being a magical one."

"How big a dimar? A Central? Or an East Coast?" Colin asks, listing the two of the smaller types of Northern dimar,they stand about a foot at the shoulder and is two feet from the tip of the muzzle to the butt.

"West Coast one." He says, the West Coast type dimars stood three and half foot to the shoulder and length of five foot long to the base of the butt instead of the tail tip. The dimars could be considered fuzzy dragons of the muggle type since they had six limbs, two were wings and the other four are legs.

Dimars were an odd intelligent, naturally telepathic species that can also learn to speak human languages. They also rarely interact with humans, thus they don't really know much about the race as a whole. The dimar species range all over the Americas with the Northern breeds sporting fur all year round and the Southern breeds lose their fur during certain parts of the year and growing scales for that part of the year. The mountain regions of the Americas sport dimar that stand at least six feet at the shoulder and eleven feet to the butt.

"You get all the luck." Colin summarizes and he sighs. "You have four forms that you can show off, I only got one that can be publicly shown. You have a wider selection to chose your 'official' Animagus form from, I don't. I have to go with the hyena." He points out and his brother just rolls his eyes.

"I'm going with the owl." Colin admits. "But still, a dimar? Those creatures are just so interest! Nobody knows why they have those second 'wings' so close to their butts. Or why they're color is so diverse even within their typical breed! Their horn styles, some having those branches while others sport slender twisting horns or ram ones..." His brother tries off and he sighs, recalling what that 'spirit' dimar had said.

"We have been watching you since your birthday. We witness your ability to keep secrets, watched as you prove your ability to do what's needed instead of freezing up or begin to study the situation and see how you can benefit from it. You proved your ability to still empathize with others even when you yourself weren't emotionally well." The dimar tells him. "We have need of an ambassador in the coming times."

He looks away from his brother, he didn't really know what to feel concerning that bit of information as it pretty much told him that all of his attempts to slip pass the detection of others has failed. He considers himself to be a very private individual, after all, and is very selective about who he lets close to him, although sometimes, those people just insert themselves there.

He trusts Neville more then he trusts Colin, but then, it's likely because people overlook his friend most of the time, not bothering to look beyond the timid demeanor and flimsy spell casting. He contributes Neville's shyness and general nervousness towards people from his family continuously outrageous attempts at bring out his friend's magic. Their actions screamed 'better dead then a Squib!'

Next, he trusted his brother a tad more then he trusted Hermione since Hermione is still new and is still struggling over her need of approval from people in authority. The girl is socially awkward, but then, her book smarts likely, at first, drove kids away and in time, her growing authoritativeness, commonly known as bossiness, drove them further away. And so the cycle developed, without friends to hang out with, Hermione spent more time reading books and the knowledge learned from those books drove a wedge between Hermione and kids her age, and repeat. In the end, Hermione wasn't a genius, just very well read.

The Weasley twins... Well, he's known them, again, longer then Hermione, but they had a tendency to use everything they know to create pranks. They have a flare for it, he admits, and he could see why they would want to go into business selling said prank items too. He just didn't want the stuff he developed to fall into hands of strangers and he's sure that will happen if he shares his research notes with the older set of twins.

So Hermione and the twins were, for now, equal concerning the trust he plans to give them.

I wonder where I would place Flare? He wonders as he allows himself to rest upon his bed, upon his back, staring up at the ceiling.

- [T] -

"I don't see why anyone even tries to study for their OWLs and their NEWTs." He says to Neville while skipping flat stones across the flat surface of the lake. "Both Cold and I could take them now and pass fairly well." He muses.

"Why don't you?" Neville asks as their stones finally sink into the lake. "I know you'd ace your rune tests." Neville adds.

"Dad and mom seem to be of the opinion that we're safer being minors. For now, anyway." He explains. "No that they don't have the paperwork done up for us to become adults if anything happens to them and our uncles."

"How safely put away are these papers?" Neville asks and he replies, "Well, let's just say that Cold and I are citizens of Canada, the US, Mexico, Japan, and for some odd reason, Ireland. Although Cold is pretty much an honorary citizens of the rest of the countries in the world. It's amazing how popular he is outside of the UK. It's likely one of the reasons we've been able to purchase various items and travel so much."

"Just how many languages do you speak?" Neville asks as they set sailing another stone each. "Far too many." He answers. "I read more languages then what I speak though, Cold's the same." He adds.

Neville whistles, clearly impressed. He didn't see why, those language bundles were damn expensive and causes massive headaches. It's amazing what the rest of the world uses magic for, it's one of the reasons he kind of hopes that his parents will pull them out of school. The UK and Europe at large were like country bums compared to the magical communities of technological magics of Japan and magic empowered floating cities of New Zealand.

He wonders which of the other countries will be the first to colonize the Moon and Mars through magic. "There are extra-ordinary wonders beyond Europe, Leander. Magic is used in different ways then what they teach here at Hogwarts and at its sister schools." He says. "There are people out there more powerful then Dumblies who's minds are sharper, more brilliant in though their age is over the upper-levels you find in the UK. There are times when I wonder why we keep returning to Britain after vacationing in those countries. Seems so wasteful since most of what we bring back would likely be blacklisted simply because they haven't been 'tested' here in the UK and in Europe."

"How come vacationing families or wandering wizards don't report such things?" Neville asks and he snorts as he gets ready to throw another stone.

"They don't have any respect for European magi, Leander since they won't get pass the Victorian era and seem so happy to mucking around in their ignorance." He explains. "And it's not as though European magi are expecting anything but a similar state of what they got at home. The other countries set aside certain place for European magi to visit, shepherding them to keep them from visiting the real hot spots of their country and what they're really capable of. It was a major hassle for our parents and uncles to earn the trust of one of those countries." He continues.

"But earn the trust of one and you, get trail runs in the others." He adds. "Get minimum of four countries to vouch for you and you get a really nifty passport and the option of becoming a citizen so you have a place for political refuge if things don't work out too well back home." He says.

"Sounds like a lot of work, Kanga." Neville remarks and he smiles a bit. "You don't give trust, Leander, you earn it." He informs his friend.

"You must trust me a great deal then." Neville admits and he flashes his best friend a smile. "I do, I really do. You're a great guy, it's just that nobody is willing to look pass your timidness or your apparent clumsiness to find that out." He says.

"You're a great guy too, Kanga." Neville offers with a slightly flushed face. He hums thoughtfully.

"I wonder what our coming summer will bring..." He muses after they run out of stone and begin to transfigure tiny pebbles into appropriate skipping stones.

"Only time will tell, Kanga. Only time will tell."

End of First Year - End of the Story. . . Don't Know

Captain Naruto: Bleach

I don't own Bleach or Naruto!

"Excuse me..." Naruto trails off as he enters a room filled with seven people. They were all wearing white jackets over black kimonos(although one of the men seems to favor pink coat), range from various ages, genders, and species, since there seems to be some kind of dog man sitting behind the long desk.

"Congratulations! Pick a number and you will be promoted to captain." The very stressed out old man with a cane says while looking up at the blond with craziness shining in his eyes. Those eye promise pain, lots and lots of pain if he doesn't do as asked.

"Seven?" He blurts out, really confused as to what's going on. Naruto had only entered into this room cause he was directed here by people wearing black kimonos.

Within seconds a white jacket is tossed his way while the elderly man saying, "Congratulation of being promoted to captain of the fifth division, boy. I'm sure you'll do a splendid job! That or you'll have a splendid execution."

The majority of the six of the seven congratulate Naruto on his promotion while the young blond ninja just stands stiffly holding the white jacket. "What just happened?" The blond genin wonders out loud to himself within an empty room.

- - { T [- -

Before Naruto entered . . .

"At this rate, I'm willing to promote the next one who walks through that door and be done with it." Growls captain of the first division, Genryusai Yamamoto while rubbing his temples. This day had not gone as well as he had expected as they interviewed various candidates to fill the three empty slot of captain.

"You know, we can always execute them if they don't preform suitably." The second division captain Soifon points out.

It really shows how bad the day had gone when neither captain Hitsugaya or captain Kyoraku as the two either try and counter that using reason or cries about such a waste of beauty dying so young as the pink wearing captain continues to envision a young pretty woman getting promoted.

"Get them to pick a number to see which division they become captain of." Captain Unohana of fourth suggests dully. It seems she has yet to recover enough energy from the last fight that broke out within the room. She was a doctor after all, she saw it as her duty to heal everyone before they were none too easily shoved out of the room.

"Fine." The oldest captain states and so they waited about eight minutes before some scrawny teen enters wearing bright orange saying, "Excuse me..."

- - { T [- -

With Naruto . . .

"So you don't possess a Zanpakuto? You also don't seem to be a student from the academy..." The man who introduced himself as sixth seat officier Daiki. "How in the hell did you even get pass the gate guardians?" The pony tail wearing man wonders.

"I showed up in the roof, I got down and was directed to that room after witnessing this huge group of arguing people walk out." Naruto explains. "That's the last time I asks Kakashi to demonstrate how powerful his Sharingan eye is..." The blond grumbles from behind the captain desk.

Naruto's wearing the white jacket while watching Daiki pace before the desk. It's clear that the man is really frustrated about his lack of sword, kimono, and not being dead. And so as Daiki paces, he finds himself slowly taking in his office.

I wonder where all the paper work is... I mean, being the boss equals paper work. Does this mean I won't have to deal with that? That would be so.., COOL! The blond thinks with a grin.

"Do you think I can fit a couch in here?" He asks Daiki as Naruto begins to think of items he wouldn't mind adding to his office. "A bit of color wouldn't hurt in here either..." Naruto muses as he notices the lack of pictures that show previous holders of this office.

"Unless you manage to not just summon your Zanpakuto within an hour, miraculously learn its name within minutes, and then master both Shikai and Bankai by the official ceremony naming you captain, I really don't see you keeping your post!" Daiki snaps and Naruto raises a minor eyebrow at that.

"I'll have you know I mastered an S-rank jutsu within hours! How hard can all that be?" The blond Jinchuriki says and the Soul Reaper gives him a bland look while standing still.

"You are an idiot." Naruto's new subordinate remarks.

"Yea, yea, yea, I've heard that all before." The blond retorts, waving the insult away. "Now then, tell me how do I summon this sword so I can get started on that last bit."

Daiki stares at the blond teenager for a few minutes before picking a book off of a book shelf, dropping it upon the desk and walking out. "Geeze, some subordinate." Naruto mutters as he picks up the book, called Hypothetical Theories of The Zanpakuto, and opens the cover to begin reading it.

= - [O

Naruto keeps shouldering the twin shoulder straps that holds the sheath of his five and a half long with two foot wide flat bladed Zanpakuto, who's name is Aozora no Kemono(Beast of the Blue Sky), the hilt guard seems to be chain links circling it. Aozora, Naruto's nickname for his Zanpakuto, would be scraping along the ground if it weren't for the blond reversing the tree climbing exercise to hold the huge sword to his back.

The blond walks off the platform now that the ceremony was over and done with. Naruto felt as though his speech went over fairly good considering it was his first and that he's never done something like that before. Aozora had helped the blond come up with it a few hours before the ceremony was to begin.

The crowd that had gathered for the ceremony seemed to have mixed reactions to the blond's appointment.

"I can't believe they picked that guy over one of us" Lieutenant Renji grumbles as the young blond new captain walks down the steps while wearing an huge Zanpakuto that could rival Ichigo's own before it became stuck in its release state. "I've never met him before! How hard would be to miss somebody that small with such a huge Zanpakuto? And how good can a captain named 'fishcake' be?"

"Was he even a Soul Reaper before becoming a captain?" Lieutenant Rangiku wonders. "They never did mention which division he belong too before his promotion either. Maybe we was an academy student?"

"Maybe he's a spy? Or an avenger like what's his name? The one who became captain of third division." Renji muses.

"He won't last the month." Izuru declares and the other two nod in agreement.

= - [O

Two Months Later . . .

"Weren't you... I mean, if your here then who's...?" Naruto glances over to a red head who's a lieutenant to this really, really snobby guy with hair things.

Naruto pauses his hand holding chop sticks over his bowl of ramen to look over at the guy. "Huh? Oh! I usually leave a few clones back at the office whenever I leave for lunch or when I need to stretch my legs." The blond says before continuing to eat his sixth ramen.

"Is that even possible? Or legal?" Renji wonders and Naruto shrugs. "Wouldn't know, haven't been in office long." The blond Jinchuriki answers after swallowing the noodles within his mouth.

"Hey, that reminds me, where's my own lieutenant? I've met with pretty much all of my seated officers but her and all anyone is willing to tell me is that she is on sick leave. I even had a clone check through the other files and Momo has been on sick leave for over six months." Naruto says to Renji after the lieutenant of sixth division sits down.

"What does she have? Will she recover from it or should I start looking for a replacement?" The blond asks Renji.

The red head shifts a bit, this particular topic wasn't something he felt comfortable with. What to say... What to say... Renji thinks while drinking his newly arrived drink, eyeing the bowls that were neatly stacked to the blond captain's left.

"Lieutenant Momo had a minor metal break down after the previous captain became a traitor." Renji finally informs the young captain. "She's still having problems accepting that he's gone." The red head adds.

"I take it nobody told her that he's been replaced?" Naruto asks with a slight frown. The young Jinchuriki hadn't lived in the Soul Society for long but he found they seem to be faintly detached from their emotions. Heck, there seems to be a small number of them that make Sasuke look almost well adjusted.

Must be a lot of denial going on if she's still not over it. Naruto muses while Renji simply drinks his drink. "She's not going to try and kill me when she finds out, right? I mean, if she's still a whack job now, after six months of therapy, she would give it a try, right?" The blond muses while the red head thinks it over.

Silence just hangs between them and Naruto sighs. Ok... That's such a huge reassurance, isn't it? The ex-prankster muses.

"Hey! Guess what? I found this bag of goodies by this shop and I thought we'd do something with them, Naru-chan!" It wasn't long before a pink haired child is clinging to Naruto's neck. The bag is pressed up against Naruto's back.

"What's in the bag, Chi-chan?" Naruto asks as he helps Yachiru onto the free stool to his left. The blond didn't bother to ask the child lieutenant if the bag belonged to somebody by the door, which could be why Yachiru likes the Jinchuriki captain so much as Naruto doesn't seem overly upset over Yachiru's idea of 'borrowing' things from people.

"I see you've already met Lieutenant Yachiru." Renji says dryly while the pink haired lieutenant begins to dig through the bag. The blond haired captain watches as three jars of black ink are set upon the counter before what appears to be rubber gloves, rolls of tape, and paper clips.

"I think I got an idea of how best to use this stuff." Naruto says to Yachiru with his foxy grin. After all, these guys have loads of security holes and better harmless pranks reveal them so they can be fix then something disastrous points them out. The blond captain rationalizes, it really helps that as long as he sends out memos about beware of pranks, it pretty much seems to cover his ass as all divisions have been warned, weekly, of on going pranks.

Renji watches as the blond captain and pink lieutenant vanish after the captain absently slaps a few coins upon the counter. "I wonder who's corrupting who between them?" The red haired lieutenant wonders out loud.

Then it dawns on Renji and he spits out his drink as he exclaims out loud, "Oh, sh#t! No wonder nobody ever linked him to those pranks! But neither of them match the description of the culprits!"

And as lieutenant Renji tries to think how captain Uzumaki and lieutenant Yachiru are connected to the series of pranks going on throughout the Soul Society with a pair of adults seen doing preforming said pranks, the lieutenant finds himself drinking a lot of sake. It wasn't long before Renji found other things to ponder instead of the pair of ninja elves pranking the Soul Society.

The pair of pranksters appear to be adults, typically in their twenties and their genders were undetermined. It is known that one of the adults sports royal purple hair, red eyes, and practically dark red colored skin. The second sports spring green hair, brown eyes, and lightly tanned skin. The two sport elven ears, don't sport any weapons, and prefer to wear classic black ninja attire with a part that covers their lower part of their faces. Their calling card seems to be a picture of a circle with a wavy thick line through it, like a bandit mask.

All anyone knows is that they began pulling their pranks three days after the latest captain's ceremony and that there's a weekly memo sent out reminding people to be on their guard for the pairs' dastardly pranks.

- - { T [- -

Captain Naruto meets lieutenant Yachiru . . .

"You know, that's way too visible and thus anyone but the really distracted will not fall for that simple trap." The blond captain known as Naruto Uzumaki remarks after watching a pink haired child in a Soul Reaper uniform setting up a simple door prank involving a board and a bucket filled with something unpleasant.

Lieutenant of the eleventh division blinks while looking at the young captain. Yachiru knew he was a captain cause of the jacket, although the young pink haired Soul Reaper couldn't place where she met him before. "How would you set this up, Whisker?" She asks the blond, caught flat footed by the fact that the blond wasn't reacting like most people who have caught her setting up something like this.

Naruto gives pinkie his trademark grin and as the youngest captain of the Soul Society begins to explain how he'd set it up, the beginnings of a rather odd legend begins to bloom.

- - { T [- -

Twenty-Eight Days Since Kakashi's Banishing - In Hidden Leaf . . .

"I can't believe it took a week to even prepare this scroll." Tsunade, the current Hokage, mutters. "Let's get this over with."

The other participants of the summoning step up to the summoning diagram that Jiraiya had created. Kakashi wasn't present to help as the man is out on a mission guarding a very 'valuable' spring in Wind Country about a week after they discovered that the maverick blond genin wasn't anywhere in Fire Country. Nor were the rest of the members of team seven sent with the silver hair jonin, just put to work to help rebuild Hidden Leaf from the recent invasion.

Beyond Tsunade and Jiraiya, there were seven jonin aiding in summoning Naruto Uzumaki from where ever it was that Kakashi had banished him. As the final hand sign has been form and chakra from the nine pours into the summoning diagram while the scroll Tsunade had been holding is slammed down upon the ground.

With a slight wet pop, a fifteen year old Naruto wearing what appears to be a black kimono and jacket combo and sporting a rather large sword upon his back appears at the center of the summoning diagram. The blond captain glances around the chamber to find at least two very familiar faces.

"Yo!" The blond says with a grin. "It's been a while, eh? I can't believe how young you both still look fairly good considering its been close to thirty years since I last laid eyes on either of ya." The captain Jinchuriki says glancing between Tsunade and Jiraiya.

"Brat! It's barely been a month since that incident!" Tsunade snaps upon recovering a bit from the shock of the changes her favorite genin has gone through. "And where's your headband?" The elderly blond asks.

"Eh? Really? That's kind of odd cause I just celebrated my twenty-eight year as captain of the fifth division... Got a pretty nice pair of bookends as a gift during that party too." The young Fourth look a like muses, the tan that Naruto sports makes it hard to spy the whisker marks upon either cheek while holding his chin thoughtfully.

"Who in their right minds would put in in command of a group of people, let alone a division?" Tsunade asks while Jiraiya seems to be sporting a calculating look and the rest of the jonin privately agreeing with their Hokage.

"Well... To be truthful, I kind of got the position as a fluke as none of the previous candidates behaved well enough to earn it. Heck, I hadn't even been in the Soul Society for long and I was given the position as soon as I entered the room. Heck, they didn't even seem to care that I wasn't a member of their forces, they asked me something, I answered, and I got the position." Naruto admits, recalling his first day within the Soul Society.

"Although they did threaten that if I didn't do a good job, I would be splendidly executed. Must be doing something right, cause I haven't yet, eh?" Naruto adds with a grin.

About half a second later, twin wet pops occur, signaling the arrival of lieutenant Yachiru and lieutenant Nemu. "Naru-chan! Are you alright?" Yachiru asks while lieutenant Nemu studies the blond captain for a few seconds before eyeing the group of nine.

"I'm fine Chi-chan!" Naruto says as Yachiru tackles him a bit. "Nice to see you, lieutenant Nemu."

"My apologies, captain Uzumaki for our delay. One of us kept going the wrong way." Lieutenant Nemu states. "Shall I take care of them? I believe that is the saying I am looking for."

"I appreciate the sentiment but please don't. I'm pretty sure I know why they summoned me." The blond Jinchuriki explains, not that it causes the tension among the jonin to subside, especially considering the way the non-pink haired girl eyes them, those eyes were very emotionless.

"Lieutenant Nemu, lieutenant Yachiru, met the fifth Hokage Tsunade Senji and Jiraiya. Tsunade, Jiraiya met lieutenant Nemu of twelfth division and lieutenant Yachiru of eleventh division." Naruto introduces the four.

"How about them? Aren't you going to introduce them?" Yachiru asks the blond, who replies, "Well, for starters, I don't think I ever got introduced to them. I was only a genin for about six months before I ended up becoming the captain of fifth division."

"So this is your home dimension." Lieutenant Nemu states, it wasn't a question as such but Naruto nods while Yachiru says excitedly, "So you'll get to give me that tour of your old home after all!"

"I could, couldn't I?" Naruto muses as he regards his younger looking friend.

I Shall End it Here

Wandering Leaf 2: Naruto

I don't own Naruto or Pern

Thank you Yuuki. He thinks to the little brown, scratching the strange beast's eyebrow. Yuuki hums softly with half closed eyes, the bell the brown had snatched for him is in his other hand.

Suddenly the alarm rings out, startling Yuuki and him. The little brown colored flier lets out a squawk while the red and yellow swirl rapidly about within Yuuki's eyes. Yuuki takes to the air, allowing him to get off of his branch. He drops to the ground and sprints towards the three logs while Yuuki follows after instead of popping to the site.

He arrives to find Kakashi waiting for him. He manages to display his bell and the silver haired man checks his belt before sighing and studying pinkie and broody. He sits on one of the logs, Yuuki comes gliding towards him and landing upon his left shoulder.

"What?" He asks the three as they continue to stare at him. "Yea, Yuuki flies, why else would he have wings? And, yea, he's a he." He adds, those labs had check to make sure for him on that one technological utopia. He didn't have a copy of their findings concerning his little friend, but he's sure that if he asked, he could review it.

He hadn't spent all that time in their libraries for nothing after all. He might not know as much as those that attend those schools upon that world but he tries to at least have a general understanding of every subject they sport. He's pretty sure that the device that he uses to travel from world to world could have been created upon that particular world if not for the fact that he couldn't find any reports of them making contact with another dimension; the most he found had to with some probes exploring the nearest star systems or experiments on terraforming experiments being carried out on a few worlds that were just starting to cradle life or whom's atmosphere was decaying.

Finally the tension is broken when Kakashi pounces upon Sasuke and ties broody to the second log, causing Yuuki chirp in surprise. He feels his little friend relax, it seems that Yuuki isn't fond of the Uchiha. He just watches as Sakura exclaims at this particular action, demanding that the jonin untie broody, which causes Yuuki to tense up once more while Yuuki makes scolding sounds and fans out his wings.

"Could you please control yourself? You're setting Yuuki off. He reacts most strongly to the emotions of others." He states at Sakura while trying to calm Yuuki down and succeeds in stopping his verbalization. He gathers the small creature in his arms, trying to get Yuuki to perch upon his shoulders as Sasuke tries to struggle out of the ropes that bind him to the log.

"Well, you all... failed!" Kakashi says and this so-called team-mate's reaction cause Yuuki to squawk, thus causing him to reinforce calm, smoothing feelings within Yuuki's mind, trying to counter whatever emotions the other two were experiencing. Kakashi seems to linger a look at him but he just rolls his eyes.

"But... but... What about Naruto? He got a bell, don't that mean he passed?" Sakura asks, clearly grasping at straws if she's involving him in her argument.

"Oh please, like I really expected to be placed upon a genin team when my entire generation has been told to have nothing to do with me. Genin teams are expected to have some teamwork skills and cause of their parents and pretty much ever adult hates me, they pick up on it and mimic their treatment of me, which is worst then dirt." He says, noticing how Kakashi winces slightly. "Which is why I already had the Third sing this!" He adds and takes out a slightly worn scroll.

"The old man and me made a deal when I failed my first time. This document here allows me to by pass as it places me in the list of reserves automatically upon graduation. Not sure if the old man recalls our deal or not..." He muses, not that it matters as he's got plenty of copies of this scroll.

"May I?" Kakashi asks and he tosses it to the man. Broody seems to recover from his shock, within seconds, Sasuke scowls and glares in his direction.

"How did a Dobe like get the Hokage to sign something like that?" Broody asks and he sends a bemused look towards the other boy, one that says, 'like I'd tell you.' This causes the Uchiha to narrow his eyes at him before glancing away.

"This seems to be in order." Kakashi admits and the jonin begins to re-roll the scroll. "You know this means you could have just by passed this exercise." The man adds.

"I could but, well, to be truthful, I was hoping to end up with some other kids, like Hinata or Shikamaru since they seem rather open minded to getting to know me as a person then just follow along with other people's views concerning me. Just ill luck that I got paired with these two narrow minded brats who can't seem to see beyond their noses." He explains as he catches the scroll.

Sakura seems to chose that time to remind everyone that she's there by shouting, "Naruto you... you baka!" Yuuki let's out a surprised cry while Sakura charges at him but as she tries to leap to punch him, falls forward and bangs her head upon the log, falling onto her back in a daze.

"She was never good at the practical." He says to Kakashi. "She likely skipped out on dinner last night too for that 'diet' of her's." He scoffs, he didn't see why any of their female counter parts would diet when just training beyond the academy would help keep themselves in good shape.

Kakashi seems to sigh and shake his head. "Well, congratulations upon being on the reserve list then, Naruto. The bentos are over by the monument stone there. Just cut Sasuke loose after you've eaten one." The jonin says and then poofs away, leaving Yuuki and him alone with broody and Pinkie.

"So... you want the second one, Yuuki?" He asks the little brown as he stands up. Yuuki's eyes begin to whirl a bit and he feels Yuuki grow a bit hungry, he just chuckles before leap frogging upon the other two logs to get to the bentos.

After all, if pinkie doesn't care about her own well being, why the heck should he?

"How come you are still a genin when Saskue-kun isn't?" Ino demands as he gets ready to throw a kunai at this falling leaf. He glances at his fellow genin and is very glad that Yuuki is resting back at his apartment since he just knew the sensitive brown flier would be reacting to Ino's annoyance and likely 'righteous' anger.

"Haven't you spoken with Sakrua about this? I mean, she was right there when I explained it all." He says, pocketing the kunai he is holding. "I get why you wouldn't ask Sasuke, it's a very sore subject for him after all. It wasn't as though fighting me would have allowed him to keep the rank, but I'm sure it would have help smooth his battered ego." He adds as he turns towards the fuming blond girl.

He spots a few of the others who graduated walking out onto the meadow where he's killing time by practicing his aim. He was just trying to decide on how to celebrate him pulling a fast one on the whole village by finding a way around their block on him becoming a genin. I wonder what kind of rumors they heard concerning my pass.

"You haven't answered the question!" The mind walker snaps at him. He glances over at the other blond, noting the placement of her hands upon her hips. He gives the fan girl a bemused look.

"I really don't see how this is any of your business, Ino. It's something the old man and I set up back when I first failed to pass the genin exam." He informs Ino after returning his attention to her. "So, please, don't bug me endlessly about it."

With that said, he turns to greet the incoming group. He did wonder if Ino will let it die, but figures that it doesn't matter since come evening, Yuuki and him will be spending time in another dimension. He still had a lot of jutsus to learn and to prefect, he hadn't spent any real time reading his newly acquired ninja library.

It wasn't as though he had any real need to read all of it before the secret, second genin exam. Not with that deal the old man and him made. After all, those pranks he pulled after failing that one time still seem to linger about the villages. The hot springs are finally open during the evening now that they found that hidden tunnel that had been loaded with a hundred and seven-one unused stink bombs connected to a timer.

Still not sure if giving up on pulling pranks was worth getting automatically onto the reserve list upon become a genin... Ah well, time will tell. He thinks as the other five return his greeting. Might be a good idea to spend more then five or six days in Hidden Leaf between spending a few decades in another dimension... He adds, it always feels surreal being back in Hidden Leaf after spending so much time else where.

With Yuuki perched upon his shoulder, he begins to walk through the jungle with the sun slowly breaking the horizon. He feels Yuuki's tail tighten around his neck and feels how alert the little brown as the little guy's emotions insert themselves within his mind, causing him to feel on edge as well. They haven't visited this world before so they didn't know what to expect.

There are five worlds that he had listed as too dangerous to visit, seven worlds they visit regularly, and eleven worlds that were safe enough but just don't sport the same appeal as those they typically visit; the world where he befriended Yuuki falls into that group.

He jumps as he steps upon something that moves. He manages to watch as something sporting feathers darts into a fern. Yuuki coos into his ear, he feels the little brown's head rubbing against his cheek as he takes a series of deep, calming breaths.

He carefully crouches down and examines the ground a bit, particularly the trail of fresh tracks that remind him slightly of a bird's. He found a few older set of tracks that might belong to something the size of a medium size dog. He assumes that whatever made those walked upon four legs as well.

He straightens and decides to have Yuuki scout around. He feels Yuuki grow excited at this and with a happy chirp, Yuuki takes to the air. The little brown circles overhead before shooting off to his left.

With a shrug, he continues forward after unbuttoning his weapon pouch strapped to his right hip. He didn't want to be struggling with it while under attack. His clones were busy setting up camp upon that hill they arrived upon. He plans to spend the minimum of a week here, upon this world. He had samples to gather and species to document, he plans to use a camera for the latter and maybe even use a recorder to capture feeding habits, be they grazing or hunting.

He glances up just in time to watch a squirrel like creature sail through the space between tree trunks. A large thick green stripe seems to be upon the four armed creature's back and tail. The beast gets its claws into the bark and begins to climb up the trunk. A few more appear in the wake of the first and soon, up in the branches of that tree, the troop of small alien creatures begin to eat the seed pads that were hanging there.

He walks pass the tree, there were likely more impressive beasts to encounter upon the ground. Although, it's good to know that it's not like any of the previous worlds Yuuki and I have visited. He admits as he pauses a few feet from that tree to take a sample of a flowering bush sporting royal purple flowers and dark red spine leaves.

Once that's collected, he continues on his way. He continues to take samples of local vegetation and fungi. Yuuki comes chirping towards him while carrying something in his claws. The little brown radiates satisfaction and self importance while flying towards him.

When Yuuki comes into view, he finds that Yuuki is carrying what appears to be an amphibian, like a salamander only with six extra limbs, he uses the term limbs since the front pair seem to be really thin and sporting webbing between the four fingers. The wiggling, slimy amphibian is about two inches long from snout to tail tip.

He takes out a small carrying tank and drops the brightly colored amphibian into it. Yuuki had already vanished upon dropping off the small critter. "Let's see if I can't find you some native water..." He muses softly at the neon pink amphibian with bright green spots.

He carries the container using the handle, he rather not put the tank away since out of sight is out of mind. Not that it stops him from stopping every so often to continue to gather samples. He finally finds a pond under a rather large, flat rock. He spots a few other amphibians within the pond, three at least seems to share the pink one's body shape and front arms.

He tilts the small tank a bit after opening the vent. He closes the vent after an inch of water is within the tank. He pulls the small tank and watches as the critter swims a bit in the water, the little beastie doesn't seem to be in any discomfort and he then wipes the tank down before putting it back into his bag.

After making it to a open field of ferns, he changes his direction so that he won't have far to go to return to camp. Although before leaving the edge of the field, he stops for a snack. After becoming still, the native wildlife finally come out of their hiding spots to feed about the field. He had noticed the lack of flowering plants during his wanderings and thought about it while eating a bland ration bar since he didn't want to attract anything by eating smoked fish or meat jerky.

He scratches the side of his head as he stares down at a file concerning creating a large research base and ranch as it were, to do in depth studies of the various life forms that were native to this island. From what little Yuuki, his clones, and himself have found, this island use to sport a gene lab, the building is now an over grown ruin, and that there is an energy shield surrounding this island and a few kilomiles of water.

All of the creatures and plant life had most likely been genetic experiments that got loose in someway. He could only assume that whatever drove the scientists off have either died off or went underground as he found few large land predators and loads of underground tunnels, likely been a sewer system and private escape tunnels at one point.

He sighs, he didn't feel up to requesting or stealing the needed tech to create such a research base. He'll take his samples and drop them off at his favorite technological world so they can enjoy studying the altered genes and speculate what those long gone researchers had been trying to create.

And maybe, before heading back to Leaf, we'll visit Yuuki's homeworld. He thinks as he puts the sheets into a file as he swirls a glass of soda before drinking from it. Either that or spend a few decades on vacation...

To Be Continued... Maybe...

The Escape: Naruto

I don't own Naruto!

He hurried back to the apartment, dawn still just an hour away. His crimson bangs fall over his emerald eyes when he stops by the fence. He pushes his long bangs from his face, he's tenses, expecting to be catch any minute now.

But yet again, his new moon walk about goes undiscovered. He pushes a fence board and enters upon the grounds of the apartment building. He can feel his current body wish to release itself and re-entered into the well crafted mask, a shell constructed to hide the fact that he was up and about the town.

He sighs, he wants to enjoy these nights of freedom. He loves the fact that nobody bothers him, nobody knows him, most importantly nobody is judging him by what they've heard, only by his actions. He glances mournfully off into the distance, almost wishing that this night wouldn't end, that the sun won't raise, bringing a new day along with it.

Well, until next month. He thinks as he touches a faded symbol and suddenly, he's rushing upwards and then into the chakra shell. As his body reforms, the shell breaks apart and falls away, his appearance once more that of his birth form.

He sighs as he sits up and without thinking, creates a clone to pick up those discarded cloths that he had worn during his night wanders. He heads for his bathroom to have a shower. Nice to have a clone pick up those discarded cloths instead of doing it myself. He muses.

"I wonder what missions we're going to do today?" He wonders out loud as steps into the show.

Wave

As he walks down the silent streets, passing over or by the occasional drunk, he finally finds the bar from where these mercenaries wandered away from. He isn't concerned about being questioned about his age since tonight, he looks more then a decade older then he actually is. Nobody looks over to the door upon him entering the bar, likely cause these guys already had such a head start in getting themselves plastered.

Kind of surprising that there aren't more bars in town considering how crowded this place seems to be. He thinks as he moves to the counter looking for a free seat. I wonder what kind of deal the owner has with Gato considering how much liquor this place must go through at night.

He finds a nice enough spot in a corner, the problem is that it seems as though there is a patch of dry something upon the ground. His nose wrinkles at the smell upon his approach. Taking a few seconds to study the site, he decides he's better off trying to enter into one of the on going games then sitting upon that stool or in that area.

As he finds a table that has a few free seats, he becomes aware of somebody moving to that previously mentioned spot and... well, enough said.

"You got cash?" Burn-face asks him and he takes out a few bills, more then a little glad that he managed to get a few bills from other countries. The 'banker' takes the small wad of bills and after counting it, gives him his chips.

As the game begins, a glass seemingly appears out of no-where by his right hand. He takes a small sip from the glass, he resists the urge to make a face, so instead, he pushes strains of his currently black hair behind his slightly notched ear. He studies the cards as he sips from the glass once more before lowering it; his eyes remain blue, just a different shade.

None of the current players at this table seem to be a talkative bunch, much to his relief since it means he won't have to worry overly about keeping track of his lies. Not that he expects anyone to try pumping him for information, after all, these were mercenaries and each have something that they're hiding. Just a step up from bandits really.

Over the course of about three hours, he drank three glasses of questionable liquor and won small pots, making sure to lose the majority of the major ones. He rather not be accused of cheating.

"Alright, it's closing time! Get out or I'll alert your boss." A rather threatening one arm man, the owner more then likely, snaps.

Minutes later he's out on the streets with a bit fuller wallet. He follows the swarm of mercenaries, curious as to where they're all bunking. He listens to what little snips of conversation the wind carries to him, which isn't much as most of them were tired and more then willing to fall asleep walking through the streets.

Strangely, nobody seems to check to see if he's even employed by Gato as he enters the barrack. Most guards seem to be busy napping, drinking or gambling with dice.

"You'd think somebody would be watching the warehouses. After all, didn't that bridge builder hire ninja?" He muses after joining one of those dice games.

This was met with snorts and dismissals. "Who'd be stupid enough to steal from the boss? He's got connections and can always hire ninja to kill the thieves. You should have been here when Spider got found out. Nasty business, that." One of the players states and he couldn't help but wonder what kind of connections this Gato had.

He mills around the barrack, slowly probing for more information. By the time he's heading back to his shell, he's got a roughly good idea of why he should clean out those warehouses. The problem is what to do with the stuff after I steal it. He decides, although he loathes that he used his free night in such away, it seems as though there wasn't much of a night life here in Wave.

Makes sense though. Hidden Leaf is a ninja village so we get all kinds of people living it up at odd hours of the day and night. Guess I'll have to remember that for other missions to other cities. He muses before finding a spot close enough to the client's place.

Two Days Later . . .

"Gato's warehouses have vanished!" Sakura exclaims upon recovering from her dash from the village to where Sasuke and him were training. "So have all the ships still anchored by the harbor." The pink haired genin adds.

"Really?" He asks in alarm. He hadn't expected his clones to go that far...

"Hn." Is all Sasuke says before the typically brooding heir of the Uchiha clan continues on with the tree exercise. He notices how Sakura becomes disappointed by the Uchiha's reaction.

"I wonder what Kakashi-sensei has to say about this disappearance..." He wonders in a thinking pose. "Hey! Maybe we can go investigate!" He says has he gently punches his left hand using his right.

"Naruto! You haven't even finished this training! How can yo even think you're capable of investigating this?" Sakura bellows loudly as he's sent flying through the air upon pinkie punching him in the face.

Well, I offered. Who knew that duplicating that storage seal on one of Sasuke's scrolls would be powerful enough to capture whole ship or warehouse... Must be the strings the clones attached between the target and the seal. He thinks as he hits a tree trunk.

"God, Naruto! You're so useless!" Sakura snaps as she stomps away as he sits up. He watches as the weakest member of the team vanishes from his sight.

Is it so surprising that Sasuke prefers to remain single? Girls are so violent outside of combat. He thinks as he rubs the spot where Sakura had punched him.

Wonder how long she'll cling to that delusion... He muses as he gets up off the ground. He knows why he's having so much trouble with this training and why Sakura had mastered it within seconds.

She's got so little chakra, is it any wonder that she has such control over it? She'd be better off as a medic or behind a desk then out in the field. She's just doesn't do any training without having to be asked to do it. He thinks as his healing factor kicks in, causing the aches of his body to vanish so he can get up off the ground.

"She wouldn't last a second in a fight with me." He mutters softly as he glances over towards Sasuke. "Him on the other hand..." He muses, grinning as he imagines how stunned the heir of the Uchiha's would be if he ever took their spars seriously.

With a soft snort, he walks over and picks up his kunai from the ground before continuing with his training. It really surprises him that so many people are dumb enough to think he's physically weak, its not like he has anything to do in his spare time to do much else other then pranking or training. And now that I'm a genin...

He smirks, he knows that everyone thinks he's stopped pulling pranks but he's still pulling a major one once a night each month. I wonder if I can successfully fake my death? It shouldn't be too hard considering that one jutsu I preform monthly.

Tanzaku Town

I wonder if Jiraiya has noticed anything odd with my shell... He thinks as he walks through the crowded casino. He's not sure if he'll encounter Tsunade in this place but he's confident that if he does, the old hag wouldn't recognize his current appearance.

His appearance is about seventeen maybe nineteen years of age. Long crimson hair and silvery blue eyes. More then a few eyes seem to linger upon him, likely due to how nice looking he appears.

And yet I never try to appear good looking when I preform this jutsu, it's just how it happens. I wonder if its a side affect of that jutsu? Only way to find out would be to teach it to somebody else. He thinks as he moves his bangs from his forehead. He scowls at the very idea of sharing that jutsu with anyone.

He finally just stops at a machine and begins to insert a few coins before pulling the arm. He blinks as the machine pays out. He just stares down at the pay out for a few seconds before clearing out the pay out and inserting more coins into the machine.

Minutes later, it seems as though he hit the mega jackpot upon the machine. "Move it along. We are here to check the machine for tampering." A pair of security guards inform him upon him taking the jackpot.

He just shrugs and walks away from the machine. He comes to a more colorful machine and inserts a few coins into it. About his third time playing the machine, he hits the mega jackpot. "This is pretty easy." He muses as he collects his winnings before moving away from the machine.

By the fifth machine, a group of security guards advised him to try one of the poker tables or dice games. He just shrugs and wanders towards one of the blackjack tables upon switching to chips. He hadn't even spend an hour before he was approached and asked to vacate the building.

He walks out of that first casino with all of his winnings in cash. "Are they allowed to do that?" He wonders as he walks away from the building with a slight frown.

"Excuse me, but my friend wants to know if you wouldn't mind joining us for a drink or two." A sandy haired blond says to him after making a slight throat sound. He glances beyond the blond to her brunet friend who waves slightly at him.

"Why not. Just as long as I'm back by dawn nobody should notice my absence." He tells the blond, the young woman smiles in relief at his answer.

"Great! We know just the place!" The blond says and he follows after her.

Next Day

He finally just sighs and sits down, he found himself unable to concentrate on mastering the Rasengan. I can't believe those two and I... Damn it! He feels his face heat up as memories of last night's activities mentally play out.

"This just isn't going to go away, is it?" He groans as he sighs. He really wanted to master this attack if simply because it'll help him out in battle.

And if Tsunade doesn't take the position, I know a certain blond who's going to die a fiery death. He thinks to himself. He's kind of confident that he can find another line of work upon faking his death, after all, he is still young enough to learn a different trade and he does know how to create shadow clones too.

But still, I was hoping to have some time to get things in order... He thinks to himself. The sooner I disappear, the longer it will take for anyone to find me. He adds.

With that group after the fox, its only a matter of time before the council of Hidden Leaf betrays me thinking they're saving their own skin when they're just giving their enemy what they want, the power of a demon. He thinks, he gets that the Third had tried to protect him but that there was only so much the old man could do when the whole village wants an scapegoat.

If I'm going to kill myself, I might as well do it beyond the village as in, that way I have a greater chance at escaping. He thinks, although thoughts of his friends float up to his mind's eye. He frowns as he wonders why he'll miss the other rookies, after all, they have had years to be friend him and now that he has proven himself to be strong, they seem to be friendly with him, which causes him to wonder if they were fair weather friends.

He'll regret not getting to know Lee better, after all, that teen's drive wasn't all that different then his own. Funny, I can count on a single hand how many people I'll truly miss seeing. He thinks to himself.

But I won't live in a village ruled by somebody who hates my guts or wants to use me as a weapon. I have a right to live my life as I see fit, the only reason I became a ninja was to learn how to protect myself and maybe win the respect of the villagers. He thinks. But that won't happen, after all, the majority of the village knows how seals work but if they're willing to be idiots in that regard, then they'll always be idiots because they want to be idiots.

"Naruto, can I speak with you about something?" Tsunade's aid asks him, causing him to snap out of his thoughts. He's glad that he's long since gotten out of the habit of talking out loud concerning his thoughts.

"Sure!" He chirps happily as he stands up with a wide grin.

Hidden Leaf

He watches as his apartment building burns, his shell should be found bound with wire about its wrists. He can only hope that those investigating will believe that he died in that fire. And, of course, nobody is really trying to put it out.

Just hours ago it was confirmed that Tsunade was in a coma. He didn't care to know the details or to learn who's to replace her. He just knew that the time had come to put his plan into action.

I wonder how long it'll take for the Akatsuki to hear about this? I mean, they must still have spies in this village. He thinks to himself as another person offers up a toast concerning the death of the fox brat.

He mingles with the crowd for a bit before leaving, heading for a bar. It wouldn't surprise him to find the bars of Hidden Leaf overflowing with people celebrating his apparent demise. He wonders if the group of traders he's leaving with will be allowed to leave tomorrow or that they'll have to wait a few days until the investigation is closed.

Either way, I'm leaving this village far, far behind. It's time these people wake up and face the world without having a scapegoat to rag on when the world deals them with a bad hand. He thinks to himself.

The End

Alternate Memory Blank: Danny Phantom

I don't own Danny Phantom!

"Some trickster you're turning out to be." Taiyou muses as the silver furred, four tailed humanoid fox walks around the shallow pit he had first dug and filled with tar. A few feathers continue to snow down from the hidden perch.

"Well excuse me for not being a Kitsune." Young teenager who's name is Akio. Within seconds, the tar and feathers fall from Akio and the intangible child steps out of the shallow pit before returning to normal.

The child runs a hand through his black hair while the other hand adjust the simple light blue vest. Akio taps the tip of his sandals in turn before glancing at Taiyou. Blue eyes glare over at the grinning Kitsune.

"Anyway, it's time for weapon training." The four tailed Kitune informs the young teen. "Which you really need considering you're not a ghost."

"I thought Riko was off hunting for a boyfriend." Akio responds with a frown. "So she's back early and is likely in a bad mood." The human boy says with a sigh and Taiyou doesn't respond, only adds teeth to his grin.

"Great, I'm so going to be sore tomorrow..." Akio mutters as he heads for the closest concealed entrance that will lead him into the underground caverns, thus the underground city that the Kitsune have created. "I'll just have to get back to you sometime next week." The teen adds as he walks pass Taiyou.

Sam

She glances down the hallway pass Tucker, expecting Danny to show up any minute. "Hey Tucker, seen Danny anywhere?" She asks upon approaching the teenage boy who seems to be trying out a new look.

"Eh? Danny? Who's Danny?" Tucker asks as her friend closes his locker after putting books into a green book bag.

"Who's Danny? You know, Danny Fenton, the third member of our group." She says to the hippie looking techno geek sporting a tie dye long sleeve shirt, cargo pants, and runners.

"Fenton? As in the ghost hunters?" Tucker asks her and she nods. "Is he a visiting cousin of Jazz's?" Tucker asks.

"No, I mean as in Jazz's younger brother." She replies. "You really don't know who I'm talking about." She says after a few seconds up staring at her friend and Tucker just nods.

Suddenly something happens next a few lockers down concerning a group of nerds and jocks. Desiree appears out of the vents and suddenly, one of those nerds within the locker gets hit by a beam of energy from the wish granting ghost. The nerd becomes a wolf like ghost being and shoves the jocks into the now vacated locker, the door of the locker gets slammed shut and the nerd returns to normal.

"I see you're boyfriend isn't around. Must have been that wish you made." Desiree says after looking about for Danny and floating towards Tucker and her, although Tucker seems to have fainted standing upright.

"He's not my boyfriend." She says automatically as Tucker seems to fall upon her after a few seconds. Gravity seems to finally deals with the fainted techno-geek.

"Well, this is certainly better then what I had hoped for when I granted your wish. I'll be seeing you around." Desiree says before vanishing in a cloud of green mist.

"Wish? What wish?" She wonders as she rolls Tucker off of her. "Wait... Oh no!" She exclaims as it dawns on her what wish the ghost was talking about. She's rather pale when her remaining friend comes too.

Oh no, what did I do? And more importantly, what has happened to Danny? She wonders as she moves to stand up as teachers and students slowly come out onto the hallway.

Her mind still can't grasp the idea that because of her stupid wish, a friend of her's might not exist.

At The Party

"I'm not too sure about this..." Jazz says as the newly ghostly teen hovers while Desiree continues to grant wishes from the party below. It hadn't been her intent to have Jazz go through the portal to gain ghost powers but they had needed to convince Jazz to let them into the house since without Danny around, there wasn't any reason for kids younger then Jazz to be in the house.

She watches as Jazz tries to fire off an energy beam at the giant Desiree, only it for it to erupt from her glowing teal eyes. "That works too." She muses while Tucker races by her while being chased by an advance looking motorbike, she's fairly confident that it likely came from some game.

At least is wasn't one of those SUVs. She thinks as she struggles a bit more upon sighting various monsters suddenly popping into existence all around them. "I wish I never fought with Danny..." She mutters softly as Jazz continues to fight Desiree with growing ease.

"She's good, but she doesn't have Danny's experience." She reflects before something occurs to her. "I really hope this works..."

She takes a deep breath and shouts as loud as she can, "I wish Danny, Jazz's brother was here, ready to combat you!" Desiree waves her hand, granting that wish, only to realize what she had wish.

Within seconds, a soft pop happens and a few feet from her stands somebody who seems the right age to be Danny but also clearly wasn't. The ponytail teen glances around in alarm, giving her a glimpse of his face.

"What's going on? How did I get here?" The teen says in what appears to be gibberish, the ghostly sword about Danny's waist is drawn.

"Danny?" Jazz exclaims, momentarily distracted. This allows Desiree to swat the distracted young woman aside while the ghost laughs.

"Oh this is priceless!" Desiree says, pointing a finger at the sword welding teen who's wearing blue vest, white pants, and wooden sandals. Each bit seems to glow with ghostly power, just not as strongly as the sword.

"I don't know where I am or who you are, but I won't run away from a fight!" Danny shouts, she watches as the teen that seems to be her vanished friend grips the hilt of the sword with both hands. Danny then charges forward.

"Danny! Wait! Damn it, I wish Desiree would just go back to the Ghost Zone!" She shouts and Desiree seems to pale before vanishing.

Ah crap, why didn't I think to wish she'd reverse all of the wishes she granted before? She thinks as Danny seems to get into a fight with another bunch of evil plants.

Akio

He watches passively as more of the ghostly beings vanish into this metal gadget that is welded by a young woman with pale blue hair, teal eyes, and wearing a black suit with white bands, boots, and gloves. He glances up at the sky, he's heard of stars but haven't had the privilege of witnessing them.

His few excursions out into the human world had always been during the day and only for a few hours at a time. And always, ALWAYS in the company of a Kitsune, who's usually disguised to appear human. He also usually wore a set of human cloths instead of what he typically wears.

Considering Kitsune don't need to wear cloths, he tends to wear as little as he can get away with. It's why he's usually wearing a vest instead of a shirt and sandals instead of socks and boots or runners. The only reason he doesn't wear shorts is that he thought he looked rather like a doofus when he does.

How did they manage to defeat that giantess? All that girl did was shout at that ghost. He thinks to himself as he studies the black wearing girl as the girl moves to the still remaining ghost's side. Then, suddenly, the ghost develops this ring that seems to transform the ghost into a human woman.

"You'd think I'd be use to seeing something like that." He muses out loud. He tries his hardest to pick up the subtle clues that show the young woman's true nature.

"Danny? Are you ok?" The girl in black asks him. He frowns, it seems that where ever he was, he wasn't in the part of the world that speaks the language he was raised to understand.

Thus why he gave the other teen a blank look. "So this is the famous Danny you've been talking about? No wonder you'd want him back." The colorfully dressed boy says.

"I wasn't expecting him to be like this!" The black wearing teen says while the red head seems to be tearing up just by looking at him while the two that appear his age seem to bicker between themselves.

The red head approaches him carefully and he rubs the back of his neck, not sure what the young woman want's of him. All he could think about as the red head stands about a foot from him was, Why does it feel like I'm missing something here? Got to be really important concerning the look in her eyes.

Week Later

He silently curses how none of the Kitsune have yet to show up to collect him. He knows how possessive they were and it shouldn't take them this long to collect him. So not only has he spent close to six days in a land that does a really good job at butchering his language, but then, he's likely butchering their language in turn as the three of them try and teach him their Engish.

He watches as his blood sister, Jazz, reads from a book that seems to be an Engish to Japanese dictionary. He's kind of curious as to what she wants to talk about if she's brought that book out while he's watching anime DVDs that Tucker lent so he wouldn't be bored.

"Eat... fishcake... noontide?" He thinks Jazz asks. He frowns as he considers this.

"Lunch?" He asks and sounds it out a few times as Jazz flips through the book while repeating lunch under her breath.

Jazz nods enthusiastically. " Yes! Lunch!" Jazz says.

"Take-out?" He asks, he thinks that's what food delivery is called here. Jazz seems to consider this before nodding.

Then as Jazz is about to get up, blue mist escapes out of Jazz's mouth, signaling that there is a ghost around. "Akio!" He snaps his head toward the front door just in time to watch as a very hyperactive Uta suddenly appears and tackles him.

"Uta!" He cries out in surprise, happy to see the young Kitsune. "Where did you come from?" He asks the young child Kitsune who's tail is still just a small stub.

"Uta? You know her? " Jazz asks, although his blood sister is talking a bit too quickly, he can guess what she said.

"Of course he does! He's my elder brother! " Uta says and he perks upon hearing Uta speak Engish.

"You know Engish?" He asks the young kit and Uta nods. "Of course! And it's English." His adopted sister says.

"I'm more your younger brother then elder." He reminds the fifty year old Kitsune. "I'm only fifteen."

"But you're a human teen! I'm still a kit, a child." Uta points out and he just sighs, it doesn't help to make his point when he is physically taller and closer to human adult hood then Uta is to Kitsune teenage years, which are usually come about at a hundred years.

"Elder brother?" Jazz asks and Uta nods. "He's my adopted brother. I'm Kitsune Uta by the way. Or should that be Uta Spirit Fox?" Uta says as the young kit remains upon his lap while speaking with Jazz.

"Ghosts adopted Danny?" Jazz states. Jazz seems more then a little stunned by Uta or by the fact that Kitsune raised him.

"Danny? Oh, I take it that's his name before he was adopted. I think I prefer Akio better." Uta says. "And if you don't mind, what's your name? I did introduce myself, it's only fair you do the same."

"Jazmine Fenton. Most people call me Jazz." Jazz says and he decides that Jazz just introduced herself since he heard the name Jazz and Fenton in that statement.

At least now there's somebody to act as translator for us. He thinks brightly as he returns to watching the DVD while his two sister chat in English.

Jazz

It had taken a full two months to track down Desiree, the wish granting ghost, so they can at least try to return things to normal, although she wouldn't mind staying half-ghost. As much as it annoys her, she has grown into the role of protector of Amity Park.

And so upon finding Desiree the following wish is made by, surprisingly enough, Uta. "I wish that Sam's wish concerning Danny will be reverse and that we five and the Kitsune race will be the only ones to keep our memories and any new skills learnt because of the wish!"

"And so you have wished it, so it shall be." Desiree says and the world around them seem to be engulfed in light.

When her sight returns, she finds herself in the living room with Danny, Sam, and Tucker. Uta didn't seem to be around, which was kind of nice since the young Kitsune did enjoy pranking a little too much but also found she missed Uta since the little brat had grown on her.

"It's like I was hit over the head with a shovel." Danny complains in perfect English. She does sympathize with that statement as she also feels like she was hit, hit hard, with something.

Before any of them know it, they were engaging in a group hug. "It's good to have you back, little brother." She says.

"It's nice to be back. Although I am going to miss having an excuse to not go to school." Danny replies.

"So, who's up for Nasty Burger?" Tucker asks. "Although before we go, I really need to change my cloths. I can't believe I was dressing as a hippie from the seventies... Talk about uncool."

The End

Animorphs with Anime Characters

I don't own Animorphs or assorted anime character that appear!

Cassie

Daze finally lets up and with surprising familiarity, she glances up at the sky just in time to spot Elfangor's ship comes down to earth. "And so it begins!" She hears Rachel say before her best friend takes off running towards the crash site.

Within seconds, she's following Rachel at a slow run. Nothing ever changes... She thinks they enter into the construction site.

Ranma

He glances around the group to find two very familiar faces, Ichigo and Naruto. Naruto looks bewildered while Ichigo seems to be curious about where they are. Before either of three of them could say anything to each other, one of the girls they are with says before running off into what looks to be an old construction site, "And so it begins!"

The second one soon follows after the first and with a grin, Naruto takes off after the two. Ichigo sighs and together they follow the hyperactive blond who's following the two girls. He's a bit surprised to see an alien space ship landing within the site and feels a sense of dread mounting up within him.

"Wow, a real live space ship. How cool is that, Cassie?" The first girl declares loudly and he can tell that the girl is faking it, but it seems that it works well enough cause this causes somebody within the ship to respond.

The space ship comes to rest not that far from them within seconds of them entering into this site. "Look at that, it looks like a tail." Ichigo says very softly, it seems that neither of the two strange girls.

"Hello?" The seemingly bolder girl exclaims at the ship. They continue towards the ship, although when the two girls stop, Ichigo and Naruto stop as well, although he moves to stand a bit before those two.

Don't be afraid. I will not harm you. Is said within his head after a few seconds of landing.

"Wow." Naruto mutters and seems to startle the two girls as they glance their way. "Yo!" The bright haired blond says with a wide grin.

"What... But... Huh?" The yet to be named girl stutters out, clearly not knowing what to say concerning their appearance in the group instead of their usually member.

"How about we discuss this later, ok? I think we got something more important to do now." He says smoothly.

"Agreed." Cassie says quickly and sends a look to the not so brightly colored blond girl. The first blinks before finally nodding.

"Hey in there! Is this encounter going to be broadcasted or what?" The loud blond calls out and he resists the urge to palm his face at how blunt Naruto is.

I'm afraid that this meeting will not be broadcast. It would cause you and your friends to become captured before the night is out I'm afraid. The alien explains and then a door appears to reveal a blue furred centaur alien.

"You're worst then Marco." The still unnamed girl hisses as they approach the ship. I seriously doubt that. He thinks before the alien collapses by the end of the ramp.

"You ok?" Naruto asks in alarm, it seems as though the blond hadn't realize just how injured the alien was. "You're not dying on us, are you?"

I'm afraid that I can't deny that statement. The alien admits, the voice was rather softly and filled with sorrow. He tries to access his Ki and found that, for now, his usual abilities seem to be unavailable.

He sends a questioning look over to Ichigo and the vizard shakes his head. Naruto's already kneeling by the alien's side, he can only imagine the look upon the blond's face. We've been here for barely an half hour and he's already emotionally attached to the new arrival. He reflects.

Rachel

She couldn't help but glance between the three strangers with Cassie and herself. The bright blond has to be a bottle blond since she's has yet to met somebody with such bright colored hair, to the orange haired guy who might be another dye job, and finally upon the slightly cute one sporting a pigtail.

I wonder what the Crayak has something to do with their appearance? She thinks. I should have guessed something was wrong when Tobais didn't do his usually line when the ship landed...

While she's thinking death threats concerning the Crayak, especially if the three guys were being tormented. It's bad enough dealing with time loops, now we get to deal with a bunch of strangers trying to take over their roles? Brings to mind those few loops where we weren't the Animorphs... Those always crashed rather spectacularly. She thinks while Elfangor explains about the invasion.

Cassie then heads into the ship to get the blue cube, sure they know the other names of it but they've grown use to their name for it. "What does this thing do?" The orange hair guy asks, speaking for the first time when Cassie gives the cube to Ax's brother.

This will allow you to become any species that you touch, to morph into them. You will acquire their DNA pattern, enabling you to become that beast for only two hours at a time. Elfangor explains. We much hurry, they are coming.

As they place their hands upon the cube, she notices a frown upon the bottle blond's face. "Can you morph?" The blond asks suddenly as Elfangor gets them to leave.

I have that ability... Elfangor says and she glances over at Cassie with wide eyes, as if this was the first they heard of this.

"Does morphing heal damage?" The pigtail asks and Elfangor admit that it does. "Then what's stopping you from morphing and coming with us?" The black haired guy asks.

Huh... You know, why didn't we wonder about it before? I mean, we know morphing heals even fatal injuries, regrowing limbs, sometimes even whole bodies. She thinks, she then flushes as she recalls that they usually had other things to worry about.

I might be able to. Elfangor admits hastily.

"Think about it this way, if we're to deal with these Yeerks, would we be more successful with an expert leading us? Or for us to stumble along with a very vague clue as to what's what?" The blond remarks.

We did a fairly good job stumbling along. She thinks with a growl, kind of offended by the blond's remarks. Although, I'm sure Tobias would have enjoyed spending more time with his father...

Then I shall try. Elfangor says while Ranma quotes Yoda, "Do or do not, there is no try."

Elfangor smiles and slowly, the Andalite begins to shrink while limbs later. In time, the famous war-prince becomes some kind of multi-winged bird like creature. We must hurry! Elfangor says and before Elfangor could take to the air, the blond quickly tucks the alien bird under arm and just takes off.

She doesn't have time to wonder as she follows after the three guys. Cassie follows a half a second after-wards. Nobody says anything, they just run and run. Finally the guys slow down to a quick walk.

"There we go. Sorry about that, but thought it better if you didn't fly off since they might be able to detect that." The bottle blond says while moving Elfangor from under his arm.

You have a good point but a little warning would have been nice. Elfangor says perched upon the bottle blond's arm.

"I'll remember that for next time." The blond says sincerely. "By the way, we didn't get around to doing introductions. I'm Naruto."

I am Elfangor-Sirinial-Shamtul. Elfangor says while she's a bit puzzled about the name since it didn't seem like something you usually name a kid. At least not in America.

"I'm Ranma and this is Ichigo." The pigtail guy says and Cassie's eyes seem to light up, it seems that her best friend knows at least one of those names.

"I'm Rachel and this is Cassie." She says when the morphed Elfangor glances towards her. She found this whole thing to be rather surreal.

"We should split up and head home before whoever they are begins to search the streets." Ichigo suggests.

"Agreed." She says before asking Elfangor, "Will you be leaving us now or will you be going home with one of us?"

I think it would be better if I left you. I'm sure we'll met again, once I've acquired a human morph. The war-prince says and with that, Elfangor takes to the air, leaving them very much alone.

"I wonder if he wants this back?" Ranma muses and she finds the guy holding the blue cube. "Likely later." Ichigo muses, although it seems as thought the loud Naruto was already heading off.

As Cassie and her head off in the same direction, she asks, "What do you know of one of them? I saw your eyes light up when Ranma introduced himself and Ichigo."

"Ranma's name is the one I recognized. He looks so much like the Ranma from Ranma 1/2." Cassie explains and adds, "In the show, Ranma's cursed to become a young girl when splashed with cold water and returns to being a guy with warm to hot water. He's also an expert martial artist and engaged to at least three girls. The show is an action comedy."

"So we're dealing with a cartoon character?" She asks and Cassie replies, "It seems that way."

Naruto

"You weren't kidding about your dad being a vet, huh?" He says as he moves to study a fox in one of the lower cages. You know, this is likely the closest I've never gotten to an actual fox without it being dead.

"You know, that might be a good starter for you guys' first morph." Cassie muses and he glances over at Ichigo and Ranma. He grins a bit before standing up and leaning on one of the poles.

"Have any of us done a fox before?" Rachel wonders while Cassie seems to be studying the various animals within the cages with a critical eye. "You guys got any particular animal you want to try?"

"You got anything with wings?" He couldn't help but ask, his chakra was wind elementa so he wouldn't mind something that reminded him of it. For some odd reason, both Cassie and Rachel gave him a hard look.

"Is it something I said?" He asks and the two girls just glance at each other.

"Well, you see... The member you are filling in for, Tobias, he typically ends up trapped in a morph whenever he picks up a bird morph. It's like one of those fated things." Cassie explains and he rubs the back of his neck.

"I see." Ranma muses before the pigtailed anchor moves towards a cage containing something that might be a weasel or a stoat, he can never tell the difference, although a stoat is the one that changes their coat color. "You mind if I give this one a try?" Ranma asks, according to the two natives, Ranma is filling in for Jake, their usual leader which leaves Ichigo as Marco.

How do they know this? The pair called their houses since it seems to become a rather typical routine for the Animorphs when they begin a new loop. They had talked a bit about various rumors over the phone and other nonsense before they were asked to help out at Cassie's farm concerning some minor act of labor.

They gave him directions to Cassie farm cause he's never visited it before. Ichigo and Ranma had came with Rachel since Ranma and Rachel were cousins and Ichigo was Ranma's best friend. The police officer had shown up while they were doing some work and once the guy was gone, but not before recognizing Ranma as Tom's younger brother and suggesting they come to a Sharing meeting.

"Short-tailed weasel, commonly known as a stoat or ermine." Cassie says. "A little high strung though."

"I'm sure I can handle it." Ranma says and he couldn't help but laugh while Ichigo mutters, "Famous last words."

Ranma sends them a minor glare before steeling himself as he opens the cage and snatches the stoat before it backed away. He watches as the stoat bites down upon Ranma's hand and stays there before it finally relaxes.

Ranma withdraws his hand and lets go of the stoat after the little beastie shakes off the effects of acquiring the critter's DNA. Ranma moves into a stall with Cassie repeating the instructions upon drawing out the DNA, not that Cassie likely need to, they all have had plenty of experience becoming Animagi while attending Hogwarts.

The first thing that happens to Ranma is fur growing and body shrinking while it begins to alter the limbs, causing the arms and legs to shorten. Within seconds, Ranma is about the size of a house cat before Ranma's skull begins to alter, lengthening.

Then, upon reaching the right size, Ranma the stoat squeaks and moves out from under the shirt as Ranma managed to get the bottom part of his cloths which includes socks and runners. He had heard Rachel exclaim softly when that had occurred, but nothing came from Cassie.

The stoat scowls and natters as it begins to move about the stall, avoiding the door since that's where they're standing. Surround! Ranma howls, the mental voice sounding bother enraged and fearful.

Then the stoat tenses up and charges at the closest person. You won't take me without a fight! Ranma shouts and begins to climb up Ichigo's leg.

He couldn't help but laugh as Ichigo tries unsuccessfully to get Ranma the stoat off of him. Finally, upon Ichigo's shoulder, Ranma seems to control himself. He he he, sorry Ichigo. Ranma says before launching himself off of Ichigo's shoulder and managing to perch upon the wooden door swung inwards.

What a rush! Ranma says as they watch the anchor climb up a post and before crawling down again. Then Ranma leaps into the stall by his shirt and rapidly becomes human.

"So, who's up next?" Ranma asks while picking up his shirt off the floor and Ichigo glances at him. "Rock, paper, scissors?" Ichigo asks, "Loser goes next."

"Fine." He says and he picks paper while Ichigo picks rock. He grins as Ichigo curses softly while moving to inspect the various animals. He wondered if Ichigo's inner Hollow was acting up but dismisses it since that's unlikely until they can access their powers once more.

"I'll try coyote." Ichigo says upon crouching next to the coyote cage. The blond canine seems to wake and its ear's perk up at Ichigo.

"Try touching the fur, you don't need to make contact with the whole body." Cassie suggests and Ichigo's left hand moves to where the tail seems to be poking out. The coyote seems to blink and moves its tail up and down but Ichigo manages to pinch a few strands.

The coyote seems to doze a bit before shaking itself and raising its head. Ichigo withdraws his left hand and moves over to the stall Ranma had vacated a few minutes ago. Ichigo does some stretches and what not, nobody is looking his way as he moves to acquire the poisoned bobcat who seems very much asleep.

He returns to the group in time to watch Ichigo grow a tail and fall onto all fours. Ichigo manages to keep his shirt but his pants and whatnot were coming off. He notes that Ichigo's taking a bit longer then Ranma to morph but still, after a total of four minutes, within the stall stands a growling coyote who's tail is tucked firmly under him.

"Guess we'll have to wait sixty minutes for him to take control of himself." He muses and that causes the coyote to glance his way. The growling becomes a whine of confusion before Ichigo finally begins to shake his head but till Ichigo says, Damn it! Stop bringing that up! I'd like to see how long it would take you to tame your Hollow, if you ever generate one that is...

"What's a Hollow?" Rachel asks as she glances over at him. He glances over to Ranma but its Ichigo who answers, Think of a Hollow as an empty spirit that eats other spirits to try to fill the space where its heart was.

"Spirits? As in dead spirits? Ghosts?" Rachel asks in alarm.

"You haven't been in many fusion loops before, have ya?" He muses with a grin. "So, who was the first among you to be awake?" He asks while Ichigo moves around the stall, sniffing the ground while doing so.

"First? Nobody, we were all aware from the beginning of the loop begun." Cassie says.

"That's odd... Usually it's only one person that's aware at first when the loops being, not the whole group." Ranma muses and the girls turn away as Ichigo begins to grow larger.

"Must have driven them crazy to be the only one aware." Cassie admits and he glances down at his hands, he really didn't like recalling the things he had gone through during those first loops. Living in a ninja village meant that there were a lot of people who knew of various ways to kill you when they believe you become a threat.

"I'm still trying to sort through those early memories, most of which I had suppressed." Ranma admits. "I would leave them be but they could be used against me if I don't face them."

"I died very frequently until I learnt to keep my mouth shut." He admits. "Not something I liked but it was a learning experience." He adds and from the looks upon the two native's faces, it seems as though they're more then a little alarmed by his confession.

"How about you, Ichigo? Were you..." Rachel asks and glances over to find Ichigo putting on his socks.

"Yea, I was the first out of my world to become aware. But I didn't have it as rough as the originals, among which Ranma and Naruto are said to be among." Ichigo says and walks out of the stall with runners in his hands.

"So, what will be your choice?" Cassie asks and he just grins.

He walks into the stall after Ichigo was out, admitting, "I already picked one while you guys were watching Ichigo." He's already got a picture of the bobcat in his mind.

"Crap..." Ichigo says but he's already willing the changes to take place, particularly his head first before his back. He imagines a bubble covering his cloths, causing them to vanish while fur sprouts and his limbs shift into the limbs of a cat.

"He did the bobcat? He did the bobcat!" He hears Rachel cry out, it seems the changes to his face were complete enough for them to ID his species of his morph.

The world shrinks and suddenly he becomes away of something just beyond the edge of his conscious mind. He becomes away of a lot more sounds, smells, and other, minor things. He feels that something at the edge try and rush him but he mentally anchors himself to the ground.

He feels his claws extend physically and his body tense. Ears flatten against his skull as he glances around the stall. He then begins to shake his head, trying to shake off the rush of instincts not unlike those he's homed as a ninja.

He growls softly and sits down in the stall. Those really hit hard, don't they? Geeze, I'm just glad they were so unfocused. He sends to the really tense group who seems to be arranged to deal with him if he became out of control.

"Geeze, make us seems like amateurs why don't ya." Ichigo says. "Not only did you get all of your cloths but you didn't freak out like we did."

Oh please, it's not as if those instincts were new, just energized. I mean, you relied upon your gut when you first became a Soul Reaper. He sends to the group.

Just so you know, try imagining your cloths inside of a bubble and vanishing when fur or something begins to sprout. He sends to Cassie and Rachel, he wanted to see if he can exclude people from the conversation.

His nose registers their surprise but he's not that interested as he gets up to move around the stall. He can smell both Ichigo and Ranma's human scents and then pick up their animal ones, he also picked up on their animal genders as well, he did wonder if he should tease Ichigo about crossdressing but decides to stay quiet about it.

He moves about a bit more before leaping into the air, straight up cause he wanted to see how high he can go. Landing upon all fours, he twitches his tail and, while feeling those instincts, begins to picture himself as a human, naked at first and when the changes begin, he imagines his cloths appearing when he reaches a certain size.

Once fully human, he picks himself up and stretches a bit, the instincts had retreated and weren't pressing themselves upon him as they had when he had been fully morphed as a bobcat. "So... What's up next?" He asks as he moves to lean upon the inward swung door.

"Well, I believe we'll all acquire a few more animals before trying for the Garden tonight." Cassie says. "We use to use seagulls as aerial spies, though recently we've switched to crows and sparrows. Owls are a must for night missions and then, usually, we pick out a unique day time Bird of Prey."

"We save insects for next month." Rachel says with a grin, clearly hoping to gross them out at the idea of morphing bugs. It kind of did, but he's been around Shino a good long while, so he does know they care be useful.

"What animals are generally used as battle morphs?" Ranma asks curiously.

"Well, Jake classically to go with a tiger, Marco goes with a gorilla, Cassie a wolf, and I go with an elephant or a grizzly bear." Rachel explains.

"Huh, I guess I get to pick out something new for mine." He says with a grin and the other two guys just rolled their eyes at him.

"Might as well finish up here and then we'll have the afternoon to do whatever before hooking up around midnight at the Gardens." Ranma says and he glances over at the fox, he just knows it'll bite him in the ass but he'll acquire the black furred beastie if only cause it reminds him of his renter.

Ichigo

He lands upon a post belonging to another fence that encircles another habitat while facing the grizzly bears. Rachel lands first upon the fence before flying up to the bear's enclosure. He watches as the blond girl becomes human and then slowly walks over to the sleeping bears.

Upon finishing, Rachel morphs into a barn owl and flies away from the bears. Picked anything out yet? Rachel asks him.

Yea, I'm going for a jaguar. He tells her before taking to the air. Mind showing me where they are? He asks.

Follow me then. Rachel says and darts off towards the habitat. He follows a few feet behind her, slowly catching up on her since he's kind of diving.

It didn't take him long to acquire the jaguar and leave. I do believe that's everything then. He says to Rachel and his fellow barn owl nods in agreement.

We got dolphin, cheetah, rhino, snake, bat, and now our battle morphs. I do believe that's everything. Rachel muses.

With that, they raise into the air and begin to travel back into the city. Hey you guys! Guess who we found! Naruto calls out and they turn in flight to find the others coming towards them while accompanied by a tiny owl.

Elfangor? Rachel asks, a bit stunned.

Greetings once more. The alien says warmly. I take it you visited this place to acquire a few of its residences?

Yea, we did. Ah, was there anything at the Gardens that you needed? Ranma says.

If you won't mind, I am rather unfamiliar with these beasts. Elfangor admits. Do you have any suggestions of what I should acquire?

And so, they returned to the Gardens, this time, playing guard to allow Elfangor time to acquire the previously mentioned beasties. More then a few had Elfangor using his tail blade to be the part touching the animals.

Although, before leaving, Elfangor did acquire a Northern Goshawk and a better owl morph, a Great Grey Owl. They traveled in a very loose group as Elfangor inquire if they have had any troubles concerning what had happened the previous night. Naruto chats endlessly about their previous experiments and about the visiting cop.

Is he always like this? Rachel asks him, mentally startling him.

As much as he acts the fool, he is good at what he does. He admits, making sure to focus his thoughts to Rachel and only to Rachel.

What does he do? Rachel asks.

Pretty much anything. He's a ninja, one of the most surprising ones you'll met. He tells Rachel.

Ninja, right... Rachel says sceptically and he mentally shakes his head.

He's as much a ninja as I am a Soul Reaper or Ranma a practice of martial arts. He says.

Isn't Ranma suppose to be a cartoon character? The blond asks him, he's not that surprise about the question as Ranma's world does get written and animated about rather regularly.

Ranma 1/2, right? Yea, that's kind of a documentary of Ranma's cannon's life, either the manga and the anime. Both Naruto and I do get written about but not always animated across the vast array of worlds. He explains.

What anime are you from? Rachel asks and he replies, Bleach and Naruto is from Naruto, as in Naruto Uzumaki.

You're saying Naruto's the title character? But... why? I mean, he's not what you expect in a title character, he's more like a side-kick. Rachel says.

Naruto does have depth, as surprising as it sounds. He's capable of great empathy, he works hard, and has the knack at pulling a win out of his ass in hopeless situations. He explains. If I were to chose who out of his team I would want at my back, I'd pick him. If it was out of his group... It's never really come up before.

I still don't see it. He just seems to be the class clown. Rachel admits and he doesn't pursue it as he knows that Rachel will change her mind in time, so in the meantime, he plans to enjoy the thrill of flight before they split up to head home. They'll be hooking up with Elfangor tomorrow night.

Next Day

He watches as Naruto in fox morph sniffs by a tree's trunk. Naruto's ears scan around while Naruto's head raises up to look up into the tree he's perched in. He ruffle his feathers and stares down at the black fur canine that is Naruto.

Ichigo! See any of the others yet? The blond boy asks him.

He's currently morphed as a Swallow-tailed Kite. Nobody but you as of yet. He tells Naruto while scratching his head with a taloned foot.

I wonder what's keeping Ranma... He's usually the first to be anywhere. Naruto muses, the blond had arrived in the morph of a crow before transforming into a fox.

He watches as the black fox swishes his tail and begins to sniff around the clearing as a whole. He preens his feathers with his beak. He would stop whenever he heard the sound of flapping wings.

I think I see Rachel coming in. He sends to Naruto as he watches as a Bald Eagle comes dropping out of the sky. He's sure that it's Rachel since she's the only one with an eagle morph.

Hey Rachel! Naruto says as the Bald Eagle lands upon the ground. Seen Cassie or Ranma on your way here? The ninja asks as the fox trots to stand about six to eight feet from Rachel.

No, I haven't seen anyone. Rachel says before transforming back into a human. I take it Ichigo or Elfangor is here?

I'm here. Haven't seen Elfangor yet. He says. I'll come down after you're done. He adds, moving from his previous perch, showing himself while in his kite morph.

Just how long have you been here, Ichigo? Naruto asks, glancing up at him. He suppresses the urge to fluff up and screech at the predator below.

Rachel is rather quick but not as quick as Cassie or Naruto. And yet, the girl is faster then him when it comes to morphing, he's likely the slowest out of the group but he's sure that once he's use to it, he won't be that slow ever again.

When Rachel is done, Naruto backs away as he flies down towards the ground. He feels his pulse quicken and he focuses on returning to his true form. As the world begins to shrink, that instinctive mind seems to fade into the background of his mind.

He sighs softly before glancing towards Naruto and finds the black furred fox sitting not far from him. Suddenly, Naruto barks in excitement, heck Naruto's tail wags back and forth while turning to face a northeastern direction. He watches as Elfangor comes trotting towards them.

"It's good to see you, sir." Rachel says in a very polite tone. He's pretty sure that she's rarely been this polite before.

Elfangor inclines his head, he notices that the blue furred alien seems to have brought a bag with him.

Elfangor

Well met. He says warmly to Rachel. He catches sight of a black fox, he already had an idea of who it was.

I never thought I'd spend more then a few minutes in his company... If only Loren... I just know the Ellimist foresaw that she would lose her memory. He thinks to himself, he can only assume how difficult his son's life has been.

You know, I don't get how you can eat without a mouth. Naruto muses as the fox boldly weaves about his legs and circles him. I seriously don't see any mouths upon your legs either.

As my hooves hit the grass, my hooves absorb the juices from the crushed plants under hoof. He explains. How long have you been in that morph? He asks curiously, he rather not have his son trapped in a morph like Arbron.

Just transformed in little over forty minutes ago. Naruto answers after pausing in circling around him. Guess I can transform back. His estranged son admits and after moving a few feet away, he watches as the fox morphs back into the shape of a young human boy.

He sure is quick. He thinks in surprise while Ichigo asks, "What is it that you brought along?"

It is a com device that I'll need parts for. I am hoping some of you could purchase them. He explains to the orange haired boy.

"What do you plan to do with it?" Rachel asks and he answers, I have hope to discover if any of my fellows remain. I don't plan to send any messages, just listen for them.

"Ah, I guess that makes sense." The girl says while Ichigo seems to glance around expectantly. "Do you expect a lot of your people to have survive crashing to Earth?" Rachel asks.

Even if they did survive the crash, I doubt they knew enough to blend into their surroundings. I had seen the dome of the ship fall into the ocean. I hope that there were some of my people within its protective shield. He answers, he could only recall seeing the life thread of his younger brother coming to weave itself with five life threads belonging to these young humans.

He hopes that the vision proves true as he regrets truly getting to know his younger brother. He couldn't help but feel free to live his life once again. He hadn't felt like this since he had left Earth with the Ellimist, leaving his human life behind him.

Rachel

She mentally sighs, she really wishes Cassie were here. She felt oddly a strange from the events going on around her, after all, she's never had to deal with another Andalite outside of Ax and that undercover group that arrives to release that virus. What a time, it should be Tobias here, receiving Elfangor's awkward fatherly affection and worry.

Naruto didn't seem to mind the extra attention Elfangor pays him. "This is so unfair... Here Elfangor is, alive and well and Tobias isn't here to spend any real time with his father." She mutters.

"So Elfangor thinks Naruto is his son? Huh, I guess that makes sense, more sense then..." Ichigo muses softly while Naruto asks Elfangor questions concerning the kind of ship the Andalites had arrived in.

"Do I even want to know what you thought Elfangor wanted with him?" She asks before frowning. "Is Naruto missing his own family? Is that why he's hounding Elfangor like that?" She asks.

Before Ichigo answers, the other two members of the group arrives. Ranma in the morph of a Northern Harrier and Cassie in the morph of an Osprey. She's just glad that Cassie has shown up as she feels more grounded.

The Mall

What did I do to get stuck with him? She wonders as Naruto hums while looking between to different wire adapters. They were in an electronic shop looking for some cheap electronic toys, which causes her to wonder why it was that Naruto's looking at cables and surge bars.

"Why are we even looking at these things?" She asks the supposed ninja. "These aren't what we're suppose to be looking at."

"We're being followed." Naruto says softly. "They're hiding over by the TVs and radios." The blond adds and she glances over just in time to see somebody duck out of sight.

She casually glances away before turning his back to that part of the store. "You know anyone who'd stalk you?" Naruto asks her and she shakes her head.

"Which means it might be somebody for me." Naruto muses. "Stay here, I'll head over to the games. See if you can't catch sight of a hair color or something." The blond states before walking away with one of the wire adapters.

She frowns at the boy's back as Naruto does begin to look at the computer games that are shelved along the back wall. She turns her head and out of the corner of her eye, she spots a red head exiting out from behind the TVs. The red head's eyes were trained upon Naruto with what appears to be a frown upon the semi-emotionless face.

She jerks her eyes away from the boy when the red head glances in her direction. Never seen him before... She muses and she feels the kid move pass her.

She reaches out and puts a hand upon the guy's shoulder, only to find herself pinned to the floor. "Gaara! What are you doing here? Shouldn't you be in a sandbox some where?" Naruto asks and she feels Gaara stiffen.

"Shouldn't you be sitting somewhere, eating twenty bowls of ramen?" The red head responds in a blank tone that sent shivers down her spine. "I see you're already found somebody new to date."

"Ah, let her up, man. She's cool, kind of new but rock solid if you get what I'm saying." Naruto says and to her surprise, the red head called Gaara does let her up.

"Seen a metal slug about?" Naruto asks and Gaara snorts.

"Got it out. Didn't like raccon-dogs." Gaara replies as the two shake hands before going in for a guy hug.

She's kind of rubbing her wrist while watches the two, she's certain they're talking in code, one that doesn't seem that hard to follow, although that one about raccon-dogs doesn't seem to make much sense.

"Gaara, met Rachel, Rachel met Gaara." Naruto introduces them to each other. Gaara nods a tiny bit in her direction while she smiles slightly, not sure what it was about Gaara that sets her teeth on edge.

"Let Rachel and I finish up here in the store before we head out to discuss business." Naruto says and since Gaara doesn't respond, Naruto seems to gather up at least three electronic toys and that cable adapter. She's a bit surprise when Naruto takes out a credit card.

"My uncle said I could borrow it. I hope there wouldn't be any trouble." Naruto explains in an apologetic note to his tone but the cashier just seems to wave it off, allowing Naruto to pay using said card.

They left the store without any more incidents and other then a stop to pick up some cola, they left the mall, walking down the street. "How do you know he's not a Controller?" She finally asks Naruto after a block.

"Gaara, you feel up for taking a nap?" Naruto asks the red head and the other boy just starts.

"That doesn't prove anything!" She snaps and Naruto waves it off.

"It became insane and I believe it had a heart attack." Gaara states and she blinks, trying to imagine a Yeerk having a heart attack.

"Guess the one-tail is nattering about in your head then? Huh, can you use chakra? I can't seem to access mine nor can Ichigo or Ranma access their usual set of powers." Naruto says.

In answer, she watches as the small gourd that had been hanging from Gaara's belt loop begin to shift a little, taking the form of a flute before returning to the shape of a gourd. "Hmmm, got some access but not as much as you normally do, huh? Better then me then." Naruto muses.

"Hang on, what could scare a Yeerk enough to die of a... heart attack?" She demands.

"I'm possessed." Gaara states calmly.

"Demonically possessed." Naruto adds and she just blinks at the blond. "Ok, it's like this, Gaara hosts an insane one-tail raccond-dog demon who grants Gaara control over sand. Majority of the time, the sand automatically moves to protect Gaara from receiving injuries but because the demon is so close to the surface, it natters at Gaara to kill people, to feast on their blood, and when Gaara falls asleep, the demon gets full control over Gaara's body. Also, demons produce a type of energy that is rather poisonous, it's one of the reasons adults are never used to seal out of control demons into, only babes are immature enough that their bodies adapt to housing a demon and its energies within their bodies."

"So the Yeerk couldn't deal with Gaara's demon then?" She asks and Naruto replies, "Seems so. Unless the Yeerk couldn't wrap its mind around seeing everything Gaara's done since Gaara became awake to the existence of time loops..."

"It never got the chance to review those memories." Gaara states and she just shakes her head, she really didn't know what to think of Gaara and guesses that, in time, she'll grow use to him.

Hopefully.

To Be Continued . . . Maybe . . .

Portal Maddness 2: Naruto

I don't own Naruto, Werewolf the Forsaken, Ranma 1/2, and Pokemon!

"Well... Crap." Sasuke says while staring up at a seven foot tall wolf monster that's glaring down at him. The Uchiha felt as though his legs were weighed down and his heart beats rapidly.

Move... move... move... move... move... MOVE , damn it! Sasuke mentally screams but still, his body doesn't obey as he stiffly takes a few steps backwards. The feeling of something running down his inner thigh.

Suddenly, a howl sounds to Sasuke's left that causes the monster to glance over in that direction. The wolf's ears perk up and the monster glances at the Uchiha, giving the young thirteen year old ninja a look of disgust before racing off the edge of the roof.

Sasuke falls onto his knees, the genin didn't know where he was but Sasuke took some comfort in the idea that Naruto had to be in a worst situation then confronting that wolfman monster within minutes upon arriving in this world.

"You ok?" A young teen's voice wonders and as Sakura's vision returns, the girl found a very cute looking teen staring down at her with worry shining out of his blue eyes. Sakura flushes while shyly looking away, Sakura couldn't find her voice so she just nods.

The teen helps the pink haired girl to sit up. "Thanks." Sakura responds in a tiny voice, very much aware of how close the cute boy is to her.

"Well, you don't look as though you suffered much from that fall..." The teen muses as the boy checks the back of Sakura's head. "Just a few cuts and bruises but otherwise you seem fine."

Then the teen says, "Anyway, name's Ranma, Ranma Saotome."

"Sakura, Sakura Haruno." Sakura tells Ranma, her face still feeling a tad heated. "Where am I?" The young kunoichi asks as she move to get up.

"Eh? China. Pops and me are headed to this legendary training grounds." Ranma explains.

"Mind if I tag along? I think I'm kind of lose..." Sakura admits to Ranma. China, huh? Then Sakura wonders, I wonder if Sasuke-kun is around here somewhere...

"Gonna have ta talk with Pops about that." Ranma says while shrugging. "He's the one with all the money after all."

Sakura smiles slightly before nodding in acceptance. "Thanks for looking after me while I was out." The pink haired kunoichi says before Ranma begins to lead her away from where she landed.

"Feh, wasn't a problem, Sakura! It's a martial artist's duty to look after those weaker then them." Ranma says with a shrug while Sakura watches Ranma's behind while following the teen.

Sakura hums softly, not really paying Ranma a lot of attention while imagining activities they could do together.

"Huh... Shouldn't you be gone? I mean, I beat ya up pretty good before I sent ya flying." Naruto says to this black furred dog sporting a off white skull, bone bracelets about each paw, and two curved bones upon the dog's back.

The dog had spat fire at Naruto, bite him twice, and then, between growls, rammed its body at him, trying to get Naruto to fall down. Naruto might not have gotten along very well with animals but the Hokage-wanna-be never seen a beast do such things before and the blond didn't know if the dog had been using chakra or not.

The dog lies down and then rolls onto her back, Naruto saw that the dog was a girl, while looking up at him with puppy dog eyes. The belly, like the muzzle sports orangish red fur.

Naruto stares down at the dog from his position by the fire, wondering what to do. With a sigh, Naruto took a cooking fish and tosses it towards the dog. "Fine, apology accepted."

The blond glances away from the strange dog, at least the dog had been relatively normal compared to the few onion beasts Naruto had pulled from the ground, encountering various types of large fish and tadpoles who also attacked the boy.

As Naruto stares into the fire, the young genin wonders about what new creature's he'll encounter before hooking up with Sakura and Sasuke. Just how many of these forest beasts can use chakra? Are they edible?

Naruto jerks slightly as the dog nudges his elbow. Glancing at the dog, the blond boy hums a bit before moving to rub the dog's neck. The canine growls softly while moving to lean upon Naruto, the dog's eyes were closed and her ears pointed backwards.

"Just where am I? I mean, I've never met a dog that spat fire before." Naruto muses after a few minutes of scratching behind the dog's ears. "No offense but not even Akamaru could do that and that pup is as pure-blooded nin-inu as a dog can be."

The black furred dog growls at that before turning to look into the fire. "You're hungry, aren't ya?" Naruto asks and to his surprise, the dog nods with a bit of a whine.

With a sigh, the blond picks up another fish on a stick and gives it to her. The dog's tail wags happily while eating it. Naruto snorts softly but begins to take renewed interest in the fish in his own hand.

Naruto had caught six non-attacking fish and since his chakra is a bit out of whack, the blond couldn't use clones to forage around while he was fishing. Naruto wonders if the rest of his team are having the same problems with their chakra.

Maybe I just need to do more of those tree walking exercises... Maybe I can camp here while I wait for my chakra to return to normal... The blond thinks while eating his fish.

Guardian Summoned: Buffy

I don't own anything!

"So... You summoned me to hold onto these book just in case somebody betrays you?" Naruto asks this be-horned guy who seems bald on top. The magical necklace that allows him to understand the guy is wrapped around his left wrist.

"Yea, the sums it up. Keep them until I show up with their new owner and I'll let you keep that necklace as your bonus." The twitchy guy says, not that the blond blames the guy, he had attacked the guy within seconds of waking, slamming the guy down upon the floor while speaking in a language the guy only understood cause of the magical necklace.

With a shrug, Naruto takes the bag containing the thick tomes. It wasn't long before the guy leaves, leaving Naruto alone in this underground tunnel. With nothing better to do, the blond begins to do some target practice as he waits for the guy to return with the buyers.

Day Later

Naruto watches as Faith enters into the tunnel. The blond ninja keeps himself from frowning at her approach. Guess I get to tie her up and continue waiting. Naruto thinks as Faith studies Naruto.

Faith had cursed when that demon had stated that he didn't have the books on him, that he left them with a summoned guardian and that unless she pays him the money, she won't be getting the books. When pressed concerning what the guardian was, the guy had simply answered, "I wanted somebody with a lot of fire power but wouldn't draw attention to itself. Capable of using forces beyond our knowing but doesn't have any interest in the books or in staying in this world for longer then it has too."

This kid doesn't look like he fulfills any of those points. Kind of cute, in a clueless way too. Faith muses as she stops not far from where the blond is sitting.

"I'm here for the books." Faith tells Naruto. "Your friend got his money and left."

"Lair. Guess he never told you that he has to be with you to get them from me. Killed him, didn't you?" Naruto states, he watches for a minor flinch upon him accusing her of killing the client, it seems he guessed right and that means he'll have to find somebody else to send him home.

Faith doesn't respond, going straight at the blond but within a few steps, she finds herself laying down upon the tunnel's floor with the supposed sitting blond resting upon her back. "What just happened?" Faith wonders out loud as she feels something begin to loop around her captive arms.

"I'm tying you up, that's what happened." The blond states and Faith wiggles about, trying to get her arms free. But it seems as though this summoned guy is more then strong enough to hold her.

Naruto raises a slight eyebrow at how much more stronger the girl is then what he expects. Naruto isn't worried, the wire he's using is plenty strong enough to hold under the forces that Faith is exerting upon it. The ninja gets up off the slayer and moves to sit back down.

While Naruto muses about what to do now, Faith tries to break the bonds holding her arms only to discover that they were holding up pretty good against her slayer strength. Finally, after a while, Faith stops trying to break her bonds to get into a sitting position. "Gee, I didn't know that kids your age are into bondage."

Naruto snorts as he glances over to the siting slayer. "Personally, I'm more interested in seeing two girls wrestle about in mud then whips and chains. But then, I did train under a super-pervert who's into writing porn. Best selling porn, sure, but still porn." Naruto says to Faith before forming a hand sign.

To Faith's surprise, she watches as another ten blonds appear and then take off out of the tunnel. "How did you do that?" Faith asks and Naruto just smirks.

"That's a secret." Naruto answers before glances out of the tunnel. Naruto's curious about this town, he had only seen small parts of it while following that horned twitchy guy.

"You know, he's dead and that means you're sure ticket home is gone." Faith says, deciding to try a different tactic. "The mayor likely has the resources to send you home."

Naruto snorts and glances over to Faith. "Hence why I'm sure as in hell won't be giving them to the mayor. I might be a mercenary but even I have some standards. If your mayor was so great, he would have given you the money and you would have the books instead of getting your arms tied. Twitchy would have left and I would be back home enjoying my ramen." Naruto informs Faith, he notices the look of surprise concerning what he's revealed.

"Just what are you?" Faith asks and the blond replies, "I'm the number one most surprising maverick ninja of the Hidden Leaf village. Uzumaki Naruto, believe it!"

"You're suppose to be a ninja?" Faith asks in disbelief and Naruto nods. "But your wearing orange."

"Yea, yea, yea, so what? It's a great color!" Naruto growls, crossing his arms while studying Faith with slightly narrow eyes.

Faith just frowns while she continues to work upon whatever it was that's holding her arms together while scowling at the seemingly younger teen. Naruto just ignores Faith as he waits for a clone to dispel so he can inherit its knowledge.

"Damn it!" Faith curses after a few minutes, she felt whatever it was that the blond use cut into a finger of her's. The slayer tries to press her fingers over said finger to try and stop the bleeding.

Naruto just shakes his head. Then suddenly, the blood perks up as memories come flowing into his mind. Naruto frowns at the memory of how the clone 'died'. Stupid cat...

Naruto waits some more to receive another clone's memories as the previous one had gotten distracted by investigating a noise and found a dead body being devoured by a feral cat. Just thinking about made the blond's stomach quinsy. Still, who leaves a dead body laying about so carelessly?

"Well, I'm bore." Faith states after she's done counting the number of pipes hanging above their head. "So..."

"It's not my job to entertain ya, you know." Naruto remarks to Faith. "How goes your attempts to get out of that wire coming along?"

"You used wire to tie me up?" Faith asks, surprised at the fact she's having so much trouble find a thin string of metal. "What is it, enchanted or something?"

"Enchanted? Nay, just a minor bit of chakra used to strength it for a few hours." Naruto explains dismissively. Most ninja empower their limbs with chakra to disrupt the chakra in the wire though. Guess this shows that she doesn't know how to use it.

"Chakra, huh? Sounds like your an aura mage." Faith muses, she had read Gold Digger a few times.

"Huh? What's an aura mage?" Naruto asks.

"You know, chakras as in the energies of the body that make up your aura." Faith says, she had done some reading and the slayer is fairly confident she knew what the blond means.

"Chakra is what ya get from mixing your spiritual energy with your physical energy. Hand signs help mix the two in certain ways to craft a jutsu." Naruto explains. "Sometimes your body gets so use to crafting a certain jutsu that you don't even need to form all of the hand signs or any at all."

Faith frowns as she tries to wrap her head around this particular idea. Sounds useful, but how do you get the two to mix though... I doubt I'll be capable of mimicking it, might be something unique to do with him coming from a different world. A trick his brand of humans created or evolved to handle.

Faith wasn't much into book smarts but that doesn't mean she didn't have an education. The young slayer also picked things up more quickly when it fancied her. She just doesn't like to discuss or show off what she knows.

Naruto's head goes to the main tunnel as he gets another clone's set of memories. "What the hell? Don't these guys have better things to do then to patrol for kids skipping school?" The blond ninja wonders out loud but decided he knew enough to head out on his own.

"See ya." Naruto says to Faith as he picks up the leather bag holding the five volumes. "Do watch for those water beetles, they grow rather big down here." Naruto adds in a cheerful tone, he uses the substitution jutsu with a rather large stone, vanishing from Faith's sight.

Faith curses as the guardian leaves with the books, not paying any heed to the rock that appeared when Naruto vanished. And now he's got a running start. This was suppose to be easy, damn it!

As he gets to the exit, the blond uses Henge jutsu to look a few years older as well as alter his hair, eye, and get rid of his whisker marks upon his cheeks. With a slight smile, he leaves the underground tunnel and emerge out onto the surface.

Few Hours Later

It had taken a lot of time before he finally got the information he needed concerning the local good guys. Naruto just scowls at that sigh, welcoming him to the local high school. The blond continues on his way while wondering what to do with the information concerning Faith betraying this group.

Regardless, Naruto's pretty sure that they would be the safest bet to take these books off his hands. Sure, they might not be able to send him home, but they can at least give him some of the local currency to pay somebody to send him home.

Naruto finds a pair of men in the library. The two suddenly straighten and turn to face him. "You got the money or not? One of your slayers killed my client and I'll be needing that money to find somebody to send me home." The blond tells the two flatly.

"Buffy did what?" The elderly looking man says and Naruto just shakes his head. "Nay, the other one, the girl in black leather. I believe she mentioned bondage during our little run in along with wanting the books for the mayor. Even tried to claimed the books but I'm only suppose to hand them over if the guy was with her."

"You have the books?" The tight ass vibe guy asks and he takes the strap off his shoulder and tosses the leather bag onto the table. The tight ass one moves to take inventory of the books.

"Twitchy wouldn't have summoned me just to have me watch fake books." Naruto points out as he moves to take a seat upon one of the various chairs. "Now answer the question! Do you or don't you have the money?"

Tight ass tries to snub him while explaining why they should have to pay him while the older one is already reading one of the books after putting their glasses on. "The price is rather high..."

"And yet there are people willing to kill for them. Whatever price twitchy had asked for seems rather reasonable concerning they got him killed." Naruto cuts in, he never liked those oh so tightly whined hard asses. "It's either pay me the money or send me home."

Tight ass clearly didn't enjoy Naruto's tone as the blond levels the guy a look. The ninja just crosses his arms over his chest while kicking his feet up onto the table. In the end, the tight ass looks away first and mutters something about getting on that right away.

During the minor interview Wesley, AKA tight ass, asks him for details concerning his summoning and what answers he manage to get out of twitchy, AKA Skyler, when he confronted the demon, that kind of surprised Naruto since twitchy hadn't been... well, hadn't been scary or very powerful.

"I got the donuts..." Xander enters into the library to find a blond teen sitting at the table, feet up on the table and Wesley seemingly attending the kid. Xander glances over at Giles and finds that the ex-watcher reading a tome, he also spies another four volumes upon the table along with a leather bag.

"It's always nice to have more color in here." Xander says thoughtlessly, oddly very aware of the cloths the bright blond is wearing.

Naruto grins a bit at the newly arrived teen. "You wouldn't believe how many people seem to dis orange." The genin remarks. "'What an eyesore! You should try blues and greys.' 'Naruto you idiot! Orange isn't a ninja color!' 'Sorry but we're here on a mission. Now get out of that hideous jumpsuit so we can burn it by order of the Hokage.'"

Xander couldn't help but chuckle, already liking the new guy even though the idea that the kid was a ninja kind of seems... hard to believe but with a mental shrug, he rolled with it since he's seen and witness stranger events. "My sympathies. None of my friends have taken it that far as of yet, but in a few years... Who knows?"

The donuts are placed upon the table after Naruto moves his feet off. "I'm Xander." Xander says to the blond.

"Naruto, Uzumaki Naruto." Naruto replies to Xander as the older teen takes a seat at the table.

"So... Read any good books lately?" Xander asks the younger teen. Naruto snorts softly as he reaches for the box, he hadn't had much to eat during his time in this world.

Summer

"Well, there he goes..." Buffy muses and the other Scoobies nod in agreement. The ink upon the ground seems to vanish seconds after the shimmering portal closes after the blond ninja entered it, returning home.

"I'm going to miss him. He really knew how to liven things up around here." Xander says. "I mean, those toads he could summon were something, weren't they? Talked too."

The two girls shiver slightly, neither minding said critter but when something gets to a certain size... "Toads should never grow that big."

"I wonder who would win in a fight, that boss toad or Godzilla?" Xander wonders while Oz replies, "Godzilla."

"Oh, I wouldn't be so quick to pick. I mean, that boss was welding a dagger, never seen a flesh Kaiju use one of those before." Xander says as the group wanders towards the town. "Plus, that toad had serious jumping power! He could get out of Godzilla's blast range with a single hop."

The End

Curse of the Digital Hazard: Digimon

I don't own Digimon!

Damn it! Fourteen year old Takato Matsuki thinks as he weaves between bystanders with surprising agility while not slowing down at all. The teen notices the upcoming walk light beginning to flash red and Takato manages to charge across before the lights change, the teen returns to his previous looping pace.

As Takato rounds the corner, within a few feet of the gate, the teen suddenly senses a familiar phenomenon and manages to stops a few inches from a water balloon flying to where the red hazel eyed teen would have been if he hadn't stopped. Takato's aware that his nostrils flared a bit as the balloon hits the wall to his right before the teen glances over to a lamp post where his usual stalker is standing with a displeased look upon their face.

With a shrug, Takato continues to the gate and just manages to enter the class building when the buzzer sounds. Another normal day in the life of Takato Matsuki. The fourteen year old thinks while sighing as Takato hurriedly walks through the halls of learning, hoping that the teacher is running late as usual, so that he's not marked late.

Takato feels the tension in his shoulders give as he enters into the classroom to find that the teacher has yet to arrive. The teen just manages to get his books out of his book bag when the door opens and their teacher enters. Mr Kawahira stalks over to the desk and after placing his business suit case upon the desk, begins roll call.

You would think he would have found a place outside of Shinijuku during the summer break. Ah well, just means that my tardiness will continue not to be recorded. Takato thinks as he gets ready for the review.

This semester is only two weeks old and yet, Takato finds that few things have changed from the previous year. His father is still dead, his mom is still struggling to come to terms with his father's death, Digimon were still crossing over into their world, causing havoc and panic in the world, centered mostly in West Shinjuku, and, of course, Takato's still cursed.

Takato mentally pushes such thoughts out of his mind, trying to focus on his teacher's lecture and following along with the on going questions. By the end of class, Takato's ears ring slightly and the teen glances out of the window for a few seconds after the ringing stops. Takato glances away to hurry to copy down the assigned reading.

Henry

"This is the eleventh one in the last two weeks... Just how do these canine Digimon manage to crossover?" Kenta wonders as the latest canine themed Digimon, a Gaogamon, is trying to turn Kazu's partner, Guadromon, into a metal chew toy.

"They also always crossover here in this tunnel." Kazu points out while Henry bites his lower lip as Terriermon moves from taunting the blue furred champion Digimon to attacking in the form of a head butt. "I mean, that dug out room has been filled in since spring break and yet, that doesn't seem to stop them at all!" Kazu complains, again, about that room they discovered just a week prior to it being filled in.

Where's the Ice Queen when you need her? Henry wonders with a sigh. The teenage Tamer hates sending Terriermon out to battle Digimon who have crossover into their world. Terriermon continues to be rather out of control when he's in his champion form of Gargomon, even after everything they went through with the Devas and the D-Reaper.

Out of all the Tamers, Terriermon and Henry were the only ones who have yet to achieve ultimate. Akito, Rika, Ryo, and, surprisingly enough, Suzie can Bio Merge with their partners to become megas.

Henry continues to beat himself up about Suzie getting involved with Digimon, the teen knew that he should have watched her more closely that day, when the others were preparing to enter into that portal Akito's partner, Shamanmon, had predicted to appear in the park for them to enter into the Digital world.

Henry shakes his head, trying to dismiss those useless thoughts. The partner of Terriermon's tries to focus on delay tactics while they wait for either Akito or Rika to show. Ryo has vanished into the wilds of the Digital World, looking for the reason for the ease of which canine themed Digimon can enter into the real world.

"Waking Dream!" Tapirmon, partner to Jeri, declares, signally Jeri's arrival on the scene. The blue furred Digimon bellow out in rage and surprise while Jeri waves over at them from her position.

"Bone Blast!" This attack hits Gaogamon squarely in the head. SkullSatamon muses, "Bone taking out a dog, it never gets old."

Henry rolls his eyes as Gaogamon is transformed into particles of data, vanishing into the air. SkullSatamon lands and within seconds, transforms into Shamanmon. Akito arrives and goes into a quick walk while glancing around at the damages their current fight has caused.

Henry walks over to where Terriermon had been sent flying. "He's gone, isn't he?" Terriermon asks him and Henry nods.

"SkullSatamon got Gaogamon with one attack." Henry says as he cradles Terriermon. And once more, he's hurt because of me and my fears. Henry thinks and then shutters as a flash from his time in the D-Reaper flares up before vanishing.

Will I ever get over my time inside of that thing? Can I ever be forgiven for what I had caused Terriermon to become? Henry wonders while the other Tamers socialize not that far from Terriermon and him.

Henry turns to watch them, trying to focus on what they're doing instead of what he's feeling. But, once again, Henry feels like an outsider, that he doesn't really belong. True, Akito and him had become friends at the beginning but that friendship had become strained when Henry refused to allow Terriermon to fight, even when it's clear that Akito and Rika could have used the help.

Henry begins to head to school once more while carrying Terriermon in his arms. The partner of Terriermon leaves without saying anything to his fellows, more then a little lost in his memories.

Takato

"So, yous out for the day?" Impmon asks as the teen walks out of the gates. Water dripping from his hair and cloths.

"You set off the sprinklers." Takato states in a matter of fact tone while Impmon walks upon the wall, following the red hazel eye teen out of all of the teens leaving school early. All of them wet from the rookie setting off the sprinklers.

Since Takato didn't possess a Digivice, nobody can prove that Impmon was his partner, which means that he's doesn't receive any blame for anything Impmon does. There isn't anything he can do concerning the fact that the virus rookie seems to follow him around. "Shouldn't you be goofing off in West Shinijuku this week?"

The imp like rookie just flickers his hand in dismissal. "Pff, why should I leave when I'm having blast without anyone trying to tell me not ta?" Impmon states and Takato moves his bangs so they don't drop over his face.

"Or worry about a 'Wild One' showing up and absorbing you." Takato remarks. "Isn't it time for you to find yourself a human partner? You've been wandering about without one for about three years now."

"Hey! I'm no Digi-Pet Poodle! I'm a free spirit, ya know! I don't like being chain to anyone or anything!" Impmon snaps and Takato had to bite his tongue to keep from remarking about how the rookie seems to be 'chained' to him since that night at the tunnel.

But then, he doesn't really see me as a human, just a Digimon wearing the skin of one. But then, he's clearly desperate for companionship and just wants me to be a Digimon since he doesn't think he can be friends with humans without gaining a Tamer. Takato thinks as they cross the street after Impmon leaps off the wall. But then, I'm not sure I'm exactly human either.

"So, ya going to... you know, tonight? Again?" Impmon asks Takato as they enter a strip mall that's about four blocks from Takato's school. They enter into the grocery store so Takato can pick up a few items, quick dinners for when his mom is working late shifts and doesn't have time to cook anything for supper.

"Impmon..." Takato sighs, shaking his head slightly as he considers what kind of juice that he wants to drink while the rookie has already picked up a bottle. "Once a week is more then enough for me. You do recall what I did in that room in the tunnel, don't you?"

Impmon snorts while tosses another bottle into his basket. "Don't see why your so scared, it's not like ya ever hurt anyone during those times." The rookie tells the teen. "So your emotions were raw back then, big deal, it's different now a days."

"I dug a path way into the Digital World!" Takato hisses softly, knowing full well that the Digimon can hear that. "I'm not even sure if we sealed it up right!"

"Pff, not our problem now is it? Yous don't live in West Shinijuku anymore nor do ya seem to return to visit any of your old friends either." The little virus remarks as they move away from the fridge and freezer section.

Takato sighs, knowing that Impmon is right about that. Both Kazu and Kenta had returned from the Digital World with partners of their own. Ever since Akito showed up at summer camp with Shamanmon, the two fans had hung about Akito, wanting to be part of whatever adventure their classmate would likely have.

Jeri also came back with a partner too. I thought she was hoping to partner up with that Leomon that saved her from that rat Deva... Takato reflects as he picks up some instant noodles.

"It's not as though we were still close by the time my mom decided to move out of West Shinijuku. They were busy with everything that happened concerning the D-Reaper and the deaths that occurred from the rampaging BlackMegaGargomon." The teen recalls while Impmon tosses in a few cans of pickled mango.

"Yea, I remember that, who knew the little mouthy guy had it in him to be such a loose cannon?" Impmon muses as they move towards can soups. "Kind of surprised that Henry ended up being that thing's brain, though."

Takato recalls the aloof Tamer, he hadn't known Henry Wong a back then but didn't really blame the Tamer for the death of his dad or for all of those people that died because of Terriermon's corrupt evolution going amok in the city, after the D-Reaper made itself known in the Real World. Takato did blame the D-Reaper and the Sovereign Digimon known as Zhuqiaomon for forcing Calumon back into the Digital World since, the way he hears it, the D-Reaper woke because the light of Digital Evolution had returned to the Digital World once more.

"Yes, well, I think if they found that room, they'd be able to close it. I mean, they're professionals aren't they? They must run into things like that all the time." Takato says, returning to the safer topic about the room where he dug into the Digital World.

"Ya would think so, wouldn't ya?" Impmon muses as they walk over to the cashier. "Bet ya a few of these noodles that they don't know the first thing of closing that place up beyond filling it in."

Takato didn't reply as he's a bit busy emptying the basket onto the counter while the cashier is nervously glancing at Impmon. The cashier's uneasy didn't hamper him in the slightest as the young teen pays for the stuff using his debit card and leaving with Impmon trailing behind him with a tiny ball of fire hovering over one of Impmon's fingers and traveling in between the other fingers upon that hand before returning to the first one.

Takato's more then a little relieved that the rookie hadn't done anything more then play around with that little fireball. The teen has enough problems then getting booted out of another store because of the antics of said rookie Digimon. Neither of them spoke as they walk away from the strip mall.

"Yous ever wonder what would happen if ya bite somebody? Or donate blood?" Impmon asks Takato and the young teen glances down at the Digimon walking a few steps before him on his left.

"I really, really don't want to think about it. If this... condition of mine mimics then..." Takato trails off, he often loses nights worth of sleep imagining what could happen if he ever passed on his condition.

There were two of them, that night. One was white while the other one was black... Takato thinks before shying away from that night's memories. The teen could almost feel where the black one had scratched him in the back, even now it's a wonder that Takato's back remains fine even though it should be broken, forcing him into a wheel chair.

"Let's not talk about it, ok? It's not something I like to think about. Besides, it's suppose to be a secret." Takato points out to Impmon as they head for home, the apartment that Takato's mother had them move into after they returned from staying with their relatives who continue to live upon an island not far from Japan.

It was one of the few times that Impmon and Takato had been separated for more then a month's time. It also marked Takato's experiment in trying to control his condition so he doesn't get found out since Impmon wasn't around to keep him entertained during those few nights in which he was transformed. Takato had been so bored during those night that they stayed upon the island.

"Feh." Impmon says with a shrug while the rookie holds his gloved hands together, summoning a fireball in the space between them. Takato smiles slightly at the sight. Somethings never seem to change...

Henry

"Have you seen this Digimon?" Henry looks up from the card game going on between Rika and Kazu. The Tamer finds a pair of seven year olds, one boy and one girl, holding up a drawing of a certain rookie known for being a troublemaker.

"You're looking for Impmon? Why are you looking for that troublemaker?" Kazu asks while Maro, Akito's younger sister arrives along with Henry's own sister and Suzie's partner, Lopmon.

"What about Impmon? Has he been seen causing trouble again?" Maro asks as the two glance over at Rika, after all, Renamon is the only one who seems to be able to locate the imp Digimon before the virus rookie caused trouble.

"He hasn't shown up as of yet, but he's due to show up soon." Renamon says, appearing out of the shadow of the nearest tree. Henry watches as the fox rookie vanish back into the shadow.

"When he shows up, could you tell him that Ai and Mako are looking for him? We feel really, really bad about how we treated him and we would have tried to find him sooner but our parents only recently returned to West Shinijuku." The girl, Ai, says and Henry sighs, he knows why their parents didn't want to return but likely came back to their old jobs when they offered pay raises and other perks.

"Perhaps you can leave us an address to pass along to him?" Jeri suggests. The two's eyes light up and it wasn't long before they have the address of Ai and Mako.

Henry watches as the two leave and wonders just what kind of history Impmon has with the pair. "So that imp doesn't have one Tamer, but two." Terriermon muses while perched upon his head.

"I wonder where Impmon goes when he's not hanging around the park or causing us trouble." Kenta wonders as Kazu let's out a cry of dismay, signally that once more, the Ice Queen wins the game. Henry figures that the only reason Rika ever goes up against any of them is because its the only outlet of violence Rika allows herself when dealing with her fellow Tamers.

Rika doesn't seem to consider any of them her friends, associates yes, friends no. Shamanmon seems to be the only one Rika likes to spend time with outside of Renamon's company. Henry glances over to the goblin like Digimon to find that the rookie seems to sport a far away look while looking off in the distance before Shamanmon snaps out of it to glance back at Henry before glancing over towards Rika.

Henry frowns, the partner of Terriermon couldn't help but wonder what vision the viral rookie just experienced.

Shamanmon

The viral rookie known as Shamanmon had just glimpsed the most feared symbol in the Digital World, worst then those belonging to the demon lords and Yggdrasil, almost akin to the D-Reaper. The upside down triangle inside of a circle and three triangles at each point of the upside down triangle of the Digital Hazard. It was a symbol Shamanmon is only too familiar with since he saw the image whenever the Digimon was within the tunnel and whenever Shamanmon glances at Impmon.

The virus Digimon didn't understand how it was that this rarely seen force seems to be found here in this Real World. Shamanmon knew that there were other human worlds out there, it's hard not to when Shamanmon is connected to the Digital World a bit more then most species of Digimon. Why do I see the ghostly touches whenever I look upon Henry and Rika? What purpose does the Hazard have for them?

As usual, no answers come to Shamanmon as the spiritually aware virus rookie watches as Henry moves to take Kazu's place, after some prompting from Akito and Suzie, across from Rika. Shamanmon knew that Henry continues to struggle with what happened with the D-Reaper and with Terriermon's seemingly uncontrolled state upon Digivolving beyond rookie level.

Rika, too, has problems, problems that concern with connecting with people beyond her own partner and family. Shamanmon is at a lost at how to break through Rika's emotional walls but knew that somebody, preferably a human, had to get through to her. There had been a time when Shamanmon thought Jeri was the one but other then Rika being more tolerant of the other girl, nothing.

I can't help but wonder if Henry's and Rika's problems are connected. As if somebody was suppose to be addressing their problems... If that's so, then where is this missing link? Shamanmon wonders as the rookie watches Henry and Rika play their game. The impression of the Hazard upon the two seem to grown whenever those two interact with each other.

Takato

Takato couldn't help but feel alert when the young teen watches as this squad of five Pteramon fly over the street as he's heading to school. Takato slows down to stand still as the hazel eyed teen follows the squad, Takato can feel others around him were as well. What are they doing this far from Shinijuku?

Suddenly, Takato glances off to a roof top just in time to watch the infamous partner of the Digimon Queen sporting said teenager upon their back leap between buildings. Takato swallows at sight of the two, the Tamer and her partner lands upon the ground while the five armor Digimon begin to circle over head

Chaos begins to explode around Takato as people begin to realize that a battle between the squad and the pair is about to happen here, outside of Shinijuku. As the girl, Rika, climbs off of the DIgital kyuubi fox's back, Takato fights to stay where he is, heart beating faster then it usually does. Takato knew that if he moved, it wouldn't be away from the fight but towards it.

Takato's senses seem to sharpen causing everything around him to seem more in focus then it was just seconds ago. Takato closes his eyes just as he picks up the cry, "Dragon Wheel!" Takato mentally struggles to calm himself down.

Don't change, don't change, don't change, don't change, don't change... Takato mentally chants to himself as a battle rages less then a mile from where he's standing. It didn't matter that Takato couldn't see it, the teen could feel the power belonging to the six Digimon before him.

The sounds of the fleeing people, including drivers, become mute against the sounds of the raging battle. Five voices ring out in unison, "Missile Storm!"

"Rika!" The fox cries out and Takato's eyes snap open, not even glancing at the flying Digimon but at the teenager, the Tamer. Takato's heart seems to thunder within his chest as Takato is moving, not away from the battle but towards the point of the incoming attack.

Takato manages to get between the attack and the red head. "Rika!" The fox bellows as the missiles impact all around Takato and the girl Tamer, the famous Digimon Queen, recently dubbed the Ice Queen of Shinijuku.

Takato blacks out as something tears into his back.

Rika

Rika dimly hears and feels Renamon as the missiles impact around her. Before Rika is a boy sporting real red hazel eyes, the same color the fictional character Kari sports in the two seasons, not that Rika will ever admit to having watched both seasons from beginning to end, she has a reputation after all...

The eyes focus into Rika's own and she watches as the light in them goes dull as blood explodes from her protector's back. Rika soon finds herself holding the other teen's full weight as the boy collapses down upon her, the force from behind him causing the boy to hit Rika and pin her to the sidewalk. Rika pulls herself out from under the teen's weight and gets her first glimpse of the other teen's back.

Rika notices blood oozing out of this seemingly freshly carved symbol upon the teen's back. The jacket and shirt didn't survive the missiles impacting them but for some odd reason, that seems to be the only evidence of the squad of Digimon attacks touching her protector. Focus, this isn't the time for hysterics! Deal with those Pteramon first and then with him.

Rika gently as she could, move the rest of the teen off of her before standing up. Rika draws a card from her card holder and by the time it came within the red head's vision range, it had been transformed into a blue card. Within seconds, Taomon makes her appearance while Rika takes out her cell phone and reports that there's an injured teen, it took Rika a few seconds to find the street numbers.

As Rika grabs the boy's book bag to press down upon the guy's back, help in the form of Jeri, Kenta, and their partners arrive. Surprisingly, MarineAngemon comes right to where Rika and the bleeding teen are. As the tiny pink mega moves to land upon the teen's back, Taomon finishes off the currently solo member of the squad.

"What happened?" Jeri asks and Rika numbly answers, "He saved my life."

Neither of the other two Tamers pressed for details while Rika just keeps applying pressure upon the boy's back. The tag upon the book bag displays the fallen teen's school ID and Rika studies the face of her rescuer, one Takato Matsuki, age fourteen.

Takato

Slowly, Takato comes to his senses. The fourteen year old feels that his back aches and that its hard for him to focus his mind. Takato dimly realizes that he's not home in bed but either is he at school in the nurse's office, there had been a few times where Impmon's attempts at catching him off guard has resulted in some type of bodily injury, not that it affects Takato for long, just a few days at the most and about eight hours in the least.

"Takato, honey? You should try and get some more sleep. You lost a lot of blood." Takato's mom says as she arrives within his line of sight.

"Huh?" Takato wonders, it's unusually for Impmon to use anything that would cause him serious harm. The rookie prefers water guns over fireballs, water balloons over water guns, and buckets filled with stuff upon carefully arranged doorway traps over water balloons.

"You got in the way of an incoming missile attack that was heading for a Tamer. Her partner couldn't move in time to block her but you did." Takato's mom explains while moving his bangs from his forehead and then stroking his head.

"You're very lucky that those missiles hadn't done more then cause cuts upon your back. I don't know what I would do if I lost you." Takato hears his mom say and could see tears welling up in her eyes.

Takato flushes and mentally curses at himself for causing his mom to cry. They had moved out of West Shinijuku not just because of what happened to Takato's father, but because his mother didn't want to lose him to a Digimon as well. Takato moves to gently squeeze his mom's hand before giving into his exhaustion and falling back to sleep.

Takato wakes to find something weighing down upon his chest. Takato takes a deep breath before yawning. As Takato waits for his eyes to focus, the fourteen year old could very well guess who it was upon him.

"Impmon." Takato makes to croak and the viral rookie snorts. "You're standing on my chest, aren't you?" The red hazel eyed teen asks.

"Feh, like that's really hurting ya." Impmon answers before the rookie leaps over onto the nearest chair. "Yous such an idiot, yea know? Charging in between a Tamer and an incoming attack, an attack from five Digimon no less!"

Takato smiles slightly at the glare the rookie sends his way. "No even stoppin' to change! Just showin' up in ya human skin to protect some icy broad of a red head! Yous be thanking ya lucky stars that nothing got seriously hurt! Heck, they're passing off the lack of damage as some kind of force field springing up out of Rika's gadget to minimize the damage!" Impmon informs the bed ridden teen.

"Really?" Takato asks and Impmon nods, the teen is kind of fuzzy about what happened but Takato kind of recalls getting pretty close to the famous Digimon Queen, more like within a mile then within a few feet. "It's all so blurry."

Silence hangs between them as Takato slowly begins to drift back to sleep. Takato's back still aches but the teen found it to be a manageable ache. "What time is it?" Takato asks after a while.

"Clock says it's three in the afternoon." Impmon tells Takato. "Ya mom had to leave for work. Seems they want to keep ya overnight.

Just to make sure there's no side affect."

Takato just hums thoughtfully. After a while, Impmon fetches a familiar book, one that he carries with him since Impmon wants to know how it ends. It wasn't all that odd for Takato to read to the rookie, it was something familiar and Takato's honestly pretty bored and didn't feel like trying to sleep.

Henry

Henry pauses at the sound of somebody reading. Almost as a reflect, the partner of Terriermon puts a hand over his partner's mouth while slowly approaching the curtain drawn spot where the teen, Takato Matsuki, is suppose to be staying at. Henry gets slow and peers through a small slit in the curtains to find Impmon sitting on a chair while a brunet teenager reads out loud from a paperback book entitled RedWall.

Henry feels Terriermon silently snicker at the scene before them while Henry couldn't help but wonder about what Impmon is doing here. Last Henry had heard, the imp didn't particularly like humans and continues to refer to their partners as Digi-Pets. They didn't find a D-Arc on Takato either so he's not a Tamer... So why is Impmon visiting this teen?

Terriermon finally wiggles out from under his hand to say, "Gee, Impmon, I never knew you could be so civil with a human."

Takato stops reading to glance up at them while Impmon leaps to his feet with a growl. "It's none of ya business whos I hang out with. It just so happens Takato's a very tolerable human." The other rookie snaps defensively at Terriermon.

Henry sighs while glancing between Impmon and Terriermon, the canine type rookie had already launched himself from Henry's shoulder and lands on the chair next to the wall, opposite of Impmon. "Terriermon." Henry says in a warning tone, he rather not have Impmon tossing around fireballs.

"Impmon..." Takato says while glancing over at the viral rookie. When Terriermon snickers, Takato gives the green colored rookie a disapproving look and surprisingly, Terriermon seems embarrassed and slightly guilty under the other teen's look.

Henry's a bit surprise by his partner's reaction. It's then that Henry notices the color of Takato's eyes. How odd... Henry thinks while staring into those red hazel eyes. It brings to mind a certain cartoon character who was also a Digidestine, Kari Kamiya, partner to a Gatomon.

Henry looks away from the other's eyes, slightly unnerved by the comparison since during the first season, Kari was the missing Digidestine, the one they were looking for. "You're Henry Wong, aren't you?" Takato asks and Henry nods.

"I am." Henry feels the stirrings of guilt and self-loathing. Henry could only imagine what the teen had to say to him.

"I thought you'd be taller." Takato admits and Impmon snickers softly. Henry couldn't help but start stare Takato, pretty confused by Takato's comment since it wasn't something he's use to hearing.

Henry shakes his head slightly while Takato looks faintly embarrassed. "Sorry, it's just, you do have a reputation after..." Takato glances over at Terriermon before glancing back at Henry.

"Not one I'm proud of." Henry admits and Takato nods. "You seems kind of familiar..." Henry finally says while studying Takato a bit more.

"Use to hang out with Kazu and Kenta before my mom sold the bakery and moved us out here." Takato explains and Henry nods, it's been a while and the memory kind of hazy but yea, Henry did seem to recall a third kid hanging around with those two before the pair started to follow after Akito. "I haven't stayed in touch with either of them."

"Well, I got better things to do and foods to eat. Be seeing ya later, Takato." Impmon says suddenly and Henry watches as the rookie leaves.

"See you later, Impmon." Takato says and Impmon just waves a hand. Henry shakes his head, kind of stunned by the change in Impmon's attitude then what he's experienced in the past.

"You know, we really should have given him that address." Terriermon pipes in and Henry stiffens before groaning slightly. He had forgotten all about that as Henry found himself a bit perplex about the idea that Impmon was visiting a human without trying to prank or taunt them.

"Address?" Takato asks curiously and Terriermon answers, "Momentai! Just a pair of kids looking to reconcile with the guy."

"Really? Maybe you should leave it with me and I'll give it to him. I'll likely see him tomorrow, after I get out." Takato admits.

"You seem to be pretty good friends." Henry observes and Takato replies, "We got to know each other back when we were still living in West Shinijuku. See him around the park, use to take him some of our day pastries."

"Huh?" Terriermon asks and Takato explains, "My parents use to own and operate a bakery there. Mom sold the business after the D-Reaper incident was concluded."

"It's just you and your mom then?" Henry asks and Takato nods. "I'm sorry." Henry adds and Takato waves is off.

"I blame the D-Reaper and that fire-bird of a Sovereign then you or Terriermon for what happened to my dad." Takato states. "You two didn't create that program nor did you force that little guy, Calumon, back into the Digital World. You just got caught up in the middle of something larger then you expected. Like the rest of the world."

Oddly enough, Henry felt like something lighten a bit by what Takato, a stranger to him, had said. The others all said something along those lines but hearing it from somebody who Henry barely knew... "So I've been told." Henry admits and Terriermon just says, "Momentai! See, not everyone thinks it's your fault for what happened!"

Takato seems to glance between Terriermon and Henry for a few seconds while Henry just sighs. "You still feel guilty for what happened? It's been little over two years since it happened. That's a pretty long time to be stewing about it, isn't it?" Takato wonders and Henry just looks away.

"You know, I'm really beginning to like you, Takato! If you can't listen to any of us, why don't you listen to him? I mean, he just got attacked by a bunch of Digimon and he's not bitter about it!" Terriermon points out and Henry sighs, he just didn't know what to think.

As Terriermon and Takato converse, Henry just watches the pair for a few minutes until Takato asks, "How about you, Henry? What's your favorite character in Bleach?"

Henry kind of blinks at Takato while Terriermon snorts. "Earth calling Henry. You really shouldn't space out on us, ya know."

"Sorry." Henry says before asking, "Could you repeat the question?"

It's been a while since Henry found himself just hanging out with anybody beyond Terriermon or the other Tamers, although with the Tamers, Henry mostly just listens and observes more then participate in their activities beyond playing Digimon the card game.

Going to end it here

Digital Split: MegaMan NT

I don't own Digimon or Mega Man Battle Network!

Lan Hikari

Age: 8

He loves his dad but there were times where he would like to be hold his father's attention for more then five or fifteen minutes. As the vehicle leaves with his father within it, he feels oddly numb; not feeling angry or sad. His mom squeezes his shoulders gently before stirring him back into the house and to the breakfast table.

He bites his lower lip as he seats himself at the table while mom seems to be gathering up dad's dishes. It occurs to him, suddenly, that his mom didn't like the fact that dad left for an emergency at the company instead of insisting that his underlings or fellow co-workers deal with it without him. It takes him a few seconds to think of how to distract his mom, cause he didn't want his mom to be sad.

"Are we going grocery shopping?" He asks before putting something in his mouth and chewing it. His mom pauses and thinks about it for a few seconds while staring at him before nodding. He smiles a bit; although he admits that it's not fair that his birthday falls on a no school day since if it were a school day, he'd be too busy to think about the fact that his dad is at work instead of being around.

As they leave the house, he glances towards a picture of his dad and suddenly, he found himself wishing, I wish I had a dad who was around more and can be a dad.

Then he feels guilty about wishing that and is more then glad to hurry out of the house as the alarm is counting down.

Later

Stupid beeping... He thinks as he rubs his eyes while walking towards his dad's home office. If this keeps up, it'll wake mom up.

He turns the door knob and enters into the small room that contains like two book cases filled with books. The desk is kind of old looking, it supposedly belonged to his twice great granddad or something, so it's pretty massive. He gets onto the chair, it's newer then the desk, and turns on the monitor.

As it comes online, the screen if filled with ones and zeros. They over lap each other as lines move from either right to left or left to right to up to down or down to up. The background is black with the various sequences of code being either white or a dull yellow. He couldn't make heads nor tales of the binary codes going about the screen, but then, that could be cause of how overlapping it all is.

Scratching the side of his head, he just gets dizzy of the lot, so he tries to turn off the monitor... only to find that the little light turned off but the ones and zeros remain. Frowning, he continues to press the button and the little light turns on but that's it. He presses it a few more times but nothing happened to the numbers so he tries to turn off the computer.

He presses it and as he glances up at the screen, the numbers begins to glow before a bright light flares up from the screen, blinding him for a few minutes. Even when his vision is regained, he finds it hard to believe what he's seeing upon the screen. He pinches himself and just causes himself to ache in that spot while the image upon the screen remains unchanged.

He turns his head this way and that but the image seems to remain the same no matter how he views it. With a hum, he decides to try something on the keyboard and jumps a bit as moving the mouse seems to cause the planet spin. A point also appears upon the screen and he points it at some spot on the planet.

He clicks and watches as the image of the planet seems to rush at him, giving him a better view of that part of the virtual planet.

Bafflement and curiosity causes him to experiment a bit with this, he even finds a way to zoom in more. I knew the net is slowly taking the appearance of landscapes and stuff but this isn't what I envisioned.

Then he catches sight of some kind of herd of zebras sporting helmets with a single metal horn upon them and seem to sport a few other odd features not seen in pictures of said animal. The virtual animals become alert and suddenly something wearing black armor comes charging from the left with a pair of devil men trailing it.

The herd of zebra don't flee but fire off blasts at the flying devil men. He flushes as he hears one of the black leather wearing devil men curse up a storm, using words he knows his mom and dad would frown at hearing from him. The other devil man fires off attacks of their own at the still fleeing black armor covered blue creature.

He quickly causes the screen to withdraw from that and sits back in the chair as he considers what he just witnessed just seconds ago. He stares at the screen, wondering what kind of program is running on his dad's computer. Still... What kind of program runs when the computer is suppose to be off?

The sight of the strange digital continent beckons him and while he knew the smart thing to do would be to return to his room, but that course of action wouldn't be him. So, he reaches for the mouse and continues to view this virtual world. The areas of water, too, sport these monstrous virtual beings with some of them appearing as dolphins and fish.

He pulls out of the latest area and stares at the virtual world upon the screen of his dad's computer. He suddenly yawns and begins to rub his eyes. Sleep once more driving its hooks into him, he tries to fight it but it's just so late...

I wish I could explore more of that... that... virtual world. Those beings seem to have interesting abilities... I wonder what they're called... He thinks sleepily as he finds himself leaning deeply into the back of the chair.

He suddenly feels as though he's floating in a black void with that world hanging before him. A soft murmur surrounds him, he's unable to make out what's being said, only individual tones and voices. He holds out his right hand, palm facing the world and he feels himself floating towards the planet, this seems to cause that murmur to become clearer and a bit louder.

He jerks his head back as he catches bits and pieces of what's being said. A chill seems to engulf him and he pulls his arms around his upper body, shivering in the void while dimly listing to the murmur of voices, some of the voices seem to be arguing with each other while others spoke of their dreams and nightmares. As he floats there, he finds himself torn between continuing forward and wanting to wake up in his dad's home office.

The dim of voices seem to stop and he hears his own voice say, "I wish I had a dad who was around more and can be a dad." He blinks, more then a little stunned upon hearing that; he had forgotten that he thought that during breakfast this morning.

"But my mom... She'll worry if just vanish." He says, he might want a new dad but he wasn't looking for a new mom. "I don't want her to worry about me."

"So be it." A chorus of voice, male and female, young and old, say as one.

Light suddenly engulfs him and then... blackness.

Morning

Real World

"Lan... What are you doing in your father's office?" His mom asks him as he struggles to wake, the lights being turned on had startled him out of the deeper reaches of sleep.

As he blinks to rapidly as the overhead lights continue to beam down, no mercy being shown to his sensitive eyes. He glances around and finds that, yes, he is in his father's study. He glances over at the computer screen to find it blank and off.

"I heard something and it was coming from dad's computer." He says as he leans forward, away from the back of the chair. "Ouch... my back..." He whimpers and he hears his mom sigh softly.

"Come on, I'll help you to the couch and get you something for your aches." His mom says as she moves to help him down from the chair. He's too occupied with his aches to feel embarrassed.

"You do have school today too." His mom reminds him and he groans upon hearing that; already last night's events were being pushed out of his mind, particularly that dream concerning him floating in that void with that world hanging before him.

Morning

Digital World

He slowly came to without his alarm waking him or his mom calling him down for breakfast. He takes a deep breath and the scent of flowers suddenly causes him to sneeze. With a sigh, he opens his eyes and rolls onto his back before sitting up.

Sleep vanishes at the sight of a meadow spread out before him. He glances up to find that he's resting under a tree with broad branches that are covered in leaves. He spends a bit looking up at the tree before glancing towards the meadow.

He moves to stands his legs and then wiggles his tail. He blinks and focuses on that last limb. He turns his body, arcing his body to the right while moving his head and tail to the left. He yelps at the sight of his brown tail with orange pebbly scale pattern upon the top of the tail.

"Where are my arms?" He wonders in a higher pitched voice then normal after he tries to get a look at his chest and discovers the lack of a chest. He does find short powerful lefts that are doubled bent with two thick toes making up the foot.

He discovers he a heck of a lot shorter then he remembers being. He glances around, looking for something to use as a mirror. After a few steps, he finds that by moving his head forward helps balance him when he runs.

Upon running across the meadow, he discovers the beginning of a forest viva sparse bushes and trees. He slows his pace as he walks through this forest. He finally finds a river and glancing down into the shimmering surface of the river, he finds a stranger looking up at him with hazel brown eyes. He turns his body and notices how he seems to be mostly a small head, two inch neck, and a rather round body sporting a tail and short powerful legs.

I kind of look like a dino. He admits to himself, the orange pebbly scale pattern does go on to cover the top part of his body and his head, though stopping short of the very tiny muzzle. He opens his mouth and notices the tiny row of sharp looking teeth, he also pokes his dull red colored tongue out for a few seconds before bringing it back into his mouth.

As he's occupied with his reflection, a small school of fish come swimming pass. At the sight of those fish, he becomes aware of how hungry he is. He tenses and leaps into the center of the school as he tries to snap at the swimming fish.

The fish scatter, leaving him with nothing to show for his effort but him being wet. He stalks out of the river and after shaking his body, he heads off to find something easier to have for breakfast. This so sucks...

Species Name: Chibidramon

Level: In-Training

Attribute: Data

Type: Baby Dragon

Attacks: Pebble Shield (not really an offensive move, causes the ground to raise up to engulf the in-training Digimon to protect the baby type from incoming attacks)

Month Later

Digital World

"Tag! Your it!" He cries as his tail tip touches one of the Koromon. He giggles as he races off while the fellow in-training Digimon squeals before hopping after him.

It's times like these that he's glad he has legs instead of stumpy limbs less then an inch in length like he has seen on four legged in-training Digimon. He manages to get clean away from the tagged Koromon. He turns and watches as the Koromon goes after a Viximon and manages to kind of land of the bushy tail of that yellow Digimon.

"Tag! Your it!" The Koromon says while hopping away, the Viximon seems a bit stunned before racing after that Koromon to re-tag them.

"Ready to go, Lan?" He jerks a bit and glances behind him, towards the gate to find his adopted father, a Shadramon named Sasuke. He nods at Sasuke and before making it within a foot of the fence, turns and calls out good-byes to his fellow in-training Digimon.

With that, his new dad glides down to the ground to pick him up and a short flight over the metal and wooden fence, he walks after his floating dad who's easy to spot since Sasuke sports armor and wings that are red trimmed with yellow. He begins to tell Sasuke about his day, in particular the lessons a few of the other parents showed up to teach and his new dad asks question about the lessons which he gladly answers.

As they leave the neutral area and a comfortable silence falls between his new dad and himself, he begins to think about the time before he was a Chibidramon and wonders if he's missed. When he feels like he's about to cry, he blinks and focuses on Sasuke's back and focuses upon the fact that he's got a new life to live now with its own problems and rewards.

He tries to let go of the feeling of missing his favorite toys, his music, TV, his friends, and his... parents. He takes a deep breath and smiles at the various earthy scents that float upon the wind. He so enjoys the fresh air and the fact that there wasn't any roads or side walk for him to watch out for. The noise of a busy city doesn't commonly exist here and he's glad since there isn't any danger of him getting hit by a drunk driver or being dragged into an alley to be kidnapped to use against his d... old dad.

With the sight of his new home, a place resting in the branches of an old tree, he pushes thoughts of his old world, the human world, out of his mind.

The end

Takato's Journey: Digimon

Legendary Horses

I don't own Digimon!

Takato's Journey

The young stallion gallops along the rocky ridges of the mountain range, heading for a high ledge as black clouds continue to gather overhead. A really big storm is going to happen and Takato needs to find a protective place to wait out the storm. His hooves cause some small pebbles to dislodge and fall, but nothing of any real size to cause a landslide.

Other mountain runners were on the moving as well. At times the stallion can hears the cries of their young, they had likely stopped because they were hungry or tired. Takato doesn't let such things keep him from continuing upon his search for a protective shelter. 'At times like these I really wish I was born with wings...'

The bachelor herd of pegasi had long since migrated out of the area when spring arrived, leaving him very much alone among this patch of mountain. Takato would have followed but, well, it just was too long a journey and by the time he arrived at their spring range, it likely would be in the fall. The young stallion shakes himself out of his thoughts, the feelings such thoughts were another matter though.

Thunder pearls out over head, startling Takato a bit, which leads the stallion to slow down. He raises his head and sniffs the air, managing to catch sight of lightning streaking through the black clouds overhead. With a shake of his head, the reddish brown mane whipping about before being catch once more by the wind and begins to dance to its tune.

As the wingless pegasus makes it to a narrow ridge, the clouds suddenly release their contains. Heavy droplets rain down at a slant. Takato couldn't help but think curse his luck as he is forced to navigate his way at a much slower rate since the water will make it difficult for him to get footing upon the stone ridge.

Thunder pearls out after a flash of lightning lights up in the free space to Takato's left. "The gods hate me." The young four year old stallion murmurs while continuing forward, wincing whenever one of his front hooves slips as he's trying to find a safe spot for them so he can continue forward.

'Why did I have to grow so large? Why couldn't I just stop growing when I reached my parent's sizes?' Takato wonders privately to himself as the rain continues to beat down upon everything under the clouds.

The stallion sighs and then turns his head to look backwards, wondering if he shouldn't just try to go back. Takato snorts at the thought before returning to look at where he's going while his tail whips about in irritation. The wingless pegasus stallion proceeds forward a bit more.

Close to the end of the ridge, the stallion decides to try leaping to by pass the rest of the few feet between him and the broad ledge that the ridge leads to. Takato's confident that he could make the leap as he sports the tough hollow bones of his heritage and stronger leg muscles then other pegasi as he lacks wings so he has to travel every where upon his own four hooves.

Hunching up a bit, Takato shifts his weight to his hindquarters. The young stallion leaps forward and as Takato lands, he let's out a joyous bellow before surging forward to stand under a ledge that's only twenty feet from the tip that he landed upon.

Once under the ledge, Takato begins to lick himself. Although hungry from his nerves being frayed, the young stallion settles for filling his belly with water to tie himself over until the storm lets up so he can head for one of the various valleys that sports good grazing spots.

As the storm continues and Takato doesn't have anything to occupy his time with, the stallion growing tired and begins to find himself beginning to fall asleep.

"Where have you been?" Takato tries to make out the mare before him but no matter how he tries, the stallion couldn't make out any details of this mare. "Whatever, come on! The fireflies are about to begin their display."

The unfocused mare takes off, weaving through tree and bushes. Not knowing what else to do, Takato follows after the mare. The forest sports sounds that Takato has never heard during his life within the mountain range.

Suddenly the trees leave off and a meadow lies before him. Takato pauses at the treeline, suddenly aware that there were others within the meadow. He could smell the scent of stallions and mares but he couldn't make out which were which nor could he tell if they were pegasi or not.

"Are you just going to stand there or what?" That mare asks and he's startled to find her standing to his right. Takato doesn't know how but the mare seems to be glaring at him.

"Sorry, just didn't expect..." Takato doesn't finish but the mare seems to snort softly. He walks into the meadow and it didn't take long before the mare takes point once more.

The mare seems to find a spot she liked and lies down. Takato follows her example, the young stallion could hear murmurs of the herd. As the sun finally vanishes, quiet settles down all over the meadow and then, slowly, tiny lights begin to appear among the grasses and trees before they take to the air.

Takato couldn't help but be awed by the sight. Every which way he glances, those tiny glowing lights seemingly float in the air. "These are fireflies?" Takato asks softly and the unidentified mare nods.

"They're so beautiful." He says softly as Takato watches as they begin to clump together, creating a glowing mist. "Hard to believe they're just insects." The stallion adds while glancing else where to see other groupings of fireflies.

Groaning softly, Takato slows wakes as the sun's light irritates his eyes. The stallion yawns and begins to smack his lips together while swallowing. With a grunt, Takato moves to stand since it seems that sometime last night, he had laid down.

Takato stretches a bit before walking out from under the ledge. There were some small dots of pooled water about the stone surface and it didn't take long for the young stallion to drink his fill. He then glances around, taking the changes the storm has wrought.

The stallion sighs and begins to climb to get on top of the ledge he had used as cover. More then a few rocks fall down as Takato walks up the steep slope. It's slow going but Takato moves expertly about the newly dubbed slippery surface of the mountain that the stallion calls home.

The hunting cries of gryphons causes him to glance above as Takato pauses while walking down the path. The young stallion feels exposed as he spots black specks up in the sky. It had a while since gryphons have been spotted around these peaks, but then, it's likely that the gryphon's breeding year is coming up and the pair is looking to set up a territory in this part of the world earlier then expected.

Takato picks up his pace, heading for a valley that sports blooming flowers and bushes. It also has a spring at the center of it, forming a shallow pool and creates a small waterfall that leads down to a rushing river about a day's flight from the valley. The plants that grow there never suffered much during any of the seasons, not with a spring feeding the pool.

As midday arrives, Takato finally reaches the valley. Other mountain dwellers glance up as Takato approaches before returning to their grazing or drinking. He heads for the pool before beginning to browse upon the various flowering bushes and plants.

Upon eating his fill, he moves up the slop and upon finding a patch of dirt, Takato drops down and rolls in it. Takato sighs softly as he lies in the patch of dirt for a while. The young stallion shakes his head and gets to his feet.

'If only I can bend around to get at all of those itches myself...' Takato thinks as he moves to find some shade to rest in. Upon reaching a spot, a surprised bleep causes him to glance back to find one of the mountain goats being lifted higher into the air by a gryphon.

Takato takes the time to get a good look at the gryphon, noticing the eagle markings upon the gryphon is clearly marked upon the feathery parts of the hunter. The fur parts are a shade lighter then the golden brown of the feathers with darker fur seemingly forming bars about the feline part of the gryphon's feet.

The gryphon and Takato gaze into each others' eyes for a brief time. 'Maybe I should give migration a try...' Takato thinks as the gryphon continues to raise higher into the air. 'I rather not be mistaken for a simple horse and end up a meal for them.'

Takato couldn't find the strength to raise his head or to swish his tail while the sun beats down upon him. It's been six days since Takato had left the southern most boundary of the range he had lived his whole life in. 'Six days since I had a decent meal too.'

The wingless pegasus had to hunt down places for water and grazing spots. To cover more ground, the stallion stuck to the top parts of the mountain range and thus walks under the sun without any real cover to give him relief. Takato swallows before panting once more as he continues to move at a ground eating trot. The wind is the only relief Takato has from the heat.

Takato slows as he comes closer to a large gap. Takato stops by the edge and glances down and finds a huge waterfall below, the stream seems to be going southwest. The stallion moves around, trying to find a spot that sports the shortest distance between the two ledges.

After some time, Takato couldn't find a good spot to leap the gap so the young stallion begins to search for a way down, hoping that down some lengths there will be shorter gaps that he can jump. He finds a narrow path by the time the sun is setting and begins to travel down it.

As it grows darker, his strength continues to wane and without light to help him get a good look, Takato is traveling rather blindly down the path. Suddenly something moves just as his hoof is about to be place before him and a bird flies up, startling Takato.

As Takato falls down, he couldn't help but watch the starry sky above him grow more and more distant. 'I guess this was my fate all along. To die by falling upon the stones of the mountain.'

The roar of the falls drown out all other thoughts and then, suddenly, the stallion finds it hard to breath. His head finally exits out of the water, allowing him a few quick breaths before the currents drag him under once more.

Then, suddenly, Takato feels weightless once more and it dawns on him that he's reached the falls. The wingless pegasus stallion screams in terror. Upon hitting the water below, he blacks out.

The squawk of birds is the first thing Takato notes as he slowly begins to wake. Next, he begins to cough and feels liquid come up. Takato blinks his eyes, waiting for his vision to stop being blurry.

With a groan, the stallion begins to fold his legs up against his belly while rolling into a much more comfortable position. Takato feels some weight vanish upon him moving about and more then a few irritated cries of protest from the scavenger birds who to feast upon him.

Slowly, Takato becomes aware of how achy his body is and realizes that he's very much alive since he doubts his body's conditions would follow him to the afterlife. Raising his head, Takato snorts at the various crows and eagles that are about him. "Get Lost." Takato states at the group of birds.

The three eagles glance between them before leaving. The crows were more stubborn but Takato wasn't too worried since birds do tend to obey pegasi and other star-touched beings of the air like gryphons, hippogriffs, even dragons.

After a while, the sight of greenery causes Takato to struggle to get up off the bank. Upon getting up, the crows finally left and walking wobbly towards the trees, Takato continues to fight the urge to lie back down. With a bush within reach, Takato begins to browse at the leaves.

After a few mouthfuls, Takato moves towards a patch of flowers and begins to eat a few bites from it before, once more moving on. He found the leaves and stems of various plants to have a different flavor then what he's use too. With so many plants around, it didn't take long for Takato to fill up.

Takato moves and lies down under a broad branch tree. Sleep claims him within seconds.

Rika pauses by a tree since she thought she saw something under a tree. Curious, the unicorn mare moves towards the spot and does find a sleeping horse sporting reddish brown mane and tail. Water seems to have erased the sleeping horse's scent, making it hard to know what gender the horse is.

"Why did you... Oh, huh. A horse." Ami says the last part in disgust. "Looks to be dead to the world. Bet you a lynx will get it or a bear." The spring green unicorn mare muses as more of the herd comes to see the sight.

After a bit, the others flick their tails and continue towards the river for a drink, leaving Rika and a young unicorn stallion named Ryo to remain. "He's pretty fine boned." Ryo remarks after walking closer to take a mighty whiff of the horse's scent.

"Might be one of the human's racers." Rika remarks. "Although, I didn't know humans had created a settlement this far east. I thought the dragons declared humans won't be expanding their territory ever again. Not with what happened with their experiments into meshing draconian blood with those dogs sixty years ago."

"There's an underling scent to him, one that kind of reminds me of birds." Ryo tells her. "Come take a sniff if you don't believe me."

With a grunt, Rika stalks over and takes a sniff of the strange stallion and finds that Ryo's right. This stallion has a tint of bird to his core scent. "How odd..." Is her only reply.

As Rika moves towards the stallion's head, Ryo moves back, allowing her room. With her nose close to the resting stallion's own, the stallion's eyes open and Rika freezes at the sight of those bright yellow eyes, the shade of yellow reminds her of birds of prey. With a start, the stranger moves to raise his head and their noses touch, much to Rika's bewilderment and then embarrassment.

Rika hurries to back away from the stranger, although she couldn't help but notice how the stranger's eyes seem to be more forward then her own or any unicorn's eyes. The stranger seems to be about Ryo's height and more compacted in build then a horse or unicorn would be. 'Powerful.' Rika decides as she watches as the stallion gets to his feet.

A strange kind of sound seems to come from the stranger, a sound that is pretty high pitched and bird like. The expression upon the stranger's face is questioning and those yellow eyes clearly sport the flame of intelligence in them. The sound gets repeated but it seems to be slower then the first sound, she thought she noted a few other notes to the sound this time too.

"You think he's talking to us?" Ryo asks since Rika sure wasn't going to voice that question out loud.

This just seems to cause the stranger to become alarmed and another series of sounds come from the stranger. "Kind of reminds you of bird song, only... it's not." Rika notes.

"Well, looks like life won't be dull any more." Ryo muses.

"We're only twenty, Ryo. This isn't our problem." Rika says and begins to walk towards the river, trying to ignore how handsome the exotic stallion is in his odd way.

To be continued . . .

Heart of the Mine: Harry Potter

I don't own Harry Potter!

Huh, so what should I do with these tunnels? A nineteen year old Harry Potter wonders upon reaching the center area that had housed dwarven workers of old who had been employed by the Black family. There's nothing left to mine, which kind of made the how place worthless.

I likely won't find any buyers for it since there's nothing much one could do with a played out mine... The young English wizard muses. Scratching the side of his head, Harry sighs and then heads for the center building as it looks fairly preserved compared to the other wooden structures that make up workshops.

Upon touching the door handle, the door shimmers and the door seems to swing open; Harry's grip upon the handle seems to have been ignored by the magic protecting the building. Entering, Harry glances about the room beyond the doorway. The sound of the door closing did cause him to stiffen a bit but shrugs it off. Crystal lamps light up, allowing Harry to see the interior of the building.

Harry turns down the hallway just beyond the front room. Along the hallway seems to be about four doors. Opening one of them reveals that the room had been used as office space. Two other rooms prove to be similarly set up, but the third one, the third revealed a stair case.

The second floor sports two large rooms, likely bedrooms since they still sports wooden frame for a bed and dressers. The last room is a really large office with metal busts and stone statues about the room. Not a picture or fireplace in sight. Harry thinks as he walks over to the large stone desk.

Just walking around the building causes dust to stir. Just looking backwards, Harry could see his prints upon the floor. "How long has it been since this place was cleaned?" Harry wonders out loud.

He could feel a bit of a draft happen about the room. Likely whatever ward is responsible for causing circulation to happen. The young wizard stops before the desk, placing a hand upon the flat surface, Harry then moves his right hand to the right, kind of causing a streak in the dust to appear upon the desk.

Making a face at the grim and dirt upon his hand, Harry wipes his hand upon his jeans while using his left hand to hold his wand. It took a few spells but the dust covering the desk vanishes and polishes the surface of the desk, revealing that the rock used is black with flicks of other colors upon it. Switching hands, Harry then creates a chair to sit upon.

The desk sports drawers but nothing remains within them, likely cleaned out when the Blacks evacuated the mine. Harry hums before exploring more of the room, he found two vaults and within one of them, a number of wooden items with amber decorating them. At the sight of the wooden items, Harry just frowns and picks them out of the metal vault that's behind the desk.

With a shrug, Harry takes the thin leather book that's under the cloth. Carefully placing enchanted items upon the cloth once more, he wraps them up after shutting the door of the vault. Harry sits down upon the chair, the young adult opens the book. It takes Harry a few minutes to puzzle out the spidery writing but it seems that those wooden implements function is to cause raw mineral deposits to be drawn to the mine.

It seems that the experiment using the implements worked but they still had to abandoned the mine since the news about the mine being played out had spread far enough that the Black family had to end their operations or other families would learn of their experiments in regards to drawing deep mineral deposits to the mine. Makes sense, wouldn't want to share the wealth or the ability with another family.

This just might be the way to recreate my fortune. So glad that Professor Bumblebee was thoughtful to give the Ministry all of my Potter family inheritance to rebuild. At least burning his picture at Hogwarts took some of the anger off from that. Harry thinks darkly as he reads about how to create, use, and maintain those implements.

Anger towards the old man continues to boil below the surface. At least he couldn't touch the Black family properties and its money. Damn, how in hell did that man get my dad to sign that f#cking piece of paper? Didn't he bother to read it? Harry mentally rants as he closes the book and get up off the chair.

Walking over to the other vault that Harry had found, he studies the metal door. It takes a bit of effort for him to open this vault up. The door is pretty tiny compared to the previous one but then, within the vault, Harry finds small six metal post that contains a small glowing ball of energy. Within its misty appearance colorful lightning seems to dance between the golden metal posts of the device and the tiny black speck within the center of the white mist.

Harry couldn't help but feel goosebumps raise up. A strange aching sensation seems to happen in his eyes and the faded lightning mark upon his brow. Minutes pass as he stares at the ensnared mist until finally, Harry looks away while takes off his glasses. Using his free hand, Harry rubs his temple before rubbing his nose bridge.

Harry's vision swims for a bit but then clears. Putting on his glasses, Harry finds his vision blurs causing him to take off his glasses once more. Harry glances around the room and is stunned to find that he saw the room as if sunlight lit it up. There weren't any shadows, just places that have least amount of light illuminating it.

"What...? How?" Harry exclaims and glances over at the odd device. He swallows as he realizes that the device is the cause of fixing his eyes.

"What is this thing?" Harry wonders and already knows that whatever it was, there's a reason why the Black family kept it down in this mine. "I wonder if any of the other properties contain secrets like this one?"

After all, if it weren't for some clause about the new head of the Black family needing to tour unused properties then Harry wouldn't have given selling this mine another thought or the rest of the properties that he needs to tour. With a sigh, Harry closes the vault door and finds himself leaning upon the wall, panting softly and feeling very hungry.

Before Harry leaves the mine, he sets up the wooden implements with a Galloen as an example of what to draw to the mine. It wouldn't take long for gold to be drawn to the mine, about three days since they seem to be fully charged.

As Harry arrives to the entrance of the mine, an unusual thought unfolds within his mind. Although... If I can conjure paper, why can't I conjure paper bills?

Four Months Later

Harry picks up one of the freshly cold gold bars that he had smelted about twenty feet from the mine office. It had taken some doing but he had bought the equipment he needed to smelt his own bars since he didn't trust anyone no to speak of the fact that he's reopened the mine, which is why its only a small operation done by Kreacher and himself.

He smiles as he looks down at the bar in his hand before glancing at the row of other gold bars. The goblins have finally signed that contract that I had that team of lawyers draw out. I'll finally be able to move all of this gold out of here without trying to sell in the more common global market (Muggle economic market). He thinks, he had given up using the term Muggle (Might be a side-effect of Dumbledore and the Ministry of Magic screwing him though) to describe non-magical humans since there are over nine billion of them upon the world while the number of witches and wizards seem to number only in the millions, if that.

Harry places the gold bar back down and moves to find Kreacher to see if the house elf has tea in the make shift kitchen. Harry pauses to glance at the various crates next to the underground headquarters. Harry sighs at the sight and is reminded that he'll need to hire some dwarfs to help redesign the mine complex.

"Tea is ready, master." Kreacher says within the front room that's within sight of the door. "Ies picked up the mail." The elderly house elf adds, gesturing to the small pile of letters.

"Thank you Kreacher." Harry says and adds, "You can retire if you wish to. It has been a tiring day."

Kreacher bows before using the port-key to head back to his other remaining property to his name. Harry's emerald eyes land upon the small pile of letters after finishing his first cup. Pulling the letters close, he grins slightly at who they are from.

Looks like those bombs finally went off. Looks like they will never discover any rare or forgotten treasures of the Black family. Harry muses with a dark smirk upon his face as he shifts certain letters to the side.

The Ministry of Magic had decided to impose restrictions about what kind of properties half-bloods and muggleborns can own in the magical world. I wonder what kind of reaction it'll gather if I begin to offer up bounties on UK Ministry of Magic personal or on certain pure-blood families? I have more then enough gold to do so... Harry muses thoughtfully, he has grown to loath the Ministry of Magic since nothing had changed in regards to how muggleborn are treated, the only thing that has altered is that half-bloods are now lumped in with muggleborns.

Taking a pencil from his shirt pocket and a note pad to begin listing names of pure-blood families that he would love to vanish off the face of the earth, which turned out to have a lot of employees of the Ministry in it too. He sighs and pushes the list away from him as he realizes how similar his thoughts must be to a certain half-blood.

He knows he's undergone changes lately, ever since he viewed that strange device, Harry found himself viewing his current situation differently. What do I owe them? I save them from Tom and yet they seem so determined to take very thing I own and place it in a museum or sell it internationally to collectors. Harry thinks.

They stuffed Hedwig... He closes his eyes as he remembers seeing his dead owl on display while meeting with the current Minister of Magic, the one who replaced Shacklebolt five months ago. Harry could feel tears well up even with his eyes being closed.

It takes Harry a few minutes to reign in his emotions. He distracts himself by opening up one of those product endorsement offers. What the F#CK? They can't do that! Harry thinks upon reading the first letter.

"I'm done being used like a f#cking thing! I don't care if it brings down the ministry and its laws, they're going to pay, pay with their f#cking lives!" Harry growls and grabs the list.

A visit to a cyber cafe to print up the list and then to a photocopy shop to make five hundred copies of each page of names and how their beheaded heads are worth in pure gold bars. The minimum number of gold bars offered is six with the max being sixteen.

Using a certain disguised potion using various hairs instead of one, Harry visited various shady places, often leaving small stacks of the list at each spot. By dawn, those lists have found their way to various hit witches and wizards more then happy to earn such easy money.

Hit Wizard: Ethan Baker

Not only can I finally kill that arrogant f#cker, his friends, and his kids but I'll earn over twenty gold bars by turning their heads in? Hell yea! This is turning out to be the best month ever! The muggleborn named Ethan thinks upon finding a pile of papers that came in threes, the pages were stapled together and each of the sheets are full of names of pure-blooded witches and wizards.

He couldn't help but begin whistling a tune as he heads for the nearest floo port to floo to Nott's place. Upon entering into the living room, Ethan waits for somebody to come into the living room to investigate. It didn't take long for Nott junior to arrive and one cutting curse causes the young man's head to hit the ground with a wet thud.

It takes about fifteen minutes for the young man's parents to arrive and before either could demand about why he's there, they lost their heads. With a flick of his wand causes the heads to shrink before pocketing them into a certain black leather bag.

Ethan takes a handful of floo powder and heads to the next house. Have to hurry before somebody else hits them first.

Selwyn Faywe

His mug thuds upon the bar and he waits for the bar tender to fill it up. "Are you Selwyn? Selwyn Faywe?" A woman's voice asks huskily.

Glancing over at the witch to his right, he grins at the sight of the woman's bust size, not even bothering to look at the witch's face. "That's me. So, what do ya want?"

"Are you sure? I mean, you don't look like you use to be a Death Eater... I mean, they were all captured within a year after their master fell." The witch says and being drunk, it never occurred to Selwyn to wonder why this witch is even asking that.

"I left England within the week of his death. Likely one of the smart ones actually. Of course if I thought I could buy my way out like Malfoy, I wouldn't have had to leave my possessions behind." He spats as once more, the silver tongued blond had purchased his and his son's pardon.

"Good, I didn't want to get the wrong one." The witch says and suddenly, everything goes black for Selwyn.

Harry Potter

"Harry! Somebody has placed a reward upon my head! They already got my parents!" Draco Malfoy exclaims upon arriving into Harry's country home through the door.

"Really? Why don't you go to Shacklebolt? I mean, he's still in charge of auror unless he has been replace since I last saw him last week." Harry muses, he already knew about Malfoy's parents as somebody collected that bounty just yesterday.

What to do, what to do... Harry muses as Draco rants about how ineffective the aurors are. He finds it funny since just a month ago, during an interview with the Daily Prophet his old classmate mentioned how they not longer need to rely upon the skills of a certain frame seeking man who took out the last Dark Lord.

The sales of those properties were suppose to go to fund that department if I recall. Harry thinks as he watches the blond pure-blood wizard pace about his living room. "I really don't see how this concerns me, Draco. I seem to recall an article last month where you said that I'm unneeded now that the auror department's funds were increased from the selling various confiscated properties."

"I even believe most of those belonged to the Black family before I was forced to 'sell' them in exchange to get rid of suddenly uncovered unpaid fines. I believe it took considerable effort for me to even keep that old mine and this house... I believe your party remarked about the fact that I had Potter properties to concern myself with." Harry remarks and Draco stiffens, likely finally remembering that.

"I believe you lot forgot that Dumbledore caused the liquidation of all of my father's vaults and properties." Harry remarks and Draco squims a bit. "And then, just a few days ago, not only did the Ministry give businesses permits to use my name to sell their product but told them that they didn't have to pay me royalties from previous, current, and future sales."

"Tell me, why should I help you, Draco? You sure as hell didn't try and defend my interests in the ministry, even though you owe me a life debt." Harry says slowly. "But then, I believe every f#cking witch and wizard owes me a life debt since I did kill old Tommy boy for them. And yet, how am I treated? You strip me of my inheritances, of my property... of my right to my own name. Is it any wonder that I decided enough is enough?"

"What did you do?" Draco asks in a harsh tone.

"Why, I'm taking back my dignity, Draco. I'm getting rid of these people who think they can do whatever they please to those who don't walk in their social circles." Harry explains. "Simply put, I'm helping the extinction of an inferior culture and people along. You lot are only dragging magic down, you put restrictions upon it, you police it, you fine it. You think only you and your families are the only ones with any right to use magic and since your powers are waning, you can't stand seeing how powerful in magic the muggleborns or the half-bloods are."

"You can't match their magical growth so you try and find other ways to cut them down. And they let you because they thought your society was one of fairness, it's only until they leave Hogwarts are they force to see just how unfair your society is upon them learning just what kind of jobs they can have."

"You... You don't have the money to pay those rewards!" Draco finally finds his voice but Harry just smiles. Draco's face snarls before going for his wand, but Draco is bound up by magic.

"No attacking Kreacher's master!" The elderly house elf snaps upon walking into the living room.

"Thank you Kreacher. It seems as though you just earned his bounty though." Harry muses as he gets up from his chair.

"Ise be needing no gold, master." Kreacher says and Harry smiles over at the house elf.

"You know, you could always use that gold to purchase linen and make yourself some suitable cloths. It's not an order, merely a suggestion since I'm sure you can stand to wear something to warm those old bones of yours." Harry admits after a moment's though.

Kreacher considers this before nodding. "Ise wouldn't mind new bed sheets." The house elf admits as Harry summons Draco's wand.

Using Draco's wand, Draco's head rolls onto the floor with blood starting to ooze from Malfoy's neck. Harry stares at the lifeless head, expecting some kind of emotion to come forth but only relief seems to be within him.

I really need to find out more about that device and what kind of effects it causes. Harry thinks. Because I'm sure not acting in a way I would have approved of six months ago.

The End

Portal Maddness 3: Naruto

I don't own Naruto, Pet Shop of Horrors, Changeling the Lost, and Dragonlance!

"Damn it, Hiko! Let me finish skinning this beast before giving it to ya!" Naruto snaps at the blue dragon whelp that seems to be more then happy to follow the ex-ninja about since the blond had defeated a group of knights to keep the blue wyrmling from being killed like the rest of Hiko's siblings.

"Not fault ya slow!" Hiko snaps at Naruto, its a wonder that in the five months that they've been together that the blue whelp has become this fluent in Naruto's native tongue. The wyrmling is trying to gut the stag that Naruto had killed.

Naruto just glares at the blue whelp but continues to skin the stag while trying to keep the stag is pinned to the ground long enough for his knife strokes to cut the furry hide free from the rest of the body. Hiko seems to be enjoying moving the dead body while the blond is skinning the beast. The body stops moving when Hiko managed to pull out most of the stag's organs and guts.

Why am I traveling with Hiko again? Naruto wonders to himself as he finally finishes skinning the stag. Hiko snarls as the blond cause the body to move a bit while Naruto pulls the skin from the body.

Naruto just rolls his eyes at Hiko's reaction. Selfish bastard. The dimensionally displaced demon container thinks while rolling the skin up so it's easier to transport to their camp.

"I'll see ya back at our camp." Naruto says to the gorging blue wyrmling, who doesn't seem to care that his protector/minion is leaving him alone. Nothing but the sounds of Hiko enjoying the dead stag follows Naruto as the blond walks away.

"Just how are you suppose to help me get home?" Sakura wonders as she stares down at this odd canine that the pet shop owner called a coyote. The pink haired teen is just glad to be out of that shop since she couldn't help but find the store to be rather creepy and dangerous.

The canine doesn't seem to glance at Sakura, just turns an ear in her direction briefly as they walk down the street. It's been about six days since Sakura had thrown that vase in Naruto's direction, though both Sasuke and the blond idiot had dodged out of the way, the soot or ashes within the vase still managed to fly all over the place.

He should know by now to stand there and take his punishment! Inner Sakura growls and Sakura nods her head in agreement with that. You'd think he know by now not to stop picking useless fights with Sasuke-kun. He should know that he'll never reach Sasuke-kun's level of coolness or skill level.

Idiot girl... The coyote muses upon hearing that. She really doesn't get it, does she? The coyote glances towards the dimensionally displace teen. Oh well, she'll have to learn to keep her nose out of other people's business, especially when she should be worried about herself instead of obsessing about some body she'll likely never met again in her life.

Pain, Sasuke thought he knew about pain before but now, now he's come to realize that he had known nothing about it or ever really experienced it in the truest sense. Even when sparring with Naruto have I never been hurt before... I hurt him plenty though... I guess this is karma biting me in the ass...

Then the giggling begins and the sing song rhythms concerning what kind of experiments they're preforming upon him. For now, the pain isn't strong enough to drive out all of his thoughts since his captors are giving him a minor rest and time to recover from the previous row of experimentation. Sasuke knows he's weeping, he's just not sure if its because he's now got time to reflect upon his short, pitiful life or if he's already missing being experimented on since now they'll be giggling and singing to him, causing him to think about what new torments they can put him through.

Sasuke couldn't see his captors, they had at the beginning taken his eyes out. He can feel something in his eye sockets but he knows that they weren't eyeballs since his vision hasn't returned. The salt in his tears sting his injuries while Sasuke moves his tongue about his mouth, trying to figure out if they have yet gotten around to replacing his teeth with something else.

At some point, Sasuke feels himself becoming numb to the giggling and the sing song of his captors. His eyelids grow heavy and he blacks out.

NeoIzapa Cooperation: Harry Potter

I don't own Harry Potter!

Neo-Izapa Cooperation Headquarters

November 1, 1994

To President Seath Harrison Vargr Jampotter Lykos. The latest shipment of beer has blah blah blah. Seath flickers a finger and the ass kissing letter moves to the tray with its brothers. As Seath moves to pick up the another paper from his In box, fire flashes upon one of the two chairs before him.

"You do know that I don't go by Harry Potter any more, don't you?" Seath asks the phoenix, his ears perked forward while the white furred wolf-man doesn't look up at the magical bird. "I know you like to humor that man, but I'm not in much of a mood to humor him. I do enjoy my independence after all."

Fawkes thrills for a few seconds before vanishing in a fireball, leaving some scroll upon the chair. With a snort, the scroll becomes ashes after the white wolf-man with sapphire eyes gives it a glance. Seath already has a good idea of what that scroll likely contained and he has long since decided when he returned as a five year old that he's had enough the the UK Wizarding world, but before the time traveler did anything, he had destroyed the device that would return him to his proper time.

Glamor Ink, got to love it, especially when its magic is capable to lasting up to six years. Seath muses, remembering how he managed to slip in a bunch of papers that had been signed by the right people. Seath just assumes that those that signed it thought the papers had to deal with the budget and had needed signatures to validate it.

Whatever they thought of those papers, they got signed and I became a legal adult. Seath muses as he remembers how relieved he had been when those papers had been filed. He had waited about a week before beginning to use his family vaults and back then, Seath, or to use his old name, Harry had a rough idea of what he wanted to do and one of the first things had to do with finding a way not to attend Hogwarts and he knew of such a way too.

With a sight, Seath leans back into his chair. The chair had been specifically to accommodate his tail, behind, and leg build. The chair and others like it had been part of a large order he had placed with dwarfs back when he started the company upon a few new therianthropes, freshly werewolf bitten people who decided to drink that potion that is the curse editing potion, accepting positions in his, then, magical miniature company.

Paying Fenrir was differently one of the best ideas I had. Too bad I didn't possess a sample of a large feline like a tiger or lynx before I took that potion... Ah well, at least I possess an infallible lie detector out of it. Seath thinks before wondering what ever became of that mangy werewolf for a few seconds.

With a sigh, Seath sets down the paper in his hand since its clear that he's not in the right state to continue through his paper work. Changed my name after I recovered from the potion's effects. Kind of surprising that I came out of that with white fur and blue eyes, not that I'm complaining as now nobody will be able to say I look just like my dad save for having my mom's eyes.

Seath moves to stand before a magical barrier that acts to keep separate the hospitable environment with the inhospitable one of the moon. If he turns his head just so, he can get a glimpse of the Earth. Seath can still recall how his budding company ended up being the first to colonize the moon.

Kind of surprised that the idea came from Skylar would actually work? I mean, you'd think a dwarf would prefer to keep their feet on the ground? It helps that unlike wizards, our magic doesn't begin to fade in under two years of living up here. Seath admits as he stares up at the Earth.

Instead of importing food from Earth, they altered and added charms to certain enclosed miniatures to grow their own food and raise their own cattle. It had taken time but they managed to learn how to safely shrink and unshrink living things like plants, people, and animals. They even learnt how to enlarge the enclosed space of three by four foot box to seemingly become a large landmass little over the size of North America, giving them ample space to grow crops and raise cattle as they can control the climate within those miniature farms.

They began to grow a lot more grain and cattle then they needed and began to sell the surplus to non-humans as those races lack the land needed to grow their own since wizards and witches keep them from owning properties. When Seath turned twelve, they began to grow cultivate magical forests with animals and then they moved on to recreate various environments like a South American rain forest to help preserve endangered non-magical animals and plants.

Started mining minerals just last year... I still can't believe we hadn't thought to search for such pockets before Skylar began that mining operation in the belt when I was ten. Seath admits with a soft sigh. Ah well, live and learn, live and learn.

Seath looks away from the Earth to look at the slowly expanding compound. The compound is slowly becoming a city with its own shops and residency, the majority are fellow therianthropes with, oddly enough, centaurs coming in second and dwarves coming in third. No humans, magical or otherwise, live up here though.

The chime of the clock declares that its noon and within seconds, Seath transforms into his human form. Therianthropes prefer to spend one third of the day in each of their three forms as it has proven that such a lifestyle helps keep them from aging. For him, he spends the morning in his hybrid form, afternoon in his human one, and evening in his animal one. If it weren't for a certain potion helping Seath to age artificially, he would likely look like a five year old still.

Seath summons his cloths and watches as the charms upon the cloths seem to shimmer and move to cover his body with only a minor application of magic. "Will you be eating lunch in your office or going out for it?" Claire, who's a cheetah therianthrope as well as his secretary asks as Seath is walking over to his desk.

"I believe out, Claire." Seath says as he takes out his latest novel and his own employee card. The card is needed to be able to get around the majority of the office space as it separates company workers from the newly arrive settlers of the compound.

"I see, sir." Claire in her hybrid form says as she moves out of the doorway to allow Seath out of the office.

"Oh, and keep an eye out for port-keys. I received a visit from a phoenix this morning." Seath explains and Claire nods with pressed lips.

Seath manages to catch the lift before it descended downwards. I wonder how fazed the headmaster is concerning how everything is diverging from his thought out plans? Seath wonders while his employees sharing the lift with him continue to chatter with each other.

November 24, 1994

Seath looks up as a rather large fireball appears not far from his desk and when the flames vanish to reveal Fawkes resting upon Dumbledore's arm and the arm of one of the judges. Seath studies them for a few seconds before security pops into the room. "Place the cuffs on them and stun the phoenix." Seath states before returning to signing a page upon a report.

None of the three intruders manage to udder a sound before Seath's security detail deals with them. "Sure we put them in cold storage, sir?" Julius inquires.

"I believe that should suffice." Seath says after glancing up and studying the three for a few seconds. "Keep them until tomorrow morning before deporting them back to Earth. I believe they belong to the UK part of the world." The white furred wolf-man says.

The leopard therianthrope salutes before motioning for the others to pick up the three. Within seconds, the security detail and intruders vanish, leaving Seath alone once more within his office. Seath already knew why they came and didn't care to try and reason with the lot since they clearly didn't even bother to try and go through the proper channels and thus, he doesn't feel as though he needs to give them a moment of his time.

June 24, 1995

"One would have thought you'd learn your lesson from the last time you visited." Seath states calmly as he looks up at the phoenix. "We both know that since I didn't attend the first task, it's clear that I'm not a participant." Seath adds icily and the fire bird just sighs.

Seath studies the phoenix for a few seconds before considering a different angle. Quickly, Seath stuns the magical bird and picks up Fawkes to take the bird to the research part of the compound. Seath raises an eyebrow at the smoke that rolls out into the hallway upon his opening of an office door.

"Lork?" Seath asks the insane goblin and hears his head of testing department croaks out, "Here!"

"What do you need? Can't you see I'm very busy!" Lork demands while snatching a metal tube from desk top.

"I want you to examine this for any trace of any alien magic effecting this phoenix." Seath states as he holds up the stunned bird.

Lork and the two gnomes within the office eyes light up at the sight of Fawkes. "Really? Truly? A genuine phoenix?" Lork asks, the black skinned goblin drops the tube and it thuds upon the ground.

"Yes, this really is a phoenix." Seath says before adding, "I want you to keep careful notes upon examining this bird and I want them on my desk within an hour of you being through with your examination as well."

Lork just nods in an absentminded way, clearly too mesmerized by the sight of Fawkes to really put up an argument about sharing his notes with anyone, including he himself. "I'll leave you to begin your study then." Seath states as Lork comes to stand before him.

Seath hands the stunned bird over to Lork. A metal band to hamper teleportation magic is slipped upon Fawkes' foot before Lork takes the phoenix from him. The two gnomes move stand next to Lork and with a sigh, Seath withdraws from the office, heading back up to his office.

Seath is fairly confident that Fawkes won't winded up dead after Lork's examination, whether or not Fawkes wishes he were dead afterwards would likely be the question though.

June 30, 1995

"This meeting better not be a waste of my time." Seath growls as he follows a goblin towards the meeting room. At least they went through the proper channels this time.

Seath's claws click upon the stone floor and his ears reflect his state of mind. The various beads and items have been magically woven using those elongated strands, so as he moves they softly click against each other. Typically, Seath's fur wouldn't have long strands to so but with an application of a potion, certain areas were it was applied had grown long, allowing him to weave beads, feathers, and jewelry using his long strands of fur.

Seath had also used another potion upon his fur to darken sections of his white fur, creating various designs upon his head, arms, chest, and back. He created geometric symbols about his body. The various decorations woven in his fur and the markings he had created upon his fur coat were just temperate and easy to remove since all Seath had to do is shift into his human form. The fur holding the decorations will fall off and vanish before hitting the floor, leaving only the various beads, feathers, and jewelry upon the floor.

Stopping just before the door leading into the meeting room of the bank, Seath takes a few minutes to center himself and to force his body to display a calm, confident appearance. Seath had decorated himself up to reinforce the fact that he was a civilized being. Attending this meeting in his hybrid form is just to remind them that he's not human, reminding the lot that the Boy-Who-Lived doesn't exists, only Seath Lykos remains.

They'll be off set by my appearance, thus giving me the advantage. Seath reminds himself before he takes the door handle and opens the door.

Sapphire eyes scan the room, noting the reactions of the various parties within the meeting room of the bank. "Good day. I am President Seath Lykos of Neo-Izapa Cooperation, although you likely know me best by my previous name of Harry Potter." Seath states and the residence within the room jerk as if he had slapped them.

Seath doesn't move to take a chair, after all, the chairs would only cause him to become discomforted. "Now then, why have you arranged this meeting with me? I happen to be a rather busy person after all." Seath states. "So, could we hurry this along? I have reports to go over and documents to sign."

Seath is very pleased to see how quickly the other occupant of the room quickly turned upon Dumbledore, demanding to know what happened to him. Seath watches this for a bit, enjoying how none of them seem to remember why they arranged this meeting as none of them turned to address him.

Seath did wonder if any of them knew anything at all about his company but dismissed that thought since he doesn't recall seeing any sale receipts concerning the UK. As fun as this is, I have other places to be. Seath muses.

"As fascinating as this is, we are here to conduct some business. I believe the first order of business is, I'm an emancipated minor and have been since I was five. If you don't believe me, then I suggest you requires that a goblin bring in a copy of said document. Sadly, within a few months of becoming a legal adult, I was bitten by a werewolf, although I was lucky enough to have privy to an experimental potion, I became what you see before you." Seath states. "With that in mind, I decided that the best course of action was to legally change my name and move out of the country."

"It wasn't hard to find and hire tutors once I was in Mexico." Seath states, enjoying the looks upon their faces upon hearing those explanations. "Thus, why I am not a student of Hogwarts. As such, I was not within the UK when this tournament began and even if I had signed up to participate in it, I wouldn't have used my old name since it is my belief that Harry Potter died the day he received that bite from a werewolf." Seath states, he knows that a certain reporter is in the room and this was more for her benefit then these so call important witches and wizards.

"Unless our business has to do with something other then said subject, I believe our business is done here. So, is there any business we need to touch upon or have I satisfied your curiosity?" Seath asks and after a few minutes, none of them manage to find their voice, so he says, "Well then, good day to you all."

With that, Seath takes out a port-key and within seconds, Seath arrives in his office and after glancing about, he finally lets loose a chuckle as he recalls their priceless looks upon their faces after shoving so much information down their throats. Seath could only guess what kind of article will be showing up in the Daily Prophet.

That was fun. Seath thinks as he moves to sit at his desk. His sapphire eyes alight with laughter.

I wonder how things will fall now? Seath wonders as he begins to read through an outline concerning creating ocean habitats. Does it matter? I'm not going to bail them out of it this time, not when they still have control over Dementors and could get them to kiss those soul containers.

The End

Bonus:

What has Become of the Boy-Who-Lived?

Harry James Potter, or to use his new name, Seath Harrison Vargr Jampotter Lykos, President of Neo-Izapa Cooperation has finally made an public appearance yesterday at Gringotts Wizarding Bank here in the UK. A meeting of sorts had been planned by Minister Fudge and Headmaster Dumbledore with the famous Boy-Who-Lived only for it to quickly become a joke upon the arrival of young Seath as just arriving within the meeting room, the Potter heir caused a stir at his inhuman appearance.

Within minutes, the Boy-Who-Lived admitted to being bitten by a werewolf within a few months of becoming an emancipated minor at age five, which explains his odd appearance of being stuck in the form of a human shape wolf appearance. It seems that the Boy-Who-Lived had drunk a potion that caused the newly bitten boy to live his life in this strange form.

If this wasn't enough, young Harry, fearing for his life, legally changed his name, emptied his accounts, and fled our of the UK to escape becoming a second class citizen. The young boy settled in Mexico and quickly hired tutors since young Seath feared that his newly altered appearance would make it difficult to receive an education.

It wasn't long before the young Potter heir purchased a the copy right to Izapa and opened a successful miniature company. By the time Seath turned eight, the pitiful wolf-child moved Neo-Izapa Cooperation out of Mexico. There isn't a listings of what new country the headquarters resides in, but it is likely a secret to keep people from hunting the Potter Heir.

The compnay founded by the Boy-Who-Lived, Neo-Izapa Cooperation seems to be doing a lot of business with non-humans, preferably dwarves and, surprisingly enough, centaurs. During the years, they have expanded into selling food stuffs, potion ingredients, and ore. There are also rumors of this company trying to enter into the fashion scene, though they don't hint how they plan to do so.

It should be noted that since the young Potter heir has legally changed his name over nine years ago, this name change seems to be the reason why the Boy-Who-Suffers not only continues to do magic as he was entered under his old name, Harry Potter, but causes this reporter to wonder if the young business owner isn't justified in being concerned about his safety.

The True Path of Stealth: Naruto

I don't own Naruto!

Some City in Earth Country

They're hopes of him failing in this bet dries up as the wagon begins to slow down.

Thus he had succeeded in winning the wager between himself and his whole class. He's not only been one of the run for two months but he's yet to be caught. He even has one more place to stop at, one thing to purchase, and he can return to Hidden Leaf in victory.

This will surely prove that I'm so much cooler then Sasuke. Boy, I can't wait to see their reaction when I stroll into the village with proof of my visitations to Wind and Earth Country! He thinks as he waits for the wagon to come to a stop and then drop down.

He relaxes his claws in the planks as the wagon stops at the gate. He manages to twist his current thin, muscular body to land on his four limbs. Upon shaking his head, he darts to the side as guards at the gate begin to check the wagon over. None of the guards paid his current Henge, a weasel, much mind.

It takes him a bit before he finds a deserted alley to change his Henge to that of a boy of five years of age with dirty white hair and hazel green eyes. He did add a burn mark upon his neck, he found it rather easy to create scar tissue using Henge and is kind of trying out creating tattoos upon his body using Henge jutsu. And finally, he sports cloths that appear to be at least one size larger then needed upon him as well as appearing pretty ratty as to help him pass himself off as a street urchin.

He's not sure where his actual cloths and pack vanish off into when he Henges, but he has come to realize that whatever cloths he created using Henge are pretty durable and don't cost him anything other then a bit of chakra once a day to maintain itself. Heck, he's learnt that if he were to wrap a hair around a stick, he can transform the stick into a kunai, although the Henge usually disappears about five minutes after leaving his person, he's just glad that it doesn't cancel out upon leaving his hand.

And so he wanders about the town, taking in the unusual sights while being shooed away from market stalls. After a while, he finds a nice enough spot and dismisses his current Henge so that he can access his rations that he had packed since he doesn't feel up to digging about within the trash for a quick meal or trying to steal something from one of the shops. Now then, where would I find one of those paintings...

He ponders this for a bit as he eats two field ration bars and kind of decides to try the better off part of town. He pockets the wrappers before Henging into the shape of a thirty-something adult with black graying hair and bread. He hopes that his Henge's cloths won't mark him as too much of an outsider as he moves to join the flow of people.

He grins softly at the sight of an art gallery, he's sure he'll be able to find a painting by this artist who's works are never allowed to leave Earth Country. He's not sure why that is, but is certain that possessing one of these paintings will prove that he had indeed visited Earth Country. He takes his sweet time studying the paintings in the gallery, trying to pick out which one he wants to steal.

He sucks in his breath at the sight of this painting featuring a family of kitsune kits, five kits in all in a forest setting. Each of the fire colored young ktisune kits possess two tails each. "That one was one of Riku Akino's earlier works. The forest is said to be inspired during Akino's travels though Fire Country."

He glances over at one of the gallery workers. "Is that so? Its a rather cute scene he imagined." He reflects upon returning to gaze at the painting. "It must fetch a pretty fine price." He adds.

"Not as much as you would think. Ever since the Yellow Flash defeated the Kyuubi, few are looking to purchase anything to do with kitsunes." The attendant adds.

"One would think that after ten years that opinions would change." He remarks. "Did Akino draw any more creature of legend or have you sold out of them?" He inquires and it wasn't long before the attendant shows him the few paintings by the same artist.

He leaves the gallery after finish looking about the inside of the building. He'll wait a week before robbing this store of one of its paintings. After all, he has other things he'd like to look for before returning to Hidden Leaf in Fire Country.

Nine Days Later

He continues to resist the urge to buck the man off his back. Although, at least I'm not in a crap space in the Henge of a mouse or weasel. He thinks as he shakes his head, causing his black mane to whip about a bit.

"Easy boy." His rider says upon patting his neck and then stroking the spot too. He sighs while continuing down the path that his rider is directing him to follow. His horse Henge coloration is that of a blue roan and stands about sixteen hands.

Last time I hide in a stable. Although, it does have its benefits. He thinks as he glances at some flowering plants or up at some sparrows flying over head.

His rider pulls upon his reins, reminding him to pay attention to where he's going. Nickering from his 'fellows' cause him to perk up. He spots a runner coming up from down the path. He makes a throaty sound which he hopes were correct in voicing his curiosity.

The party pulls to the side of the road to allow the runner to get pass them. His rider pulls and clicks softly, he notices the other horses slow down and he mimics them. The runner seems to slow as the runner jogs pass the first members of the party.

With the runner out of sight, his rider taps his heels into his side and with a snort, picks up his pace. As they once more range about the road, he once more ponders just what kind of business this group is on. He knows for a fact that they weren't samurai and very few of them possess a weapon so he doubts that they're bandits. The fact that they're renting him and the other horses means that where ever they're going, the place possess a stable likely run by relatives of the one that rented him out.

He guesses that he'll just have to wait for more clues. After all, they only left that town only one day ago. He's not sure how long they'll be on the road but he just hopes that it won't take too long to reach this distention since he really needs to get back home to collect his wins from the bet that's between him and his classmates.

Two Months Later

Home sweet home! He thinks as he catches sight of the gates of Hidden Leaf. He spreads his wings wide as he launches himself off the wooden roof of one of the trader's wagons. Black feathers glisten in the sun light as he heads to fly through the gates of his home village, one that he hasn't living in for little over six months as he was busy trying to fulfill the terms of the bet.

He, in time, soars over the stalls of one of the market places of the ninja village. Upon locating his apartment building, he adjusts his wings and tail feather to land upon the roof. Within seconds, his Henge dispels and he then moves to walk down the stairs to enter into his apartment before he decides to pay Old Man Third a visit.

Upon stepping through his apartment door, he sighs and stretches. He closes the door behind him and after walking pass his couch, he takes off his knapsack and drops it down upon it. The pack is filled with not just proof of his visitations in Wind and Earth Country but also jutsu scrolls he found in pawn shops in various cities and towns, dry food stuffs, ninja equipment he purchased in Wind Country, and foreign money that he got by pick pocketing.

His gaze lifts from the village to the cliff faces. "The Yellow Flash..." He murmurs as he focuses upon the fourth face. "Just what kind of jutsu was it that you used in that war... I wonder if you got a chance to write it down somewhere. If so, I'm so going to turn this village upside down trying to find it, believe it!"

He laughs then and only stops after a few minutes had passed. He glances around, trying to find a clock to know what time it is. With a frown, he turns away from the window and begins to unpack his knapsack. The painting by Ruki Akino he stole while in Earth Country and triple bladed sword he stole in Wind Country he puts off to the side, deciding to take it with him when he goes visits Old Man Third.

Before he leaves his apartment, he takes the rolled up painting and unfurls it. He smiles at the kitsune kits playing in a forest. It's the same one that he had asked about with that attendant came up to him. With a sigh, he rerolls the painting and reties the cord, securing it to his belt before shouldering the decorative sword upon his back.

He uses a Henge to hide both from view as he doesn't want somebody to steal them from him. He leaves the apartment and once out of the building, he heads for the tower where Old Man Hokage's office is. He gets picked up just outside of the tower and is quickly taken to the Old Man.

"Hey, gramps! Long time no see!" He says cheerfully.

"Naruto... I see you are back from your trip." The Old Man states. "You do know that you caused people to worry needlessly about you."

"Heh, missed ya too, Old Man! Anyway, I only left to win a bet! I can't wait to get my earnings." He says to the Hokage. "Check it out! I got one of those triple blade swords from Wind Country and a painting from the artist Ruki Akino!" He says, releasing his Henge so said items appear.

He kind of notices the startled look upon the Old Man's eyes but decides to ignore it as he places the sword upon the desk before the rolled up painting. The Hokage puts down his pipe before picking up the rolled painting. He can't help grinning as the Old Man unrolls it and his eyes widen slightly.

He watches as the Old Man checks the stamp and signature upon the back. "Pretty cool painting, yea? It's one of his earlier works." He explains. "'Course nobody in Earth Country are looking to buy anything featuring a kitsune cause it reminds them of how the Fourth dealt with the Kyuubi."

"Its very nice, Naruto." Old Man Hokage says as the man begins to reroll the painting. "Why don't you tell us of this bet then?"

With a frown, he begins at the beginning, "Well, ya see, it all started when some of my classmates started making fun of the fact that I wear orange cloths..."

The Next Day

He whistles a tune as he walks through the gate of the academy. He heads straight for the classroom, his Henge firmly in place since it wouldn't do to tip his classmates off that he's returned. It wasn't long before he finds Iruka-sensei in the classroom.

"Hey sensei! Long time to see!" He says cheerfully as he enters the classroom upon releasing his Henge.

"Naruto? Naruto! Where have you been? Do you know how many classes you've missed?" Iruka-sensei demands and he just laughs while rubbing the back of his head.

"I don't know, about six months worth? Boy, I can't wait to collect on that bet, believe it!" He answers and watches as Iruka-sensei rubs his nose scar. "Want to see my new sword that I got in Wind Country or how about taking a gander at my painting that I got in Earth Country?"

The chuunin instructor raises an eyebrow and he watches as Iruka-sensei looks at his sword hilt. He draws the sword and brings it before him, giving Iruka-sensei a view of the three blades coming out of the hilt. He notices the surprise flashing in his teacher's eyes at the sight of the blades.

After a few seconds, he sheaths the sword, feeling pleased with himself. "Want to take a look at the painting? It's one of Ruki Akino's earlier works." He tells the chuunin.

Iruka-sensei's lips press together while the academy teacher gently shakes his head. "Maybe later." Iruka-sensei says and he just shrugs.

He heads to take a seat out of sight, he even goes so far as to reapply his previous Henge to surprise the rest of the class. A few minutes later, the first bell goes and students slowly arrive with stragglers arriving seconds after the second bell sounds. Very few students take notice of him and those that did, he could only say that they would likely be better ninja since they seem to have a grasp upon the fact that one can never to too safe unless they are aware of their surrounds instead of taking it for granted that they were safe, be it because of Iruka-sensei is in the room or because they're in their home village.

I wonder how many of them would have gone about fulfilling that bet? Would it have taken them as long as me or would they have been caught within their first week outside of Hidden Leaf? I doubt they would know or think about picking pockets to get money... Doubt they'd be able to plan and execute it to steal either items. He thinks as Iruka-sensei does roll call.

When his name comes up, he stands up and dispels his Henge. "Yo, I'm back and you guys better be up to fulfilling your side of the bet, believe it!" He declares with everybody turned to look at him, he poses with a grin upon his face before sitting back down so Iruka-sensei could continue.

"Settle down! I said SETTLE DOWN!" Iruka-sensei orders as the students all begin talking at once. Most of them clearly don't believe he could have fulfilled his side of the bet, declaring that he doesn't have any proof.

Sucks to be them, the Old Man examined both items himself! He even wrote that scroll declaring that I won the bet. There's no way they can ignore that! He muses with a wide, satisfied grin upon his face.

Lunch seem to arrive fairly quickly and he was mobbed upon the bell releasing them from class sounds. "Read it and weep, you guys! The Hokage himself examined my evidence and wrote this!" He declares over the chorus of voices as he takes out the scroll and unrolls it upon the desk.

The class quiets down and Sakura reads the contains of the scroll out loud, including the fact that they were all on punishment detail for encouraging a fellow classmate to risk his life. He's not sure why, but he isn't expected to serve this punishment since the Old Man said that he was just a subject of peer pressure and he needed to catch up on all the work that he missed during those months he was outside of the village.

I have to admit that those two weeks spent with that lady sure helped to improve my reading and writing abilities. He reflects as the group before him demands to see his proof. He takes out a protective container that the Third had given him before taking the sword off his back.

"Here they are, a painting done by Ruki Akino of Earth Country and a triple bladed sword by the famous blacksmith of Wind Country, Takatoshi Yurika." He declares as Ino slowly pulls the painting from its container while one of the girls unsheathes the sword a few inches, allowing them all to see the triangle look of the sword's blades. The smith's stamp is upon one of blade's sides.

His age-mates murmur at the sword and then at the picture featuring those kitsune kits. Most of the girls coo at the sight of such cute kits while the boys are more interested in the sword. He isn't all that surprised to see Sasuke looking rather sulky, likely not liking the fact that he managed to do something far beyond his skills.

After a while, his classmates begin to leave. It's clear they didn't like the fact that not only do they owe him a lot of cash, about three weeks worth of allowance from each of them but the Old Man has decided they were responsible for him leaving the village. He wonders how their parents will react to that as he rolls the painting up and puts it back into its container.

Test of Team 7

He watches as his first clone stands firm instead of scattering about. He climbs down the tree trunk, heading for one of his other clones. The clone soon uses Henge to alter his cloths to sport wider sleeves as he uses chakra to cling to his clone's arm.

The other clones should be altering their cloths too. Within seconds, the clone he's hitching a ride upon charges forward. He lunges forward and manages to bite upon one of the bells' strings. As his clone pulls away, one of the bells come along for the ride.

He climbs out of the clone's sleeve as the clone lands roughly in some bushes before the clone pops. He drops the bell string down so he can wrap his body around the silver bell. He feels very smug at stealing this bell but doesn't dispel any of his clones since he wants them to keep Kakashi busy, so busy as to not notice the disappearance of one of the bells. So he waits for the alarm to go off before arriving with the bell.

He breaths a sigh of relief when the fighting moves from this part of the training ground. He doesn't bother to move from his spot since he doesn't want to have the bell sound while he moves. Besides, it's not as though he's got nothing to occupy his mind since as a clone vanishes, he inherits its memories, allowing him to know what's going on.

By the time the alarm sounds, pretty much all of his clones have been vanquished. As the alarm sounds, those clones Henged into the shape of crows dispel and he discovers that one of the clones managed to get a prefect angle to see the hand signs of Sasuke's fireball jutsu. He dispels his Henge and picks up the bell as he focuses on the hand signs needed to preform such a feat.

He sits upon the log with not only a wide grin but with the bell in his jacket pocket. Kakashi arrives after his two team-mates arrive. He notices the look in Kakashi's eyes and takes out the bell, tension sudden hangs about the scene. "Can't tie me to the log, I got this." He can't help but remind the jonin.

It wasn't long before Sakura is tied to one of the logs. He frowns but couldn't find a memory that showed that Sakura had even tried to fight Kakashi, just her falling prey to a genjutsu. He also recalls her fainting upon seeing Sasuke caught in that earth style jutsu, so he can't see any reason why she shouldn't be tied to a log. Well, other then the fact that she's a girl and will likely start tearing up in a few minutes.

Sure enough, as Kakashi begins to lecture them upon their lack of teamwork, Sakura has started to tear up. He notices cause he wasn't really listening to Kakashi's lecture since he feels that the man was expecting silk from a sheep in regards to either Sakura trying to work with him or Sasuke getting off his high horse to work with either Sakura or himself.

Besides, its not as though I don't have another career option. I proved myself to be a fairly decent theif and if I work on it, I'm sure I can become one of the best in the Elemental Countries. Although, considering what I hold, it would be a 'waste' for me not to become a ninja since I got tons more chakra then even Old Man Hokage does! He thinks, he does remember those lesson on politics he received while traveling with that trader in the form of a teen.

He is startled when Sasuke bellows and charges at the jonin. Within a blink of an eye, Kakashi has Sasuke pinned to the ground with a kunai pointed at the Uchiha's neck. "Get off of Sasuke!" Sakura screams and he glances at the pink haired teen in disbelief since he really doesn't see how the girl could make the jonin do anything.

"Like you're in a position to have him let Uchiha up even if you weren't tied up. He's a jonin, after all, pretty much out of our league." He remarks to Sakura and the pink haired genin is rather startled that he said that.

"I'm not very fond of suck ups." Kakashi remarks lightly and he snorts.

"Who's sucking up? You weren't even trying during that test! If you really took that test seriously, you would have hid and waited out the alarm without any of us being able to find you. Just because I'm an attention seeking brat doesn't mean I'm not an observant attention seeking brat." He points out. Or I would have been detained at the various village and city gates and taken away to be question extensively.

He managed to escape the two times he had that done to him, sure, but he's pretty sure that the increase in village security likely happened because of him. It was about then that he began using animal Henges to escape notice and to hide among incoming wagons. Though, if I had known that I could have flown around, I would have finished fulfilling the bet far quicker then I had.

Kakashi seems a bit startled by what he said while Sasuke likely sports a very loathsome look upon his face at the fact that he's saying that the jonin was going easy on them. "Well then, what kind of excuse can you come up with as to why you didn't work with your team?" Kakashi asks lightly.

"Gee, I don't know, how about the fact that they're just mimicking the attitude of the villagers? Or obeying their parents' sentiments concerning me? I mean, sure, Uchiha's parents have been dead for years but it's clear that he has picked up on the civic attitude of me being a pest. I bet Sakura's a produce of both." He answers and he could tell that Kakashi seems to frown.

"So, when I realized the goal of this little test, I knew you were trying to get silk from a sheep." He adds and hears somebody snort at that turn of phrase. "Kind of impossible since silk comes from worms."

"Indeed..." Kakashi muses and oddly enough, he finds a hint of respect in the single, visible eye of the jonin.

"So... what's your decision? I mean, are you going to pass any of us or are you going to fail us?" He presses. "Cause I want to know so I can start making plans for the future." He adds.

"Hmm, I thought I made it clear that you failed." Kakashi states and he shrugs, "I wasn't listening to your lecture, didn't think it meant much considering the Uchiha clearly won't take it to heart."

Sasuke just 'fehs' at that while Sakura yells at him about how great the Uchiha is compared to him. He ignores them both as he drops down off the log.

"So, where do I turn this headband in? I mean, I rather not get in trouble by impersonating a Leaf ninja." He says as he unties the headband. "Or do you just take them from us before you go?"

"Leave it on the log, I'll pick it up once I'm done with these two since I take it you'll be leaving now?" Kakashi asks and he nods.

Once the headband is upon the top of the log, he grins before using the substitution jutsu on a rotten log his clones had discovered a few kilometers away from this training ground. With a grin, he Henges into the form of a crow and takes to the air, heading not for his apartment, but out of the village, heading for the Land of Wave since he heard that it had nice views of various things.

Majority of his belonging are sealed in a storage scroll, he thought it a wise course of action on his part since it was unlikely that they could impress the jonin enough to pass, not when it's pretty obvious that the man really wasn't interest in having a team to model into ninja. He waits until he's high enough in the air before switching into the form of an eagle since he needs something with stamina to soar away from the village without needing to flap his wings.

Three Years Later

"Wanted, the Beast Thief, uses trained animals to aid in thieving throughout all of the continent. Reward for bringing in alive, $ 9,000. Rewards for bringing in dead, $ 4,000." He says before snorting at the wanted poster. There wasn't a picture to go along with the poster.

Only nine-thousand? Huh, you'd think it would be more considering the worth of most of what I've been stealing. He thinks as he gazes away from the poster and continues on his way to the back to upon on his apron to help out in the kitchen.

Being the only bar/mess hall in the small camp is the reason why there is a bulletin board located upon one of the mess hall's posts since pretty much everyone living in the camp eventually arrives to eat a meal they didn't have to cook themselves as nobody has their own private fridge in which to store food in. The fridge that the mess hall uses is a portable one that is powered by chakra then by electricity.

The purpose of this camp is to harvest wild herbs and begin preserving them so they can be shipped out when they head for their employer's base in a small town that's within a few days journey from the boarders the land of Fire. He only signed up because he wanted to spend time out in the wilderness and not in the Henge of an animal.

He stiffens as his primary distraction dispels after being around for about three years. Huh, oh well, I knew the clone would vanish one day, at least there's a good three year period in which time manage to cover up my real trail in the world. Although, I wonder how many will connect the Beast Thief to Naruto Uzumaki?

So I end it here

Shinigami Naruto: Bleach

I don't own Bleach or Naruto!

"Why couldn't my test be beating you up, Aozora? This whole scavanger hunt is just so tiring." He says to his Zanpakuto who's name is Aozora no Kemono.

"Don't give me that look! It's not as though I make the rules, you know." Replies a being that appears to be some kind of winged demon. "Although, I do kind of enjoy being out and about instead of stuck in your mindscape." The manifestation of Aozora no Kemono adds.

His Zanpakuto that measures to be five and a half long with two foot wide flat blade that seems to be made out of some kind of blue metal, the metal always shins blue though some sections of it is lighter or darker then other parts of the blade. The guard about the hilt seems to be stiff metal chains encircling it. It's because of Aozora's unique blade, Aozora no Kemono is considered to be one of the prettier Zanpakutos in all of the Soul Society since he manifested Aozora no Kemono while still attending the, then, new academy; the academy that replaced the previous method of master and apprentice(s).

"Glad you're enjoying all of this, partner, but I really want to master Bankai before I'm needed back at the academy." He, once more, says to Aozora. "Besides, it seems like I'm missing the frame to put these scattered pieces of the picture. Heck, I'd say that there should be more pieces needed since few of these seem to match up with each other." He adds as he finishes up his meal.

"I don't see why you prefer to teach then to go on patrol with your division. We are hard to beat in a fight, after all. We could have easily fit in with the eleventh division instead of being member of nineth division." Aozora says. "If were were on patrol, you could easily find time to fulfill this task while keeping it a secret as well as move along onto using it. Homing your skills against Hollows."

He frowns as he brushes his bright blond bangs from his face. He leans back in his chair, glancing over to where Aozora is siting upon one of his few chairs. Unlike his quarters in the Seireitei, this house in the farthest reaches of the Rukongai districts and thus, doesn't have a lot of creature comforts. Instead of answering, he merely studies Aozora's red hair done up in a pony tail, the horns and spiked eye ridges above Aozora's purple eyes(in appearance think Disney's Gargoyles).

He can easily see the top parts of his partner's almost bat like wings. He's seen Aozora fold his wings about his shoulders, creating a kind of cape while the 'thumbs' of the wings kind of hook upon each other. With a sigh, he glances towards the entrance of the house, trying to think of how to explain that the number nine means something to him.

"There's just something about that number... I just feel like it has some kind of meaning for me, like it's some kind of link to who I really am." He finally says, it's the first time he has finally verbalize it.

"Huh, how... interesting. I wonder if you'll be finally willing to explain your dislike of the number seven then." Aozora muses and he tosses his Zanpakuto spirit a look before getting up off the floor.

"I think I'm going to tour about this district one last time. Forgive me for leaving you here, Aozora. I rather not rub it into their faces what I really am." He says politely to his Zanpakuto.

Aozora waves a hand in a dismissive fashion. "Enjoy the boring sights, Naruto. I think I'm going to give that puzzle Gyou gave ya a try."

With a nod, he walks through the beads that act like a door. The sun is only just setting but since the residents of this district don't need to eat, nobody but him really pay much mind to the passage of time. A few if any of the residents mark him walking down the street.

He notices Teruna, a brunet and Tsuyako, a fellow blond seem to be arguing about who wove the best looking mat for Nijito. The nervous, gentle, shy, and yet good looking Nijito seems to be wearing a look of despair upon his face. It's clear to him that Nijito will soon try and talk them out of their argument only for the two to turn on him, demanding Nijito to chose which mat is better.

Off to the side, Kazou and Lee seem to be enjoying the show that's centered around their good friend. He shakes his head, continuing down the street upon witnessing his prediction come true between Teruna, Nijito, and Tsuyako. "What do you mean you refuse to chose!" The two young women shout.

"Naruto! It's Gyou! He's... well, come and take a look!" Uchito, one of Gyou's assistants says.

They jog towards the house that's at least a mile outside of the village. He sighs at the sight of smoke and notices Toshiaki coughing while Gyou is trying to get back into the house.

"I'm sure Uchito will be here soon with Uzumaki in toe, sir." He hears the blond Toshiaki tell the red head, being sure to keep a good grip upon Gyou's left wrist.

"I'm here." He says and the pair glance in his direction. He ignores them so he can casts a water Kido to flood the top floor of the custom made house that Gyou worked to build.

The smoke changes color and he sighs in relief. "I wonder how you'll handle fires once I've return to the Seireitei, hmm?" He says to the three residents of this district that he often comes to visit every few decades since he graduated from the academy.

"You could always teach us a few kido before you leave." Gyou says with a sly yet easy grin upon his face. He snorts softly at the very idea of teaching any of the locals kido since it's unlikely that they'd ever receive a steady supply of food in order to build up their spiritual reserves to preform kido.

"Or I can take you lot back to the Seireitei so you can enroll in the Shinigami academy." He counters and the three just scowl at the idea. He crosses his arms over his chest and raises a slight eyebrow, waiting for them to explain what they were up to that caused a fire.

"Boss here was trying to build a steam powered drier." Uchito confesses and Gyou just rolls his eyes while crossing his own arms before him. He merely sighs, he wonders where Gyou got that idea but re-frames from asking.

"I'll never get where you find the material to construct such things." He admits frankly. "And I've been a Soul Reaper for close to six centuries now."

Toshiaki just sighs and heads into the house/work shop. "Really? Didn't you spend like, fifty years here before getting recruited?" Uchito asks, the younger of the three hadn't been around back then.

"More like twenty, actually." He admits. "Although it did take me ten years before I was allowed to join a division. I had to work on my control, among other things." He adds, doubting that any of them wants to hear about his time in the academy or how he survived long enough to get enrolled.

"You left within days of my arrival here in this district, if I recall correctly." Gyou reminisces. "I still recall how everyone was talking about you handing those rogue Shinigami a sound beating before that patrol arrived in search for them." The red head man remarks with a grin.

"I'm so glad that you continue to find such a life changing event to be so humorous." He replies dryly. "After all, I was dragged off to the academy within days of that patrol reporting it."

"It's your own fault for allowing them to take you then." Gyou answers simply and he sighs, he just knows that Gyou just won't want to hear about the lecture one of his escort had given him. He moves to enter the building while Gyou heads to find a rain barrow to wash up.

I was eating stones, dirt, and other things that one just doesn't eat when one is alive just to fill me up. It's a wonder that it worked, but then, this is the Soul Society and thus everything is made up of spirit particles from the dirt beneath our feet to the clouds drifting overhead. He thinks as he studies the floor, particularly the minor puddles that remain.

He casts another kido to dry the floor. Instead of heading towards Toshiaki, he heads up stairs to see if the other levels need to be dried as well. He can hear Uchito groan and speak to Toshiaki.

Soon enough, all of the levels above ground level are dry and as he comes down to the main level, he finds Gyou and Toshiaki taking large metal parts down to the basement. Upon seeing him, Gyou says, "The basement needs your magical touch, Naruto! It's pretty filled up."

He just nods and heads down the stairs, midway down, he sees what the red head means. He assumes that Uchito is off gathering up fire wood for the furnace. He casts a slightly higher level kido to get rid of the layer of water that covers the floor for about a foot.

With that done, he moves towards anvil before calling up to the pair, "It's done." He watches as the two come down while hauling the rather long bit of metal.

As Gyou and Toshiaki head upstairs to bring down more pieces, Uchito arrives with his arms full of wood. As he watches the three, he reflects that if he were like his fellow Soul Reapers, then he would think helping any residents of this district to be beneath him. If any of Soul Reapers knew what he does during his time policing this district, he's pretty sure they would throw a fit or lecture him about how he has better things to do then to help these souls out on the fridges of the Soul Society.

Already many of them disapprove of the fact that he does wear other cloths when off duty and still within the Seireitei instead of doing so in the higher level districts of the Rukongai, typically fifth district through to first district were acceptable places for Shinigami to spend their off duty time. He just doesn't see why they should care what he wears when off duty. But then, I am part of a military...

After a few minutes, he moves from his position by the anvil to walk over towards the counter to see what kinds of plans Gyou and his assistants have come up with since he was last in here, which was about four days ago. Huh, a mechanical dog.

"Naruto! You know we can use some help over here!" Gyou hollers and he glances over towards the red head before leaving the counter to go assist the three.

= - [O

With his eyes close, he tries to lose himself within himself. The box containing the pieces of a picture resting before him. He feels Aozora at the edge of his mind but he wasn't looking to contact Aozora no Kemono.

He doesn't know how long he floated within this white space until a old, warped wooden door appears before him. The door knob is a simple bit of metal instead of something much more broad and easy to grip. With his right hand, he grips the metal knob.

Suddenly, the metal twists in his grip and the door pulls inward, away from him. He stiffens at the sight of a hallway that appears dimly lit and seems to have metal tubes either coming out of the ceiling or along the side of the hallway. After a few minutes, he finally steps into the hallway and feels more then sees the door he entered through vanishes.

"Kind of reminds me of the sewers under the Seireitei." He can't help but muses, although the are various differences between this place and the sewers. He walks down the tunnel, a thin layer of water upon the floor. Some of the pipes above his head sometimes drops water.

He can't help but find this place to be pretty depressing as he continues to explore this place. Then, finally, he finds a room. He feels the hairs upon his neck perk up while paused by the entrance of the huge room. His heart rate increased and his mouth goes dry, he can't help but wonder why this room causes such a reaction.

After it proves impossible to control his heart rate and other bodily reactions, he gives up and steps into the large room. As he gets close to being in the middle of the room, he gets a good view of what appears to be huge metal door that appear to be doors to a giant cell. The metal is rather rusted and almost appear half melted. The scent aside from the scents of decay, rusted metal, and blood it seems to hint that some kind of large animal had lived here once upon a time.

And then, he spies something hanging upon one of the doors. He walks over and stiffens at the sight of a rather huge frame with parts of the picture being missing. What remains of the picture shows a map of some continent as the background with various faces of people, a few of them look familiar like this one who looks like Gyou only with some tattoo upon his temple and black rings about his eyes or this one who seems to be Nijito only with a more arrogant set to his face and sporting silvery eyes.

His arm trembles as he reaches out to take the frame off the ancient door. As he gets within a centimeter of the frame, those fragments that he collected around the Seireitei appear. He watches as the pieces of the picture move and sets themselves in the blank points of the picture.

The picture within the frame is now complete and after a few seconds of studying it, he finally grips the frame. As he pulls the frame from the gate, everything around him breaks apart and then, he blacks out.

= - [O

"Huh, I think I can identify ten of these people, even if their appearance seems to be slightly altered." He hears Aozora muses. "It seems like you finally fulfilled the requirements for Bankai. It only took you a whole century and a half."

He sighs, his head is pounding as he tries to get more comfortable. It takes him a few minutes before he can gather enough strength to ask, "Not that I don't mind but, why are you still manifesting yourself outside of my mind-scape?"

"Oddly enough, you're mind is stuff to the brim with a new or is that old, set of memories. So, until you absorb them, I'm not going to able to rest comfortably in your mind." Aozora explains.

"So that's why my head is pounding..." He groans softly. It wasn't long before the spirit of his Zanpakuto spirit appears over him with a cup of water.

He raises himself up by his elbows before grabbing the cup. He gulps it down before resting the cup to his forehead before handing the cup back to Aozora. His partner takes the cup with a hand that sports three clawed finger and a thumb.

He lies back down as he waits for either his dizziness passes or when Aozora brings him the cup refilled with water. He's exhausted and yet he can't find a way to fall asleep. Aozora arrives with the cup once more filled with water.

He drinks it down after raising himself from the floor. He glances pass the fire place to where his Zanpakuto is resting against the wall.

He finally sits fully up and he looks down into the fire pit as he rubs his temples.

"It's time like these I wish I brought medicine instead of depending upon my medical kidos and knowledge." He mutters. He become a jack of all trades simply because he offers to help tutor students privately when they are trying to apply to certain, specific division.

"Well, don't expect me to give any of those a try. I'm better at causing damage then reversing it." Aozora replies to his left.

He glances over and finds that, once again, Aozora is sitting upon one of the few chairs of the house. After a few minutes, he glances around for the picture that Aozora had mentioned. It takes him a few seconds to find it, he gets up and walks almost drunkenly over to it.

His headache grows worst and he finds himself sitting down with it upon his lap. "Huh, old lady Tsunade and pervy-sage..." He muses as he studies a blond sporting a purple diamond mark upon her forehead and a old looking man sporting white hair and strips of red tattoos going from the eyes down to the jaw line.

He blinks as memories of the two replay within his mind's eye. He closes his eyes and turns his head up to gaze at the ceiling. "Why am I remembering my old life now? What does if have to do with my Bankai?" He wonders out loud with only Aozora about to hear him speak to himself.

His thoughts drift to his Shikai release. The command to activate it is 'Phrase from sight, Aozora no Kemono!' His Zanpakuto divides into two Katana sporting four and half foot long blades that also sport dual edges while appearing to be made out of the same blue metal as when Aozora is in his seal sword form. Shikai allows for mist to cover the field, hiding him from the sight of everyone within the mist.

Within the mist he controls the atmosphere, he can call forth any kind of weather bit it simple rain and hail to cyclones and monsoons. The weather doesn't hinder him within the mist, only those within the mist along with him. It allows him to move about the battlefield without being sensed by those within the mist.

"How long was I out?" He suddenly asks as he's reminded of the fact that he could have been out for a few days because of Reiryoku exhaustion. He had suffered from it upon achieving Shikai.

"Only been two hours." Aozora answers. "I don't know if you will or will not suffer from Reiryoku exhaustion when you finally use Bankai."

"Ah, shouldn't you know what your Bankai is?" He asks Aozora. He turns to regard his Zanpakuto's physical manifestation. So glad that he's not a fox. He can't help but think, although that does kind of cause him to wonder where that came from.

"I'll know when I manage to reenter into that head of yours." Aozora says. "I do know that it involves releasing a much larger storm over an area. I believe it also give you a larger space in which you won't be detected in as the storm brews overhead. The details beyond those things are sketchy though."

"Really? I guess that makes sense." He admits upon reflection. He then turns to study the picture again and is soon lost in memories of his life before he arrived at the Soul Society, his headache forgotten.

Northern Gate of Seireitei

"It's good to see you, Naruto-sensei! How was your patrol, sensei?" Ayano says upon him entering into the Seireitei.

He smiles at his ex-student as she bows before him. "Ayano, I'm not your sensei any more so there's no need to add sensei to my name." He reminds the young brunet who went onto become a member of the third division.

"Sorry, sir, but I'll always see you as my sensei. I'm sure many of your previous student do as well." Ayano reminds him with a slight smile.

He smiles slightly, he knows she's right and it warms him that they continue to think so highly of him. I wonder if this is what Iruka-sensei felt when we continued to call him that? He wonders to himself.

"How have your duties been treating you, Ayano?" He inquires and after a few minutes, they part ways. Ayano heads out of the Seireitei and he heads deeper into it.

He gets stopped by other students, particularly those that approached him for private lessons so it wasn't until noon before he finally made it to his apartment in the ninth division. It has been over three years since he had last been within this apartment and for the next ten to fifteen years he'll be teaching at the academy before heading back out of the Seireitei.

It wasn't long before he's found a spot to hang the picture of his friends from when he was alive. Once more he notices that Sasuke Uchiha isn't featured among his friends featured in the picture. It's amazing to think that Gaara, Lee, Kankuro, Kiba, Konohamaru, Neji, Temari, Tenten, Temujin, and Udon are so different here in this afterlife. I wonder what became of the others though... He wonders while studying the picture.

Kami, I hope none of my friends ended up as Hollows... He finally thinks as he considers the chances of his enemies ending up as Hollows. With a shake of his head, he heads for his room to begin undressing so he can have a nice warm shower.

It's good to be home. He thinks to himself as he enters into the bathroom. He turns on the shower's water, being sure to make sure that the hot water is twisted a bit more then the cold water knob.

"Although, what do I do now that I got my memories? I would have been better off without them..." He mutters to himself as he shampoos his blond hair as he reminisces about his live as a ninja.

Guess I'll just have to take it one step at a time.

MLP Wish: Harry Potter

I don't own My Little Pony or Harry Potter!

"Fred and George have gone too far!" Hermione declares upon his coming down the stairs. He moans softly, his head is pounding and Hermione just aggravated it some more.

"What did they do this time?" He asks his only female friend as he gets within range of the couch. He pushes up and stands only on his hind legs so that he can sit down upon the couch. His tail kind of aches from how he's leaning upon it so he moves it. He's just happy that his wings weren't fully upon his back, more to the sides so they don't really ache as he sits upon the couch.

Instead of telling him, the dusty pink unicorn pony with light brown mane and tail merely opens one of her books, displaying the open pages for him to see. He frowns as he notices the moving pictures, something about the appearance of those pictures cause his headache to spike even more. "I don't get it, what's wrong with them?" He finally asks.

Ron snorts and he glances at his second close friend, a ruby red winged unicorn pony sporting dual mane and tail colors which are bright yellow and orange. "Even I can see what's wrong with those pictures! Just look at them! They altered the pictures in the books to look like some kind of naked ape!" Ron points out.

But... aren't we suppose to be... His thoughts cut off as some more students enter into the common room. "You won't believe what happened to the Fat Lady!" One of the three shout and a lot of the students who were hanging about the common room turn to stare at the threesome.

"Just come on and see for yourselves!" Another one of the three unicorn ponies states in an annoyed way and as if all connected to the same mind, all those within the common room get up and walk outside of the common room to see what's up.

He arrives outside of the Gryffindor common room with those who are up. He stretches his wings and takes to the air to see over the tops of his fellows. Once more, he gets this feeling that there's nothing wrong with the painting but with them, which is rather confusing since he clearly... er, kind of remembers his life as he is, although his memories are rather blurry upon the details though.

"One of us should go get a professor!" A girl among the crowd says and murmurs of agreements sound out at that idea. He moves from the spot that he's hovering in to take a look at the rest of the painting about.

After a few hours of touring Hogwarts, he discovers that every painting that is of a person appears to be human instead of a unicorn pony or a winged pony or even a winged unicorn pony. He swishes his tail in annoyance as he stares before one of the tapestries of Hogwarts, confirming the fact that anything pictured, painted, or woven features humans instead of the previously mentioned pony types. Even those who should appear as normal non-magic using ponies are humans.

With a shake of his head, which causes his blue and purple dual colored mane to shake, he decides to head for the Great Hall to get breakfast. Can't believe I woke up so early, well, a lot of people did too. He thinks as he takes to the air, flying through the hidden ways that are only accessible when flying... only to ram into a wall.

He manages to stop himself from hitting the floor and gently lands upon the floor. "Ok, something is mightily wrong with all of this. The twins aren't capable of influencing the castle to this degree." He mutters as he walks through the halls to get to the Great Hall.

He pauses and watches a group of Ravenclaws exit out of the Great Hall. They ignore him as they talk among themselves about the mysterious alterations to all of the pictures and paintings of Hogwarts. It's clear that nobody had taken time to look at tapestries as of yet.

He enters into the dinning hall and glances towards the head table. He finds none of the teachers or fellow staff members were up there. With a hum, he turns away and glances over to Slytherin table and finds that the majority of the house is glaring towards Gryffindor table. It seems that everyone seems to be accusing the Weasley twins of the alterations to the various paintings and such in the castle.

"Hey Harry! Where have you been?" Colin Creevey asks. He glances over at the sandy blond winged pony sporting a chocolate brown mane and tail. He can almost spy the camera icon upon the first year's hind quarters.

"Just touring the halls, looking at the other paintings about the castle." He answers as he walks pass the clump of first years, heading to sit next to Hermione. "Well, it isn't just your book or the paintings in the stair well that are odd." He says as he sits down upon Hermione's left.

"Did ya find any signs of the twins?" Dean asks him and he shakes his head. "Huh, I wonder where they're hiding?" Dean, a fellow winged unicorn pony who's color is dusty blue with silver mane and tail wonders out loud as he begins to fill his plate with pancakes and scramble eggs.

"They're bound to show up, if not here then in the kitchens." Saemus remarks. "Pretty wicked prank. Still, you'd think they know better then to do something this obvious." The purple with teal mane and tail unicorn pony states, it's clear that Saemus' mother came from a family of purely unicorn stock.

There are a few pure-bloods who prefer to breed with only fellow winged ponies or unicorn ponies. Typically, they end up marrying muggleborns since they only have one of the two physical signs of magic. He reviews such thoughts as he glances around the table, picking out those that only possess a horn or wings.

Why can't I visualize the Weasley twins? He wonders as he notices Ginny Weasley, he notes once more that unlike Ron, she only sports wings and doesn't posses a horn; it does happen sometimes in pure-blood families that the more children one family has that some of the children are born with only one magical trait.

With a sigh, he focusing only on eating as his headache begins to come back upon his musings. "I think I'll check the dungeons for your brothers, Ron. Care to join me?" He asks as he gets off the bench after turning his body about so he can leave.

"Nay, there's a chess tournament I've been invited to be in." Ron says with a wave of his right hoof. "Thanks for asking though."

"Hermione?" He turns to speak to his other friend. "You want to come and lecture them when we find them?" He asks.

"I'm going to go check the library." Hermione says as she pauses in eating a muffin. "I'm sure there's a book around here that they didn't touch." The unicorn muggleborn says.

With a shrug, he drops down onto all fours after taking a few steps away from the bench. He walks for the door and sighs as he begins to wonder just where to begin his search. He does stop by a stair case to turn and look at the icon upon his own hind leg. The icon is a white shield with an image of a red dragon head upon it. It stood out because his body is black.

"You would think they would at least wait until the first week is over before pulling such a widespread prank..." He mutters to himself as he walks down the stairs. I wonder if this has anything to do with those books upon rituals that I saw in their room that one time...

He pauses and after a few seconds, decides to cast a silence spell upon his hooves so he doesn't make any sounds upon walking upon the stone floor. Maybe I should have gone back for my cloak... He thinks to himself as he walks through the dungeons.

As he turns a corner, he finds himself colliding with somebody. He doesn't find himself knocked down and finds himself staring at the pair of humans before him. Then, it clicked as the pair stare at him with wide eyes. "Fred? George? What the heck did you two do now?"

"Harry?" George asks and he snorts as he swishes his tail.

"Yea. Now answer the question! What did you two do now?" He asks, narrowing his eyes as Fred helps George up from the floor.

The two exchange looks before they say, taking turns throughout their answer, "Why don't we find a room and discus this? Rather not have slimy snakes overheard this."

With a sigh, he nods and allows the two to take point. It takes them about thirty minutes of sneaking about the dungeons until they arrive at an unused room. All along the way, his memories slowly begin to untangle themselves unto he possesses two sets of memories. One set has him as a human and are much more darker then the set that has him in his current form and things seem to be a bit more... nicer in compassion to his experience as a human boy.

"Ok, what happened?" He asks as he watches as the twins move to sit upon the large desk in the room. "And why aren't you affected by this as well?" He adds, he enjoys not needing glasses to see.

"Well, during our summer, we began researching a way to alter an area through a single spell. What we found were variations of a wishing ritual." The twins explains, each taking a turn explaining it. "We decided to wait until we were at Hogwarts before testing it. We just wanted to do a minor change and there was this toy that we found rummaging through our dad's shed of muggle things."

"It was a little pink pony with dual mane and tail sporting blond and light blue with this odd icon on its butt, or is that back hip?" The two continue after a minor pause and he holds a hoof against the spot between his eyes as he realizes what toy they found.

"You found a My Little Pony toy and used it for this ritual, didn't you? That explains so much..." He grumbles. "The toy represented the idea of what you want the world to reflect!" He says before pausing as he tries to recall where he got that from.

"How did you figure that out?" One of the twins asks. "And why would anyone entitle that toy to be a My Little Pony?" The other adds.

"Well, for one, My Little Pony is a rather popular toy for girls. So popular that it even got made into movies and into a cartoon show. It's a muggle form on entertainment." He explains, adding the last part when they got confused.

"Let's just say that its got this huge following with little girls around the world." He summarizes upon the still confused look upon their faces. "As to understanding the ritual... Don't really know where it came from." He states flatly.

"Anyway, we were standing in position that made us immune to the ritual's effects. That's why we're not, well, colorful." The twins finish after a few minutes of silence.

"You didn't clean up the ritual, did you? I think I might know how to reverse this." He says after he ponders for a while. He still don't get why he's got this knowledge but he kind of has an idea of what needs to be done.

"No we didn't. Just follow us." The twins say and they were, once again, in the dungeon hallways.

They arrive at the room and he notices that the toy in the center is that of a human. He frowns before he moves to get a closer look at the ritual diagram. As he looks at the ritual, something in his mind translates so he can read it.

"Well, I think I know what you did wrong and I think we can do something about it before lunch." He says cheerfully. He then begins to tell the twins what needs to be erase so they can put in the right parts. He makes sure to move the toy out of the circle.

It takes two hours but they are finally ready to do the ritual once more. He stands in the center nervously but knows that this needs to be done. He has a rough idea of what could happen if he doesn't follow through with this path and strongly objects to what the future holds if its allowed to follow down that path.

God, please forgive me for what I'm about to do but I refuse to allow the world to follow that course. He thinks as the twins chant the spell in passable Latin.

As the ritual activates, he takes control of the magic and he senses the world at large. He freezes as various emotions roll into him and he understands that he's about to do the right thing for a whole new set of reasons. And so he plays god, fixing the mistakes the muggles had made to the world, be it the hole in the ozone to the inorganic garbage that's building up all across the world.

Once the world has become healthier, he begins to go to the source of the damage and erases all traces of the evil humans had constructed accidentally as they advanced their civilization. He does pause as he realizes that Fred and George seem to struggling to try and end this. So, he reaches out and changes them, he makes sure that their memories are also affected just like the rest of the world.

With that done, he returns to making the world in which they live to be a better place. He turns his gaze to the moon and begins to use magic to make it habitual, has the necessary gravity, and rotates, he then uses magic to seemingly expand the surface of the moon before teleporting the majority of the magical races up there. A few mundane species also joined them, they're role is to be food for the majority of the meat eaters.

He constructs a huge city upon the moon, one that will allow every magical pony to reside there with more then enough room for more. He also creates underground farms to feed the populous of the city before beginning to ward the city to keep undesirable species from entering it. Once the city is to his satisfaction, he returns his attention to the earth.

In time, he manages to erase cities from the world before expanding the surface of the world so that over nine billion ponies can be supported. Once the world is cleared of all settlements, he then begins the task of creating settlements, he also makes sure to alter the memories of the world to accommodate his most recent changes.

Once that's done, he is sure to create various gates throughout the world for magical ponies to use to travel, be it to the moon city or around the world. He 'steps' back and studies the world for a few seconds before erasing every soul bit from earth, going so far as to destroy that path of magic upon Earth and, after a few thoughts, the Moon.

Then he finds he's not yet done as there are still vampires, hags, and other near humans he needs to deal with. It takes him hours to studying the whole of the various, humanish races before he decides upon a course of action. The vampires are killed since they were nothing but dead bodies being animated by magic while the curse of the werewolves is replaced, making them into wolf animagi as well as making sure that all previously mundane werewolves are pegasus ponies or unicorn ponies. No race is spared, many had their very natures and magics changed so they are made less violent and capable of fitting into the typical peaceful pony society.

It shouldn't surprise him much at how naturally peaceful the My Little Pony species is, but it also means that there won't be much in the way of human type of violence which is killing, raping, money greed, and other extreme negative traits that humans seem to indulge in. A pony's type of violence seems to be prank pulling compared to human type and far less likely to leave lasting marks upon an individual or the world around them.

He did find it tremendously hard to create a believable history but he does so. It's hard for him to say if it were believable but it's what he created and wrote. His final touches were to erases his 'finger' prints so that if anyone tries to search out what he did, they'd have a very hard time finding the clues they need.

With that done, he lets go of the magic, fully expecting that the backlash will destroy him as he does have a soul fragment inside of him. He learnt about it from the information dump he received concerning the ritual. He's pretty sure that this way will save far more lives even though it will alter them beyond recognition of their previous selves or what their old natures use to be.

The released magic suddenly blinds and he... feels...

"Welcome home, my child." He hears a woman's voice say and he feels something wrap their arms around him, He feels so protective in this embrace. "You've done what I had hoped. I'm just sorry you won't be there to experience it."

The End

Shinigami Naruto: The Test

I don't own Bleach or Naruto!

Oh, this is going to be so much fun! He thinks as he sets the white fox mask into place over his face. "I'm sure your students won't find it very fun." Aozora remarks from within his mind-scape and he mentally shrugs.

He adjusts his red kimono before running his hands through his blond hair. He uses medical kido to alter his hair color to red with his pony ending in white, mimicking a fox's tail. The kido was developed by one of his students as she had been teased mercilessly about her odd color hair, it had been sporting dual colors, that she looked for ways to their hide it or to dye it and with his help, created this unique kido.

Humming a soft tune under his breathe, he is sure to center the gem like sphere upon his necklace so that it hangs over his chest. The fangish beads of the necklace are all pointing away from his neck. Finished, he checks himself one last time in the mirror before tapping his sandals and turning away.

He walks out of the shrine and gazes down at the forest where teams of students should be wandering about, each with one of a pair of scrolls in their possession. The forest is larger then the Forest of Death where the second part of the Chuunin Exam had taken place and none of the 'natural' dangers of it though. Another change is that the various teams had been dropped randomly about the forest instead of them all starting outside of it.

"How many do you think will get the true purpose of this training?" Aozora wonders before manifesting himself in the more 'physical' world of the Soul Society. "You basically set them up against one another and yet you expect them to form an army to stand against you, the so called Fox Sage."

"There will be times when you must chose between fulfilling the mission while trying to ignore the danger an unknown party represents or putting the mission on hold to form a temporary alliance with their enemies to deal with said third party. It's fine to follow orders but to only follow them with disregard of your unit's lives... There's just too many who think like that already, particularly in positions of power that I want to at least try to make them aware of the possibility of them being in that position." He says to Aozora.

"I see. Well, I think you're in for a disappointment in this upcoming test." Aozora no Kemono muses. "And you are, sadly, correct about how easily Soul Reapers mindlessly follow orders to the point of suicide." His partner says with a sigh as they watch the sun set before them, the retreating sunlight causes the forest before this little mountain to look surreal.

He smiles under the mask as he nods as he glances over to Aozora. "I couldn't have created this forest without you, you know. You are link rather firmly to all of the elements. With your aid, I used earth and water to create this forest" He says to his Zanpakuto spirit. "Is it any wonder that when released you create storms?"

Aozora smirks and cape his wings about his shoulders while hoooking the thumbs at the mid-point of the collar bone. "It's nice to be recognized for the aid I lend to you, my welder." Aozora remarks dryly.

"Beside, I do have to wonder how well the upper brass will react to this test of yours when you head back in about six days' time." Aozora muses thoughtfully after a moment of silence. "Your true intent isn't going to sit well with any of them, they don't take criticism well."

"Not much they can do about it, I've become a valuable teacher at the academy. I am the only one there that's teaching because I want to teach instead of it being an assigned duty by my captain. I've become something of a professional teacher and I am rather popular with the students too." He reminds Aozora.

"Guess it helps that the survival rate of fresh academy students has never been as high as it is since you started teaching." Aozora adds rather calmly. "Any way, it's almost time for you to start your haunting, oh great Fox Sage." And with that said, Aozora vanishes from his sight.

He rests his left hand upon the dagger that is his Zanpakuto. It had taken a lot of effort to not just shrink Aozora but to make the metal of the blade to take the appearance of basic steel. Aozora's normal blue metal appearance is rather unique and would blow his cover.

I wonder if anyone decided to wait until evening to move about? He wonders before shrugging the thought off. Within seconds he Shunpo to the base of this little mountain.

"It's game time." He mutters, doing his best to disguise his own voice. He holds out both arms with the palms of his hands turned up to the sky. He focuses his mind to create tiny blue fire balls, mimicking the special flames that are said to be used by Kitsune. Nine tiny blue balls of fire hover in the air before him before they zoom away from him, heading into the forest.

With a grin, his body glows and shrinks. His form shifts about until its in a form of a nine-tailed fox. The glow vanishes as he shakes his body. He stretches his altered body and moves each tail individually a few seconds.

Once he's satisfied, he trots into the forest that he had force to grow. Let's see who's in the neighborhood. He thinks to himself.

Aizen

"Aizen, Katsu, are do you make of that?" The third member of the unit, a student named Dan, asks while pointing to this blue fire ball that kind of reminds him of the description of Kitsune's Fox Fire. The tiny blue ball of fire slowly drifts towards them and he watches as Katsu, who's closest, move to the blue fireball.

"It's kind of pretty." Katsu muses and he snorts softly, finding it typical that a girl would find something potentially dangerous to be pretty. "Huh, it's not even warm." Katsu adds.

Katsu suddenly jerks back and he gets up to see what's wrong. "It's... it's growing." Katsu says and he frowns at the sight.

"This has to be a trick sensei set up." Dan states while gripping his Asauchi's handle. "There can't be any Kitsune in the Soul Society!" The brunet student says upon drawing his Asauchi.

As Dan slashes at the five foot blue fireball, he tries to preform a barrier kido only for the 'Fox Fire' to explode and its energies wash over them all. He curses softly under his breath as he rubs his eyes. He freezes as low, throaty growling reaches his ears.

"Oni... Oh god, it's an ONI!" Katsu screams and as he looks, he finds a being standing about nine feet while sporting a pair of red horns that jet out of very pale white hair. He feels the ground tremble as the red skinned Oni take slow, deliberate steps towards them as they retreat from it.

Then the Oni raises its kanabo and bellows, "The scroll! Give it to me and you might walk away with your head not bashed in!"

Katsu screams as she turns to flee and it seems that Dan's nerve also escaped him. He stares into those black eyes as he tries to bind the Oni using kido, only for the Oni to chuckle as it casually breaks it. Suddenly he finds himself flying into a tree and he doesn't recall the beast moving to do so.

He feels something tugging at his belt and he wakes to find a nine-tailed Kitsune trying to tug the scroll out of his belt pouch. It takes him a few seconds to release that the Oni had only been an illusion and yet, he finds his ability to move to be hampered. He does finally grabs the scroll, causing the ruby furred mystical beast to pull away from the scroll.

As he draws himself up, he stares into the fox's yellow eyes. "I see. Well, congrats on waking from my illusion so quickly. I believe we'll meet again." The nine-tailed fox states calmly before turning into a blue ball of fire and zooming away.

Regrettably. He thinks as he tries to shake of the aftereffects of the Kitsune's illusion. He glances at his squad members for this test and find they're still out of it.

"How... interesting." He muses out loud as he watches them. He can only hope that no other team is within yards of them as they would have an easy time getting their Earth scroll.

Naruto

It seems that Aizen has some talent in illusions. He thinks after visiting the ninth team to be found by his Fox Fire and put under an illusion to keep them from waking as he searches them while looking for their scroll. With the exception of squad five, he did collect each squad's scrolls.

Each of the eight scrolls are held in eight of his nine tails as he trots towards the shrine. All in all, he is rather happy that at least one out of nine squads managed to hold onto their scroll. I wonder how many will venture here to try and retrieve their scroll or to get the one they need... Of course even if some of the squads managed to capture their second scroll, they got a bit of a wait before they can begin to turn them over at one of the three stations.

He does wonder how well that puppet of his is preforming. He rather have people not knowing that the Fox Sage and Naruto Uzumaki are one and the same. As long as the puppet is in plain view of other Shinigami, nobody will be able to prove anything concerning the Fox

Sage and Naruto Uzumaki other then maybe the Fox Sage being a student of Naruto's or somebody volunteered to play the Fox Sage.

= [- T

"Only four squads passed, eh?" 'Naruto' muses upon arriving in the clearing with other academy staff. More then a few students stare between 'Naruto' and him, the Fox Sage.

"I was rather busy or I would have ensured that none would have passed." He states in his altered voice, more then glad that the mask helps with that. "Aizen Sosuke proved to have all the qualities of a fine leader. Charismatic enough to get the majority of his fellows to follow him in hunting me down." He explains.

"I see, well, congratulations to the army of Aizen then for managing to prove that you aren't mindless drones." 'Naruto' states and he can't help but chuckle at the stun expressions upon their faces upon hearing their respectable teacher say that. "If you are not in need of medical attention, you are all allowed to return home to get cleaned up for a party at Isa's which will start at seven." The puppet adds and the students cheer before heading off in different directions.

The puppet of him and himself begin to discus the performance of the class while the other Soul Reapers collect the scroll that he had piled in the middle of the clearing. They kept up the act to the point where they left the forest to continue their discussion someplace more comfortable.

"Well, looks like you managed to pull that off rather well." Aozora remarks as the puppet collapses upon arriving in his apartment. He picks up the puppet and then, focusing his Reiryoku, causes the puppet to be destroyed.

'Yes, it does, doesn't it? You didn't complain as much as I thought you would, all things considered.' He thinks to his partner while taking the shrunken Zanpakuto from his belt.

It takes about a minute for the sword to return to its original size and shape. He pulls the blade out a few center-meters to check and see if the metal the sword is back to its original color. Nodding to himself, he sheaths the sword once more and leans it upon the chair in his living room before heading for his bedroom to begin changing out of his current set of cloths.

I wonder if any of them truly got the lesson I was trying to teach? He muses in the shower where seconds before, he returned his hair to its usual state. Ah well, at least they won't be able to forget about this test, even when they become Shinigami and take positions in the various divisions.

The City Naruto Built

I don't own Naruto!

Day 12

"Alright men! Let's get this kingdom of Kiboo built!" A thirteen year old Naruto Uzumaki says to his army of two thousand shadow clones. The clones raise their arms up and shout back to the original, "Right!"

Groups of clones vanish off in different directions while the original moves to speak with a clone holding a bit of cut out bark. "Ok, lead me to where we should mark the foundation." The original says to the clone who's acting as his secretary.

The clone nods sharply before leading the original to the rocky hill that they shall build a fortress upon.

Beach

Day 17

The rest of team seven is with the other the rookie nine plus Gai's team were busy far to the west of the island. "So... Naruto hasn't come crawling back yet?" Sakura asks as she drops a woven basket filled with sea creatures that the majority of the girls had gathered; Tenten seems to be focusing on making arrows.

"He'll be back." Kiba states in a dismissive way. It's Kiba's turn keep the signal fire from going out. Akamaru whines softly and the loud, tattoo wearing genin strokes his dog's side.

"Still, it's been about a two weeks since he left. Shouldn't we at least sent Neji or Lee to search for him? Just to make sure that he's not hurt?" The pink haired genin wonders as she begins to put crabs and mussels into a large clay pot that Shino had crafted and Sasuke had fire baked.

Once filled with the sea critters, Sakura begins to fill the pot with drinking water from the jars that, for today, Chouji and Lee are in charge of keeping filled with drinkable water from a stream a few kilometers from their camp. Ino and Hinata approach with their fish that they netted.

"How's Akamaru? Is he still feeling the heat?" Hinata asks her team-mate while dropping the net down.

Ino moves to collect a bunch of twigs for them to use to cook the fish while Kiba replies, "When the shelter is built, he'll finally have a cool place to rest. If Naruto hadn't been such a drama queen, the shelter would have been built days ago."

"I wonder what Naruto is doing now?" Hinata wonders softly to herself as she looks eastward.

Fort Ramen

Naruto hums under his breath as he walks through the first level of the underground part of the fortress. The clones had done a good job in using those imperfect earth jutsus to aid in not just tunneling through the rocky earth but in getting the rocks out of their way. The original Uzumaki's tour brings him to the newer section.

This part will soon have a chain gang of clones to take whatever stones they discover as they dig down to create another level of the basement. But before that happens, the clones will be using earth jutsus to strength the walls, ceilings, and floors of this part. With a shrug, the original heads back the way he came, heading to return to the surface.

The basement is already being used as a cellar to keep smoked meat and dry greens. There are plans for a water reserve to be connected throughout the fort but that will have to wait until the area is dug. Upon getting out of the basement, Naruto arrives in a room that will become the kitchen.

Roads are already being created outside of the temporary wall that surrounds the base of this rocky hill. When the time comes, a more permanent one will exist a full kilometer in every direction from the center of his fortress. Some areas are already being marked off for future gardens and fountains that will be created within the future enclosed area.

"Our patrols report that none of our previous associates have moved out of the area they've already explored. It is unlikely that they've finished constructing any of their shelters since you left. They have been hit by the blunt of the incoming storms so it is likely that the incomplete shelters will continue to be incomplete until storm season passes." Naruto's secretary role filling clone reports as he enters into the courtyard.

"I see. Well, knowing the various stubborn geniuses among them, it's doubtful that they'll do anything beyond trying to construct those shelters. Hopefully they won't feel the need to search for me until Fort Ramen is fully constructed." The original says before frowning.

"Err, I think we should start assigning code names and maybe encourage your brothers to alter their appearance so they don't appear identical to me. I mean, they could just alter their cloths or maybe the hair, I'm not asking them to totally alter their looks and what-not unless they want to, you know?" Naruto says to his primary adviser.

Within seconds, the secretary like clone now sports non-spiky blond hair, a pair of glasses, and a simple set of cloths consisting of a white shirt and light brown baggy pants. "Alright, sir, I'll pass it among the boys. If you wouldn't mind, I'd like to be known as Fu." The newly dubbed Fu says to the original.

"Already, Fu it is. You may go spread the word now. I think I'm going to check on the carpenters and maybe spend a few hours helping them." Naruto tells Fu and the clone nods sharply before walking away, leaving Naruto to scratch his head while wondering how he manage to create such a serious clone like Fu.

Beach

Day 22

"How troublesome." Shikamaru mutters while carrying water filled pails towards the signal fire. Ino merely huffs in agreement as they walk with the sun beaming down upon Shikamaru's topless upper-body and Ino's ripped shirt that is done up like a tank top.

"It's times like these that Naruto's shadow clones would be a great help." Ino huffs as the signal fire become clearer. "You'd think the idiot would be begging us to take him back out of shear loneliness." The blond murmurs.

Shikamaru doesn't say anything while Ino vents some more about Naruto's disappearance. Hinata stands to greet them. As they gently places the pails down upon the ground, both Shikamaru and Ino rotate their shoulders before stretching a bit.

"Did you want some help with the pails?" Hinata asks and Ino practically shouts, "Yes!"

And so the four pails of water have their contains poured into the stone jars that Shino's bugs had hollowed out by eating the stone to craft the jars. As the last pail is done, the foragers arrive arguing about something concerning whether they should try their hand at clearing away sections of forest to try and plant certain berry bushes in the clearing.

Neji seems to be defending the idea while Sasuke is arguing that they won't need to farm since they won't be here much longer. Chouji doesn't seem to care either way as the rather husky ninja seems more concerned about beginning to make lunch.

Shikamaru and Ino sit down with Ino coming to Sasuke's defense. As Chouji divides the various veggie and berries among those around the signal fire, those building the shelters arrive. Sakura and Tenten appear to be scowling and refusing to glance at each other.

As silence reigns among them, Sakura breaks it by saying, "You know, I think I miss having the goof-ball hanging around. I don't know how but with him around, we never argued this much."

Murmurs of agreements echo that sentiment.

Ramen City

Day 30

"It seems that the others are beginning to range beyond their typical boarders." Fu reports and Naruto sits up to look at Fu, wiping his forehead with the back of his right hand. "They seem to be moving in pairs while doing so. It seems that they are trying to pick up your trail."

"Really... Huh, any estimate concerning when they'll discover this city?" The original Naruto asks Fu before drinking some water from a wooden container that Cat and other carpentry incline clones.

"If they finally abandon their main camp and with the two Hyuugas with them, perhaps four days of hard running but if they stop to camp, eight days." Fu states. "I've already called in our western patrols. It's likely that they will take up guard duty upon the western walls."

"Good, good." Naruto says as he studies the others working on planting various flowering plants and a few fruit trees. The fountain is still getting worked on since a bunch of intellectual clones are busying figuring out how to pump water throughout the city.

"How goes Seal testing?" The original kyuubi container asks Fu. "They must be doing something right since I haven't received any of their memories since yesterday around noon."

A normal day in the life of Naruto Uzmaki since they became stranded upon this island and he had a difference of opinion to the group's collective opinion.

Outside of Ramen City

Day 39

"Naruto made that city? But, he was the dead last of our class! Are you sure that he just didn't stumble upon the ruins and claimed it?" Ino demands of Neji as the group hides in the forest about a mile away of the wall.

There is a gate located a bit more to the northern part of the wall. They noted it as they encircled the wall for a few miles south.

Everyone but Lee and Sasuke are crouched within the cover the forest offers since there is no cover between their position and the wall. Some members of the group is finding it hard to swallow that the blond genin known widely as a knuckle head could build something so huge, even using his signature jutsu, shadow clones.

"Naruto..." Hinata whispers softly as she studies those posted along the wall. Some of them appear to have different hair colors, styles, and other little differences but mostly the bone structure is the same upon all of them so she knows they are clones.

"As interesting as this conversation is, I believe you're surrounding." A voice says and the group shut up to look around.

Within seconds, a group of clones appear and one in particular seems to exuded a commanding aura even though the clone's appearance is almost comical considering that they know Naruto's personality rather well.

"But... How?" One of the group asks and the bookish clone merely smiles ever so slightly.

"It's amazing that even wearing that orange eye sore as you call it, Naruto had the highest scores in stealth. He did manage to evade ANBU for hours after what he did to the Hokage Monument." The nerdish clone code named Fu muses. "Compared to that, this was rather an easy even with you having two Hyuuga."

"Who says we'll let ourselves be captured?" Kiba states while moving into a pose that will allow him to preform man-beast clone with Akamaru.

Fu only raised an eyebrow at this.

Ten Minutes Later

"This is so embarrassing..." Sakura says as she hangs form a spear shaft that is carried between two clones.

"Their reaction time is much more superior then his usual ones." Neji remarks. Both Hyuuga and a few of the others like Ino and Shino are forced to wear these jumpsuit that seem to be suppressing not just their chakra but their bloodline limit or family special jutsu.

"I should say so, I myself have existed for close to twenty days." One of the red haired guards remark. "Some of us though, they've been around before building of Ramen City started, like Fu." The guard says, nodding towards the glass wearing clone.

"Just how long can you guys last until you dispel naturally?" Sakura inquires. "And how is it you can be so far from Naruto's side?"

"Not sure how long we'll last but if we stay upon this island long enough, we'll likely find out. And why shouldn't we be able to range away from our creator? We are the most independent clones ever crafted using jutsu." The same clone guard explains as they walk northwards to the gate.

Castle Tengoku

Naruto leans into his throne that is within his throne room, his clones insisted that he needed the throne to go with the room. The blond would have been happy with an office but his clones clearly had other ideas. At least they're not making me a crown.

Blacksmith

"Ah-choo!" A group of clones sneeze at the same time.

"You think somebody is talking about us?" A silver haired clone code named Shuuseieki as he swipe his nose.

"Who knows? Anyway, I can't wait to see his face when we show him his crown!" A malt style, neon green haired clone code named Haru says with a wide grin as he holds up a artificially created sapphire using earth jutsu to collect the right elements to form such gems.

Castle Tengoku

"Ah-choo!" Naruto sneezes a few times in a row. "I hope I'm not coming down with anything..." The young ninja mutters, still unaware that he will soon be dubbed King of the Kiboo Kingdom, Defender of Castle Tengoku, and Lord of Ramen City.

(The clones are still working on the name of their knighthood)

"Err... Naruto! Fu and his unit are waiting outside with their captives. Shall I permit them to enter?" Doo asks, Doo is an orange and black haired clone who seems to be among a small group of clones who seem to enjoy sporting mismatch eyes, even among that group Doo is rather unique. Doo sports one that is Naruto's typical looking blue eye and a copper colored eye with black sclera and iris.

"If you won't mind, Doo." Naruto says to his current bodyguard. Doo salutes before moving to fully open the doors on his own.

Fu is the first to enter into the throne room. Naruto sighs when Sakura and Ino demand for him to have his clones unbind them from the spears. "Oh shut up!" Doo snaps at the girls after the unit is all within the throne room.

Naruto couldn't help but smile at Doo's reaction and from the looks from the guards, they seem to share Doo's sentiment. Oh this is going to be very troublesome. The kyuubi container thinks to himself.

"You know, you guys really shouldn't be that surprise by your treatment. I mean, we didn't exactly part on good terms." Naruto states. "A lot of you also dismissed a lot of my ideas of improving our base as a waste of time. The last report from my ranging patrols seem to say that even after a month, you still haven't finished your huts."

"Funny how it only took less then twenty-seven days to complete this city." Naruto muses before adding, "Heck, we're almost done creating the gardens of this fair city. Kind of goes to show that even with various geniuses or book savvy among you, you can't operate well outside of the career of being a ninja."

"Kind of sad, if you think about it that way." One of the guards carrying the 'guests' of the city muses after a moment of silence.

"So then, what do you plan to do with us?" Neji asks the blond sitting upon the throne.

"Well... I thinking putting you into cells until I decide what to do with you. I might even send a few units of guards to fetch Lee and Sasuke." Naruto states. "Take them away, but make sure they get cleaned up before being placed into their cells." Naruto tells the guards, they salute before marching back out in order to travel to the kitchens.

Day 61

"Huh..." Kakashi muses at the sight a really old fire pit. There are stone jars not that far from the old fire pit among other items that seem to be slowly but surely being engulfed by the sand.

"They seem to have tried to build shelters but they were never completed. Though that might be because they used such flimsy material." Gai states after joining Kakashi by the fire pit.

"We found a battle site. It seems there were disputes among them." Kurenai reports a little distance away.

The team of jonin instructors head to see this battle field. "Lee must have been one of the combatants." Gai states calmly while Kakashi moves around, studying every broken or burnt tree or grass.

"Sasuke's fireball jutsu created this." The white haired jonin states at a sport where the dirt seemed to have been partially melted.

With a frown, Kakashi summons a dog. "Find a scent and lead us after it." Sharingan Kakashi states.

Day 65

"Who taught their genin earth jutsu?" Asuma wonders as they stood before a gate that is open. They can clearly see guards all along the wall.

None of the three admit to it so silence hangs among them for a few seconds before Gai begins to walk through the gate, heading into the city. Kakashi soon follows after the Green Beast with Asuma and Kurenai hasting for a few seconds before following the two.

"Hey ya! Did you want a tour around our fair city or did you wish to visit with King Naruto the First?" They glance to the side of the gate to find a clone, it had to be a clone, sporting black, orange, and white hair and yellow eyes with green flakes about the iris. Instead of whisker marks upon the cheeks, this clone sports dark purple tattoos with a figure of a dragon suggested.

"I know, I know, pretty cool tattoos, right? Names is Haundo and if ya want, I'll be your tour guide. I'll show ya the many wonders of Ramen City and Castle Tengoku." The dubbed Haundo says.

"Yosh! You're student is most talented, Kakashi! Yes, Haundo, we shall gladly take you up on your offer!" Gai says and Haundo beams.

"Alright! Now then, follow and I shall lead you to the wondrous garden of Taigaa! Its fountain sports five tigers with a tiger lilly being at the center of them." Haundo says while leading the four jonin down a street.

Hours Later

"And finally, our last destination, Castle Tengoku! The castle is one of the first buildings built. At that time, Ramen City was Fort Ramen and it only occupied the land of the hill. A temporary wall had been built about the bottom." Haundo says as they enter into the courtyard of the surprisingly large castle.

The four jonin found the tour rather informative but they had begun to notice that none of the other genin had been mentioned throughout the creation of this fair city. They had spied various clones, some exact duplicates of Naruto Uzumaki with the others preferring to appear vastly different then their creator.

The four jonin have visited pretty much every district of Ramen City as their tour guide lead them around. They visited each of the gardens of the city as well as the markets. They noted how each district sported its own design and decorations.

"I don't suppose you can tell us what became of our various genin. You haven't mentioned them throughout the tour so far." Asuma says and Haundo looks thoughtful.

"Well, that's because they didn't help with any part of the founding or creation of the city. The majority of them arrived rather later and it was believed that they planned to mooch off of our hard work, so they are guests within the dungeons." Haundo explains.

"Naruto and them had a difference of opinion when it came to how to set up residence upon this island. Naruto wasn't satisfied with only keeping close to the landing nor was he happy that his suggestions concerning jutsus being dismissed as a waste of time and chakra since the rest seem to believe they weren't going to spend more then a week or two upon this island." Haundo continues.

"Of course none of them objected to him creating shadow clones to do the foraging, watching the signal fire, or being sent out looking for usable scrapes from the sunk ship." Haundo says with a sigh. "The last fight had to do with the fact that whenever it stormed, the flimsy incomplete shelters would get ruined. Naruto wanted to give trying to shape shelters using an earth jutsu that he hadn't fully mastered. And so, Naruto marched off to explore more of the island."

"And thus, he discovered this place and saw a chance to create all of this." Haundo says. The group stilled as they processed all of that.

"That is rather unyouthful of my team." Gai muses with a frown.

"Ah, don't worry, it's not as though they're being tortured and they are being fed two meals a day." Haundo remarks upon seeing the looks on Asuma and Kurenai's faces. "Although, our Seal research team has been trying to understand Sasuke's curse seal, though sadly or happily, they accidentally destroyed it just last night. It seems that the seal's base was a poison and once they broke it down, it vanish."

"Sasuke seems to be comatose about the fact that it's destroyed. He raged for a few hours about how that seal was a gift for an avenger such as himself and wants them to reapply it." Haundo states after wincing slightly. "Once his anger was spent, he fell into a depression and is pretty much ignoring everything around him, off in his own little world."

Kakashi had mixed feelings concerning the destruction of the curse seal that Orochimaru had 'gifted' the young Uchiha. The jonin can only guess at how much more mentally unstable Sasuke is and hopes that once they return to Hidden Leaf, the hospital staff will be able to help him.

"Anyway, you guys must be pretty hungry! Come on, I'll take ya to the kitchen unless you guys want to dine in the dinning hall?" Haundo says, moving onto a new subject.

It's about then that the four jonin did find themselves to be rather peckish and they follow their guide to the kitchen. "You want smoked fish? Or do you prefer fresh?" Haundo asks as he moves to put on an apron.

"Fresh." Kurenai says and the clone nods. They watch Haundo with their eyes but their thoughts didn't encircle the clone at all as they each thought about their genin.

Master Bedroom

Naruto studies his pack, mentally going through a checklist. With a satisfied nod, the blond genin tightens the string before shouldering the strap. The blond is sure to adjust his headband before heading out of his chambers.

"Looks like you're in charge Fu!" Naruto says to the clone upon closing the door. "How goes the release of the prisoners?"

"Very good, sir. Sasuke continues to prove unresponsive while more then a few of our... guests have tried to kill their attendees upon having their chakra restored to them." Fu reports.

Naruto sighs, he rather expected that reaction from the majority of them. "So they didn't realize they were being attended by puppets until the blow didn't dispel them?" He asks the organized clone.

"A few seem to be more incline to believe that you've created a better, more durable version of us. Which wouldn't be such a bad idea, actually." Fu muses and Naruto smiles.

"Considering how often I use that jutsu, it shouldn't be that hard to test out slightly different things upon using said jutsu. After all, I'm still responsible for repopulating the city when a clone dispels prematurely." Naruto says. "Which will be rather tricky when I'm all the way back in Hidden Leaf."

Epilogue

7 Years Later

"It's good to be home." Naruto says upon being summoned back to the island of Kangaekomu, in the sealing room three in the wing of Castle Tengoku.

"It's good to see you as well, sir." An unchanged Fu says, clearly voicing the group's opinion. "It hasn't been the same since you left."

Naruto grimaces as he recalls that day. "There are days where I wish I never left." The twenty year old, recently declared missing nin admits with a sigh.

"So we begun to understand. Still, our king has returned and he brings us new additions for our library." Omoi, the clone that has taken it upon himself to create a library. The black haired clone is one of a group that wishes to see a new city built to the southwest, a cliff over looking a cove.

"So I have, so I have." Naruto muses and tosses the scroll containing all of his plunder from the major ninja villages and a few of the lesser ones too. Omoi catches the scroll and vanishes in a flash to begin organizing the contains.

"I have Tako run a bath for you in your chambers." Fu says. "I believe your crown is still within the glass case where you left it."

Naruto's adviser adds with a hint of a smile and Naruto groans at the reminder of his kingship.

At least the title King is a more suitable title then missing nin. I never abandoned the village, it abandoned me. The twenty year old genin thinks as he heads out of the room, heading for his waiting chambers that are many floor above his head.

Naruto pauses and glances over at Doo and Fu. "Be sure to start posting sentries about the island. It's likely they'll try to find me here after I haven't been sighted upon the continent after a few months. I didn't leave any clones behind, so it shouldn't be too long before they try coming here." Naruto informs the group, who just nod in response.

The End and Yet, a New Beginning

Shinigami Naruto: The Return

I don't own Bleach or Naruto!

"We're finally heading back to Seireitei after fifty years..." Aozora muses as while reading the order to return to the Seireitei. "Aren't you a bit worried that they're from the Captain-Commander instead of Captain Tosen? You know, your division's latest captain?"

"They mention war time measure are being enacted, though against who..." He shrugs as he adjusts his rather large knapsack before slipping the greatly shrunken Zanpakutō. He had used his spiritual power to shrink it to the size of a typical katanna until they reach his apartment in Seireitei, then at which point, it'll return to its typical size.

"So, you think two of the noble clans have finally decided to go to war then? If they have, maybe you can try looking a few years younger, like a twelve year old or maybe even an eight year old to get out of going to the front line." Aozora remarks jokingly after taking a long look at him.

"I enjoy looking like a seventeen year old, Aozora. It always offsets the new students into thinking I'm just one of the guys. Thus it helps them to relate to me outside of the classroom." He defends as he gives his Zanpakuto spirit a minor hard look.

"Ok, fine." Aozora says before adding as he's about to leave their home of fifty years, "So, are you going to say farewell before we go?"

He turns to look at Aozora only to find Aozora has vanished from this dimension. He closes his eyes and leans slightly upon the door frame as he sighs. He gently bangs his head against the wooden frame before picking himself up and heading to do a round of the district to say good bye to the friends that will likely forever reside in this district. Still surprises me that out of everyone I've known while I was alive, I would be one of the few who manage to get my full name right.

= [- T

"The Captain-Commander is ready to see you, Uzumaki-san." Lieutenant Chojiro says and he raises up from his seat. He bows at the second-in-command of First division.

"Thank you, Sasakibe-sama." He says as he raise up from his bow. He then enters into the Captain-Commander's office. "Yamamoto-dono, it is good to see you in such good health." He says upon sitting down upon a chair before the elderly captain's desk.

"It is good to see you as well, Naruto. The quality of the graduates has fallen since your assignment in the far reaches of the Rukongai. Those souls you recommended for the Spiritual Arts Academy have done very well and have become rather remarkable Soul Reapers." Yamamoto says and he nods politely.

"It has been a long time since you achieved Shikai form, has it not? How proceeds your progress upon achieving Bankai?" Yamamoto asks him.

"I have it achieved it, although I have some problems with maintaining focus while it's activated. I had not thought to mention it in my yearly reports since I will likely continue to have problems mastering it. It is a rather unorthodox release I believe." He answers, he begins to worry about why the head Shinigami is bringing this up.

"I see, but that doesn't change anything for I am promoting you to the position of captain within your division." Yamamoto informs him and he feels as though his world just got set up upon its head. "There is much to do and so little time to do most of it. That is why I am very much relieved to hear that you have achieved Bankai even if you have yet enough experience using it."

"I did not know Tosen-san had passed on. Forgive me for not arriving for the funeral, sir." He says but the Captain-Commander sighs and he frowns. "I'm sorry, Yamamoto-dono, for being out of the loop, perhaps you can enlighten me upon the circumstances leading up to my sudden promotion?" He asks, being sure to pick his words rather carefully.

"I had not expected the news not to have reach you before now, Naruto, forgive me." The Captain-Commander says at last and he patiently waits for the powerful man before him to enlighten him. "It would seem that three captains had plotted to acquire a device that the former captain, I'm sure you remember the incident with Kisuke Urahara, created and was exile for."

He nods, he did indeed remember Urahara and his usual partner in crime, Yoruichi. "That incident always seemed... off to my mind. Urahara never struck me as the type to be so... so... ruthless when it comes to experimenting." He admits, he never liked how none of the victims were asked to ID who tried to hollowfy them.

He presses his lips as he realizes something. "Sir, does this mean that those three were behind what happened back then?" He asks after noting that the Captain-Commander didn't seem to be in a hurry to continue speaking.

He sits back and closes his eyes, he remembers the test he arranged when Aizen had been a mere student. I wonder if it all started then... He had been fairly popular after that test. So many people looking at him for leadership, its enough to swell anyone's head.

"I only hope that your faith in my ability to lead division nine is not misplaced, sir. I have been away from Seireitei for five decades and I can only imagine what changes have taken place during my absence." He says to the man who shaped the way the Soul Society trains new recruits by founding an academy.

"I believe you have the skills needed for your new duties, it's not unlike teaching in its own way." The ancient Captain-Commander informs him with a soft smile. "The Seireitei has need of your abilities outside of the academy during this time of war and it is your responsibility to step up."

He bows his head in acknowledgment. "There will be a captains' meeting tomorrow so I suggest you use today to prepare to face your fellow captains. I believe Shūhei is waiting to take you to your new office. I'll be sure to have your haori sent to you by this evening." Yamamoto-dono tells him.

"Yes, sir. Thank you for this honor, Genryūsai-dono." He says as he gets up from his seat, he bows deeply to the ancient shinigami before leaving the office with his mind slightly awash of various emotions.

"Sir." Shūhei Hisagi says as he enters the waiting room. He studies Shuhei, noting a few new tattoo upon his ex-student and new lieutenant.

"I trust that the head quarters of division nine hasn't changed much since was away on patrol? Then let us walk together and perhaps you can fill me in more upon events that have happened while I was away, Shuhei." He says as they move out of the waiting room.

"His betrayal must have hit you the hardest." He adds and feels Shuhei stiffen slightly but doesn't respond. He can relate to what many Soul Reapers are going through concerning this betrayal.

I wonder if Sasuke ended up here? Or did he get sent to Hell? He wonders as he gazes out of a large window that they are passing on their way out of first division's head quarters.

"The pain, it never goes away. Time only dulls it and perhaps, causes the details to blur. The cut will likely scab over but never heal properly." He murmurs softly before looking away from the window.

"You've had something like this happen before?" Shuhei asks and he smiles sadly at his companion. He pauses to answer.

"Once and it happened centuries ago. Funny thing is, perhaps I should have seen it coming after that one fight we had. He was such an ass even before we began that fight." He says with a scowl as he remembers how Sasuke refused to put on his headband. "The only regret I have is that I made a promise I should have to someone who was just a silly minded girl and didn't like seeing her imaginary prince fade to reveal a very disturbed boy."

"You had a crush on her, didn't you, sensei? And you were competing against her crush to get her attention?" Shuhei asks and he chuckles slightly before nodding.

"That pretty much sums most of the points up really." He answers. "The details make for a very complex tale though and I doubt you'll want to hear me reminisce about the 'good old days' like the old man that I am, eh?" He asks with a sly grin and Shuhei rolls his eyes.

"You're hardly an old man, sensei." Shuhei remarks warily and he snorts softly. "I might not be as old as Captain Unohana or Yamamoto-dono but I when I started attending the academy, Captain Jūshirō and Captain Shunsui were only two grades ahead of me."

"If you won't believe me, you can check the records of the academy." He adds upon noting how Shuhei just shakes his head in disbelief. He's not sure whether to be amused that his new subordinate doesn't believe him or a little ticked off that he didn't believe he's telling the truth.

"Or perhaps I can speak to either of them to see if you're telling the truth." Shuhei muses and he snorts softly while slowly shaking his head. "I'll be sure to have my hangover cure ready for you the day after you do that." He muses.

Silence soon descends between them until they were out of the building. He uses that time to reminisce about his time on team seven before and after Sasuke left. It's funny, I kind of miss their quirks, even now, over thousands of years of being dead.

"Shuhei... Tell me, how were they found out? Has Central 46 punished anyone for not preventing to catch them before they went underground? Any idea of their current base of operations could be found?" He asks as they walk through the street and he feels Shuhei look at him.

"Central 46 has yet to have their numbers replaced since they were murdered by Aizen. So nobody is being accused of anything by them, at least not right now. That might change after this war is over." Shuhei says before making a throaty sound. "Perhaps I should start when Rukia Kuchiki was sent to the real world on patrol..."

"This is going to be one long story." Aozora muses as Shuhei mentions Rukia giving her powers to a moral, creating a substitute Soul Reaper.

= [- T

They will not enjoy this experience... Not at all... He thinks and feels Aozora agreeing with him as he holds his Zanpakuto before him.

The strange blue metal of his blade glinting under the sunlight. He closes his eyes and braces himself for what's to come, of the drain upon his energy reserves that this demonstration will cause. He privately wonders how well the Seireitei will stand upon the storm about to be released.

"Bankai!" He can't help but shout, his heart thundering in his chest as energy explodes from sword. The force seemingly breaking the metal of the sword's blade with the metal shards disintegrating into the air as black clouds suddenly shroud the sky as the wind not just howls but screams.

The hilt in his hand finally dissolves and his whole being begins to as well. Soon, he is the storm raging overhead. Seemingly with each breath he takes, a cyclone seems to spawn and exhaling causes them to grow. The storm grows worse and he uses all of his will power to search for the place where he released his Bankai so he can destroy the target so that he can finally seal it back up.

Upon finding it, he tries to will lightning, just lightning, to destroy the target. It kind of does but a bunch of ice also rains down upon it after the lightning hits it. With the target destroyed, he focuses on the spot upon which he wishes to reconstruct at once he releases his Bankai.

Just as it cancels, he feels Aozora moving to help close the 'door' and within a minute, he is once more appearing in a non-elemental form with the tip of Aozora kind of digging into the ground. He's breathing heavily but he takes it as a good sign that he hasn't passed out.

He's dimly aware of the so called 'clown' captain of twelfth division trying to convince the Captain-Commander to allow him to take him to the lab and study him like some kind of lab rat. He manages to stand, slightly shakily at first and using his oversize Zanpakuto as something to lean on. With each breath, his pounding in his head eases.

The reactions of his new ranking seem to have varying reactions to witnessing his Bankai. He glances towards the target and gets a ground level view of the damage that he caused just a minute or two ago. The remains of the storm is the chunks of ice about the target, he's glad that all he had done as a storm was rain down instead of hailing down.

Funny how right they were when they declared me a force of nature... He muses silently to himself as he listens and responds rather automatically to their questions. He's a little too tired to really think about the questions being asked or to think about their reactions at this point in time, although that doesn't stop him from memorizing them.

"I bet a lot of them are looking forward to seeing it used upon our future enemies and upon the traitors. Fear will definitely be something we'll encounter from them in the future but then, they do have reason to fear, don't they?" He hears Aozora no Kemono muse.

He can't help but agree, they had every right to be wary of what he can do in that form. For as a storm, very little can do any lasting harm. He never heard of a release like his, even going through the records at Central 46.

"Well done, my boy, well done." Yamamoto-dono says to him, causing him to look at the very aged and worn Captain-Commander. He can't help but flush under the man's gaze and manages a nod before the man turns and walks away.

"We must celebrate! Come, onto the bar!" Captain Shunsui Kyōraku says upon slapping his left shoulder.

It wasn't long before he finds himself slightly dragged slash carried away with Aozora no Kemono still being held in his right hand.

Trials of Youth: Naruto

I don't own Naruto characters!

Age: 20

Yawning, he woke and blinks as at the sight of a tail belonging to one of his sisters. His parents had given him a brother and two sisters and while he knows he's a bit more fortunate that he only had three siblings as he could have had five. He flickers his ears at the thought before he slowly begins to move out of the kit pile of their milking den.

As he finally leaves the minor pile of sleeping siblings, he shakes himself before walking to the seemingly massive entrance of the den. With a shake of his head, he walks out of the milking den, heading for the play area of the nursery. He grins at the sight of the nursery that is practically empty.

He moves to the center of the playground to try and connect with this really colorful cloud within his mind. He knows what that cloud is and he really wants to see if he can use it. He only become aware of his illusion powers when he was knocked off of one of the tiers by one of the bullying groups of his age-mates and got knocked out. It happened a few sleep-times ago.

He tries his hardest not to pout as the colorful cloud continues to drift away from him as he tries to walk into it, but the space between the cloud and himself isn't as great as his previous attempts. Suddenly, pain bursts from him and he's forcibly brought out of his mind. He growls and tries to dislodge the bully to stop the bite upon his shoulder.

"What you waiting for? Hold him down!" Snaps the lead bully of the group and it wasn't long before the other seven members of the gang charge forth to do just that.

"Get off!" He growls, trying to wiggle out from their grasp. Anger and fear dominate his mind as he fails to dislodge their grip upon him.

"Or what? You'll wet yourself?" The leader taunts and he just snarls angrily at the gang of nine.

"Turn him over, I want to teach this idiot a lesson about talking back to his superior!" The leader of the nine says and he manages to almost get away from the gang since they had to let go of him to flip him. It was a bite at his tail tip that causes him to cry out.

He turns and glares hatefully at them, wishing that they're deepest fears to haunt them right this minute. Suddenly, something looms around him and the one biting his tail tip yelps as the kit backs away as quickly as he could, tail curled up under his belly. He just growls at the nine as he feels something eating his energy but he refused to lie down since he can only guess what they'd do when he's totally unable to defend himself.

The rest of the gang are shivering in fear and more then a few are cringing upon the floor. Just as he collapses, urine suddenly comes from the nine before they all fainted. Within seconds of realizing they are out of it, he falling down upon the floor, he feels so drained...

"Looks like they'll think twice about bullying you, huh?" He hears a smoothing voice muse before feeling a tongue licks his back. "Come on, let's see if we can't get you something to drink, unless you want to try eating some fruit?"

"Fruit, please." He murmurs and the adult kitsune then gently picks him up. He's glad that it isn't by the scruff of the neck.

He glances backwards and sees two tails within his range. He tries to see if he can spot the tails on the other side but, he only got dizzy so he didn't see if the blue kitsune posses four or five tails. He wanted to ask how many tails they had but decided that he'll likely know upon getting to the food reserve of the nursery.

What drained me? He wonders, finally turning his mind to what happened when his tail got bit. He recalls how desperately wished that they were faced with their fears, the ones that haunt them even when they're wide awake.

"Iku! Why are you bringing that kit here? Did you find out who as casting that illusion in the nursery?" He hears a vixen's voice and he turns to spy the four tailed, green furred vixen laying by the entrance of the food den.

He feels himself being put down and his carrier, Iku, replying, "Met the caster. Not that I blame him, one of the kit gangs were trying to teach him why he shouldn't talk back to them." Iku nudges him and he glances up at the kitsune before standing a bit upon shaky legs.

"There's so many of those in this generation... It's going to turn into a blood bath in the next few decades if the council decides to let it play out." The vixen says as he tries to walk over to her.

His stomach growls and whines as it feels as though his mid-section has a hole in it. He shakes his head, trying to dismiss the hunger pangs to focus on walking the few feet between Iku and the vixen. He hears what the two adults are saying but he doesn't have much time to think about it.

He finally makes it to the side of the vixen's head before collapsing down upon the ground. He feels the vixen, who's name is Waka, turn to regard him and gives him a few licks before using one of her tails to bring a few berries within range of his mouth. Drool escapes his mouth and with a yelp, he practically pounces upon one of the berries.

Each of the berries might be minor tidbits for the adults, for him, they were half the size of his head and he'll be lucky if he manages to eat two of them. His milk teeth gnaw upon the waxy outer skin of the berry but he finally manages to break it. He licks at the juices oozing out of the break for a bit before biting the edge of the rip to expand it so he can eat the 'meat' of the berry.

It's sweeter then milk but its got that after taste, which isn't unpleasant just... odd. He thinks, its only in the last two years that he and his age-mates have begun to sample actual food. It'll be about two decades before they are totally weaned onto solid foods.

"Thank you for the berries!" He says after eating three of them, which kind of surprised him that he would eat so much. He looks over at the giant pair of four tailed kitsunes when he said that.

"You got just as much on you as in you, little one." Waka muses and within seconds, he's between her paws and getting clean. The smoothing feel of the tongue upon his body and his filled gut slowly causes him to be laud to sleep.

Age: 50

He grins as he causes flowers and grass to 'grow' around him. His two sisters squealed in delight while his brother snorts. Once the floor of their old milking den is covered in the illusion of grass and flowers, he turns his attention to causes illusionary vines to grow about the walls before turning the ceiling into sky with a few clouds kind of drifting over their heads.

"Ok, now I'll try for making some simple insects." He says to his siblings. Practice makes perfect. He thinks as he tries to mimic some of the insects that their various teachers show them through using illusions in the safety of the nursery instead of taking them outside of the underground city.

In the three decades since he first access a part of his heritage as a kitsune, the various gangs of bullies have long since learnt to leave his siblings and himself alone or else he'd use them as test subjects in mastering his early access of illusion magic as the normal age in which young kits begin to gain access to their ability to create illusions is between a hundred to a hundred and thirty years of age.

The adults had declared him a genius because he accessed it a good eighty years early, topping the previous record of when an eighty year old accessed their natural illusionary gifts. Of course accessing illusion gifts doesn't mean I'm an adult. To be considered an adult I would need to be able to create Fox Fire and that usually happens when a kitsune is over two hundred.

Giggling causes him to snap out of his thoughts and finds that those insects are changing colors every few seconds and displaying a sparkly effect whenever they move. He chuckles at the imperfects that he inadvertently created. With a frown, he focuses on correcting these effects, much to his sisters' disappointment.

"Shouldn't you four be on your way to class?" He hears Iku ask. The illusion remains up even though an adult has entered into it.

"I'm pretty sure your parents wanted you to attend your lessons." The four tail adult adds. He groans but cancels his various illusions.

"I guess, but it's been weeks since dad has been home and mom left a few days ago to help forage for the nursery." His brother explains as his siblings move to stand before the blue furred adult. He sits down to scratch an inch behind his ear, he gets up to follow after his siblings on their way to the multipurpose main chamber of the nursery.

He cocks his head as an idea grows and he smiles. He slowly tries to weave an illusion to hide his body and the dirt shifted dirt under his paws. He then stops moving and lies next to a wall, mentally chuckling at this idea.

"Where's your brother?" He hears Iku asks down the hall. "Wait here, you three." He hears the blue furred adult say.

As Iku comes within sight, he struggles not to laugh out loud when Iku's eyes slip over his spot. He feels a burst of pride at being able to fool an adult. Suddenly, he yelps as he feels Iku's teeth about the scruff of his neck.

He tries to think what he did wrong with his illusion as Iku places him behind his siblings. "You're good with visual illusions but you haven't gotten around to fooling the other senses yet, kitling." Iku tells him and he blinks.

"Huh? Other senses?" He asks and his siblings seem to be a little interested in the fact that he might still have a long way to go before being a full master of illusions.

"Other then vision, you have hearing, scent, and touch. You have only been working on visual illusions with a hint of tricking the touch." Iku explains and he blinks as he considers that.

"But none of the illusions used in lessons touch on either of those other senses!" A sister of his protests. "So how would we know about these other senses that need to be tricked?" The same sister points out and Iku chuckles softly.

"As you lot are only kits, we don't use the full force of illusions against you since you're too young to have a defense against them. Well, your brother likely has defenses against the encompassing power of illusions as he is capable of using illusions." Iku explains as he takes the lead once more.

Hmm, I wonder what flowers and grass smell like? He wonders as he follows after Iku. He'll have to ask one of the other on duty care-takers. Maybe they'll even caste an illusion to show me what they smell like...

Age: 100

He snorts and continues pass the 'hidden' gang of bullies. As he finishes passing through their area illusion, his changes take effect.

You would think they would know better then to try and fool me. He thinks as soft giggles and chuckles begin to fill the air.

The bullies remain ignorant of the changes he created in their illusions. None of the nine had tried to weave their illusions together the layers don't really mesh well. What he did was mesh his changes upon all of their illusions while making sure that they're unaware of the changes he made. To dismiss his illusion, all nine layers will been to be turned off.

"... his tail! It's got those scaly rings on it!" "...never want those colors on me, they just an eyesore when done up like that!" "...get that sparkling effect? I wish..." "...suits him, don't you think?"

He glances towards the group of female kits who seem to be enjoying what he had done to that one gang of bullies. One gang down, a dozen more to humiliate. He thinks as he heads to his favorite perch on one of the upper tiers.

He curls up and focuses on creating an illusionary moss to cover his tail. He works what it would feel like in his fur, which is kind of hard since he hasn't a clue what it feels like to have a clump of matted fur feels like. It always feel odd when he's experiments involve himself in the illusion too.

He knew it was an illusion but he wants to be affected by the illusion though. He watches as the dark green plant-like illusion sometimes phrase out of sight, allowing him to see his tail without the moss. With a frown, he tries to had the illusion of fur poking out of the moss, trying to make it appear closer to the skin.

An odd ghost like touch of his fur makes his fur prickly. With a sigh, he dismisses the illusion to roll upon his back. He stares off in front of him as he ponders how difficult it is to try and mimic things he's never experienced. Maybe I should try sneaking out of the nursery area? He wonders.

He reviews the idea, after all, he's gotten really good at hiding using illusions to do so. The problem, he realizes, was the fact he has yet to find any exits leading out of the nursery area of this underground city. And yet, there's got to be since how else do dad and mom manage to head out to hunt or where the care-takers go when they're not on duty...

With a chuckle, he flops off of his back and onto his side. With a shake of his tail, he gets to his feet and heads off to find an adult to stalk.

Age: 150

He manages to stay within the ebony furred Junji's shadow as the party of five kitsune adults who range from having three to four tails. Every bit of his illusionary skills have gone into make him appear part of Junji's shadow. He has tried other ways to sneak beyond the underground city's tunnels and they had failed.

He wheezes at the pace of the party. His ears flatten against his skull, his mouth open, and his tail hanging limply behind him. The party had been on the move for a sunset, a sunrise, and another sunset. He's glad his stamina manage to allow him to keep up but now, it's running on empty.

He knew that the more tails a kitsune had translates to how mystically and physically powerful they are but it's another thing to experience it first hand. They must be over hundreds of kilometers from their island home. He still recalls how scared he had been upon realizing that he'd have to walk upon that rotting log set up as a natural bridge between the island where the city had been dug and the mainland where the party is headed if he wanted to remain hidden.

The party has slowed to a walk instead of the lop they were using previously. Hunger gnaws at him while his paws ache from the distances they traveled. He can barely swallow as he hasn't had a drink since the day before he attached himself to Jinji.

"We'll rest here for now." The honey furred, five tailed vixen named Beniko says. She is the leader of this party and he gladly drops upon the cool ground after the rest of the party lies down to rest.

He hadn't realize he had fallen asleep until he feels somebody picking him up by the scruff of his neck. He yelps in surprise and soon finds himself under scrutiny of four of the five adults. He curls himself up as best as he can and trembles at the varying emotions his noses tells him the adults are experiencing.

"What have you got to say for yourself, kit?" Orange furred, three tailed fox name Tarou snarls. He whimpers softly at the look of fury being directed at him. "Answer me, damn you!"

He feels his tail getting wet as he looses control. Two of the group move to hold Tarou from standing over him. "Cool it, Tarou! We won't get any answers if he faints from terror!" Jinji snaps.

"He managed to keep up with us with two days of hard running while maintaining that complex weave upon Jinji's shadow." Crimson furred, three tail Aoto muses. "How many kits do you know that can create an illusion that can fool adults so well? Or maintain it for over a few hours?" Aoto adds.

"What does it matter? He's a kit! And kits aren't allowed out of, let alone away from the island! This mission is canceled because of him!" Tarou bellows loudly and angrily.

"Not necessarily... If he can fool us, imagine how easily he'll fool those Oni." Jinji muses and he's a bit confused as to why they're bringing up that race.

Aren't they more common in the central regions of the world? He wonders. He noticed Tarou snorting in derision at what Jinji had said.

"He'll come with us. For some reason, Fate has decided that this young kit's purpose is to join us for this quest. He will not be receiving special treatment either. As long as he's with us, he's an adult." Beniko decrees before she gets up from sitting down.

"Now then, pair up with somebody and hunt for your meal. We've still got a long way to go." Beniko states and he watches as Aoto moves to Beniko's side. Slowly the other adults head off, leaving him with Jinji.

He gets up off the ground and waits for Jinji to head off. He doesn't look up at Jinji, but at the various bushes about the clearing that hang under gaps between the trees. He's never hunted before and really didn't know much about where to find it or how to kill it.

Jinji moves and he follows after, he's determined not to act like a kit, dependent upon the adults of the group.

Oni Camp

He felt like a coward as the huge brutes lock the others into a wooden cage that sports talisman scroll spells about it. The cage is but one among twenty that exist. The few large ones contain spiral deer and horse demons.

He had escape the Oni's notice by weaving a hasty illusion about himself. It had worked and thus, he lies cowering be the roots of an ancient tree. He also felt fascination concerning the way the Oni stand upon their back legs and their forelimbs possess hands like monkey demons.

His kind are capable shapeshifters and thus, he wondered why none of the others hadn't transformed into Oni themselves and try to bluff their way into the camp. The majority of the party does possess three tails and more, thus signally that they're mystical side being able to give them access to the power of form-changing. We're cunning and adaptive. Unlike so many others, we're gifted with mystical abilities that other races take years to train in. So why not use them?

His fear pushed aside as he feels the need to know what powers Oni have that allow them to be immune to the powers of his race. After all, if the adults didn't use such gifts, then it must mean that they were a waste of time since the Oni must have ways to counter them.

Night has fallen and finally one of the Oni leave the camp to make water. He follows after, keeping low to the ground. Only when he's sure that the Oni is distracted, he begins to uses different sense illusions to see how the Oni counters them. For the illusion of touch, he made it seem as though the ground under it was unstable, for the illusion of hearing, he causes a whistling to happen from a tree behind the brute, for the illusion of scent, the smell of blood coming from the tree opposite of the one he's using for hearing, and for the illusion of sight, a huge demonic wasp to be hanging over the tree with the illusion of smell.

As he watches, the Oni snarls and covers his ears while standing up from the crouch to face the tree where he set the hearing illusion about it. He watches in puzzlement as the Oni begins to punch and then kick the tree while snarling something in its native language. After a few minutes, he cancels the hearing illusion and opts to give the wasp buzzing wings.

The Oni quickly snaps his head and looks up over that tree, towards the wasp. The Oni's eyes seem to widen before the Oni test subject grips part of the tree it was beating upon to throw stuff at the wasp that he created. He cocks his head as he causes the wasp to move out of the path of that ripped bark.

With a twitch of his tail, he causes the illusion wasp to dive bomb the Oni, being sure to add scent and touch to the insect illusion while maintaining only the original smelling illusion. He makes sure to have the wasp move out of the Oni's attacks and then sting the brute using the stinger.

As the Oni screams and races away, it's likely yelling about how its been poisoned. He sits up and dismisses the various illusion that weren't meant to hide him. Minutes later, the Oni returns with three others.

With a soft grunt, he creates a swarm of normal size demonic wasps and have them move from that tree that had the blood illusion. He wants to see if any of this group knows how to counter illusions. The other three Oni grumble and laugh at his original test subject while waving their hands at the swarm of wasps hovering around that tree, wings buzzing.

He causes the wasps to land back upon the tree and the three new Oni head back to camp, still chuckling about what happened to the first Oni. That one glares about and murmurs things in a very threatening tone before stumping off after those three.

"This might be easier then I thought." He murmurs thoughtfully. He just needs to be sure that the Oni destroy their cages by creating something that causes so much chaos that the Oni don't realize that he's influencing their reactions.

"Needs to be something so startling that it throws them off and then to keep them guessing. Can't let them think too." He murmurs before chuckling, he remembers this certain tactic that he used when three of those bullying gangs decided to try and attack him, believing that with more numbers, he wouldn't be able to target them all. "But boy were they wrong..."

With a nod, he slinks off and waits until the majority of the camp is asleep before putting his plan into action. It'll also give him a chance to roam around their camp, studying it from every angle he can. He only wishes he could climb up a tree to get an aerial view of the camp.

As he's about to drift off to sleep while the Oni eat their burnt meal of meat, though he's puzzled about why they went to the trouble of burning it. Tarou's voice got so loud that one of the Oni growl and get up, walks over and shakes the cage while yelling at them. Once the Oni returns to the fire, the party begins to whisper among themselves.

He even watches as they try using Fox Fire upon the cage but the written spells keep the cage from begin effected by their efforts. He watches as the scrolls glow even without any of the party using Fox Fire. It takes him a few minutes to realize that they were now trying to use illusions upon their captors but the written spells would not allow the effects to go pass the bars.

Finally the adults just lay down and seem content with glaring at their captors. The party isn't the only ones, the horse demons were doing so as well. None of the Oni seem concerned by this and once more, he curls up to wait for the time when most of the Oni are asleep to go head with his plan.

The Oni only began to nod off when some jug of sake got passed around. His Oni test subject is the one forced to be on sentry duty, much to its anger. He becomes a little more alert and slowly begins to weave illusions upon the resting Oni in preparation for the big one. It's never too early to influence others using illusions.

He waits until the sentry begins to nod off before releasing the well tailored blanket of illlusions to act out upon the camp. The first thing that happens is the low burning fire to 'explode' into a merriment of colors that covers the area, the explosion is followed with a deafening bang which are then followed with as many loud noises that he's experienced in his short life, making sure that the source of these sounds aid in forcing Oni to back into those cages.

As he had hoped, he managed to direct most of the Oni to destroy both empty and filled cages. He even creates various kinds of large, unnatural insects. Once the cages were destroyed, he releases the entrapment part of the illusion, making it appear as though vines were growing out of the ground to wrap themselves about the Oni.

The freed captives weren't being influenced by the illusions but they seem a bit stunned by how the Oni are acting. They remain frozen until Tarou leaps at the nearest one facing him and bites down upon the Oni's throat. With that, the freed captives began their assault upon the Oni.

He hurries to cover their attacks with illusions, making it appear as some kind of ghost is attacking them using various weapons. Once the last Oni is dead does the demonic horses head off and the spiral deer, only captives not to attack the Oni, then follow their example. The illusions die with the last Oni and he sighs, loudly.

He is a little too busy watching Jinji to notice that a few of the other kitsune have altered their forms, taking the pose of an Oni but the features were off. The one with orange hair picks up the jug of sake and gulps some of it before one of the others do so. He's at a lost at how to react but it wasn't long before Jinji is before him and looking rather proud.

"Good job, kit. Come on, you must be starving. Their brains are yours to eat or in this case, take the first bites, as you are the reason why they're dead." Jinji says and he nods, he heard of that tradition even though he doesn't understand why it's in place.

None of the adults sport disapproving looks of any level or type. They all seem to look upon him with respect and he, oddly enough, felt kind of unworthy of such looks. I only did what I've been taught, using my strength when the enemy is at their weakest. He thinks humbly as Jinji's transforms and hefts one of the Oni's metal weapons to cut the skull of an Oni open so that he can get at the brains.

Oddly enough, by the fifth mouthful, he felt something tickle his brain but ignores it in order to eat what he can before Jinji motions for him move onto the next one. Once he's had a few bites of each brain do the others begin to eat them. He cleans himself a bit before he curls up close but not too close, to the low burning fire and falls asleep with a full belly and the knowledge that the others will protect him from whatever dangers that this world holds.

Council of Kyuubis

He struggles not to look around the magnificent chamber that houses the meetings and dealings of the whole city. All thirty-nine of the resident kitsune sporting nine tails are in attendance, their fur coloring changed upon them gaining their ninth tail, going either white or gold and sporting glowing eyes.

The adults laying about him smelt primarily of fear and it he oh so felt that he's about to lose control, wetting himself before these most powerful kitsune who reside in the underground island city. Guilt and shame racked his insides as he knew this hearing is about him. He also had a feeling that this wasn't about congratulating him for saving the lives of the group he trick through illusions just to get out of the city.

He has caused those of the party to break a bunch of rules simply because he had remained with the group instead of being escorted back. He knew that the adults were in hotter water then himself too, but had a feeling that whatever is to come of this meeting, it all depends upon him and he's at a lost as to why that was so.

And yet, he's the one in the center of the group with all the adult members of the party circling around him, making him the subtle focal point of the group even though Beniko is... was the leader. The weight presses down upon him and around him, making him wish that he could just wet himself and faint, but he just knew that giving into those reactions won't do anything but damn them all.

All of his lessons replay themselves in the silence within the chamber as the kyuubis settle themselves upon nice looking pillows. Their tails moving about shifting the pillows until the kyuubi is comfortable upon their nest of pillows. He briefly wonders what its like to have so much power at one's beck and call before reminding himself that he's got enjoy power under his command to allow him to kill that camp of Oni.

If this goes wrong, I doubt I'll ever worry about achieving my ninth tail let alone my second. He thinks sourly. His self-loathing is cut short as one of the vixen kyuubis remark, "So, this is the little genius that we've heard so much about... Rather runty looking, isn't he?"

"Oh, hush! We were the same when we were that age." That one's neighbor remarks. "It's sad that he'll be killed before achieving his true potential. I had hoped to see him having kits of his own, perhaps more then a few of them taking after him when it comes to maturing..."

A chill goes through him upon hearing that he's likely to be dead by the end of this session. He manages to keep himself from whimpering or generally acting out as another kit his age would. It won't do him any good anyway.

This adult thing is really hard... Particularly when I'm not really an adult. He thinks as a few more of the kyuubis make small talk until the one with a rainbow stone causes the stone to pour out white light, blinding him and then causing him to see spots of color that he tries really hard to blink away.

"Beniko, you acknowledge that you should have returned with the kit upon discovering him?" The ancient sounding golden kyuubi asks and though he doesn't see her nod, knows that she had done so. "You know the rules concerning kits, particularly during these troubled times and yet you continuously endangered the kit in question. What's worst is that you were captured by the Oni and left the kit unattended within hostile territory!"

He really wants to whimper at how tense the atmosphere is as this kyuubi continues to dig into Beniko. After finishing with Beniko, the kyuubi moves onto berate the other adult members of the party. This goes on for what feels like huge stretches of time until the kyuubi has rend each of the adults out for not just allowing him to continue in their company but other things they've done in the past.

Most of the adults ringed about him are shaking, a few had tried to pipe up to defend themselves, only to get cut off within seconds of making a sound. Many of the kyuubis send stern looks down at the speaker for a few minutes before letting up.

He wondered if he should be relieved that he doesn't have much history to speak of or resentful that he hadn't been subject to the belittling that happened to the others. He did wonder just what will happen when this kyuubi begins upon him. He couldn't get a good sniff of anyone beyond the scents of all those kitsune about him so he doesn't know what emotions the kyuubis are experiencing.

"And now, we attend to the source of the problem." The speaker of the kyuubi says. "The kit who thinks he's an adult."

He frowns and glances down at the rainbow stone. "Because of you, all of the kitsune who allowed you to tag along will likely have their tails bitten off and sent off in exile if you, yourself can not prove that you are capable to shouldering an adult's burden." The kyuubi states.

He looks up and cocks his head questioningly up at the lead kyuubi, kind of curious as to what that means. Unless it means that I have to call forth Fox Fire... That's the only way that I know of as to how to prove that I'm an adult since I certainly don't have the size of one, at least not yet...

"Perhaps it would be kinder to kill him now instead of sending him to the Maze of Trials." One of the previously silent kyuubis muse but the speaker doesn't reply. The speaker simply glances at each of the kyuubi behind him until one finally gets up off the nest of pillows, bounding down from the high balcony ledge.

He's suddenly very much aware of how small he is compared to every adult he's met in his short life. The white kyuubi stands a full two heads over Beniko, who's a four tail kitsune and much longer in the body compared to her as well. His ears flatten fully against his head for the first time since the kyuubis began to appear upon that balcony ledge.

Instead of picking him up with his jaws, the kyuubi waits for him to get up onto his shaky paws before turning to lead him some place. He follows after, privately wondering just where and what kind of maze he's expected to run. The paths the kyuubi leads him through seem to be rather old and not used as much as the other hallways of the underground city.

He finds that his voice to be rather faulty when he manages to gather up enough courage to speak only to find himself unable to. He so wants to know more about this maze but it seems that he won't be able to until he is placed upon the entrance.

"You're made of some stern stuff, kitling. Your predecessors have usually acted their ages, wetting themselves and whimpering piteously..." The kyuubi tells him and his head perks up. "They had used illusions to do the same as you, but they never achieved their skills as early as you, though. Fate seems to have some kind of grand designs for you, kitling. Trouble brews in the southern lands, more and more of southern demons are pressing their boarders northward, into regions typically home to those preferring to live in a basic fashion."

His ears perk up somewhere in the telling. He frowns as he wonders why the kyuubi is telling him. It's not as though he's more powerful then a single kyuubi, let alone a council of them.

"And here we arrive at the beginning of the maze." The kyuubi says before a stone door. As he tries to make out the door, he watches in surprise as one of the kyuubi's forepaws alter to mimic a monkey's hand or an Oni's hand.

Then, suddenly, the door creaks and the kyuubi pushes upon the door and it swings inward. He sneezes at the scent of stale air. The kyuubi chuckles as the golden fur kitsune moves into the room.

He follows and is stunned to find that it's only a room, granted there are strange designs upon the walls, floor, and ceiling, but it doesn't appear to lead into a maze. As he walks over to the nearest wall to get a better look at the marks, the room brightens even more. He glances over to find one of the kyuubi's tail tips aflame with Fox Fire.

It's the second time he has seen the mystical flames that is unique to his race and he is fascinated by how it only gives off light without a scent of smoke or seems to burn unless the creator wishes it to burn. It's then that he notices the stone chest that the kyuubi is going through.

Within minutes, the kyuubi has a bundle of herbs in his paws and he watches in bewilderment as the kyuubi walks to the center of the room upon only his back legs since the kyuubi's front limbs seem to be occupied. He notices how at times, a tail or two would drop down to help steady the powerful kitsune.

The bundle of herbs drops down at the center spot and as he watches, the golden furred kitsune summons Fox Fire to start an actual fire. As the herbs catch fire, a strange scent fills the air. It's kind of... relaxing, causing him to feel rather light headed. He shakes his head, trying to dismiss the feeling and while he's doing so, he hears more then sees the kyuubi leave and the stone door closing behind the adult kitsune.

He turns and walks towards the bundle of herbs with the intent to douse the fire but he collapses not even close to the aflamed bundle of herbs. As he stares at the spot, he swears the smoke seems to have creatures dancing within it. He blinks his eyes as the light headed feeling makes it hard for him to know what's real and what isn't.

By the time his head clears, he finds himself in a kind of familiar place and glancing behind him, he finds a landscape that is like the forest he had traveled through with those adults. He knows that it's a part of him that's 'tamed', he couldn't think of a better word to use to describe that power as he hasn't really mastered it. It'll be centuries before I can make that claim.

He glances away from the illusionary landscape to face the darkness once more. He walks through the blackness, away from the safe part of himself. Time is meaningless as he wanders about this place, looking for something he needs confront.

He doesn't know when he spotted it, but he saw a tiny blue light at some point before him and he alters to direction to head towards it. The light slowly grew bigger after what feels like a million steps and it took a few more million before he finally stands before a cyclone of blue fire. The cyclone remains in place with small flares sometimes crackling off from the funnel of cycling baby blue fire.

He doesn't know how long he was memorized by the flames of baby blue but he snaps out of it when the cyclone suddenly roars and something creaks. He takes a few steps backward, only to watch as the cyclone seems to move towards him. With wide eyes, he turns and runs. He can hear the cyclone of Fox Fire slowly but surely follow after him.

He keeps his pace to a ground eating lop like the group had taught him. The cyclone continues to roar, it becoming louder and he can feel the sound rattle his bones, but he refuses to speed up from his set pace. He also refused to look back, he didn't know why it was a bad idea to look back but he trusted that knowing.

He doesn't know how long he lopped before the cyclone but he does know that he tripped over something. He whines at the sight of a skull with a back paw stuck in its eye socket but does since the roar of the cyclone is closer. He reaches down at the skull to take it off but pauses as an odd sense of rightness seems to hit him with his mouth about it.

Fright demanded he pulls the skull off but instinct tells him to leave it. Feeling indecisive, he glances back and finds the cyclone within five feet of him and closing in. He pulls his head from the skull and lets out a mournful yowl as the cyclone engulfs him.

As he burns within the heart of it, he finds himself numb to the feel of his body and yet, he can feel his foot still in that skull. It feels as though that skull is anchoring him within the cyclone. Of all of his senses, his sight is totally disabled while the others are merely dull. He moves to curl his body and once that's done, he tries his hardest to curl around the skull while wishing the fire of the cyclone would stop harming him.

As he feels the coolness of the skull upon him, he concentrates upon the coolness of it. Slowly, the heat around him seems to fade and that coldness begins to engulf him. Suddenly, he's thrown out of the cyclone and he lands, only nothing is upon his one back paw. He also finds that he's regained his senses.

He looks at the Fox Fire cyclone for a few seconds before getting to his paws. He walks up to it, this time, he knows that it won't burn him. It takes him a few minutes but the cyclone breaks apart and becomes nine fire balls. With a thought, they shrink and he has them dance around him.

He begins to laugh as he turns about in place while the nine balls of Fox Fire simply move up and down while rotating counterclockwise as he circle clockwise. Then he catches sight of his rear end and his control over the Fox Fire almost slips. He is bewildered at the sight of two tails coming out of his behind.

His fur color hasn't taken that of an adult's but he does sport twin tails. With a shake of his head, he thinks about the forest that his illusionary skills has built and suddenly he's in that forest and finds his Fox Fire to be burning upon this pile of logs.

He feels something poking his side and within seconds, the forest vanishes in a blink of an eye. His eye sight is rather blurry but he turns his head to look at the kyuubi that had guided him to this room.

He twitches both of his tails as his ears flicker about. The kyuubi stops nudging his nose into his left side.

With a yawn, he moves to stand upon his paws. The kyuubi is already walking out of the chamber and he follows after upon shaking his head to get rid of the sleepiness that the herbs had installed within him. He finds himself rather hungry and thirsty after what happened in that stone crafted room.

Everyone seems to rise up to their paws as he enters into the council room. The kyuubis upon the balcony ledge murmur among themselves while the adults he had traveled with and rescued are rather stunned and very much disbelieving that he's standing before them. He only pauses for a few seconds before deciding to return to the center of the ring of adults possessing tails less then nine.

"How do you feel?" Beniko asks him and he answers truthfully, "Hungry."

"That's typical." Jinji murmurs while the others snort softly. A few move to allow him to take his place once more and with it, he sits down instead of lies down.

Minutes later, the room is engulf in white light and the murmurs stop cold. "So, you return to us sporting a new tail. Let's see if you can show us what we sent you to master." The speaker states.

It takes a few seconds but he causes Fox Fire to cover all of him. The speaker nods and he dismisses it, it'll be a while before he knows how to create it in the air around him without it touching him but he's got time now to do so.

"Bring in the boy's parents. This young kitsune needs a proper name and it seems he's long pass due for one." The speaker says and Beniko gets up.

He turns and watches as Beniko vanishes out of the room. Minutes later, Beniko brings in his parents. The yellow color of his father's fur and crimson blood fur of his mother causes him to smile, especially when their scent reaches his nose. They gasp slightly at the sight of him and his father's six tails intertwine with his mother's four.

As his parents stop just outside of the circle of kitsune, the speaker of the kyuubi says, "Do either of you know where this young kitsune came from?"

"We do, great one." His parents say in unison.

"Tell us where you know him from." The speaker says and it's then that it dawns on him that this was how the naming ceremony goes.

"I know of him as I carried him here." His mother says and his father then responds, "I know of him as I witnessed her carrying him here."

"Then, as you have carried him here, I proclaim you his mother." The speaker decrees while looking at his mother and then the speaker turn to his father. "As you witness her from carrying him and did not prevent her from doing so, I name you his father."

"As you wish it, great one, so we shall be." His parents reply.

"As you are his parents, give us his name so that he can be given membership to this city." The speaker says.

His parents pause for a few seconds before his mother speaks, "His name, oh great one, is Naruto, son of Minato and Kushina."

"Naruto, son of Minato and Kushina, do you accept membership to this city?" The speaker asks.

"I do, great one." He manages to says.

"Then in the name of this council and with the authority that the city gives me, I welcome you, Naruto, into our city." The speaker says. "May your fires burn brightly."

He just bows and as the speaker moves from the stone, his parents and the party of kitsunes move forward to greet him and to congratulate him upon gaining his second tail, especially since he's not even two hundred years old.

I have a name... And they won't be punished for taking me along! I'm just so... happy! He thinks as tears well up as everything finally catches up with him. He begins to apologize for causing this mess and other things, like causing his parents to worry about him and promising to try and stay out of trouble.

In time, his mother picks him up as his stomach makes itself known that its empty and needs to be filled. The other kitsunes head off while his father merely licks his mother's neck as they move for the exit. He doesn't care about being carried, his paws hurt from all the walking he's done since he arrived in the city and wonders if this will be the last time he'll be carried by the scruff of his neck like a kit.

The End

The Founding of the Country of Qarrezel

I don't own Harry Potter!

August 1, 1991

He clutches his three notebooks filled with pages of information and sketches of his made up country as he waits for the Port Key the goblins sent to activate. It had only been a day since Hagrid dropped him off at his aunt and uncle's place, he's pretty much alone in the house and likely will be for a few days before they make it back.

He's just happy that costume that he had tricked Dudley into wanting to go as a knight one Halloween with him dressed up as his squire. All it took was that picture of a knight and his squire. So glad that one of those books people keep sending Dudley had to do with history. He thinks before it feels something gripping his stomach and dragging him through this blur of scenes until he arrives in a stone room.

Oddly enough, his reflects manage to kick in before he dropped to the floor. He blinks his eyes a few times before rubbing his eyes by the bridge of his nose. Standing up a bit straighter, he glances towards a goblin.

"Mr Potter hear to see Bonedice." He says to the goblin. "This way, Mr Potter." The goblin says before the goblin gestures to follow him.

The door at the end of the hall opens after his guide knocks upon it. "Thank you for your assistance." He says to his guide before entering to meet with his account manager.

The door closes behind him and he gets his first sight of the goblin who likely worked with his parents. He greets the goblin before he sits down upon a chair before the rather human size desk that the goblin is sitting behind. He knows that the dress code are robes but, well, if what he wants his country to finally come into being, he had to get them to deal with him without whatever expectations they have of the humans they usually do business with.

"Who is said to be my guardian within England's Wizarding society? My guide yesterday had not told me and I doubt that my aunt holds any kind of legal position within their society." He says upon putting his various notebooks down upon the desk after studying Bonedice.

"As your parents' wills were sealed, your godmother isn't in any state to take you in, and your godfather imprisoned, I believe the headmaster of Hogwarts has stepped in to be your guardian." Bonedice states and he frowns upon hearing that.

"I find it rather, odd that this man has taken such an interest in my life. Isn't this... Albus Dumbledore rather busy with his various duties and responsibilities to act as my legal guardian?" He asks. "I find myself seeing a very large conflict of interest when a headmaster of my future school and primary legal maker of this society considers himself my legal parent when I've never met with or interacted with this man since he placed me with my mother's sister." He muses after a few seconds of silence.

"The man has a lot of political power within England and Scotland." Bonedice states in a manner of fact tone. "There isn't much you can do to get out of his thumb."

"Actually, I find myself disagreeing with that. You see, for a number of years, I have considered myself leader of my own country." He says and he spreads the note book before selecting one. He pulls out an official document confirming the existence of his made up country, one that a certain Minister commissioned that sports the date of formation.

"I believe that this document confirms the existence of my country." He then takes out stapled document that he had sent the previous evening and had gotten it back within half an hour. He waits until the goblin finishes looking at the previous one before handing this much more important document. "This is also grants me diplomatic immunity within the UK's Wizarding society. I do believe that as the Holy Emperor of Qarrezel, I do not need a legal representative as I am my legal representative."

Bonedice grins in a very savage way. "I take it you want your parents' will unsealed, sire?" The goblin asks and he returns the grin with a nod. "Wait here, I'll have someone filed these while I retrieve the will."

"Before you go, I wish to know, had the headmaster signed as witnessed with the will? And what kind of punishments can you bring him up on for betraying such a document?" He asks Bonedice. Well, so far so good. I had expected Bonedice to put up a token fight in believing my claims... Which means that the goblins don't like the headmaster very much.

"Sadly, because of his positions, there isn't much we can do if the man is an oath-breaker. But we can get any gold he withdrew from your vaults back. I believe I'll have the locks upon all of your vaults changed, though that might take a day or two to complete." Bonedice informs him and he sighs, he had thought something like that would allow the man to get off.

"I also believe an Inheritance ritual would be beneficial. I will need all the wealth I have if I wish to begin building my empire." He muses.

Bonedice tells him how much such a ritual costs and he merely told the goblin to arrange to have the amount taken out of his trust fund. With that, the goblin leaves him alone and after a few minutes, he reaches for another document. The various sheets are rough drafts that he had come up with over the years for making alliances with other countries or a race of creature. Each of the treaties has a name upon the top and jot notes of what kind of agreements he would want with each.

He takes them and folds them before pocketing them as he doubts that he'll need them, for now at least. He picks up one of the older notebooks and flips to the back of the cover and studies the coat of arms that he created for his country, Qarrezel. It consists of a eagle sitting upon a sword's hilt as it's lodged in the ground with vines twining up about the blade to the hilt. On either side of this sword is a wolf on the left and a lynx on the right. A plaque rests at the bottom with the country's name upon it.

I wonder if there is such a creature as a lion-drake in any of the magical societies of the world...

August 5, 1991

"What's going on in here?" His uncle bellows and he glances towards the door leading to the living room. "Where is that FREAK?" Vernon growls as the man thunders up the stairs.

"Oh great one, it seems your relatives have returned." Kimi, one of an army of house elves that he inherited. The majority of them are getting his properties ready for him to tour, the tour's purpose is for him to pick which estate he'll be moving to and live upon while they figure out how to move the properties so that they are right next to each other.

"Boy! Where are you?" His uncle thunders just as the door of the kitchen opens to reveal his cousin Dudley. His cousin gulps at him and then pales at the sight of Kimi.

"He's in the kitchen!" His cousin squeaks out, his cousin's hands going straight to his rump while backing out of the kitchen. He hears the other two house elves that decided to attend him arrive just as his cousin's bulky front is blocked by the kitchen door.

"How goes the examination of the wards?" He asks the three house elves and they share a look before his uncle arrives through the door. He ignores the man, knowing that the elves won't allow any of his relatives to harm him and will use whatever force they have to do so.

"Carpie thinks that sooner wes get you, oh great holy one, out of this place, the better!" Carpie's exclamation seems to be followed by Boo nodding in agreement. Vernon suddenly goes very pale and shuts up upon noticing the very non-normal beings attending him.

"Boo be happy when wes away from weird block. Boo never thought Boo would be seeing so many duplicates of same houses!" The younger house elf says and he winces at the haunting look upon Boo's face. "Boo shall have nightterrors for long into future. So... plain. So... boring..." Boo adds under his breath while rocking slightly upon his feet.

"What the hell are those things? And how dare you bring them into my home, boy!" Vernon bellows and he glances over at the adult with a raised eyebrow as his train of thought of how to comfort Boo is cut off and he looses it.

"Their house elves, Vernon. They're magical servants who attend to the duties you typically assign to me. As to why they're here, well, these three are here to attend to me until my inherited properties are ready for occupation." He explains and adds, "I currently can call upon a few over a hundred of them to do anything I wish."

Then he remembers his previous train of thought and turns to Boo. "Once everyone is asleep, why don't you make this house and property suitable of housing someone of my standing? Of course, you'll need to make it reversible since when we leave, I don't want such things remaining. It might cause them to think themselves beyond their station." He says to the house elf and it shakes the young elf out of his thoughts.

"Oh no you don't! I don't care what you think your capable of, you little freak, but I will beat you senseless if you..." He watches as the three house elves bind, blast, and shrink his uncle.

His aunt screams in the living room but he ignores it. "If any of them gets within four feet of me, you can stuff them in the basement for a few hours or you can freeze so they can be used as statues." He says as he grows bore of dealing with these people. He had books to read, treaties to write up, and investment reports to review.

"Yes, great Emperor Harry sire!" The three chime in and he can only assume which of the two options they personally prefer. "Does wes got to return the man to normals right away?" Mimi asks and he shakes his head. He can only assume how the three beam happily at that.

I hope Hedwig is safe. How was I to know that the most advance gadgets of combining muggle tech with magic would be in the US? I wonder if she'll manage to bring over a catalog along with my order? Hopefully they'll shrink the lot or at least, have some way for her to bring my order home safely. He thinks as he returns to trying to puzzle out one of the many journals he inherited when he went through that magical ritual to see what other families he can claim.

September 1, 1991

He pulls his head phone from his ears after pressing stop upon his walkman when he hears his last name and then first name. He notices how quiet the hall becomes even before he begins to walk out of the herd of first year students. As he moves from the herd, whispers suddenly sprout among the four tables sporting various banners.

He's glad for his new glasses as the glass the lens are made out of had layers of enchantments to allow him to see perfectly in any kinds of light and to protection against various elements. He had not even known that kids were expected to return year after year to the eye doctor to get new proscriptions. He saw clearly the various emotions upon the various teachers' faces, particularly the slight frown upon Albus' face.

As he turns his back to the staff, he has the sorting hat in his hand and puts it on as soon as he's on the stool. 'So, you're the Holy Emperor of Qarrezel. Well, I know where to put you, don't I?' The hat says to him and then, out loud, "The Royal Suit!"

Within seconds, a single table appears with a throne like chair. He murmurs his thanks as he takes the hat off and once off the stool, he puts the hat there as he begins to walk over to his table with a grin. It wasn't long before he has his headphone on and presses play upon his walkman.

The robe's emblem becomes a crown before the Hogwarts' crest of four animals. His eyes become half closed as he ignores them, patiently waiting for his supper to appear. He's got his memory pendent all set up in case anyone tries anything with him or to him.

With the discovery of a special staff, he has finally found a way to collect all of his properties and have them all laid out so they're next to each other. He now owns over thirty farm of varying size all ready to be cleaned up and various magical species of vermin to capture and sell for money before he decides to start up farming, ranching or for him to begin building the capital city of his country, Qarrezel.

September 20, 1991

"Why don't you attend classes any more?" A ginger haired first year student growls upon planting his hands upon the table top. He merely raises an eyebrow at the Gryffindor.

"How is this your problem? I'm a visiting royal and as such, I do not belong to any of the four houses. Just because Albus refuses to accept that doesn't excuse you and the rest of your house from accepting it." He replies as he continues to read the summary of various experiments that his new citizens and employees are undertaking on his behalf.

Hmm, looks like I'll have to have the elves raid the UK's ministry for their old research in this direction. Perhaps I should just tell them to locate and duplicate all written records, books, and what not while they are there. He muses while gently tapping the end of his pencil upon the desk top. Might be a good idea to hit Hogwarts too. Summer would be ideal time.

"Don't call the headmaster by his first name! And don't disrespect him!" The ginger haired eleven year old explodes.

He frowns and glances over at the angry student. "Hm, you must be slow, but that's fairly common considering how inbred your society is. After all, there are things one can't correct with magic." He states while privately adding, Like how I possess a double Y gene. Must have gotten that from my dad. I wonder how much some of those US researchers would pay if I provide them with more samples of 'Pureblood' blood?

Damn glad that I've performed those rituals they suggested to correct it. Perhaps I should try and preform that deer one to increase my agility? He muses as he returns his gaze to the report in his hand.

"What did you say? Are you insulting me?" The ginger haired student snarls and appears to be in the process of grabbing for him when the librarian appears and shushes the ginger eleven year old.

"This school should offer biology since it would likely help prevent such things as marrying your cousin from occurring, especially when since it describes what kind of disorders arise from such pairings." He remarks in a thoughtful manner. "Although, your culture seems to idealize the Greeks and Romans cultures, so perhaps you lot see a wife only when you need an heir and prefer boys and beasts for your pleasure? It could very well explain certain animalistic features I've come to note within the vast population of students and teachers."

With a bellow, the ginger hair child launches himself at him but he merely touches a paper featuring a rune and a shield shimmers between them. The librarian takes the ginger haired lad by the ear upon noticing the books flying off the table and screeches, "Out! Out of my library you... you... hooligan! Out!"

The boy tries to protest but they fall upon deaf ears. His hand had left the rune when the librarian appeared and grabbed the other's ear. He honestly doesn't see the point of attending classes when the US have easy to read books that outline ways for beginners can practice each of the subjects that Hogwarts sports for first years and subjects that only admit third year and up. He bought a rather wide selection of such books that range not just from common magical and non-magical subjects but to the obscure like rituals.

I wonder if I shouldn't try for a transfer? Nay, I'll just look into hiring tutors come summer and only if none of my current employees lack the ability to teach. He decides before returning to reading the report, trying to find the point where he stop at.

Staff Meeting

"He's not even attending his detentions, Albus! He don't care that he's losing house point and when pressed about why he won't attend, he claims it's because he's busy managing his country!" Professor McGonagall answers upon the headmaster asking about how things are going with the students.

None of those present need to know who 'he' is and a few of the other staff member could only privately sigh knowing that this was going to turn into another one of those rants concerning a certain boy Emperor. "He should have his wand snapped and expelled!" A certain potions professor growls.

I wonder if anyone has noted that despite Albus' declaration of him belonging to the Gryffindor house that they haven't lost any points when anyone tries to take points from Mr Potter... The magics of Hogwarts know what's what even if the majority of us refuse to admit it. Filius Flitwick thinks to himself.

Even during the few classes he attended it was clear that he's farther along then the rest of his year. He likely hired someone before school started. Professor Flitwick thinks to himself. The tiny teacher already had a good idea about who'll be the top student in first year and while Hermione Granger would be close, he knew it would be Emperor Harry the first.

October 31, 1991

Two Hours Before Dawn

It had taken hours of standing before a non-talking mirror to get his ears just right as well as making sure that the lynx fur cream he completed last week was coming in as the recipe had said it would. With that done, he moves onto putting in some potion drops to temporary grant him perfect vision. Taking off his glasses, he then reaches for a pair of fake fangs and then a lynx mask. With the mask firmly in place, especially the top cloth part featuring the ears, he moves to sit by the bed.

Once sitting down, he goes on to put on those leg extensions, gets up to put on the bob tail, and upon having his paw gloves, he then awkwardly enter into this space between four wooden posts. He pauses to put the gloves on before walking into the space of the five by five square. He flinches as black cloth seemingly explodes from each of the four rune covered poles.

Within two seconds of the cloth walls appearance, his body tingles as certain parts of his body begin to have magic editing them to make such fake additions a seemingly natural part of him. As the tingling sensation vanishes, the cloth walls vanish as quickly as they appeared.

A might dazed, he steps out from the square the four poles create and heads out of his room. By the time he's in the living room area, he hears chiming and he picks up his pace to answer the door. Upon opening it, he finds a small party of students ranging from at first year through to seventh year waiting.

He greet them, "Welcome to the Royal Suits. I hope you enjoy this meal that we're about to share together."

Once Percy Weasley has hold of the door, he leads the group to the dinning hall that his two stationed house elves have set up. Each person within the group is dressed up as an animal, mystical or mundane. The fore mention Weasley prefect is dressed as a stag while the Weasley twins are dressed as a raccon and a ferret. Their younger brother, Ron, did not receive an invite as the boy has been trying to forcefully butt his nose into his business.

The majority of those from the seventh year were muggleborn and he's already offered them employment right out of Hogwarts. The work will be primary handling and breeding magical creatures for a year and once that year is up, he'll allow them to seek employment elsewhere, continue working with magical creatures, or moving onto some other project of his. His plans for the creature breeding is to see if he can't magically create a various fictional magical species like a tiny dragon that could be sold as a pet or a huge turtle that one can build a small house upon its shell.

As they arrive at the dinning hall, strings of lights flicker on to reveal their breakfast. Most of the group gasps at how the table is set and the various food statues that his house elves back at his properties had worked to supply this feast here and the one back there for his employees. Tonight this hall will be cleared, the large table will be taken away and replaced with smaller tables that will line the opposite walls while a small sitting area will be at the far back. The large space will become the dance floor and music will be pumped from a record stereo through to various mounted speakers.

"Was this cooked here at Hogwarts?" One of sixth year girls asks and he shakes his head. "I have all this cooked at my estate by my house elves. I did not want to impose upon the school any more then I have to in regards to my hosting invitation only events." He explains as soft music begins to play.

As they take their places at the table, they all stood. They wait for him to address them. "My thanks to you for joining me upon this morning to honor my parents and to celebrate this holiday. I know it will be hard for you all when dawn arrives and the fasting begins so I will try and keep this short." He says.

"Over ten years ago, my parents raised their wands to defend their home and myself from a deadly threat. This murderer also tried to claim my own life that night and it is only through my mother's death that I survived, for what can a babe of one could do to defend themselves from this murderous brute of a Dark Lord? This No-Name?" He pauses.

"Whatever magic my mother focused that night, it proved to be powerful enough turn the man's magic against himself, thus saving my life." He says. "So, to wrap things up, to Lily Potter!" He says, raising a mug of hot chocolate.

"To Lily Potter!" His guest chime and they then sit down to begin the feast. He felt he did a rather good job with his toast as it is his first one.

Evening

Once again, he answers the door. He's not sure how many of them had fasted during the day but it didn't matter much if they didn't as he did. The living room had been transformed from what it had been this morning, taking the appearance of a forest. It was all just an illusion but it didn't dampen their reactions, as few of them know the tale tail signs of an illusion.

His guest murmur softly among themselves as they enter into the dinning hall. The walls and ceilings sport illusions that make it seem as though they're outside while the floor takes a stone like appearance, complete with some plant life. The hall is meant to look as though they were upon a top of a mountain.

A gentle wind ruffles through his fur while the disguised speakers pipe in some dance music into the room. He notices a few of the muggleborns' eyes widen as they seem to identify the song. He turns to the group and simply says, "Enjoy the food, the drink, and the music."

With that, the group of regular students move off to either side of the hall for the food tables while a few pairs move to dance upon the floor as he walks over to the minor throne upon his own visitation to one of the tables. He's had plenty of practice moving, eating, and drink in his current magically transfigured costume since he placed the order for that kind of automatic transfiguration ritual. The magic will be reversed itself in either twenty-four hours or by entering into the ritual square after two hours.

"Vain. Guilt. Good work." He says as he finishes the food off his plate. The two house elves appear at their names being called. They bow while murmuring their thanks before vanishing to manage the stereo and likely refilling empty platters upon the food tables.

He gets up and searches for one of the various girls that are sitting alone. As the evening progresses, he dances with the majority of the girls in attendance, glad to have the grace of a lynx this evening. During pauses, he would fill up another plate and another cup before returning to his throne to eat and drink what he gathered.

At ten o'clock does the party end and a large pile of gift bags appear with the guest's names upon them. Within each is sports one of four easy instruction book for four different subject and they are potions, runes, transfiguration, and illusions. Each bag also contains a chocolate figurine of either a cat, bat, skull, or broom stick. There are also small bags of candy corn, gum eyeballs, and gummy fangs. The final gift within the gift bag is a long sleeve shirt sporting their house crest and colors with an ever fit enchantment upon them.

Guilt then leads the guests out of the dinning hall and once out, Vain cancels the illusionary enchantment within the dinning hall. He gets up from his throne and stretches a bit before glancing about the hall.

"All of your majesties guests have exited out of the suit." Guilt says upon popping back into the dinning hall. He nods thoughtfully.

"This was a pretty good party. Sure, it's my first but it seemed that everyone enjoyed themselves." He muses and the two house elves agree.

Maybe hosting a Christmas party won't be that bad of an idea. Though I should have one where I celebrate it with only my employees/slash citizens and another for invited guests. He muses as he begins to think about how to go about planning both as he practices with his magic by aiding the house elves in cleaning up the hall.

Fred Weasley

"I got a bat." He says as they compare what they got within their gift bags as they head for their common rooms. A few of the others seem to be doing the same as he holds up the palm sized chocolate bat while waiting for his twin brother to pull out his own chocolate figurine.

"Seems to be a skull." George says and does display the palm size chocolate skull. "Wicked!" They chime in.

"Check out the shirt! Now this I wouldn't mind wearing to class!" A fifth year wizard exclaims and he turns to see a mostly red shirt being held up. Faded gold displays the Gryffindor lion on the left side while about the right breast area sports their crest in brighter yellow.

Putting the chocolate bat in a box back into the bag, he then pulls out his own shirt and finds if rather soft to the touch. It appears pretty much the same as the one the fifth year held up. "An Easy and Safe Guide to Transfiguration." A third year witch murmurs.

He had noted a book within the bag but hadn't thought much about it. He shoulders the shirt and takes out his own book. "Runes Made Easy." He reads out loud while George reads out, "Guide to Making Brewing Safe and Easy."

"A Field Guide to the Art of Illusions." Another pipes in. It soon became obvious that they each received one of the four books. He found nice big words and pictures within the book, so much easier to read then the kind of yellow paper and tiny print their text book sport.

"It must of cost him a bit to purchase all of these book just for these gift bags." A wizard muses while a witch snorts softly while countering, "What about these shirts? They're pretty top of the quality stuff! They were made in France and have an ever fit charm on them! That's nothing to sneeze at, you know."

"I wonder where he got the candy and the chocolate from though. I mean, candy corn? Gummy fangs?" George wonders and the muggleborns stifle a chuckle but it dies as they find their head of house waiting for them before the entrance to their common room.

We did put those slips telling her about the party on her desk, so what's got her knickers in a bunch? He wonders as the elderly witch seems to build herself up in order for a long lecture.

December 20, 1991

Harry Potter

He studies the headmaster's office. It's not the first time he's been called here, the first time had been after Halloween when the man wanted to speak with him concerning his party. It didn't end the way the man had wanted since he reminded the man that within his suit, his word was law, not the headmaster's and if he decides to host any kind of parties within it, he will. He had pointed out that he could have commandeered the kitchens of Hogwarts to cooking for said party but hadn't and the man had better remember about how little power he, Albus Dumbledore, had in his, Holy Emperor Harry Potter, affairs or life.

He then began discussing the fact that if the man keeps trying to overturn the treaty that Minister Fudge had signed that he will withdraw and declare war upon them. He went on to explain the other treaties he had with various magical races like werewolves, centaurs, and, of course, goblins. He implied that he already have on staff hired mercenaries, he managed to keep from meeting the man's eyes by regarding the man's pet phoenix.

He smiles as he recalls the sour look upon the man's face. Most of the portraits seem rather dismayed concerning how the Wizarding Society is 'indulging' his delusion. He merely ignored them after remarking about how could it be a delusion if the sorting hat granted him the Royal Suit.

A soft chirp causes him to glance over at Fawkes. He smiles slightly at the bird and then checks his wrist watch. "Huh, five minutes. I here by enact the five minute rule." He says as he gets up, he ignores the portraits as he heads out of the office as it was getting close to the time where his Port Key will activate, taking him to his current place of residence.

As his Port Key is about to activate as he's outside, the headmaster hollers at him but the item activates. He smiles as he finds himself standing in his underground throne room that's under the manor that he's living within. He unzips his jacket and takes off his boots, they vanish, likely being sent to the closet.

As he sits down upon the throne, all of his house elves appear within the room and bow down before him while saying, "Welcome home, Holy Emperor Harry the First!" He flushes slightly at the sight but allows himself to sink slightly into his throne.

"Greetings citizens of Qarrezel. I have returned to spend my winter break here." He says and the house elves murmur excitedly, though why, he didn't know since they knew that he was coming here.

"I take it that my employees have left to spend time with their families?" He asks and the house elves note in agreement. "How goes the preparations for the two holiday celebrations?"

The house elves huddle into some groups and then from each group a single house elf. They approach the throne, they do a quick game to decide who's report first, and then one by one, the house elves take turns explaining their parts in the over all preparations.

The two parties will be held in two different estates. The invitation party will be held on the twenty-third while the citizen/employee party will be held on the twenty-fourth. As the house elves will be attending that second party, he had hired a muggle catering company to cook the food, to be the servers, and to clean up.

He often leaves Hogwarts to visit London to go on buying trips in both the Wizarding world and the Muggle one. He's bought a bunch of new tapes to listen to upon his walkman as well as began looking for films as his employees had wanted something to watch outside of work as they not only worked within his currently tiny country but live there as well. It was rare that they leave his country and so it's only natural that he would look for ways to make their time within his tiny country enjoyable even though its doubtful that they would have found the same kind of employment in the UK or anywhere in Europe that houses the same sentiments as UK Wizarding World.

"Majesty... You sure you wants muggles to... cater the party on the twenty-four?" Corty asks him and he raises an eyebrow.

"I know that your race thrives upon work but, just for these few hours, I want you all to enjoy this holiday. You can work as much as you want before the catering company arrives and pick up where they left off after they leave, but while they're here, you are to relax and enjoy the party, ok? They won't be here for more then six to eight hours." He says.

"We got to wear those illusion things while they be here?" Corty asks and he nods. "It's best to be sure that they don't know your true nature. They believe that this is a kind of cosplay party." He says and the house elves frown at the unfamiliar word.

"Cosplay is kind of like a costume party only with a lot more acting and trying to keep to certain roles. At this point in time, all of you are not just citizens but my army and nobles as well." He says and the house elves all look rather stunned. "Hence why I hope you all have finished creating those suits of armor and wardrobes of noble cloths for some of you, I hope, will be wearing such to this party." He says.

"Carpie wants to be a knight!" "Mimi a lady!" "Boo a earl!" "But Vain wants to be an earl!"

He smiles slightly at the antics of the house elves, it seems that they're really getting into this, has he had hoped they would. He keeps an eye on all of them, prepared to step in if they begin to get into physical rows.

December 23, 1991

House elves stand about wearing heavy suits of armor that hid their faces. It seems that most of his guests believe that he hired goblin guards to be stationed throughout the manor and in particular by the doors. He had been careful about who he invited, using old reports to avoid sending invites to Death Eaters.

He even put upon the invites that any guests that show up with the invited will be subjected to a arm search to be sure that none of those who followed his parents' murderer would be allowed within his presences and if the one that brought one of the marked could be sent home if they protested such a search and the result that follows.

He had also made it a point not to invite the headmaster or any of the staff of Hogwarts. There are standing orders to keep the man from entering and to forcefully escort the man out as well.

From his position upon the silver and white gold throne sporting cushions filled with unicorn hair that parties of house elves collected while killing Acromantula(part of the treaty he has with the centaurs) for their venom and their silk. Iconic wolves lay about the bottom while two lynxs appear as arm rests. The back is an eagle with its wings spread.

The throne was just one of a few that his elves had crafted. It was one of eight thrones that they had created. He had liked each of them but had decided upon a primary throne that would remain in his true throne room. The other seven though, he decided to use during parties that won't be held in said throne room.

He notes the clump of students about one section of tables, the majority of them were the same ones he invited for his Halloween celebrations as well. It's not that surprising that they were skittish at being around so many 'important' people like the some of the department heads and the Minister of Magic. The dance floor before him have few dancers upon it as most of his guests seem to be rather busy speaking among themselves about business, he can only assume it's business.

With a glance, the guard stationed to his right comes a bit closer. "Could you ask Madam's Bone's niece if she cares for a dance with myself?" He pauses before adding in an exasperated tone. "Perhaps if I dance, that will finally encourage the rest to dance instead of discussing business."

Min the house elf nods sharply before heading off in that direction to the student part of the room. Susan Bones hadn't been a part of his Halloween celebrations, it wasn't because he hadn't invited her, it's because she and her Hufflepuff friends had declined. That's not to say that he hadn't had Hufflepuffs at his Halloween celebration, only none from the first and second years.

He hadn't tried to re-invite those that had declined since it was his belief that had their chance. After all, it had gotten around about what happened during the dance and a lot were envious concerning the gift bags. Those shirts had cause jealousy among the school but the real interest was in the four books as they have become in demand by the student body, particularly when the potion guide outlined what they were potentially doing wrong when preparing their ingredients and how they were putting them into the potion.

Susan Bones came in the company of her aunt and he figures that she's come to these parties before so she shouldn't be that self-conscious with so many 'powerful' people about. Hopefully, she'll not take this dance too personally either. I had danced with every girl during my Halloween party so I should be able to do the same here without too much trouble.

He notes how Susan jerks slightly upon Min passing along his request. He hopes that Min remembered to use an illusion to alter his voice to protect what race Min himself is. He watches as a few of the girls about Susan encourage the girl before she nods. As Min returns, Susan follows the house elf.

As Susan bows, he nods before raising from his throne. He holds out a hand upon standing to the first year Hufflepuff. Susan blushes as she takes his hand, its likely due to the fact that he's using that eye correction potion that he had used for Halloween so he doesn't need glasses this night.

Murmurs quiet down or stop altogether, allowing the music of piping in to be heard so clearly. A few seconds upon seeing him dance causes a few more to find partners and do the same. "If you don't mind my asking, why did you decline my Halloween celebration? I don't recall doing anything that offended the first or second years so."

"You refuse to attend classes. You don't seem to care about losing Gryffindor points." Susan answers.

"Just because teachers say they're taking points because of me, doesn't mean the points are taken. I know as the Ravenclaws pointed me to check the library points book to see if the magic of the castle is taking the points away. The magic hasn't done so as the hat itself had declared me beyond such so I can't be used to increase or decrease House Points. It's why none of those that attended my dance lost points when caught on their way to their common rooms." He explains and Susan looks stunned for a second, "Oh!"

"Anyway, the point system is a joke after you read it. The potion instructor takes points away for the silliest things and rewards his house for the silliest things." He continues on. "You'll also find that Dumbledore signs off the taking and the giving of points, so the headmaster apparently approves of the man's underhanded ways of ensuring his house wins the house cup. But I know you likely will need to read it for yourself so check the shelf marked school management."

"I will." Susan replies. "But I don't see Dumbledore allowing such things to happen." The first year Hufflepuff adds and he snorts softly but doesn't reply since the song ends.

"I hope you find another to dance with. It would be ashamed if this is the only dance you'll receive this evening." He says as a third year Ravenclaw witch hangs a few feet away, likely waiting for him to finish with Ms Bones.

They part with that and he offers his hand to the older student who takes it after bowing to him. "Have you and your fellows looked through that catalog and order form?" He asks after exchanging pleasantries.

"We have and have sent in our order while we were in Hogsmeade. You were correct in regards to our mail is being reviewed before it is sent to us." He nods, it's one of the reasons why he spent do much upon certain bird band sporting a wide array of enchantments to make it rather hard to sideline Hedwig.

"I take it you've found the Shrieking Shack to sport that tunnel as the Weasley twins had said it would?" He asks and the witch nods. "Their information in regards to much of Hogwarts have proven true."

They speak shop for a few seconds before they just chit chat about something less serious like comparing who's dressed in colors that match the decoration or how silly the Minister is with that toad like woman following him about, hanging on his every word.

And so it was that most could be found on the dance floor for the rest of the night. He dances with all of the female students of Hogwarts and manages to dance with a few of the older single witches as well. As midnight arrives does the party end and like before, he hands out gifts to his invited guests and their companions they brought.

The minister received a cloak made out of Acromantula silk. The department heads receive personalized quill and ink bottles. The other adults received scarfs made out of bicorn mane. The invited students received marble statues of their house mascots along with their name upon the base. While the guests of his guests received one of eight items and those eight items that all sport the Qarrezel coat of arms upon them, the first item is a set of glass mug, the second item is a pair of cotton gloves, the third item is a set of plates, the fourth item is a set of cutlery, the fifth, sixth, seventh, and eighth items is a gift of four small pictures during one of the four seasons.

December 24, 1991

He watches as the house elves dance about the dance floor while a few human couples dance among them. Being so much taller the the house elves, it made it easy to pick them out. The witches and wizards in his employment have either chose to dress in dress robes or in nice suits and dresses.

This party, he finds, is so much easier and doesn't feels any pressure concerning how to act. It helps that people were dancing without him needing to initiation it or that they need to stand so much on ceremony or for introductions as they all know each other. None of his employees were currently dating so no need for any gifts for their guests nor did the house elves want gifts, thus he just gave his employees a holiday bonus.

He just sits back and enjoys the sights of this dance. Hedwig is perched to his left and seems to be enjoying the party too. He's not sure how a order of bird feather painting kit that came with five feather paints. The kit is kind of automatic and the snowy owl had just stood at the center while the kit begins to do its job. He's not sure how the kit knew what Hedwig wanted done but he has to admit, that shade of blue did look good on Hedwig.

I wonder if it wasn't made specifically for birds to use? He muses, he didn't mind if it was since Hedwig has been such a trooper when it comes to being a delivery owl that she deserves something to pamper her.

I wonder what the coming New Year will hold for us? For Qarrezel. He wonders and becomes lost in his thoughts.

June 19, 1992

He glances around the living room of the Royal Suit, wondering if this might be the last time he'll see this place since he might not return. The so called safest place in the world not only had a troll get in during Halloween, but unicorns have been killed by something and Hagrid hatched a dragon. He's not sure how Neville and Hermione ended up in the Hospital wing or what has become the the so called Defense Against the Dark Arts professor has vanished as well.

Not only wasn't Hogwarts safe but it offers sub-par education. "I should sue." He muses since he had learnt anything at this school other then how the headmaster allows a bully to reign over the school to make him look like the good guy. The man kept something here in the school and it likely caused those two to get injured.

With a shake of his head, he finally leaves the suit, all of his belongings have already been taken back to Qarrezel. Depending on how this summer goes, he may or may not be pursuing conquest of Scotland. He knows that Albus hasn't stopped trying to legally challenge his country's existence, the man has only gone through other channels.

He knows that the Death Eaters are supporting Albus in this. His contacts within the bank hint that a lot of business is being done concerning money being transferred around. Not that it matters, I've already declared that since the Ministry allowed so many Death Eaters to get off that they're not terrorists but some kind of hidden branch of military. The goblins, werewolves, and centaurs are willing to support that claim.

As he walks down the hall, he spies a group of students from the Slytherin House coming but before a light of theirs could touch him, he's teleporting out of Hogwarts and into his command center of his estate. "Have wands been issued?" He asks and Kimi nods.

"Then proceed to not just capture but advance. Be ready with those ward stone. They want a war, they got a war." He says as his chair comes out of the floor, he sits upon it.

Illusionary windows give details of the advancing forces but between they are no match for against his house elves welding not just wands but wearing armor with various types of shielding runes against physical, magical, potions, and mental aspects of warfare. The Death Eaters fell easily but the hired wands took a few extra minutes.

The attack is over in under an hour and victory came about simply because the house elves acted as a unit then individuals. "Claim a full three kilometers around and then sent them to raid every property belonging to those enemy fighters. Remember to dispatch a messenger giving the goblins permission to totally absorb their vaults in the name of the goblin nation."

"What of the werewolves part of the enemy fighters?" Kimi asks and he looks thoughtful for a moment before answering, "Alert the leader and offer to give him these rogues. If the man declines, we'll test those collars crafted to control the werewolf curse and then release them. It's the wizards and witches we need to imprison and question."

"No food and water until you say so, majesty?" Kimi asks and he nods. "Make it so, General Kimi." He says as the five other house elves flip about the sentry posts about the property.

Those raiders are already vanished into tiny cells, their snapped wands on the floor of their cell, and only a pail for a toilet. The goblin messenger leaves the property before the counter forces head out but then, the forces need to set the ward stone about the newly claimed ground and be sure that the magic will be stable before they are free to make the next move.

"When the raiders come back, I'll have a message ready to be delivered to those races we're treating with." He says, he's already have a note pad in hand as well as a pencil. He's confident that his house elves know what they need to do and how to proceed when it comes to this counter raid. He didn't hire that ex-military squib instructor in February for nothing.

The first thing the house elves will do it grab those witches and wizards within the house. Force them to give cloths to their house elves, they will then stun the humans before delivering them here in a different jail complex for questioning, and then his house elves will then take everything out of the place taking the building apart very thoroughly in search for hidden items. Once done, everything will be delivered to one of the houses before the raiding party moves on to do it all over at a new location.

Only when they're done with the raiding will they begin sorting through everything that they claimed from those raids. Dark items will be placed in warded area, books in an area, cloths in another area, etc, etc. It shouldn't take long since all but seven house elves will be going out on these raids.

"Alert me if they run into trouble or when those newly released ones are wanting to join our country." He says to his general and Kimi merely nods in a distracted way, it's clear that she's busy speaking with someone as she whispers into her mic.

Lunch arrives and he dispatches those messages to those races he's treating with, complete with observation orbs documenting the attack. He also gets a reply from the leader of werewolves saying that they could do what they will with the rogues as long as he doesn't kill them. He'll have his team of researchers tomorrow put those collars on before releasing them in London.

The goblins sent a progress report concerning their ceasing of those vaults belonging to member of the enemy army. They mention that they'll need the owners to sign a few documents so that their actions can be seen as legal within the UK's Wizarding Society. He didn't have a problem with that and knew that they can't be under duress when signing or else the magic upon the documents would void it. He's got a surefire way to get the lot to sign a statement agreeing to the goblins' ability to cease their vaults and doubt that they'll be in a mood to read said documents when presented with them in a certain way.

"When will we begin the questioning of our... guests." Reaper asks, the house elf is in charge of his current information department within his army. He glances up from his jot notes concerning what information to release to the press to study the gruff house elf.

"The prisoners are to be left alone, no food or water until they sign a goblin document. The guests... well, you can start to work on them around midnight. Don't use potions on your first attempt at questioning, just be sure to have recorders about. I'm sure you know how the rest of this goes." He says to Reaper and the house elf nods.

"No bleeding them?" Reaper asks and he replies, "Save the bleeding for the first session with the prisoners. At this moment, they are forced to be my guests. Once the goblin documents have been signed will they be released but I don't see that happening for at least three days from now. I'm sure that's enough time for you to get every drop of information from them and to erase their memories of giving that information."

"Shall we inform the employees of this?" Another asks and he shakes his head. "Just tell them we were only going through drills. We'll inform them before I send what happened to the press."

August 12, 1992

He studies the army of not just house elves but of goblins, trolls, and werewolves. Save for the trolls, the others were not only armed with typical weapons like swords, daggers, spears, shields, spell firing guns but also with wands. The trolls wore the more massive armor while the rest wore mixture of leather and steel. All of the armor has protective magic woven upon it while allowing for free movement.

The goblins and trolls were being paid to fight while the whole of the werewolves had sworn loyalty and become citizens of Quarrezel the full moon after the attack upon his country, it's when those experimental collars proved that they can reign in the inner madness of the werewolf curse, granting the werewolf total control over his transformations. A minor side effect was that their bites were no longer infectious in anyway. Likely doesn't hurt that I don't have any racial laws or that I've conquered most of Scotland, thus they'll be granted land upon which to build their homes and raise families.

He's not too troubled about the lack of humans in his army, he had paid handsomely to his human employees for their skills with the wand since few of the werewolves know how to use it. The goblins had been surprisingly helpful in regards of use of that knowledge transfer ritual, but then, he had just given them the juiciest bank accounts right off the bat while asking for only five percent of the total sum of what's within there.

"How are your pack-mates' spirits, Fenrir? I know few of them had not like how we took Hogwarts. That Remus fellow seemed particularly outraged we won without encountering much resistance." He says to the leader of the werewolves.

"I believed he had hoped for Albus to be more prepared. The man is a spy for the man after all." Fenrir Greyback states and he snorts softly at the very idea of Albus doing anything other then retreat or defend. He wasn't that surprise to learn about Remus being a spy, it's likely a position the man had been in during the reign of terror No-Name had spawned that lasted over a few decades.

"I had noted you objected to the lack of physical combat during that battle." He recalls.

"And yet the school fell to us before dinner, just as you had foresaw." The werewolf remarks. "I doubted that the Dark Lord would have been able to take Hogwarts as easily as you did."

"Good thing that the goblins have taken care of the man's soul anchors, eh? Who knew they would be that out raged upon finding one upon the Hufflepuff cup? They were foaming at the mouth to find the rest." He says, his scar upon his forehead had been dealt with using a technique to stop his heart and then using electronic shocks to restart it. With that sliver of soul gone, he found himself not feeling so heavy and noticed changes in his emotions as the silver of soul influenced him to feel the more negative emotions more acutely then positive ones.

"At least we finally going to have two armies go at it instead of all this retreating." Heartbeat the gobliness states while staring hungrily over to the other side. The gobliness's battle trained Gytrash paws the ground. The saddle of the Gytrash's back provides magical protection to light, hence why the canine is out during the daytime.

"I doubt they have anything to say during this parley." General Kimi mutters and Heartbeat nods in agreement. The number of house elves serving under him had long since increased, especially when all of the Hogwart house elves were freed but still wanted to remain with the school, so they swore loyalty to him and he gave the running of the school to Chef. It had surprised him to learn just how many house elves worked at Hogwarts, it seems that there was just too many of them since the excess house elves have joined up with the army.

He had promised Chef that yes, the school will be accepting students when September comes. He had already sent out letters to the students and every family that has a magical child. It surprised him to learn that some muggleborn witchs and wizards weren't at school because they couldn't afford to send them. He changed that by deciding that the up coming school year will be free and that he'll supply what they needed since he already decided to change what's being taught and how it's being taught.

It still shocked him how many ex-muggleborn students were willing to move back to the UK to teach at Hogwarts, one that's under his control at that. Many of them were willing to even become citizens as well, although they did want the war to be over before they swore any oaths. They had been keeping him updated concerning course outlines and what kind of material they would need to teach. At the moment, he has the sorting hat standing in as the headmaster since he didn't want to give the job to a painting and Chef refused the appointment.

"I'll wager that it'll end with one of them trying to hex or curse us." He admits with a sigh. The unicorn he's riding upon snorts so he leans forward and strokes her neck. The mare oddly enough appeared within hours of them setting up camp by the lake. The unicorn sports odd gray spots about her rump and the tips of her mane and tail are black, which makes him wonder if its the reason why the mare, he hasn't thought up a name for her yet, is willing to tolerate him.

"Let's get this over with, I have plans this evening." Fenrir Greyback snaps upon his Thestral mount. With a nod, the unicorn mare begins to move forward. Kimi's pony follows close behind, likely due to feeling more protected next to the unicorn then with the Thestral or the Gytrash.

Minister Fudge, Madam Bones, Albus Dumbledore, and some elderly wizard weren't riding upon anything. He notes how drain and drawn Albus is and figures the man is hurting dearly for the lack of his Fawkes. They wait in the middle between the two armies and some of the enemy fighters get a better look at the unicorn that is willing to bear him into battle. He can only assume what they're thoughts are upon the matter since he does ride bare back and there are no reins for him to control her. The mare's only protection is a steel breast plate about her ribcage while her legs sport metal braces to protect her joints.

The fact that he's righting a unicorn reminds them that he's the Holy Emperor of Qarrezel, with empathize upon the word Holy . He's pretty sure that if he had been riding something else, they likely wouldn't have second thoughts. The mare paws the ground as Albus tries to come straight at him. The mare lowers her head, pointing at the man with her horn. It's the first time this has happened as the mare hadn't even done that to Fenrir or even Heartbeat.

"She really doesn't like you. But then, you did allow those Acromantula to go uncontested within the Forbidden Forest. They did claim many lives as my subjects had discovered piles of unicorn bones about their main base within the forest." He muses and the mare knickers in agreement.

The other three move slightly away from Albus while the man merely stands his ground. "Now, Harry my boy..." Albus begins but Fenrir and Heartbeat laugh at that.

"That's Holy Emperor Harry. After all, Qarrezel now stretches all across Scotland and certain parts of England." Fenrir says and he nods his head slightly, his crown isn't as heavy as it looks but that's likely due to the feather weight charm he had placed upon it earlier.

"You can't possibly be serious about that!" The unknown wizard spats and Fenrir replies, "You're government is the first to acknowledge the country so you believed it existed or you wouldn't have signed those documents confirming to that effect."

"We goblins have filed that document and I believe sent out copies to the ICW after thirty days. You didn't challenge it then so, legally, he is an emperor and as for his Holiness, well, I've never heard of a unicorn enjoying a male's company let alone allowing somebody to ride upon their backs." Heartbeast pipes in and the wizards all sport sour looks.

"Then you should stop before the ICW gets involved." Albus says and he raises an eyebrow.

"We do not recall treating with the ICW concerning the joining of their council. Nor do we recall receiving any documents declaring their involvement in this regard. Perhaps they feel that your ministry has been lacking in following their laws?" He muses, he found it odd to be referring to himself in the royal we but it seemed like the right direction to take.

"As a matter of fact, my kin in the bank have sent the ICW many evidence concerning how Albus Dumbledore has been allowing the Dark Lord known as Voldemort," the gobliness scowls at the flinches, "You allowed Death Eaters to gain freedom, you kidnapped a boy, had his godfather sent to prison without a trial, and worst, didn't do anything concerning the man's soul anchors! You had one in your own school but you left it alone! Where anybody could find it."

"What are they talking about, Dumbledore?" Madam Bones asks upon noting how stunned look upon the man's face.

"Not now, please. It was all for the Greater Good!" The man pleads.

"And who says you get to decide that, I wonder? I believe I recall Remus speaking about how you spoke out against those racial laws but the documents collected during a raid upon the ministry says otherwise. You keep sprouting about equality but you don't do anything to make it happen." Fenrir says.

"And you think this brat cares about that?" Fudge snaps and Fenrir answers, "Yes, I do. He sent treaties about to the other races weeks before he attended Hogwarts. And just a few months ago, he gave my people a way to totally control ourselves in either form."

Then Fenrir takes out a wand and with a smirk, causes fireworks to burst out of the tip for a few seconds before putting it back. "He's given us wands and knowledge upon their use. Not even the Dark Lord did anything but make promises. His majesty has proven himself far more worthy of our loyalty then your government and... No-Name." Fenrir finishes.

"You allowed that child eater a wand?" Fudge demands, clearly not hearing everything.

"We have granted them much more then that, Fudge. We have granted them a future. They can now settle down and marry. Raise children to continue their lines. We have given them a chance to be normal." He states calmly. "If all you plan to do is hurl insults at us and turn deaf to the benefits of surrender, then we have nothing more to talk about." He adds.

As the mare begins to turn around while Fudge stutters, Kimi yells and suddenly, cries of outrage erupt. He glances over his shoulder to find the nameless wizard bound and a shield about Kimi and her mount. "We doubt you will have a good day. Come now, we have other things to attend do." He says to the three under his command.

Before they even reach their side, the enemy has open fire. Not that it matters as the hasty constructed poles before their front line stops the spells dead. The magical energy is sent to the three large cannons. "Let loose the dogs of war!" He says upon returning to his position with his decorative mace held high.

The cannons open fire as his mace is swung down. The cannons hurl forth huge area stunning spell into the incoming enemy. More enemy fire is absorbed and redirected to the cannons. "Archers!" Heartbeat bellows and goblin archers ready their bows.

"Fire!" And a hail of potion filled arrows are sent off towards the enemy. The enemy might posses anti-arrow amulets but they didn't have anything to protect them from the potions that explode from the hallow arrows shafts as the amulets snap the arrows.

"You would think the centaurs would have thought of that tactic." He hears Fenrir muse softly under his breath.

"Fire!" Heartbeat bellows after giving the archers a minute to grab another arrow. Again, arrows hail down upon the enemy and having their contents spilling forth while the cannons thunder over head.

Finally the line of wizards get within seven feet of the front line. "Wolves at the ready!" Fenrir shouts while Kimi hollers, "Elves at the ready!"

The enemy line advances to four feet and both Kimi and Fenrir bellow, "Charge!" With that werewolves, house elves, and trolls charge pass the shielding poles.

Everyone upon his side is charging with the exception of the archers and those that operate the cannons. With his mace in hand, he enters into battle, smashing his mace down upon the robe wearing enemies. He notices dimly how the unicorn mare lashes out with her horn, teeth, and hooves. He doesn't know how he manage to stay upon her back but he did.

His armor absorbs the spells as fuel to the web of healing spells that link each of his army's armor. Any magical attacks that is directed right at the soldier, they're fairly useless concerning area effect spells. For some odd reason, products made from organic things holds the healing matrix of spells far better then non-organic products. Another reason for the mixture of leather and metal armor.

Though it felt like hours, the battle is won within forty minutes. Few from his army had died and it doesn't surprise him much to learn that Dumbledore couldn't be found about the field, he knew that without Fawkes, the man couldn't teleport off of the field as they had erected wards to prevent that. He glances about, trusting that the enchantments upon his glasses will see through the man's concealing spells.

He spies the man studying one of the poles with his wand out. He weighs his mace for a few seconds before he flings it at the man. The mace's head causes a cracking sound upon connecting with the man's head. Within seconds, the others surround the man with spear heads pointed at the man.

He walks over and one of the house elf soldiers hand the mace over to him. He nods his thanks before studying the felled wizard. "And so your ministry falls. How well does this defeat sit with you, Albus? Everything you fought to preserve, helped along, and killed for is no more. The victors write the history books, Albus, and from where we stand, you shall be the villain, your true history shall be written, not the lies you crafted and had put down upon paper. We are fairly certain that the ICW will be more then happy to give you a cell next to your old lover." He says to the man before watching Heartbeat tie up the man's arms behind the man's back and take the man away with a few of the group acting as guards.

"And so ends one chapter of all of this and a new one begins." He murmurs to Kimi upon her arrival at his side. "So, what are our casualties compared to their's?" He asks his general as they head for his tent.

December 31, 1992

He swirls his glass of wine as he reviews the drafts concerning the publishing of the founding of his country and the conquest of the UK's Ministry of Magic. Hedwig scratches herself with a clawed foot while Fawkes remains dozing upon the nest of ashes and soot from the fire place. He sips from the glass before taking his red pencil to write a few notes in the margin of the page before moving onto the next.

"You know, one would think you would have something better to do then read that. It is New Years Eve after all." His godfather, Sirius Black, remarks upon entering into this chamber from the hallway.

He puts the glass of wine down before the sheets in his hand. "Shouldn't you be busy watching those pornos?" He counters while Hedwig makes a disgusting sound upon hearing that particular word.

"Sometimes you just need a break from such ah, draining activities." Sirius explains while approaching his desk. "I do believe you need a break as well."

"It's rather hard considering the fact that I'm still organizing my civilization, how those in power are picked, and how laws are enforced." He remarks. "There's always something that needs my attention."

"Like those experiments in creating that strange hybrid between a Nunda and a phoenix? It kind of looks like a gryphon except for its colors and size." His godfather muses as he takes a seat across from him.

"That's the idea, actually. In a few years, if those faux gryphons prove to be able to breed and function without any outside interference, you'll likely witness attempts at a creating a downsizing dragon breed. The size goal is the size of a hawk or a golden eagle." He explains.

"You seem to have a pretty good idea at what you want to breed." Sirius muses with a frown. He studies his godfather for a moment.

"Magic begets magic, Sirius. This world could do with a lot more magic in it." He tells the man, he can only wonder how the man will react to the news of having people looking into terraforming the other planets and moons of this solar system.

He did sign that treaty with the ICW promising not to expand his country beyond the British Isles on Earth. He did not promise not to expand his holdings beyond this planet however. He knows for a fact that a lot of various races are looking forward to mining the meteor belt for metals and gems.

True, so far all of the magical none humans have proved to have an easier time keeping their magic but that doesn't deter him. A company of dwarven citizens should be completing the lunar compound within a year or two. They are using a perverted form of Port Keys to supply their ship with fresh air and water while taking away the tainted air and water. They have food caplets delivering food and taking trash and waste away.

"It sounds as though you want magic to come out in the open." Sirius states rather calmly. "Which seems to go against the current attitude that the ICW supports." The older wizard adds.

"Too little too late." He murmurs as he glances over to the fire place. "The parents of muggleborns are made aware of magical society, certain people holding positions within muggle government knows about magic, and let's not forget squibs." He says before he takes a sip from his cup of wine.

"Although, if those experiments with those power enhancing braces work, squibs will be capable of welding magic. Heck, with enough research we might even have muggles welding magic." He says. Although, that's just a side effect upon researching ways for magical humans to keep their ability to use magic in space.

He notices how Sirius stiffens while sporting a shocked expression upon his face. "I can see that you find that to be rather unbelievable, huh?" He says and his godfather nods slightly.

"You have to remember, we can draw upon resource from around the globe instead of locally. New sources can be created through creating new breeds of animals and plants. I'm sure you recall those Mint Cherries from the parties last week? It's what my new head of plant development had brought about trying to combine herbs with fruit trees, trying to create multipurpose plants that not just supply food but medical and clothing material." He explains. "Although, at this point in time, Medina is sticking to magically hybridizing muggle plants before trying magical."

Sirius slowly shakes his head. "Unbelievable what happens during being wrongfully imprisoned for a decade causes you to miss." Sirius murmurs.

"Well, I'm just happy all that time being exposed to Fawkes' singing and receiving those mood uplifting potions have helped to repair the damage done by those Dementors." He says as he reaches to grab one of the crackers with cheese and fruit upon them. "You're actually focusing on something that's not related with Peter or Albus." He adds before putting the snack into his mouth.

He noticed the range of emotions that play out upon his godfather's face while he chews what's in his mouth. He glances away, he kind of wished that Remus would have elected to remain here then to leave Britain but the werewolf left with the majority of adult wizards and witches. Good thing I separated the adults from their kids and gave the ten and up the option of leaving the isles totally or to attend Hogwarts on a student visa.

True, not as many of the kids chose to attend Hogwarts but those that did, well, he's just glad that the majority of them were those that had attended his parties during his one year of schooling at Hogwarts. Like for example three of the five Weasley children had chosen to accept the student visa. Percy seemed a bit dismayed that his sister won't be attending Hogwarts and slightly exasperated that Fred and George had done so. You would have thought the whole of the Weasley children would have jumped at the chance at attending Hogwarts not just for free but without needing to purchase any school supplies.

"I toured Hogwarts at the start of the month." Sirius says and he wonders if the man knew which way his thoughts were in as the man continues, "I've never seen the student body so relaxed or enjoying their classes. The professors seem to have time for students. I had thought getting rid of the point system was a bad idea but, well, I've never seen the students so... friendly."

"The sorting hat is responsible for the point system being taken away. As for the professors, well, it only made sense to have classes sorted by aptitude. Each year is divided into three different classes per subject. The students are tested to see if they should be place in the high performance class, the average, and those with problems grasping the material." He explains. "Having smaller class sizes allow the teacher to have less papers to grade and make them more available to help individual students."

"I believe that each professor only teaches two different years for the subject, giving them even more free time." He adds as he recalls the meeting he had with the sorting hat before school started. "For example, a professor teaching first year transfiguration could also be teaching fifth year transfiguration. It seems as though the hat had more teachers applying to teach then it knew what to do with." he adds.

"Rumors say that young goblins and werewolves will begin attending next year." Sirius muses and he nods. "Yea, they will. Hogwarts will be also accepting dwarf, centaur, any being's children really. The centaurs likely won't be sending any yet, although I did send them wands and text books on charms and other spells as a good will gesture." He confirms.

"That's... rather bold." Sirius admits and he shrugs. "I would suggest that young house elves attend but, well, they have certain needs that can't be fulfilled as students." He explains with a frown.

Sirius just shakes his head at the whole thing. "You really do support equality among the races, don't you?" Sirius muses and he snorts softly.

"The goblins are applying to being allowed to create and manage their own school. I'm holding out, wanting to have at least one age group attend the full seven years of Hogwarts before agreeing. I'm looking into building magical elementary schools for those under the age of eleven." He pauses to drink some wine, "The elementary schools will focus upon teaching the subjects that doesn't need magic like history and runes."

"You not waiting on implementing changes are you?" Sirius muses. "Got to strike while the iron is hot." He replies.

Silence descends between them, Sirius does use his wand to create a glass and pours himself some fruit wine before taking one of the crackers from the plate. "So, does this mean I have your approval to start up my own movie company?" Sirius asks as he moves to continue reading the draft for the upcoming history book.

He blinks, kind of surprised about the sudden appearance concerning his godfather's business idea. He shrugs as he replies, "As long as you use your own account, sure." He pauses before suggesting, "Just a minor suggestion, try looking among muggle comics, novels, and screen plays as you won't have to worry about special effect."

"Like Batman and Superman?" Sirius asks and he frowns slightly. "Yea, although, you might want to find something needing spectacular effects as they're the ones most unlikely to be converted into movie format. You also have to speak to whoever owns the copyright in order to avoid getting sued for copyright infringement."

"I see. Well, if I can't come up with anything original then I'll try that route." His godfather says and he hums in agreement.

"So, does this mean you'll be opening movie theaters?" His godfather asks and he chuckles softly. "Got five under construction, they're waiting for school to let out before having their grand openings."

"How about tv stations?" Sirius asks and he sighs softly, it seems that Sirius isn't going to allow him to continue with his review of the history book.

The End

Shinigami Minato: Bleach

I don't own Bleach or Naruto!

As he sorts through various files, being sure to insert the updates within the folders before putting them aside. Suddenly, Mie Kensaki drops a bunch of new files upon his desk and he sighs softly as he moves to put the new folders into his in box. Maybe I should have joined that training journey after all...

"Huh, yea, I can see the resemblance. Only, he's grown his hair out into a ponytail, his eyes are slightly different shade, and has a slightly different angle to his face." Mie muses and he counts up to five before asking, "What are you talking about?"

"The new captain of ninth division, Naruto Uzumaki." Mie answers and he jerks upon hearing his son's name. "Just got appointed last week. He use to teach at the academy, one of their most prized instructors too." The woman adds.

"I see. What's so special about him other then his appearance and former occupation?" He asks while Sutaaraito(starlight) begins to waken within his mind.

"His Zanpakuto is rather large, he doesn't seem to be keeping it to a smaller size. The hilt has linked chains acting as the guard and it's name is Aozora no Kemono. It's a fairly unusual one as it isn't in tune with a single element but multiply ones." Mie explains. "It seems that his Bankai has him seemingly physically dissolving into a vast storm that spawns fast growing cyclones, large balls of hail, lightning dancing within the clouds with thunder roaring minutes after, and vast amounts of rain pouring down."

"Such a Bankai sounds as though it would be handy when confronted with a massive number of enemy lines." He muses while his Zanpakuto remarks, "Make you wonder if he blames you for how his life turned out, doesn't it? Of course the chances of him remembering are pretty much nil since he didn't get collected by zero division upon arriving in the Soul Society."

He does his level best to ignore Sutaaraito. Oh, hush. He thinks to Sutaaraito and he can sense her mood become even worse. "Are you hinting something or can I get back to working on these files?" He asks Mie.

"Just wondering if your hadn't been experimenting with that cloning kido and caused another clone of you to come into existence." Mie states rather coolly and he turns his gaze away from Mie's face at the accusation. He recalled the problems that incident caused for his division.

"There are times where I wish you continued down that line of study. It would be interesting what other personalities lurk within your own mind." Sutaaraito muses.

"I have not attempted that line of kido since the Emperor sent word ordering me to stop." He answers. "How old is this new captain? Four hundred? Five hundred?" He asks.

"Well, we've his old academy record and well, if it's right, he's a bit over two thousand years old." Mie admits with a defeated sigh. "Which is likely true. He never raised from his seated position within the ninth since he achieved it. He doesn't seem the ambitious type since it seems he was rather content with his teaching position and his patrols to the out reaches of the Soul Society."

"Are you wanting me to investigate him?" He asks Mie. "You seem rather obsessed with this captain." He adds, he doesn't know if he hopes she wants him to or dreads the idea of coming face to face with his son.

"You just want to stand before him and apologize to him. Like that will help him now, being dead and all." Sutaaraito snaps at him.

He knew his Zanpakuto is right but he's focusing on Mie as she answers his question. "Just a minor information gathering done by our own would put such fears to rest. So, I believe that yes, you will be investigating the background information concerning Naruto Uzumaki. Interviewing him with be the end of your investigation as we don't want to alert him to the fact we are doing so." Mie tells him and he nods.

With that, Mie leaves the office and he pushes back upon his chair as his thoughts whirl with the fact that he has just been given official sanction to contact his son. I wonder if he ever found the one and had kids? Did he ever study under Jiraiya-sensei? He thinks while Sutaaraito reminds surprisingly silent.

= [- T

"Excuse me! Are you Gyou?" He shouts, trying to get the red head's attention.

"What? Go away, I'm busy!" The red head bellows while twisting a valve, not bothering to look at him. He's a bit perturbed by this attitude since most see the black kimono and almost automatically become fearful and subdued.

He with a groan, he preforms a kido to freeze the sprouting water. Gyou seems to still and then curse before turning to face him. Gyou's curses stop suddenly at the sight of him. "Naruto? No, wait, it's too early for him to show up..." Gyou murmurs out loud while frowning at him.

He blinks at Gyou's attitude while the red head man rubs his frost covered shirt and pants. "Who are ya? And what do ya want? Do you know what kind of damage ya did with that kido? I'll have to reforge the pipes!" Gyou snaps at him, clearly unimpressed with him.

"I just want to speak with you concerning Naruto Uzumaki." He says while Sutaaraito chuckles at how Gyou spoke with him. "Oh I like him! He's certainly got a pair!" His Zanpakuto remarks as Gyou scowls at him.

"What about Naruto? He's a shinigami, he patrols about here usually between a decade or two period where he's gone back to your headquarters to teach at your academy. I'm sure you Soul Reapers know more about him then I do." Gyou answers as the red head pushes pass him.

He sighs, not use to dealing with this kind of attitude outside of his division. Although to be fair, he wasn't wearing the jacket. He pauses as he catches sight of a symbol he recalls seeing commonly upon a forehead protector. He glances over to the red head while thinking about the Kazekage, noticing some similar looks between them.

His left hand goes to a pouch that holds a memory recovering device, he brought it just encase he needed to reverse the memory erase powder. If Naruto had been up to illegal things, it would stand to reason that his son would have used such a device upon the residents in this district. Not harm in checking... If need be, I can always erase them again.

Sutaaraito murmurs about how he had hoped to use that tactic upon his own son but he just ignores her. Why couldn't I have a Zanpakuto who doesn't communicate so frequently with me? He wonders as he manages to appear before Gyou and activates the memory retrieval device.

This causes Gyou to faint and he manages to catch him and gently lowers the red head upon the soggy ground. He begins to get a bit antsy as minutes tick by and Gyou hasn't come too. Then suddenly, sand engulfs him while Reiryoku pours from the fallen Gyou. He tries to Shunpo out but the sand somehow, keeps that from happening.

Finally Gyou gets up from the ground while his eyes are still closed. He frantically tries to piece together what's going on and can only think that Gyou had been a demon container to Hidden Sand's own demon, the Shukaku. Finally, Gyou's eyes open and he's slightly shocked with the look in the man's eyes.

"I see, so you are his father." Gyou murmurs in a monolithic tone. "For what purpose have you restored my memories?" Gyou asks as the sand finally loosen but hangs in the air.

"You knew him while he was alive?" He asks Gyou and the red head nods. "He saved me from myself. He gave me something to live for." Gyou answers simply.

"There are others in this district who knew him while he was alive." Gyou adds and he felt excitement race through him. "But that does not explain why you want to know of him." Gyou states.

"I'm here to do a background check and, I want to know the kind of person he became before I met with him." He answers. "If you wouldn't mind telling me about him, Gyou."

"Gaara. My real name, it's Gaara and I became the fifth Kazekage of the Village Hidden in the Sand." Gaara says and the sand finally releases him before the sand falls to the wet floor as Gaara's Reiryoku finally gets under control.

He's probably hungry now. He thinks to himself as he follows after the former Kazekage and demon container. He does have more then enough food so it wouldn't hurt to share with Gaara.

= [- T

He tries to get some sleep but his mind just won't let up upon reviewing the information Gaara had supplied him with. He also has a list of others to use the memory restoring device upon. Gaara will get back to him upon the subject of erasing his newly restored memories as Gaara doesn't know if he wanted to be sent to the academy to receive training to become a Soul Reaper or return to life as a simple inventor.

Before retiring, he had made a quick round of those Gaara identified as knowing his son during the time they were alive. Instructing them that he wanted to meet with them come dawn. He plans to restore all of their memories in one go. As he closes his eyes and still upon the sleeping mattress.

As his eyes open, he finds himself within his mind-scape. It wasn't long before he spies Sutaaraito. His Zanpakuto spirit's appearance is that of an otherworldly beauty who's skin is so white that it seems to glow compared to her surroundings. Long, braided pale blue hair flowing down Sutaaraito's back while her totally black eyes stare at him with minor flakes of white. Sutaaraito wears a priestess attire only gold and gray in color while holding a monk's staff.

Poking out of the pale blue hair are ear points that are rather sharp looking. He assumes that if he were to chose what being his Zanpakuto spirit would be, he would say a Western Elf. "Minato." Sutaaraito states coolly and he returns the greeting, "Sutaaraito."

The few times he's been brought here had been when Sutaaraito wished to physically assault him. Typically when she grew tired of him ignoring her. She generally harps about how all the mistakes he's made throughout his both of his lives, his living one and his current dead one.

Unlike many among division zero, he can't preform Bankai, not that it matters much since he is more valued for his seal skills then his fighting skills. Sutaaraito is a vacuum type, capable of depriving a spot of everything, including oxygen, though why Soul Reapers need to breath, he still doesn't get and just assumes that it's more of a habit then anything, a deadly habit that he can exploit using his Shikai.

"Are you sure you wish to pursue this course of action? These souls have rights concerning whether or not they want to recall their living lives." The regal elven worman says to him.

He didn't feel the need to answer, he knows that on a moral level she's right but Gaara only encountered his son during certain times and only knew very little of Naruto's childhood, how he acted during his time in the academy, what his typical day was like... There's such a wide selection to choose from really. I wonder which family adopted him...

"You're only doing this because you lack confidences concerning how Naruto will react upon seeing you. You fear that he'll reject you, you already have." Sutaaraito says. "Perhaps when you finally confront him, you will be capable of moving beyond this fear." His Zanpakuto spirit says.

With that, his mind-scape breaks up and he finally gets some sleep.

= [- T

"What are you doing here?" Somebody asks and he silently curses. He holds his arms up and slowly turn around to discover a non-human being sporting bat like wings, red hair, and navy blue skin tone.

"How... interesting." Muses the monstrous being upon the wings folding over the shoulders, giving the male being the appearance of a cloak. He slowly plans out an escape route while the seemingly demonic being studies him.

"I take it your here to meet with Naruto? He should be along shortly as he only stepped out for some groceries. I'm fairly certain you know who I am, but it's only polite that I introduce myself. I am Aozora no Kemono, the Zanpakuto spirit of Naruto Uzumaki."

He blinks, not sure how to react to that as he assumed that with a name like Aozora no Kemono, his son's Zanpakuto's spirit would be a kind of bird or maybe a sickle weasel. I thought he already can preform Bankai? So why manifest his sword's spirit? He wonders.

"I thought once one attends Bankai, you don't need to manifest your Zanpakuto's spirit." He states and Aozora no Kemono snorts while moving to sit down upon the couch with a back to it, it's then that he notes the tail and how Aozora no Kemono's legs are constructed.

"You subscribe of that school of thought, eh? Guess there aren't any enlightened shinigami outside of Naruto." Aozora no Kemono remarks and he feels Sutaaraito's interest concerning this odd practice. "It's rather enjoyable being able to taste a cup of tea or a fresh batch of cookies..."

"You must be on good terms with Naruto if he's willing to waste so much energy in giving you a physical body." He murmurs and he feels Sutaaraito scowl at him. Aozora no Kemono snort softly.

"He doesn't even feel the drain. If you've seen my actual self, you'd get an idea at his reserves at the beginning of his career. Considering what our Bankai is, it's a wonder he hasn't expired during the first attempt. As it was, we both were out of it for a good two weeks, although, he did recover an hour or two before I did..." Aozora no Kemono says and while he's digesting that, the door knob turns.

His first thought upon laying eyes upon Naruto was, He barely looks to be out of his teens! How can he be over two thousand? He also notices the orange shirt his son is wearing and smiles slightly as he recalls that meeting.

"Huh, hey, dad, what you doing here? Shouldn't you be in the belly of that shinigami you summoned?" His son asks him upon closing the door and he can't help but stare in frank amazement at Naruto.

"It almost looks like you broke him." Aozora no Kemono states in a bemused tone. "Here, I'll take those and put them away while you two have a chit chat." The non-human being says while moving to take said bags from his son, the captain of ninth division.

"Huh, he certainly knows how to redeem you speechless, doesn't he?" Sutaaraito states rather calmly.

Gotta Touchem All: Animorph And Pokemon

I don't own Animorphs or Pokemon!

-Is that fox suppose to have six tails?- Ax wonders and Tobias murmurs, -Huh? What fox?-

As the Andilite moves, Tobias gets a clear view of said fox. -Eh... huh, that kind of looks like a Vulpix but that can't be right...- The boy trapped in the body of a red-tail hawk says.

-Any particular abilities its suppose to have?- Ax inquires while his main eyes are focused upon rusty red fox sporing six tails.

-Ah, well, according to the game, they're capable of producing fire attacks. It's sketchy about how they're able to do so though in the game.- Tobias answers while getting ready to launch into the air the moment the strange fox gets ready to pounce in his direction.

-Perhaps I should acquire it?- Ax wonders and Tobias blinks in surprise at the idea. -No reason why it won't work... Just be careful.- He answers.

About three seconds later, Ax's tail blade is resting upon the body of the vulpix. The little six tail fox had been knocked out by the flat of Ax's blade. Tobias takes to the air and begins to glance around, trying to spy some hint to suggest how they got here.

Tobias watches as a purple rodent glances up at him before returning to its previous actions. -What is that creature by the river?- Ax asks as the Andilite moves to the water to get a drink.

-Huh? I've never seen that one in any of the games.- Tobias murmur. The hawk moves to circle over the river that's about thirty feet from where they encountered the vulpix.

"Bi? Bid loof of!" The buck tooth mammal shouts at the sight of Ax before leaping into the river. -A bidloof likely. These... monsters tend to be named by what word sounds they make.- Tobias explains while noticing these small group of tad pole Pokemon sporting whiskers shaped like an tv antenna.

The hawk Animorph spies a poliwag swimming after a magikarp while a few goldeen moving down stream. -Which to choose, which to choose...- Tobias muses while circling about the river that seems to be forty feet wide.

About fifty feet from where Ax is, Tobias spies something that appears to be an eevee. Tobias heads in the little beast's direction, as the hawk stuck boy enters into a dive bomb, the eevee notices him and takes up a battle pose. The brown fox like Pokemon evades out of the way but Tobias manages to grip the tip of the tail.

Upon contact, Tobias concentrates upon the eevee and the brown monster goes into a minor trance for a few seconds. Upon shaking its head, the eevee darts off away from Tobias. Upon righting himself, Tobias takes to the air and heads back.

While Tobias acquires the eevee, Ax watches various monsters move about. The young Andilite contemplates acquiring one of the monsters hanging about the river. The alien spies moving plants coming to the water's edge. "Oddish?" One of the plant monsters wonder at the sight of the Andilite while the others of the group drip their leaves into the river.

Ideally, Ax wonders what they would taste like when he grazes. Ax watches Tobias arrives back and pulls his hoof from the water. -I take it you acquired one as well?- Ax asks Tobias.

-Yea, I think I spotted a cave where we can try out our new morphs. It's located behind a water fall a pretty long ways away.- Tobias says.

-Lead on then.- Ax says and as Tobias wings it northwest, Ax enters into a trot. While Ax keeps a stalk eye upon Tobias while the other glances around, noticing some deer type monsters grazing a few meters away. A few of them glance up and watch as Ax trots by.

Large butterfly monsters flutter over a meadow of flowers while large green worms could be found in the stands of trees. Brown birds move about the berry bushes while living vine knots sit in patches of sunlight. The roar of the falls grows and they soon travel right next to the river the falls feed.

Various kind of bug monsters seem to hang about the minor lake that the river flows from and the waterfall feeds. They startle a pack of orange and black striped canine monsters that Tobias identifies as growlithe. The pack of six growls at them before taking off.

Tobias lands upon a rock and waits for Ax to arrive. -What an interesting selection of beasts.- The young Andilite muses thoughtfully and if Tobias could smile, he would be sporting one.

-I'll go first.- Tobias says before he kind of glides down to the ground. With wings spread, Tobias begins to focus on the mental image of the eevee he manage to touch. Bone crack and pop while feathers fade to give way to fur.

Increasing slightly in size, Ax watches as his fellow rebel and best friend's head suddenly sports long and thin looking ears, similar to a rabbit. The fur around Tobias' neck suddenly puffs out becoming a light brown mane. As the tail grows, the inner organs shift about. Suddenly, Tobias drops forward and within seconds, the wings have given way to legs.

The change end and Tobias shakes himself, ears perking up. "Eev? Ee vee." Tobias says out loud while sending, -Huh? Sounds like zubats and golbats.-

-Any trouble with its instincts?- Ax asks and Tobias replies, -Surprisingly, they're not pressing in on me.-

With a slight intake of breath, Ax summons up a mental image of the odd fox that Tobias says is called a vulpix. The first thing that happens is Ax's blue fur becoming rusty red while Ax's eye stalks begin to fade. Bones crack and pop as Ax's face stretches to form a muzzle.

Organs shift within Ax while shrinking down. Ax's arms shift position as the front set of legs shrink until they vanish into the belly. The tail blade gets retracted just before five other tails suddenly begin to grow out of Ax's backside.

-I'm bigger then you.- Ax muses while noting that Tobias' morph is male. "You're also male." Ax barks out.

"And you're female." Tobias counters and then they blink as they realize they understood each other without thought speech. Their ears flicker about and they each catch bits and pieces of conversations.

-Well, the anime did have them being able to understand their own species and other verbal sounds of other Pokemon species.- Tobias muses while Ax spats ember at the rock Tobias had been perched on and is very impressed with this ability.

-Should we try and acquire other... Pokemon while we're here? They would be good additions in the war.- Ax notes, trying to ignore how his current set of instincts seem to find Tobias' morph attractive.

-That is the question, isn't it? Perhaps we should find some town and see if we can't become Pokemon Trainers. That should allow us to travel without too much hassle. It would also allow us to get fur samples from those we capture.- Tobias says while coming up to Ax's side. -But first, we got to know where we are.-

-Should we demorph and then take to the air?- Ax asks, turning to look at the brown fox like morph. Tobias' scent causes Ax's morph to bristle up and Tobias, upon noting this reaction, backs up while giving Ax a questioning look.

-We could or we could explore the cave. We might be able to gather up battle experience in these morphs and maybe encounter some other Pokemon to acquire before we leave this area.- Tobias suggests and Ax takes a few steps behind the thundering water.

-I'll keep time.- Ax says at last and Tobias nods before trotting pass. Ax shakes his head before following after, eyes slowly getting use to the dim light.

Month Later

Ax and Tobias stop a few feet from the path to take a break, to demorph and to feed their Pokemon. Tobias' chikorita, Grace, plumps herself down while Ax's totodile, Ripple, wanders over to the bench and climbs onto it. Neither of the two Pokemon reacted as their respective trainer begins to change after they put down their pack that contain the other Pokemon and empty balls.

As Ax and Tobias once more appear human, they let out their other two Pokemon out of their balls. Ax's female spearow, Song, and male hoppip, Spore, stretch about before moving to sit by Tobias' female sentret, Alert, and female wooper, Alice. They each have acquired their own captured Pokemon and those belonging to the other.

During their cave adventure, Ax managed to acquire a male zubat morph while Tobias managed to acquire a male geodude. Thus Ax and Tobias share six same Pokemon morphs and two the other doesn't have.

Food jars open and dry Pokemon food gets set before the group of six. The Pokemon begin to talk among themselves while Ax and Tobias take out a map to figure out how far they are from the nearest town or ranch. They will, hopefully, encounter other Pokemon trainers along the way, they could use a bit more money in purchasing supplies, although they can stay at the Pokemon centers and get meals for free, but then, their secret would be found out so they stick to camping outside of various towns, cities, and ranches.

After about fifteen minutes, Ax and Tobias are ready to go, they heard about this Pokemon convention and contest happening in about two weeks in Marketville. They hope to acquire a few unusual Pokemon from the other regions. Tobias leaves Alert out while Ax leaves Song out.

Marketville

Ax and Tobias had a fairly eventful week. It had taken a lot of thought upon how to pass off Ax's natural form off as a costume. It had allowed Ax to acquire an onyx, hoothoot, ekans, nidorina, sandslash, ponyta, hypno, scyther, mightyena, duskull, and a luxray. As for Tobias, he managed to acquire a murkrow, hoothoot, ekans, nidorino, raichu, rapidash, chansey, dragonite, linoone, duskull, and a rare female lucario.

They had seen others battle and have battled themselves, most often in their first morphs. Ax in vulpix morph got passed off as one of Tobias' while Tobias in eevee morph got passed off as one of Ax's. Ax's party also now consists of a male dunsparce, Hover, and a female snubbull, Rachel. Tobias's party expanded to include a male spinarak, Spindly, and a female mareep, Sparkles. All got Pokemon belonging to Ax and Tobias had been used during various battles with other visiting trainers of Marketville.

The pair also learnt more about what regions they would likely need to visit if they want to acquire. Tobias would like to acquire a psychic while Ax would like to acquire a dragon. Neither of them know how much time they still have in this world, so they decided to head to the nearest airport after raising enough money to purchase tickets, hopefully one of the charter flights that have private restrooms for them to demorph within them.

Willing to accept somebody to adopt this story idea! Just PM me if interested!

Uzumaki Enterprises

I don't own Naruto!

Age: 10

"Huh... But, why? I'm content to pulling pranks!" He says to the Third Hokage while putting the film camera back into its box. "Besides, nobody would want to help me filming them..." He murmurs as he pushes the box on the counter towards the elderly leader of Hidden Leaf.

"I believe I have a solution to that. How would you like to learn how to make water clones?" The military leader asks him and he gives the old man a stunned look.

"Really? You'll teach me a jutsu? Oh! Thank you, thank you, thank you..." He repeats 'thank you' about thirty times before he remembers that he's got ramen to eat and quickly breaks apart his chop sticks to begin pigging out on the pork ramen.

All the while the Third chuckles in amusement at his antics. "So, you'll be keeping the camera then?" The old man asks him and he just nods, not really thinking about the camera, only about the jutsu the old man plans to teach him.

Two Weeks Later

He studies the camera once more, he's grown bored over the two weeks. Since he had promised the old man Hokage about not pulling any more pranks before the elderly Hokage taught him the water clone jutsu, he's been at loose ends. Sure in his spare time he's drawn up various plans concerning prank pulling but it got old as he's unable to put them in action.

He raises a slight eyebrow at the sight of a key under the book of instructions. A tiny tag says studio key and he finds a note explaining the key and what he can expect to find in this studio. He couldn't help but be intrigue by this work space, so he repackages the camera and instruction book, carrying it under his arm, he leaves his apartment in search of the place.

It took about an hour to find the place and using the key to unlock the door, he fumbles about trying to find a light switch. Even when he finds it, the lights didn't really shine all that brightly. He pockets the key while moving into the main room.

He explores them all, he found more blank film as well as a few strange machine. A shelf of books seem to be about how to make a movie, inserting music, and pretty much anything in relations with making a movie like costumes and how to improve the background noise like cloth moving or hoof beats. As he looking to a desk drawer, he finds a few scrolls detailing simple seals that range from flash bombs to blood pellet tags that hold will hold fake blood.

Where was all this stuff when I was doing my pranks? He wonders as he automatically saw how all of this stuff could be used to help in prank pulling. With a sigh, he puts the box down and unrolls one of the scrolls to begin learning how to much such tags. He's glad that he's got an actual ink set and tons of blank sheets of paper, he's got the typical paper usually used for tags but he's going to need a lot of practice to get these seals just right since his writing skills is dismal, he's better at reading then he is at writing, likely due to him being entirely self taught in both skills.

Five Months Later

He scratches the side of his head as he studies the blond girl before him. Ino huffs slightly and moves out of her pose to cross her arms over her chest. "It's nothing against you, you under stand, it's just that the camera doesn't pick up genjutsu." He says finally.

"But I got an opening in costume design if your interested." He adds and Ino's face brightens out of the slight scowl her face had adopted. "I'll take it!" Ino declares and he hands the girl a copy of the script that Hinata had written out.

All he knows is within a month of him discovering the office, the young heiress of the Hyuuga clan had left a note saying she's willing to take a position in his film company and decided to give the script outline to Hinata to polish. What he got back did have a bunch of mature scenes that include the main character and the lead female having a bedroom scene but it did have a lot more explosions and fighting scenes that he just decides to ignore those baffling, strictly adult scenes.

He's not sure how Ino learnt about all of this, he had only just got the permission he needed to use various training fields as back drops and only just settled upon the appearances of his main cast of characters. He had to create large holes and then unseal vast amounts of water into them as a source of water for his clones. Having it around will also help keep the clones from being easily destroyed.

"You're really going to follow this script?" Ino asks as his clones finish getting the site as needed for the upcoming fight scene. Those clones arm coming over to the minor well of water and dispelling within it, he really didn't want to waste water needlessly.

"Well, Hinata seemed to know what she was writing about and, well, I couldn't think of any reasons not to exclude any of the scenes." He tells the blond. "Is something wrong? Anyway, I'm about to start, do you have any objections to the cloths my clones will be wearing for this scene?" He is sure to motion towards the story board as they also have drawings concerning the kinds of uniforms the enemy will be sporting.

Ino's face remains red but she does take a look before shaking her head. "Those will do, for now I guess." The blond eleven year old says.

With a nod, he takes a sack from the hanger and walks over to the well he created. He takes out a large paper pouch and dumps the mixture of powders into the water. He takes the pole and stirs the water before adding two bottles of liquid thickener before stirring that into the water. Once the water is a deep, dark red color, he notes how the water is slightly sluggish but that won't affect the movement of his clones.

Letting go of the pole, he goes through the head signs for the water clone jutsu. He's sure to focus upon mental images that he wants his clones to assume. He had learnt how to craft water clones into the images of animals and to assume the appearance of other people beyond his own appearance. Gender wasn't a barrier at all, nor was size.

Once the clones were in position, they had pick up their special equipment, aka the blood pellet tags. Once he's got the mic in position and fastening it down so it won't move much, he sets up to the camera and once the camera is rolling, cries, "Action!"

The clones act out the scene without any of them really getting dispelled. Once the scene is done, his clones get up and get ready to redo the scene while he moves the mic and camera to the next position to do a retake. The clones use dirt to cover the fake blood that's splattered about the area. The clones each took turns upon dispelling their cloths and recreating clean ones from the well water.

And so it went until he's got all five angles of this scene. "That's a wrap!" He says, very pleased at how his first screen shoot had gone. And so, the clones begin to take down the preparations. Good then I got the second and third sets prepared. It shouldn't take long to set one of them up and shoot those scenes before heading to the office to begin editing them.

"Huh, I guess it's easy to get through a shoot when their all clones." Ino muses as he hands her the next two shoots costume designs for her to review. The backstage stuff is getting sealed within storage scrolls.

Once his clones are done, they once more get into the well before dispelling. With them all gone, he takes out the special storage scroll and seals all of the dyed water into it. Grabbing the pack with all the scrolls in it, he begins to march up to the second set.

Ino walks after him after a few seconds. She has a few ideas for the next shoot, mostly for the female fights that are about to come up. He listens as Ino points out how the women are more likely to act in a fight and cosmetics used to help highlight their looks. He frowns slightly as that sounds like it'll be a lot more work, but guesses that Ino likely knew what she's talking about, he'll just need Ino to create facial sketches and use the colors. He'll likely need to have a few clones about for models but is sure that Ino's capable of doing this job as she is one of the girls trying to land Sasuke Uchiha as her husband, so she would need to know these things so she can look her best.

Three Months Later

"Patches of Omissions." The Third Hokage says to him and he frowns. He didn't see why he's here in the office, not when he's got to prepare for this even's showing.

"Are you complaining about the title? If you are, you'd better talk to Hinata Hyuuga cause she's the writer." He states simply and he swears that the old man dropped his jaw in surprise, although a few seconds later and the old man schooled his expression.

"That's not why you're here." The Hokage states and he frowns while asking, "Then why am I here? Are you looking to purchase tickets? Cause I'm pretty sure that this week is sold out. But if you really want to watch it, I guess you could sit next to the projector."

Since there weren't any movie theaters in Hidden Leaf, he's had to find some place to show the film and had found an old warehouse that needing a lot of fixing up but it worked. Boarding up the windows, clearing out the old wooden boards and sweeping up the floors made room for the various benches, old sofas, and chairs for ticket holders to sit on while watching the movie. Hinata had found the huge white cloth needed for the screen while Ino had been in charge of ticket sales.

The first show didn't have a lot of people, he recalls that there had been seven jonin and Iruka-sensei. One of the jonin had been wearing green spandex and seem to enjoy saying 'Youth' a lot. He recalls the number of gasping sounds that Iruka-sensei had made during those romantic and bedroom scenes. Heck, that one silver haired jonin put his book away when the second bedroom scene got shown and remain put away until the light came on. Iruka-sensei had been really red faced and had left quickly while the various seven jonin seem to wait a few extra minutes before leaving.

After that first showing, they've had packed house for then on, which kind of made it worth it since it means they really enjoy the film. Heck, that silver haired jonin has seen at least five more shows since the first. He's already looking forward to making another movie, he knows Hinata is working on a new script while Ino seems to be busy coming up with future ideas for costumes.

"That's not what I want to talk to you about." The old man Hokage says and he frowns, not sure what else the Hokage would want from him. "This is about certain scenes that you filmed. Particularly, the bedroom ones."

"What about them? I wasn't sure if they went off right but both Hinata and Ino seem to say that they came out better then they expected." He says, he leaves out how red faced the pair were whenever they saw said scenes. "I would have liked to have more explosions in the movie but I decided to trust Hinata and didn't change anything she wrote."

"Who's idea was it to rate it R then?" The Hokage asks and he answers, "Ino and Hinata were insistent on that one. I kind of thought it sucked since I wanted to rub this in Kiba and Sasuke's faces about how successful my film is."

"Naruto... Has anyone mentioned how babies are made?" The old man asks out of the blue and he just stares blankly at the elderly ninja sitting before him.

"What's that got to do with my movie? I mean, babies come from some super secret lab in under the hospital, right? I always wanted to see the place cause I wanted to see if I can't make myself a younger sibling but I can't find it." He explains wistfully. "I mean, I'd be a great big brother! I seen how its done and it would be great to have somebody who needs me and looks up to me."

He notices how sad the old man is and he figures the Hokage is likely remembering his own younger sibling. I wonder if I should change tactics and try to rent Hinata's younger sister... I wonder how much Hinata would charge per hour? He thinks to himself.

"Has nobody taken you aside and given you any kind of lecture concerning where babies come from?" The old man asks after a few minutes of silence. "Like the nurse?"

"I'm still not following. I mean, the last time I was in her presence she offered to do an operation that would help me learn, I think she called it a castration? She says that it's used to help calm down male dogs and horses, allows them to think better." He says before adding, "I didn't take her up on it cause I don't want to cheat, I'll make it to Hokage without that castration, believe it!"

He watches as the old man begins to rub his temples with his fingers. "That's good, Naruto. And I need you to promise me that you won't take anybody up on any... beneficial sounding operations. If anyone does make the suggestion, I want you to come right to me and we can discus it here in my office." The old man says and he just nods, he didn't see any reason not to do as the old man asked, after all, it gave him another reason to visit with the guy.

"Sure!" He chirps and the old man smiles slightly. "Is there anything else we need to talk about or should I go?" He asks.

"I would like you to find both Hinata and Ino. It seems that I have something to discuss with them." The Hokage says to him and he nods.

"Will do!" He says as he gets up from the chair. "See ya later, old man!" He says as he leaves the office.

I wonder if he's going to try and get free tickets from Ino? He wonders as he exits the tower and heads off in search for the two girls. After all, the sooner they have their meeting with the old man, the sooner he can find out what it is the Hokage wanted to speak with them about.

"Hey kid, you made one hell of a movie!" Some old white haired man says. The man ruffles his blond hair before leaving. He turns and watches the guy walk off, he notes a large scroll hanging behind the man's back. The guy seem to be more interested in the women on the street then the guys.

With a shrug, he refocuses on the task of finding his costume designer and his writer.

Week Later

"So... we made a good hundred thousand right off the bat and we're getting a five percent in royalties on the movie. I never knew you can make that much money so quickly." He says to Hinata as they walk to his apartment.

Ino will meet with them in a few, she's going to try and see if Sasuke is interested in going on a date with her. He highly doubts that the guy has even noticing the opposite sex, much less looking to be in their company.

"After meeting with Lord Hokage, I reconsidered the direction for the next film." Hinata stutters out and he perks up. "Does this have anything to do with those mythology books and scrolls you've been reading during lunch?" He asks.

"Yes, I thought we'd try something concerning the mythical creatures." Hinata explains. "But perhaps we should wait for Ino? I'm sure she would like to be here when I explain my idea." The Hyuuga heiress adds and he nods, he clearly recalled the few other staff meetings Hinata and him had begun without the blond, only for Ino to get all huffy about it.

Minutes pass as they made small talk about how chakra control that Hinata suggests they try next since he needs a lot of work concerning it as he has way too much chakra on hand. He's just glad that Hinata knew so many different practices on how to control one's chakra. He's gotten so good that he can create cloths out of water instead of making water clones to wear the cloths.

His current set of gray long sleeve shirt with orange vest and brown shorts are all made using that technique; the only real cloths items he's wearing are his various weapon pouches. Sure, he had to head to the bathroom a few times during the day to refuel the water the cloths were made out of but with practice, he's sure that he might one day be able to maintain them without waters every two hours, maybe even putting it off for a good eight hours.

Ino seems to be pleased to see him out of that orange jumpsuit but is confident that she hasn't figured out that they cloths are made using that water jutsu. After all, he couldn't afford to buy groceries let alone purchase nice cloths that what they appear to be. I wonder what other elements I can make cloths out of?

As they lose things to discus about concerning the latest chakra control exercise, Ino enters and slams the door. He winces as it usually means that the blond is in a foul mood. He's kind of wishes that Ino and Sakura hadn't ended their friendship since this usually means that they have to deal with the upset blond.

"Why's wrong with how I dress?" Ino demands while looking at him and he cocks his head to the side while he studies what she's wearing.

"It... err, empathizes your belly?" He answers, kind of at a lost at how to answer that but knows that he had to give some answer.

Ino pauses and places a hand over her exposed belly. "What's wrong with that?" The blond girl demands.

"It's a good place to insert a kunai?" He replies, saying the first thing that pops in his head and that seems to cause Ino to pause. Thus Ino walks over to join them without much trouble, it's clear she's considering his reply.

"I guess your right." Ino admits with a sigh as she slumps down into the chair. "But how am I suppose to show off how slim I am if I cover it?"

"You ever think that you would impress Sasuke by dressing as though you're about to go into battle?" Hinata offers when he glances at her with look asking her for help.

"Yea, Sasuke does take being a ninja pretty seriously." He adds. "Ever thought to improve your taijutsu? I'm sure he'd be even more impressed if you manage to rank second to him." He admits, he really doesn't want to discus this at all, but, well, they don't usually get any work down unless they wade through Ino's latest drama.

Ino wrinkles up her noses and opens to say something but stops and looks towards a wall. "It's not as if following those fashion magazines are helping any." Ino finally admits in defeat and Hinata reaches out to comfort the blond.

When Ino didn't continue on this after a few minutes of silence, he finally brings up the topic he wants to confront. "What's our next film going to be about? I know Hinata's been looking through mythological creatures and stories..."

Hinata nods and begins to outline a story concerning a child somehow getting spirited away to some magical land where various fantasy creatures call home. Hinata makes suggestions of the child encountering kitsunes and other mystical beasts like two-tailed cats and lion dogs, fighting oni, learning from tengu, and even gracing the court of dragons.

"That sounds like it'll be a fairly hard angle to sell. I mean, Hidden Leaf isn't keen on anything related to kitsunes." Ino says.

"I like the angle but how about invaders from another dimension? We can call them demons, fiends, devils, or oni. The main could be a half-breed and a bounty hunter?" He says and Ino taps a finger against her chin.

"We could have various fractions. Make them more beastly in nature." Ino muses slowly.

"We can have the humanoid type called demons and have them being responsible concerning the bounties. Make their whole society hidden and needing hybrid since they're unable to pass themselves off as humans." Hinata reflects and he nods.

"We could try creating miniatures cities out of metal and glass like some of those summoned movies! Create those metal contraptions and their weapons." He says with a grin. "We can have it over top of a pail of water to help strengthen those tiny clones!" He says.

"I can design design those things!" Ino says. "Though you'll have to work on creating clones under an inch tall." The blond girl says and he shrugs.

"I'm more worried about how to get the miniatures all filmed." He replies.

"I think we could visit the discard pile of the old people's home. They are the ones who fish for useful items. We could likely find tiny camera among the discards." Hinata stutters out.

"Sounds good! Want to go now or did ya guys want to work on designs?" He asks and Ino waves him off.

"You two go, I'll stick around here coming up with a sketches for the 'Demons'." Ino says and thus, Hinata and him leave his apartment.

Month Later

After two weeks of waiting for Ino's miniature order, they decided to go in a different diction since, in the end, Ino got really frustrated with the order taking more then a week to get shipped. Not to say that the order was canceled, they just decided to do something that didn't have them waiting for so long and had plenty of it in stock. It helps that they found something that pretty much didn't cost much money and it had to do with this battered old looking manga featuring talking lions. The book's called the Lion King but by the time they were done making a bunch of changes to the story, it barely resembled it the book.

They decided to call it Destined for Change. The characters remained animals but the main cast typically come from these two animal groups, magic using lions and magic using hyenas. The hyenas rule this canyon of bones and mushroom forests while the lions rule the lands of plenty. The lions come from a wide array of prides that sport such names as Dawn Sight and Faith's Wings. The hyenas come from various clans with such names as Bone Breakers and Spore Furs.

The conflict comes about from a meteor that creates a wide trench in the canyon that leads to their lands getting flooded. They're forced out of their native home lands and forced to encroach upon the lion's homes. Naturally they come into conflict with certain parties on each side seeking to enslave the other species.

In the end, the supposed 'good' guys on the hyena side get killed which results in the race getting forced through a magical gateway. To survive, they place themselves into a magical sleep, waiting for the day when the few that escaped this fate can rally enough forces and set them free.

While not a happy ending, it did leave room for a bunch of sequels if it proves to be popular. It also proved easy to film since they didn't need to worry about cloths, although Ino is the one who created most of the glowing tattoo designs for both sides. The ink they used to apply said tattoos was one that reacts by coming into contact with chakra by glowing and since the clones were constructs of chakra, they continued to glow, even when they didn't want them to.

It had only taken them so long because he had to figure out how to create tiny seals or for his water clones to be capable of channeling any jutsu he can do. In the end, he kind of succeeds in both as his tiny, human clones did do a good job writing out those seals while he learnt that if he creates a water clone strictly out of his own blood, thus becoming a blood clone, the clone is capable of being a channel for a jutsu.

He's privately glad that he only had to make tiny blood clones since he figures a full size blood clone would likely kill him. He plans to see if he can engulf a drop of his blood in chakra and insert it inside of a water clone, could the droplet of blood be enough to allow the water clone to channel a jutsu? He'll have to try it later as Ino's out of village order has finally arrived, allowing them to pursue that old movie idea.

"That's a bit better then your previous movie, Patches of Omissions." Iruka-sensei says. The chuunin had somehow got the position of having final say on whether or not any of their films will be allowed to be seen within Hidden Leaf.

"Although, I was looking forward to a happy ending, but then, I take it you have plans for a sequel." Their academy teacher says and he can't take it any more.

"So we can we start selling tickets for it or not?" He asks. "Ino's got a good two hundred posters ready to be posted around town." He adds and Ino proudly displays said poster.

Although, she could do to improve her artistic abilities... He silently admits. I'll give her points for trying though.

"Just as long as you add the thirteen to that PG rating as it does feature a lot of violence and death on screen." Iruka-sensei says finally and Ino squeals before pulling him in for a hug. Ino bounces up and down, all the while holding onto him, much to his embarrassment. He keeps reminding himself that he loves Sakura and that this doesn't mean anything.

"Sounds good." Hinata stutters out with a relieved expression upon her face. Iruka-sensei nods as he gets up off the couch and heads out of the warehouse turned movie theater.

Three Weeks Later

"Huh, looks like Uzumaki Enterprises just got an offer to produce some film called Monster City." He says upon arriving into the basement where they're filming Nerves; that's what they're calling that one about the half breed bounty hunter killing dimensionally displaced beasts that are grouped into Fiends, Devils, and Abominations.

"What's the script about?" Ino asks while she moves the lights just so to mimic the correct time of day. Each of the desks have various sketches ranging from alien creatures to clothing designs for each of the characters.

He rips open the envelop and takes out the thick script. He hands the loose papers over to Ino once she gets up from her crouch. He skims through the script and can't help but snort at certain points, but over all, he didn't see how they'd have difficulty making this picture, easy money actually.

"We could actually afford to construct an actual movie theater and hire people to work it." Ino says after whistling at the amount this company is offering. They exchange papers and he snorts softly at the number of zeros.

"If only your clones could be independent, then we could get them to build the miniatures for this film while we're in classes." Ino says.

"In a few weeks we might not need to worry about the academy. We'll be taking the examine to get promoted to genin. If I don't pass then I'll be doing this full time as it'll be my third try." He says to Ino, he notes how startled Ino reacts to the mere mention of the upcoming examine.

"Oh, yea... Genin..." Ino murmurs and looks off into space, clearly more interested in her thoughts then what's going on about her.

"At least you got all three of the jutsus perfected. I doubt I'll ever be able to preform the basic clone jutsu. They just keep looking like crap." He says.

"And I'll likely get paired with Chouji and Shikamaru when I pass it." Ino states with a hint of despair. "I mean, sure, our partners worked well together but who's to say we'd be able to follow in their foot steps? I mean, Shikamaru would likely just say 'how troublesome' ever second sentence and Chouji will be more concerned with stuffing his face!"

Ino rants for a few minutes about Chouji and Shikamaru's bad points. He's kind of sympathetic but mostly annoyed since he considers the pair to be almost friends. They and Kiba would skip classes or sneak out of class if they were bored in one.

"Makes ya hope that Hinata, you, and I end up on the same team, eh? If we did, then we won't have to figure out schedules concerning the continuation of our work creating movies." He sums up and Ino simply sighs.

"Anyway, you get this started while I got purchase the stuff needed for this one." Ino says as she grabs the key for the cash chest. As soon as Ino grabs what she thinks she needs, the blond tosses the key to him and he puts it back on its hook before he moves to sit at this stool surrounding with various screens displaying the upcoming scene in different angles.

Once he's seated, he then forms a single hand sign that cause the tiny clones to act out the scene while he watches viva the multiple cameras. It won't be long before they've got enough raw film to start creating an actually film. I wonder how much this one will go for? Not as high as Patches of Omissions but certainly higher then Destined for Change.

Most of the money they got from the two earlier movies went to repaying Ino for the miniature models that she bought with her own money and to pay rent upon that warehouse.

If they get the money for Monster City and manage to get a good price for Nerves, they should be able to pay a genin team to demolish the old market district, as that part of the village has been abandoned for years now, and then hire a construction firm to build a large theater, they're going to try to have ten or more sceening rooms in which to show ten different movies at the same time.

He tries not to think about his other project too much since he doesn't want to get his hopes too high up concerning recreating a life size, functioning bike that the lead character, Steel, rides around in.

Ending it here

Maskes: Harry Potter

I don't own Harry Potter

December 20, 1992

He stares down at the embers of the fireplace, his thoughts lingering upon not only what he learnt from a book containing information about magical animals. He wanted to learn more about phoenixes, he hadn't been prepared for what he read and the conclusions that suddenly hit him. He sighs and after a few minutes of debate, softly calls out, "Dobby?"

A very faint pop and before him stands the house elf that's been hounding him to leave Hogwarts. "Yes great Harry Potter sir?" Dobby asks and he hastes for only a second.

"Dobby, do you still want me to leave Hogwarts?" He asks and the house elf bobs his head rapidly up and done. For a second, Harry wondered if the little guy's head would pop off.

"Ok, good, cause I need you to gather somethings for me." He says. The little magical being perks up as he gives the little elf what he'll need to do so.

Merlin... I hope this works. He thinks as the little elf vanishes away and he takes a sip out of the wine that he had Hedwig import. He said it's a gift for a teacher and thus, it's how he got it into the school. It likely helped that he's also a legend among those that live in this world so nobody thought twice about the request.

January 2, 1993

He stands in the abandon classroom not far from a side door that leads out of the castle and then takes out a tiny bottle that contains the Polyjuice potion, it also sports a small collection of hairs from ten different guys, he had made sure to tell Dobby that part. He downs the potion after changing into the close that he asked Dobby for, they were in muggle style as he plans to fade into the muggle world. He even has a plan ticket to head out of the UK, he's heading for Australia as he hopes his accent won't stand out.

Earlier, he had used transfiguration to move his famous scar so it's no longer upon his forehead. He has placed a minor illusion upon his forehead to make it seem as though it's there. None seem to notice the difference, but then, Hermione is still in that cat hybrid form. While he was visiting, he had inquired if the headmaster had offered anything to any of the petrified students or the cat but the man hadn't offered any phoenix tears to bring them out. It kind of appalled him that nobody even thought to ask for those tears since Fawkes does live in Hogwarts and it shouldn't be that hard to get the fire bird to donate a small bottle or two.

It's not my job to protect Hogwarts. The man has the means to end all of this but it seems as though he isn't interested in preforming his job. He think as the potion finishes altering him, a single glance into a hand held mirror displays his reflection as a twenty something year old man with wavy blue tinted hair and hazel eyes. His eyes seem slightly almond shaped while his skin is ever rather tan.

Pocketing the mirror, he takes out one of the most important items that Dobby stole for him, a Time Turner. As midnight sounds, he turns the hour glass twenty-four times. The magic takes effect and he watches as those that had previously visited this room blur in rewind until, once more, the midnight chiming is happening.

With a grin, he walks over to where he stored the knapsack and hefts it. He had known he went through with this this morning since when he visited, the knapsack was gone. Dobby had only given him the Time Turner a few hours after noon after all. He does up the zipper for his jacket while he shoulders his broom.

Once in the treeline of the Forbidden Forest, he climbs onto the broom. Within seconds, he's zooming southward, looking for the railway tracks to follow. He figures that there are permanent spells upon them to keep them hidden from view of muggles, thus a perfect way to get to London without exposure and getting lost.

He's glad for the muggle attire as his jacket and snow pants keep him rather warm while the single lens goggles allow him to see without feeling the wing sneaking under his glasses. He's got a hat and a scarf protecting his head and face. Gloves covering his hands and nice faux fur lining his boots' inside.

He's done his best to keep any part of himself from being exposed to the cold and he's fairly sure he succeeded in it.

January 4, 1993

He sips from the metal hip flask that contains more of the Polyjuice potion that he needs to drink once an hour. With that done, he quickly reaches for his cola to wash away the foul after flavor while he glances out of the window. I was expecting to ride in couch... I wonder how Dobby got the pounds to buy the ticket? Heck, I'm more then a little worried about where he get two hundred thousand pounds that I requested along with the ticket.

The house elf also manage to get him not just two extra wands but six. The elf also got him various kinds of jewelry based defenses against mind reading, location & tracking spells(it seems the different between the two is that tracking spells allow one to follow where he's been rather then where he is), and magic resistance boosters, although it also made it slightly harder for him to cast spells but at this moment, he doesn't know many useful spells so it isn't much of a hassle at the moment.

Dobby had also gotten hold of a memory modifier potion that's keyed to make the little elf totally forget about him. The potion only works on eliminating memories of encounters up to a year max, which is just want they needed. It takes about fifteen minutes before the potion begins to affect the drinker so, Dobby had drunk it before him and once ten minutes have passed in which they said their good byes and what not, with five minutes left, the house elf returned to his family.

Why am I still obsessing with what's been done? I'm finally getting away from the Dursleys! So what if I'm leaving behind Ron and Hermione? I came to the Wizarding World looking to escape the Dursleys but I still ended up returning there and I had to face off with the specter of the man who killed my parents. Sure, I like magic and it's not as though the UK is the only place where one can learn magic, after all, there is a whole world beyond and a good number of those living there had to discover other ways to use it. He thinks to himself.

He closes his eyes as he leans down upon the leaning back of his seat. His thoughts revolving about defending his position about leaving as he feels so much guilt over this but the actions or the lack of actions on Dumbledore's part remains the core defense for his leaving. He still has the Time Tuner in his possession and knows he needs to train himself up cause it's clear that Voldemort won't rest until he's killed him.

His new watch chimes and he leans up to drink more of the potion. A replacement for his cola arrives as well. In the end, he grabs one of the magazines he bought waiting for the flight to take his mind off of his guilt over leaving.

March 16, 1998

He swirls the liquid in his glass as his thoughts chase each other about in circles. The ICW had, as of one pm, been occupying the UK for about six months. It's only recently that the death toll has been released to the great wide world at large, particularly since the trials are about to begin for not just the Death Eaters but against various politicians, which include Dumbldore, though it's expected that Dumbledore will walk away with a slap upon the wrist, which he just couldn't stomach as the man likely could have prevented the whole war in the UK.

Maybe I should send that owl... He thinks while Hedwig arrives to put a package upon the table. None at the cafe cared since it's got ties to the general magical society. He studies the heavily altered Hedwig, after all, having a snowy owl would have lead everyone straight to him and he couldn't have that.

He has transfigured Hedwig's white plumage to that of a screech owl. He even had to add the traits but over all, most of what he did was cosmetic in nature and is rather easy to reverse. Heck, he's manage to pass off Hedwig's size as a minor potion accident where some growth potion ended up on a mouse and she ate it when it wasn't done growing, thus the effects got transferred onto her.

Hedwig isn't the only one who's had physical work done, he had turned the wand onto himself. His eye color was the first to go, his eyes have been various shades of blue, hazel, and are now a brownish yellow. His hair has been through the various colors humans naturally sport to some that are achieved through using chemicals to dye it to be out of the natural spectrum. At this moment, it's blond with blue streaks running through it.

Body shape, skin tone, teeth, and even his privates have felt the touch of his magic. He's reshaped his face, ears, and added or retracted scars, moles, and pimples. Heck, there was this one time he managed to pass himself off as a woman, it had been rather... arousing when he was growing breasts before a mirror. He hadn't done much to his package beyond shrinking it, altering the pelvis, and forcing hair to grow in that area in case he got stripped searched while going through customs, he had been heading to a war torn country to do a bit of shopping and heard rumors of male tourists getting laid over for weeks for some small reason or other.

He figured traveling there while appearing to be a woman was a good idea, which it was as it turned out some local cult lead by a witch seemed to be busy using mind control spells upon said all of the men that arrived into the country. The witch was busy using them as slave labor to construct guns and other items of interest. He had, of course, found himself entangled in the whole mess since there seemed to be spells set up to detect men about some of the cities the witch controlled. The less said of that the better in his opinion.

There was this other time when he had used a bit of metal that had been melted using Fiendfyre to try and create a magical scar. He had decided to see if it could alter the shape of his scar and when it touch his famous lightning bolt scar the metal didn't seem to harm him as he had expected but it had caused his scar to scream. The scar just vanished under the touch of the still warm metal, nothing remains of either.

I wonder what was up with the screaming though... He muses as he opens the package up. He takes some meat from his half eaten sandwich and gives it to Hedwig before taking out the various broken magical items that he's been commission to fix.

It had kind of shocked him to learn that nobody ever tried fixing a broken or drained artifacts but it gave him a niche to fill. It hadn't been hard to get the right IDs made but it had taken him a bit to pick out a new name for himself as he couldn't go by Harry J. Potter. So he became Daniel 'Rafe' Dashiell, a nineteen year old halfblood from Australia. His parents paid for private tutors so he didn't attend any of the local schools, thus painting that his family had money, pretty much explaining why he's never broke.

I wonder why nobody ever thought of using an enlarging spell on raw diamonds or transfiguring paper into paper money... My experiments into speeding up chemical reactions in forming crystals and gems are coming along nicely. He thinks to himself. Who knows, in a year or two I might have gemstones that will pass through inspection, thus I won't need to worry about people noticing anything fake about those bills... Funny, I would have thought that the magical jewelers I sell those gems to would be the ones spotting oddities to the gems I've sold them, particularly the enlargement charm that I use.

His eyes widen at the sight of a vial with a french label saying that it contains phoenix blood. There is other types of magical liquid that comes from various other beings and beasts but he's never encountered phoenix blood. With a sigh, he takes the various vials containing tears, blood, and pee out of the over all package before removing the fur, feather, scale, and skin samples.

He removes the cloth and studies the layered artifact with interest. Taking out his ash and kitsune fur wand, he casts various information spells and nods thoughtfully as it does explain why such items were sent along. Looks like they not only want to repair it but upgrade it as well since some of the various samples come from creatures and beings not used during its creation. He muses, noticing that instead of using paint, runes were etched upon the metal using mild form of acid, likely typical mixture that blacksmiths used back in the day of when they crafted such an item.

It's a complex item and the letter under has information needed to the purpose of this device. It doesn't shock him to learn it was made in Greece or that it came from the time of the Romans as it explains how it got to France. The French is kind of sketchy about what they used it for that caused it to break but the fact that the artifact had something to do with viewing the departed souls of the dead.

Thus why it possessed crystallized blood from a basilisk as well as a scale. Hmm, feathers and ash from a phoenix, a bone from a dementor, blood and skin from a lethifold, and finally blood, bone, and an eye from a thestral. He IDs and then he moves onto the various samples that came with the artifact in question.

Most of the samples come from other creatures and beings that represent life and death, or can cause instant death like samples from a nundu and a gorgon or capable of prolonging their life like a hydra. Hmm... This such might be a bit of an overkill since it might not work right with all these new, foreign creatures as the creators didn't factor them in. He muses but he could see that the new additions from the previously used creatures will be of greater help in the reconstruction since it'll give him greater insight of the hows, whys, and what-fors of the creation of it.

"Going to need to reforge parts of this. The problem will be seeing if they did anything special during the process of preparing the metal, during the engraving process, or during the setting of the crystals in the metal." He muses out loud while Hedwig just yawns. He smiles as he glances at the owl and chuckles.

"Sorry for boring you. Did you want the rest of this sandwich, girl?" He asks and Hedwig perks up, nodding yes. Once that's done, he returns to studying the artifact that he's to repair or was it reforge?

He was no longer the underfed, frightful boy of twelve but a grown man who is often hailed a genius and something of a free lance defeater of so called Dark Lords and Dark Ladies. The name Harry Potter doesn't mean much to him beyond that it belongs to his past-self. He has at least five other identities beyond Rafe that he masquerades as, often using the Time Turner to do so.

Life is more then enjoyable for him now and perhaps if things work out as he hopes, he will be enjoying centuries upon centuries of it with Hedwig by his side since he wasn't just going to let her die of old age on him. Magic is a very useful tool and it possesses limitless potential as it can be used for anything as long as you can dream about it.

The End

Inherited Power: Harry Potter

I don't own Harry Potter.

Where are we going now? Harry wonders as the cart jerks sharply to the left. He recalls that they had return to the beginning and Hagrid had been the first to get off, but before he could get up to move out of the cart, the goblin suddenly shifted the lever and the cart went forward with a jerk.

The cart goes down and spirals a few times before it levels out in a very dark and dank floor. The stone seems to be black and sports grooves along its surface. The walls to lack vault faces and then, finally, they come to a stop by a set of stairs that lead up to a stone door.

"Why did you bring me here?" He asks the goblin and the cart driver replies with disdain, "Your great-grandfather had constructed this himself with the help of your grandfather. About three years before he died, your great-grandfather visited this vault with a pack of items and came out without them. Then your grandfather visited this vault a year before he died, although before he died, he contracted the bank to bring his grandchild here."

"Didn't my father visit this place?" He asks as he gets out of the cart, slightly overwhelmed with the idea that two unknown people were not only related to him but seem to await his arrival. "He didn't, but why? Didn't he know about this place?" Harry asks the goblin and the goblin snorts.

"Your grandfather was very specific about who we were to bring here. Now get on with your business here so we can return before that fool of a grounds keeper firecalls the headmaster and tries to bully his way here to retrieve you." The goblin states and he quickly turns to face the stone gate.

As he places a hand upon this circle featuring the outline of a hand, he feels something jolt through him and then pool about his scar. He hears screaming in the air and dimly realizes that he's the source. Then it feels as though something is trying to tear a bit of his brain out of his head through his forehead and he truly wished he could black out but he doesn't.

It feels like eternity as that bit of brain finally begins to give. He gasps and blinks his eyes rapidly. His whole being is sore and yet, oddly enough, his brain feels as if some unknown pressure is gone. It feels as though something had been plugging up his head, like having a stuffy nose only focused in his mind and now, now it's all cleared up and he can breath so much more easier.

As Harry focuses on his surroundings, he finds himself in a minor hall that leads into a large room. He walks down the hall that is light up by these vines of crystals that dance with various colors of light. It's rather soothing and he finds himself relaxing slightly as he stands before the room.

He can see another room and a set of stairs that lead up. The stairwell is, like four feet wide. Suddenly, something happens and his shoes finally fit while his cloths also seem to shrink while brightening up. His glasses vanish from his face but it didn't matter as he continue to see things oh so clearly.

He glances up at the ceiling above him before glancing down. There seems to be clawed feet upon the bottom while heads of felines look down. He glances towards the door and finds that the spot where he's standing is the only placed graced with such additions. He pulls at his now crimson shirt, it feels like silk, before glancing down at the black pants, which feels like cotton. His shoes look new, not torn or worn at all.

He smiles softly as he turns his eyes towards the couch. He glances down at the crystal tiled floor and takes a step. Lights dance under his right foot and when he pulls up his foot, the light dies. With a shake of his head, he steps more into the living room area of the vault. Now this is what magic should be like. He decides, sure the alley had been kind of nice, but it had been kind of gouty with how the color clashed all over the place and thrown together as most of the buldings look like they were ready to fall apart with a good, solid shove.

The couch and various chairs all seem to be floating a few inches above the tiled floor. Pictures of magical animals line two of the three walls of the living room as the third wall seems to have a large shelfing unit containing rows upon rows of books, be it leather bound or made out of some other kind of material like stone or metal.

He walks over to the other room and finds it to be a dinning room. He walks through another doorway and finds himself in a kitchen sporting a huge stone fridge. He opens it to find it leading into a huge cold room sporting meat upon meat hooks towards the back while shelves filled with spice jars, fruit, veggies, and flour. He notices crates piled in one of the back corners, he just assumes that it contains eggs before he backs out and closes the door.

He heads back towards the living room and goes up the stairs. After about ten steps, he's on the second level and finds it divided into two large rooms. To his left, he finds a bedroom that also sports a bathroom. He enters to find about two different pools, one looks like a natural hot spring while the other is a pretty good size pool, it's currently empty of water.

He heads for the other room to discover it to be an office. It's fashioned with a white stone desk that sports a metal and crystal goblet upon the desk. Across from the desk is a large mirror that is black in color. He walks over and tabs the mirror to discover that it's make of some kind of black glass. The spot where his finger touches the surface causes a bit of numbness to his finger.

Shaking his hand, he walks over and sits down at the desk. He goes through the drawers and finds a bunch of important looking folders. In another he finds glass vials containing colorful liquid. In the top left he found a note with a minor bit of poetry upon it.

He pulls the little card out and turns it over to find it telling him to look into the mirror for knowledge of his enemies while saying the chant. Feeling a tiny bit foolish, he closes the desk drawer, moves the goblet a bit to get a clearer view of the mirror. Taking in a deep breath, he recites the poetry...

Few Minutes Later . . .

Harry just stares blankly ahead, his mind a whirl of feelings and thoughts concerning everything he just witnessed. He feels like vomiting and curling up to cry, to never step foot out of this strange house like vault. Tears run down his face and he touches his right cheek, his hand seems warmer then his face.

"All those people... They just... How could they? And that man..." He slowly shakes his head as he realizes that not only does he have to deal with Tom Riddle but with Albus Dumbledore as well as the old geezer had plans that dictate his life, heck the guy seems to be leaning on getting him hitched to some girl he didn't know and who doesn't even know him!

He just let those murders walk free... Didn't even try to put limits on them. Doesn't even think twice about sending the 'light' to their deaths but is sad when the 'dark' are killed? What a psycho, hypocritical bastard! He thinks and then he realizes that he doesn't have the skills needed to deal with either Tom or with Ablus.

He blinks as he hears something coming to his left. Blinking, he glances at the goblet to find light playing about the crystal bowl that the metal holds up. He knew what that is, he's seen a few of them while watching events play out from the various visions from the past.

With a frown, he gets up and moves towards the goblet. With nothing to lose, he dunks his head into the oddly green tainted gray liquid. Knowledge rushes into his mind, like how to turn a stone into a beetle, what to do when facing off against an angry gryphon, the correct ward scheme to create the infamous death ward... It just goes on and on.

Finally, his head couldn't take it any more, he pulls himself out of the liquid pool of knowledge and reaches about for the potions he needed to take if he's to integrate all of this knowledge into his own mind. Once the headache subsides, he plunges his head once more into the liquid, this time, absorbing political knowledge concerning the Wizarding World and its laws.

It would be a good four dunks before all of the liquid knowledge has been absorbed. With a full head, he heads for the bedroom, his shoes come off with a bit of effort, and he banishes the blankets to drape over his body wandlessly. And so, he falls asleep upon a bed his forewarned, previous heads of the Potter family and magically crafted for future use.

Six Hours Later . . .

As Harry comes to, he sighs softly before rolling onto his back and stare up at the enchanted ceiling that seems as though he's underwater with silvery light shimmering down at him. As light moves as the water rolls. It's rather soothing and he fights the desire to fall back to sleep.

It's the thought of Albus that finally drives him out of the bed. He heads for the office once more, this time to collect the Time Turner his great grandfather had borrowed. The Time Turner his great grandfather had been about to return had been fake, not that anyone knows as it fell just as it was exchanging hands and his grandfather had banished the broken parts away.

Once the Time Turner is about his neck, he also picks up a ring that will act as a two way Port Key, allowing him to return and leave this place without any trouble. His grandfather had to come down to leave it within this vault. Once the ring is on his finger, the ring seemingly gets absorbed by finger, leaving only a tiny, snarling face that is just a shade or two darker then his own skin tone.

He heads for the kitchen to grab a bit to eat before turning the Time Turner back six time while standing in the kitchen. One quick sandwich made and eaten, he moves the Time Turner out from under his shirt and after using a time spell to check the time, he then flips the hour glass over six time. Time rewinds and as the past him leaves the kitchen, time resumes.

He waits a minute before heading out of the kitchen. As he passes through the one area, his cloths return to their original appearance but not his shoes. His glasses return but before he leaves, he alters the lens until he can see perfectly before enchanting the frames to be durable and the glass lens to see through illusions.

The stone doors pull back to allow him to pass through. "Finally." The goblin murmurs as he walks down the steps to enter into the cart.

The cart had somehow been turned around so they go back the way they came as soon as he's seated. The food in his stomach feels like lead weight within him and he's more then a little relieved for the ride to be over. Hagrid rushes over to greet him while throwing up a fuss over the 'kidnapping' of him done by the goblins.

He smiles slightly at this but reminds the half-giant that they have other things to do then to spend the day at the bank, arguing with goblins. They leave the bank and Harry learns that he's only been gone for about an hour, most of that time likely due to the ride there and back again. Though Hagrid doesn't press deeply, the half-giant does try to learn just where the cart goblin had taken him and he replies, "I'm sorry but it's family business."

He pauses at the sight of one of those villains he observed in the mirror and all of the emotions he had felt hours earlier rush back. He hears the windows of the store next to him begin to rattle before using his new mental skills to control the emotional storm wanting to break into reality. That... family won't live to see September first. He silently vows to himself.

"Lucius Malfoy. He's one of those that escaped prison by saying he was under the effects of the Imperius Curse." Hagrid says needlessly. "Hog's well-ump in my opinion."

He just nods, not really trusting himself to speak. It also calls to mind that many others who aided Tom were still out and about. Shouldn't be too hard to get them all in attendance. I've seen how to do that very clearly, although Peter will be harder to get at. The rat hasn't been human for over a decade so the call likely won't reach him. He thinks to himself.

Hagrid and Harry finally enter into their first store while Harry's busy reviewing ways in which to do all those accomplices in as well as their family in such a way that it baffles the minds of investigating witches and wizards. It wouldn't do to have a trail pointed right at him, especially if a few do manage to escape that little gathering.

Upon being dropped off at Privet Drive, Harry turns on the TV and finds it upon a show detailing the first World War. He witnesses the damage done by bombing and he begins to chuckle before it turns into a full blown laugh. Just perfect! Just a little bit of magic to amplify the damage as well as a temporary ward scheme set up to keep them all there...

Two Weeks Later . . .

He watches from a hill top not far from the Riddle Manor using a muggle made telescope that he enchanted to see through the first few walls of the house so that he can see the living room. The entire house sport various kinds of explosives all over like in the walls, floor boards although the place hosting the larger amount is the basement. All of the fuses wrapped up with a special kind of enchanted paper that will all burn if just one of the cut slips is set on fire.

So glad that I returned pretty much all of that equipment and replaced it with muggle created equipment. Not only is it cheaper but better made. Pencils and ball point pens are fair superior to quills and ink pots. He thinks, sure he's never used said items but his great grandfather and grandfather had so he knew he wasn't missing out on anything there.

His watch beeps and finally, the guests arrive. He managed to bribe certain officials to get the majority of the Death Eaters from the prison to join this little reunion. Snape appears just seconds after the Malfoy family. With each passing second, all of Tom's followers, marked and unmarked arrive with their families in toe. The werewolf pack that had been hanging about in the graveyard finally enter the house and the last to arrive is Barty Crouch Jr.

Finally, all but Peter are within the manor and he presses a button on this enchanted stick that he carved to look like a muggle trigger. The wards spring into action, not only keeping the guests from leaving but also using an illusion to keep them occupied from noticing. He wandlessly summons fire in the palm of his hand that holds the slip of paper.

The house explodes with half a second after the paper is a flamed. He hadn't seen anyone get forewarned and using his telescope, finds that little to no whole bodies about the flaming wreckage. He sticks around as the fire trucks arrive but so far, no wizards or witches arrive upon the scene.

He soon packs up the telescope and once done, cases illusions upon himself and his broom before flying back to Little Whinging. He feels an odd relief engulf him as he muses over the fact that other then Tom and Peter, all marked, unmarked, and in-training Death Eaters are dead. He also feels giddy at the fact that he also possesses a rather famous, or was that infamous, ring that Tom had made into a Horcrux and feels more then confident in his ability to collect the rest, particularly now that those entrusted with said Horcruxes are dead.

Once he's in the backyard of his aunt and uncle's house, he uses his ring to arrive back at the apartment vault. He leaves his broom and the un-shrunken case containing the telescope by the stairs before he continues up to his room. Before going to bed, he soaks in the hot spring for a bit before crawling under the blankets to get some sleep.

In one night, he managed to avenge the wrongs done to countless muggles, beings, beasts, and magical people. No recollection of those past events will haunt his dreams this night or, perhaps, for the rest of his life.

I wonder how this changes Albus' plans though... Were Harry's last thoughts before sleep over takes him.

September 1, 1991

The crowd of first year students is much, although as Harry gazes over towards the house of serpents, have nearly no students sitting at the table. Bet ya that anyone can get their own room in that dorm. He muses thoughtfully as he considers that table thoughtfully. I doubt many of the students will end up in there as well.

He turns to regard the other tables and notes that yes, the house of eagles seem to have the next lowest number. Which isn't all that surprising as there had been Death Eaters from each of the houses, although those from the house of serpents just happened to be the most mentioned. Who would have thought I'd wind up with most of the holdings from the deceased Death Eaters? Must be because Sirius is a Black and most 'dark' families leave their fortune to other 'dark' families. I wonder what should I do with my new found political clout?

Finally it's his turn to get sorted and he approaches the stool where the seemingly ratty hat is resting. He picks up the hat and sits down, it didn't take long before the hat and him have a minor discussion. After a few seconds, the hat declares, "Slytherin!"

He gets up from the stool after he takes the hat off. Placing the hat upon the stool, he walks to the table. He's the first to be sorted to this table, the majority have been sorted into the three other houses.

In the end, he's the only first year student to be sorted into the house of serpents, which pretty much means that he'll have his own room.

The other members study him thoughtfully before Albus gets up and says his bit before the food arrives. He doesn't pay it much mind as he's a bit busy studying a certain teacher. He might not know much about Quirrell but the man is on borrowed time even without him 'gunning' for the guy. I wonder what kind of face Tom will make upon seeing the picture of all of his Horcruxes in it? They'll only going to be around until I manage to 'borrow' a Dementor and have it kiss the items before sending it through the veil. Just one more to collect and I've got a complete collection.

His thoughts drift to the rat he had bought from Ron for only a single Galleon. He had transfigured the rodent into a plastic one before placing the transfigured Peter into his trunk. He had been oh so tempted to transfigure Peter into a clay statue and let it fall upon the floor, breaking apart easily and thus killing the traitor without anyone being the wiser but he needed the rat to clear Sirius' name and to dirty Albus' own.

Of all of my plans, I hope that my taking of the and passing the N.E.W.T.s will ensure that I'll never have to step foot in Hogwarts as a student once this school year ends. He thinks as dessert appears. Needless to say, Harry had a lot of plans to pursue this year and is very confident that they'll work out, especially the one to remove Albus Dumbledore permanently from the world.

The end of the night's feast is the singing of the school song and he swore his ears were bleeding at the racket the singers made. When his house-mates get up to leave, a fifth year motions for him to follow. He follows after the older student with a blank expression.

I wonder if anyone of them plan to ambush me? He thinks to himself as he follows the fifth year down to the dungeons. "If you don't mind my asking, but, shouldn't a prefect wear a badge?" He asks the young woman as they arrive at the entrance of the common room.

The teen studies him a moment before replying, "With so many of our house dead and our head of house still to be filled, nobody thought to reassign said positions to the survivors."

"I would have thought that the headmaster would have stepped in to do so in the absence of the head of house, but then, our 'dear' headmaster is rather busy in a different arena that the matter slipped his mind." He says in agreement and the young woman's lips twitch ever so slightly, it's clear that the remark caught her slightly off guard.

"Indeed. Those of us left weren't highly favored by the previous head anyway. As you lack fellow house-mates your own age, I would suggest you watch your back while in class and outside. Some might see your sorting into this house as a 'betrayal'." The fifth year teenager explains and he merely nods.

With that, his guide says the password and the door opens, revealing the common room of the Slytherin house. He heads up the stairs after glancing at a group of guys and up the stairs that are opposite direction then where the guys had pointed in, only to have the stairs flatten and cause him to fall upon his ass. With a sigh, he heads for the one they had pointed and it wasn't long before he found his room.

I was just asking for it, wasn't I? He muses privately to himself as he changes his cloths.

Next Day . . .

Harry woke at six am and heads for the vanishing room. He is sure to think about a storage room as he walks before it three times before the door appears out of the seemingly solid stone wall. It searches through the room, making mental notes of the more interesting items before coming upon the diadem.

He waits until he's out of the room before using his ring to teleport to his vault apartment. He puts it in the office upstairs with the rest of the items before teleporting back to Hogwarts. With that out of the way, he heads outside to visit the lake for a bit to skip a few stones while he waits for the school to come alive.

Hard to believe that just over a month ago, I had just learnt I was a wizard. I wonder what my life would have been like if my great grandfather and grandfather hadn't visited that seer? Or, more importantly, believe it? That mirror just shows the past, not the present or the future though... I wonder what they saw in it that caused them to believe Albus to be a villain? But why didn't they bring my father, James, onto the secret? He wonders to himself before realizing that he could find out the last one if he uses the mirror to see that particular discussion.

He casts a time spell and leaves for the castle. He's got his bag filled with the needed books he's likely going to be needing for whatever class he is to attend today. He also heads inside, making sure to use a cleaning spell upon himself to clean off any mud he might have picked up.

He gets a few glares from the Gryffindors, which he ignores, as he doesn't find them to be very threatening, not with the knowledge his great grandfather and grandfather left behind for him to inherit. He not only feels confident in besting them, he can do things to them that they'd have no defense against. After all, a little memory charm and they won't remember their time together, which kind of sends a minor shiver down his spine at the thought of how the memory charm can be abused, especially as human nature is pretty much the same, muggle or not.

Hmm, not such a bad method to use if you want your family to survive. Might do the same with my kids, of course I'll need to contribute to the pool of knowledge. Maybe I'll try learning foreign magic... I'm sure there are plenty of schools willing to accept the Boy-Who-Lived if only to try and puzzle out how I survived the Killing Curse. I'm still young enough that they shouldn't have any trouble shuffling me into the school. He thinks, shying away from such grim thoughts.

He takes a seat at the table that has a plate setting and begins to dig into the meal offered. Before the rest of his house arrives, a small pride of Gryffindors approach him. The leader of the pride is the same boy he bought Peter from.

"I want my rat back." Ron informs him in a 'forceful' tone. He raises an eyebrow before replying, "Do you have that Galleon to return to me?"

Ron jerks his head, which answers that question. "Besides, the price just went up for said rat. He now costs the same as the Black fortune." He replies before tossing in, "You really don't know how to bargain do you? I mean, I talked you out of that rodent for dirt cheap. As they say, one man's trash is another man's treasure."

"I don't care! Give me Scabbers!" Ron growls and he just gives the three a cold shoulder.

"What do you three lions think you're doing?" Asks one of the wizards from his house. "Think you can pick on a single serpent did ya? Think since we lost most of our numbers that we'd be easy pickings, did ya?" A witch asks.

"He has my rat!" Ron snaps but he just knows that the first year Gryffindor isn't feeling as confident as he had been when they arrived.

"You got a gold for it and I've already stated my price tag for it too." He says while glancing at his irked upper year house-mates.

"There, so if you can't match Potter's price then you'll have to make do without your rodent." One of the seventh years snaps. "So run along before you feel how sharp our fangs are."

Ron and his two henchmen gulp and beat a hasty retreat. "I thought you can't with only an owl? What you need a rat for?" One of the witches asks.

"Oh, you know, just going to use the pest to clear my godfather's name so I can make use of the newly expanded fortune." He says and since the truth is rather unbelievable that they'll dismiss it.

"Ah good and here we were wondering if we'd have to take you by the hand to teach you cunning." One of the group muses dryly while the group ranges about him, subtlety showing a united face before the public. "Well, if it doesn't work out for you, maybe you can try assassinating him after getting him to sign a will sighting you as his heir." The same wizard remarks.

With a bemused smile upon his face, he returns to eating his breakfast as he'll likely have a long day today. Conversation was sparse but that was fine with him as the other tables more then made up for the lack at their table.

Christmas Holidays . . .

Most of the morning had been spent flying to the prison. It hadn't been hard to get a Dementor and to herd the thing into an expandable bag. He lands at the shore and teleports to London.

With the Horcruxes in his possession as well as the prettified possessed teacher, he heads for the entrance of the Ministry of Magic. "Mr Potter?" Madam Bones inquires upon stepping out of the way in.

"Madam Bones." He says, "I hope this means that you made the arrangements that I asked for?"

"Indeed." Susan Bones' aunt says and with that, they entered into the building. An elevator ride later find him in the room with the veil and a group of people, particularly a few international reporters in the group and people from the ICW.

"Good day gentlemen and thank you for coming this day." He begins and then continues for a few seconds on that vein for a bit before getting to one of the reasons why he had them met him down here.

"Now then, I believe I have proof that Albus Dumbledore allowed an innocent man, my godfather, rot in prison, thus falsely standing in as my magical guardian. Might I introduce the supposedly dead Peter Pettigrew." He says and takes out the plastic rodent.

He places the transfigured rat down and signaled for them to have their wands at the ready before transfiguring the rodent back into flesh and blood. Madam Bones herself casts the Animagus reversion spell and within seconds, a short rodent featured man is cowering before the group as cameras flash. Before the man could say anything, he summons wands from Peter's person, one of which turns out to be Tom's very own wand.

"A chair if you please." The high ranking ICW man says and one of the international Auror does as asked. A chair appears and sports wrist and feet restrains, which Peter is manhandled to sit into while somebody takes out the most powerful truth potion out there, forcing three drops down Peter's throat.

The Q & A session takes place, they began with the basics before leading into deeper questions, particularly if the man thought that Albus knew of his status as a Death Eater, which Peter answers, "Likely." The questions went on to touch upon Peter's illegal Animagus form and the casting of the Fidelius Charm that had Peter become the Secret Keeper to if Albus knowing who the Secret Keeper was and ideas as to why Albus would want Sirius Black imprisoned. He found those to be very enlightening.

Oddly enough, one of the questions asked was, "Do you believe Albus Dumbledore has modified your memory?" The answer to that was, "Yes."

The questions end and the witnesses discuss this. Even if Albus does get a slap upon the wrist, the public all around the world will have read about this Q & A session before the man could do damage control.

"Now then, Mr Potter. What evidence do you have that Albus Dumbledore allowed this terror war of... Tom Riddle, to last as long as it did." The official asks him and he takes out a toy figure.

Within seconds, Quirrel without his turban is standing stiffly before them. "May I present into evidence the very shade man himself? As you can see, this man is clearly possessed and I'm sorry to say, but he's also the current Defense Against the Dark Arts professor this year at Hogwarts." He says and then brings out the Horcuxes, noting that Tom's eyes widen at there very sight.

"And the man's Horcruxes." He says and he watches as the spell expert the ICW brought along moves to casts various spells upon them. The man pales and murmurs, "My God... These each have fragments of a human soul... But the process to do this has been lost."

"Tom found the means at Hogwarts and from his head of house at the time. Don't you think it rather odd that Albus Dumbledore, who at the time was employed as the Transfiguration professor, never thought to look for these items when Tom here lost his body? The man was well verse in the metal arts back then and likely, if accidentally, read young Tom's mind on occasion. It wouldn't surprise me if Albus knew that Tom is the one who released Slytherin's monster from the Chamber of Secrets, which to this day as yet to be located and the monster dealt with, even though Albus has Fawkes." He informs the group.

"You seem to be rather knowledgeable about all of this." The important official says.

"I should be, I myself had been Horcrux before my visit with the goblin bank. My scar is where most of the soul had laid while my mother's sacrifice kept its tentacles at bay." He says. "I'm willing to vow an oath as I'm too young for that potion." He throws in.

It takes only a few seconds to made the vow and to prove that he still possesses his magic, which proves that he spoke the truth. "You seem to have it in for your headmaster." The official remarks and he snorts ever so slightly.

"Forgive me, but the man left me in an abusive home, as I'm sure Madam Bones had investigated," Harry nods towards the head of the Aurors in Britain. "Learnt that Ablus Dumbledore had done various questionable things while I lived at my aunt and uncles, like withdraw money from my family's vaults and has kept my father's Invisibility Cloak from me." He explains and takes out the bank statements that confirm said actions.

"Albus Dumbledore also had the Potter Will sealed." Madam Bones says and he's a bit startled by that admission, which seems to cause a few of the witnesses to chuckle. It seems that he just proved there were things he hadn't known, but then, he hadn't investigated that possibility.

With that, somebody created a table and forced Quirrel upon it with Tom's head looking up. The truth potion enter into the mouth before the prettifying spell is lifted. And so, for the first time, people would get to hear Tom Riddle's true reasons for becoming a Dark Lord and get a more accurate picture of what crimes the man had done before creating his army.

Much like himself, Tom did lay a lot of blame for his actions upon Dumbledore's feet. It seems that for a brief time, Tom had tried to earn Albus' approval in place of his father's but it hadn't worked out. The official even allowed a few of the reports to ask their own questions while the high ranking man tries to ward off a headache.

The interrogation goes on well into the evening, with minor breaks for food and for people to use the rest room. But once everyone had got answers for their questions and then some, he asks people to stand back as he's about to bring out the means in which he'll retract the soul bits from the items.

The Dementor's effects quickly occur within seconds of being released. Before the creature could come at him, he uses a Patronus Charm, the beast is that of a fox, to herd the dark creature to the items. It takes a few minutes but the Dementor finally lowers its hood and kisses the journal while Tom murmurs threats against him.

Once all of the items have been kissed, he glances over at the high ranking man. "Can I have it kiss Quirrel?" He asks and after a few seconds, he gets a nod.

With that, he creates another fox and the Dementor more then eagerly moves to kill Quirrel. With that done, he has the Patronus push the magical creature through the veil.

And thus, the murderer is finally defeated. Now for the enabler. He thinks to himself before the silence is broken.

Within minutes, everyone was moving away while the chair containing Peter is levitated and set to follow them out of the Department of Mysters. He, though, summons the items and is sure to put them back into the expandable bag he pulled them from.

Epilogue

Harry smiles as his eleven year old son finish downing the potions before dunking his head in the liquid knowledge. Pride fills him and he hears his youngest children sigh in longing. True, he taught them how to weld magic but they got bored with studying and saw this as a way around that.

They'll learn differently when its their turn. He thinks while glancing at his two eldest children. He has never married but that didn't stop him from sowing his oats as it were and most of the women he had been with had been non-magic using and hadn't wanted to be tied down with a kid, so he tended to get full custody of his children.

He doubts he'll ever find the right woman to share his life with but in the mean time, he has a house filled with children to look after and educate. He has three sons and five daughters, his youngest are a pair of twins, Casper and Chay, age five with his firstborn, a daughter he named Dorea, in honor of his grandmother, being sixteen.

Is it any wonder my hair isn't gray yet? I have five girls, at least Dorea doesn't show much interest in guys after what's his name dumped her. Although her relationship with Sakura does make me wonder... He muses while his eldest son, Tadhg, finishes absorbing the knowledge upon his fourth dunk.

His eldest son causes a fireworks display to happen in celebration while the rest of the brood charge forth to congratulate Tadhg. Pride flares up within him at the sight of all of his brood bonding together over this event.

He glances over towards a discarded plushie bear. With a shake of his head, he casts spells to repair the beloved Dumbies before summoning the transfigured Albus Dumbledore over to him, tucking the bear under his arm before moving forward to ruffle his son's wild brunet locks.

The End

God Sight 2: Ranma

I don't own Ranma 1/2.

He wanders through the village with a half moon shining down upon the village, himself, and this part of the world. Grass and flowers grown upon the streets of the village. The grass rustles from the mice and other tiny critters moving about it as the wind is rather gentle this night.

The buildings all possess vines climbing up them. He thought he spies thorns upon them but simply sighs. He didn't need to use his magical sight to know that this place is under a spell of some kind.

"Why are we here again, master?" A winged imp asks upon landing upon his shoulder. "This place... it's covered in powerful magics." Vile adds.

"Be at peace, Vile. The magic will not take us so easily." He says, nodding towards a jewelry shop that has been broken into. The robbers rest upon the floor with a blanket of dirt upon them as they sleep, affected by the enchantment the covers the whole of this village like mist.

The imp, Vile, takes to the air and flies through the ruined window to sit before a bag filled with the robbers' loot. "Might we take a few of the sparkles for ourselves, master?" The dark red imp asks while picking up a ring.

"Nay, Vile, we won't. We are here for something much more important then a jewelry or printed paper." He says, he never did get why so much importance is placed upon paper money. He gets the idea behind it, yes, but to place importance upon paper, something easily destroyed, not, he didn't see the point.

A loud screeching scream echos throughout the night, likely a rabbit's death cries as he presses onward, towards the huge tree that engulfs what appears to be a high school. The sound of dogs fighting follow seconds after the scream. Vile flies after him and is likely pouting about not being allowed to take something out of the shop, he could pretty much guess at the direction of his servant's thoughts.

If only I arrived a few minutes earlier, then Vile wouldn't have been summoned at all. A few minutes later and Vile wouldn't have been bonded to me either. He muses. A month more and then the imp will be released so he can return to his home dimension.

The terms of the summoning stated that the imp would bond with the strongest magic user in the room for a year and a day. He had entered just as the deal was finalized and since his possession of the God Sight is the strongest magical ability one can have, the imp and him got bound together, much to the devil lord's bemusement and the warlock's and his own dismay. Vile had cared a heck of a lot since either way, the then, dull brown, non-winged imp was just happy to be in this dimension.

It seems that an imp becoming a servant of a human magic user is a right of passage where Vile comes from. It wasn't unusually for the bonded imp to under go alterations like sprouting wings, spines, horns, or gaining of elemental abilities. The first change to happen to the imp had been his color changing to its current shade after three months of their relationship and the wings sprouting close to two months ago. The devilish being also seems to have picked up the ability to influence plants, which is rather odd from what he's read as imps and other devil types tend to go for fire, earth, or ice. Usually because such elements allow for dishing out massive amounts of damage.

"Vile, if you will." He says, motioning for the still small imp to move before him. "Let's see how you fair in influencing this tree." He adds, he might not like the fact that he's partnered with a devil, even if only temporary, but that didn't mean he wouldn't make use of the imp ever so often, if only to learn just how far along Vile has matured during their time together.

Vile perks at this, more then eager to test out his growing magical influence upon plants as well. The still two inch tall imp lands upon the ground, just a foot away from the gate. Using his second sight, he watches as Vile's own magical senses look for something before touching the tree's own magics. He watches as Vile and the tree's magical energies begin to mix slightly. Minutes later and the tree is mostly under Vile's control.

"Basement is where the book lies but the girl is in the nurse's office. Taken there when the spell finally caused her to sleep. She was there for three hours before the rest of them slumbered. The pair who used it left the book down there." The imp reports.

He nods, he can see that Vile spoke the truth. "The tree won't speak of what became of those two, will it?" He asks and Vile nods unhappily.

"It's only here because of the magic placed upon the girl. As it doesn't want to 'die' it focuses on keeping anyone from reaching her." Vile states with a mighty frown and as the tree's magical energies pick up on Vile's goal, it begins to fight with the imp, which causes the tiny devil to cry out slightly in startlement.

He watches as the imp begins to fight back. He doesn't do anything other then stand back and watch the on going fight. He did notice that the massive tree is trembling and growing not just up but outwards as well. A minor shield keeps the tree's roots from interrupting Vile's mental concentration, it's clear that the imp hasn't yet reached the stage where he can maintain both a mental focus and a physical one at the same time.

Finally, after a good ten minutes, Vile beats back the tree's will and is the tree's master. As the little imp comes to notice his surroundings, Vile causes the tree to move its roots, forming a tunnel into the school building. He picks up the exhausted imp and heads inside, they'll get to the girl before going for the book as if they delay too long, the tree might gather enough energy to challenge Vile's hold over it.

Once they're within the right classroom, he gets a good look at the girl before glancing at the boy who was sitting in the chair next to the bed. He didn't really need his magical sight to see that this is the right boy, the young teen's prince charming. With a slight nod, he causes the sleeping spell to fizz out for a few minutes upon the boy. The boy wakes yawning and stretching. "What a weird dream..."

"Yes, well, if you would be so kind, just a kiss and this will all go away. The ageless sleep will cancel and all shall wake to find a few years have passed, not as much as Rip Van Wrinkle but still enough to give one a better understand of what he went through." He explains as he alters the young man's attire to reflect his role and alters the girl resting upon the bed to reflect her own role in this little fairy-tale made real.

The boy jerks while cheeks reddening. Getting to his feet, the prince leans over the princess, their lips touch but for a second. The spell ends as the girl wakes and then blushes heavily up at the sight of the teen. He's already heading out as the two begin to talk, the boy stuttering and the girl speaking rather shily.

The damage done by the tree's growth is undone as the tree fades into an illusion and then into a mist filled light. He's sure that within an hour, the rest within the school will wake and within the coming of the next day, the whole town plus later comers will wake. Vile falls limply upon his arm and soft snores inform him that the little imp is resting.

Once he retrieved the book, he uses the shadows to take him to the study of the half-fae who hired him. "Your father's gift, sir." He says in slightly flawed English as he holds the book out to the half-fae.

"Excellent." The man takes the leather back volume from his right hand. "Here's your gold." The fae blooded man says after reaching into a desk drawer, a small bag just an inch taller then Vile is tosses to his right hand, he catches it and with a nod, uses the shadows to leave the office and to arrive at his house in the African Congo.

He places Vile upon the doll size bed that rests upon a bookshelf of his office. He lowers his hood before taking off his hooded jacket. He hooks the hood onto a hook next to the open window.

He stretches a bit before taking out the bag. He opens the purse strings and picks out one of the tiny bars. He places it upon the desk and watches as it glows brightly in the sun while expanding to be a good foot in length and a few inches in height. With a satisfied nod, he picks up the bar, he wills the still hanging enchantment to be reapplied, with that he puts the bar back into the bag, and then heads to a painting of a satyr.

With a touch at the frame, the appearance of a vault's surface pokes out. He solves the puzzle around the edge of the turning knob before moving the lever. The metal clicks and then he enters the code number using the turning knob before moving the lever once more. This time the click leads to the door swinging open to reveal two baskets, one saying In and the other saying Out. He places the tiny bag upon the in basket and watches as the bag vanishes. Seconds later, a sheet arrives in the Out basket and upon taking it, he closes the vault door.

The vault's face vanishes while he reads the sheet informing him of the latest bids for his help. For the first time since he left his father four years ago, he spies the name Tendo upon his bid list. He hums thoughtfully as he sides down upon one of the two couches in his office as he muses about said family, one he hadn't thought about since he left Tokyo.

He has a rather good idea of what the Tendos were hiring him to do, either track down himself down or find ways to cure them of their gifts... their curses. He wonders if Genma still resides with the family as he inclines more upon the couch.

A ring catches his attention and he gets up off the couch to get his cell phone from his jacket. "Hello?'

- { = [

He watches as Vile fades from view before the devil lord, too, vanishes, only after studying him for a few seconds though. He knew he'll miss the little guy perched up onto his shoulder but he didn't want to pay the price the devil lord had requested as the price to be bonded with Vile for another year and a day. "Maybe I should try for a faerie next for a familiar..."

It takes him a few seconds to realize that yes, he had thought that but he also spoke it out loud. With a slight chuckle, he turns and leaves the Be-Devil, a pub mostly visited by warlocks who've made deals with devils and demons. It wasn't a 'respectable' establishment as it caters to those who prefer the 'dark' side of magic like chaos and death.

Once outside, he heads down the street while he muses about his life without the winged imp. As his watch beeps, he heads for an alley way to use the shadows of such a place to transport him to Tokyo as he does have a meeting with Nabiki Tendo to sound out what it is they want from him.

He doesn't worry about her recognizing him as he's used various potions to permanently alter his skin color while relying upon illusions to hide his hair and eye's natural color while a simple pendent to alter his voice. The hood will also obscure his facial features.

He finds the ice cream parlor and places a simple order. With said treat in hand, he moves to sit at a booth, waiting for his wanna-be client to arrive. More then a few high schoolers glance in his direction with wary eyes which likely means that the bad karma of the Tendo and Saotome families has come to roost in this ward. I wonder what kind of things they've witnessed?

Suddenly, a horde of adult women and older teens thunder after a darting figure in black. He blinks as the horde armed with brooms, hooked poles, and an assortment of kitchen utensils bellow cries of 'there he goes', 'come on girls, we're almost upon him', and 'get that pervert.' As the horde vanishes, people come out of their hiding holes and resume their activities.

With a slight shake of his head, he returns to slowly eating his ice cream, enjoying it as he rarely got it during the trip he had made with his father. Sure, he can buy tubs of it but he rarely goes to the trouble of serving it in fancy ways like making shakes with it or even adding pop to it, he learnt of that from his time in the Americas; Canada and the US. I wonder if I can find a place that sells Slurpee?

Needless to say, he's sampled a lot of things since he left his father and has come to enjoy them. As he gets mid way through the sundae, Nabiki and a guy, likely Akane, arrive. He studies the pair using the God Sight while Akane moves to place their orders while Nabiki heads in his direction.

"You must be Vincenz." Nabiki states upon arriving at the table. He nods as he motions for the young woman to take a seat. "I'm Tendo Nabiki and my... brother is Kane." Nabiki informs him with a slight smile tugging at her lips.

"I take it that Kane is short for Akane?" He asks. "I see you have yet to figure out the catch of that spell." He muses before savoring another spoonful of ice cream while Nabiki's eyes light up.

"And what catch is that?" Nabiki asks and he replies, "Why, she just needs to apologize to the party that she strikes out at while angry. Although, it seems she has a lot to apologize for until she'll be allowed to return to her proper gender."

"Is that so... is that so..." Nabiki muses thoughtfully while watching as the currently male Akane arrives to the table with Nabiki and Akane's order. "I don't have to pay for that information, do I?" The middle sister of the Tendo family asks after moving over to allow the male Akane to sit down.

"Consider it a demonstration of my talent." He answers and Akane merely looks between them with a frown. "So then, what does this job that I may take entail?" He asks.

"I suppose you've heard of Kyuuga 'Ranma' Nijito? The one who transforms into a fu dog?" Nabiki inquires and he hums in agreement.

It hadn't been that hard to find somebody so down on his luck that he would do anything to escape their current life. He found one of those and gave them such an out on the condition that they were willing to not only transform into a fu dog but also agreeing to subvert their own memories for those of a stranger. Magic ensured that not only would his substitute be branded with the two names but that their body would posses the fine tuning of his own since the young teen he had approached had not studied the art of the body at all.

The desperate teen did have a few conditions before he would go through with it and they were something he would have added, although not as strongly as his substitute wanted. While he couldn't give the guy the God Sight, he did give his substitute the ability to see the energies of chi and ki. It wasn't that hard and as the magical gift of the God Sight's limits unknown, few people would likely pursue deeper into the matter much once they figure out that his substitute could see chi and ki.

As it was, that gift of seeing those two energies was a very valuable gift in its own right. It would explain the 'magic' of it as well. It's are to say where chi, ki, and magic manipulation ended or began after all.

"Ah yes, the welder of the fabled God Sight." He muses as he turns his bowl so that the remaining ice cream is closer to his body. "That one is touched with chaos and chaos is not something a businessman like myself enjoys dealing with, if you get my drift." He adds.

"He's not that tough." Akane scuffs, clearly still believing to be the top 'dog'. "He's a cheater, if it weren't for this second sight of his, I have wiped the floor with his face over a hundred times!" The girl turn boy growls while Nabiki and himself watches as Akane stab the glass filled with ice cream.

"It seems you have a long history with him then?" He asks and while Akane growls, Nabiki just nods. "Perhaps you can fill me in upon this matter more fully? After all, one doesn't go after a wild card without a very good reason." He adds, he is rather curious about the gifts he left their elder sister and their... parent.

Nabiki tries to extract his reasons for inquiring while Akane didn't need much prompting. The ex-girl talks about the disguising behavior that overtakes their elder sister, one that causes her to be such a pervert! Akane goes on and on about tattoos Kasumi returns home with or about the totally attitude that is so much ruder then her normal behavior, so much so that it caused Soun to cry and... transform.

Before Akane begins to rant and rave about the changes in their parent, Nabiki holds up a hand to stop Akane from speaking. "I think that's enough for now." Nabiki says.

"Yes, I believe so. I'd say that Ranma just activated your karma and the physical transformation aspects might have to do with his curse." He says. "In the end, even if I did manage to over come him and bring Ranma here, he wouldn't be able to do anything. He just planted the seed, if you will, and it seems that those seeds have found very fertile ground in your karma accumulation."

Nabiki's face sours as she finally gets what he's implying. "You mean for us to be cured, we'd have to actively work on doing actions that would undo whatever kinds of karma we've accumulated. Which means for us total shift our current set of values and to 'better' ourselves in the spiritual sense, doesn't it?"

"That sounds about right. Only when you totally shed the behaviors that feed this... sapling growing within your karma, you'll never be rid of these curses. It is rather hard to alter once behavior outside of childhood and even then, it's questionable if the changes go deep enough to replace old tested and true method." He explains and it's rather true, they have their outs, they just need to pursue them.

"So basically, we just wasted time here, chatting with you." Akane states with a hint of anger.

"Oh, I won't say that. You now know why none of your previous efforts to remove them ever worked." He points out. "Besides, I'm not charging you for this meeting, so that's something as well." He adds as he finishes off the rest of his sundae.

With that, he gets up and leaves the ice cream shop. Once in the shadow of a building, he vanishes from Tokyo to get something much more filing then ice cream, likely from this little place he knew in Mexico.

The End . . .

The Company DNA Built: Animorphs

I don't own Animorphs or Naruto.

Fantasy Morphs. The brain child of Leon Gounding, the legendary founder of the rebel group, the Broken. This company offers, as the name suggests, altered DNA to acquire at a set price.

That's right folks, you can now acquire that unicorn you always wanted or soar through the air as a gryphon. The mythical it seems, is finding a way to break into the real world and through alien gene multiplication from an extinct race called Arn; a race that the Yeerks had killed off during their conquest of the Hork-Bajir homeworld and the creators of the Hork-Bajir race.

The likely beginning of the company likely began when Leon Gounding had began reviewing Taxxon DNA to see if he could alter their forms so they lack the consent hunger that was characteristic of the race, which lead to them volunteering to serve as controllers. The use of the Escafil device gave the grumbling Taxxons the means in which to acquire the modified DNA. Leon had also created a hunger suppressant for Taxxons; which is still used by Ambassador Arbron.

With the defeat of the Yeerk Invasion within sight, Leon Gounding began to design a Nothlit form for the Yeerk Peace Movement, which soon became the default Nothlit form for all Yeerks on Earth with the exception being those who chose Earth native animal morphs or those like ex-Visser One, Esplin 9466 Prime, who are serving prison sentences.

The company formally came together after the Alien Right clause was adding into the Bill of Rights and the Nothlit Yeerks received citizenship within the US. As few were looking to hire their would be conquerors, the founding of Fantasy Morph gave the new alien citizens work and the base of operation started out to be one of the Yeerk orbital ships until which time they manage to appropriate office space.

By the time they did finally open, they had created the common morphs for mythical beast such as unicorn, dragon, kirin, hippogriff, pegasus, winged lion, and gryphon. For the grand opening, they released humanoid morphs such as trolls, goblins, elf, dwarf, centaur, beast person, tengu, ogre, orc, satyr, faun, minotaur, and lizard folk. A free service they offer is to allow the customer to pick out fur/hair color, length, skin tone, eye color, eye shape, genetic body tattoos, and other little personal touches, living up to their promise of no two morphs sharing the identical DNA. Although there had been grumbling concerning their policy of no gender bending, which would allow men to acquire female morphs or for women to acquire male morphs.

Fantasy Morphs has a policy concerning creating copy righted morphs based upon popular fictional races that come from movies, games, television, anime, and books. They also have a policy concerning the creation of human morphs. Although there are rumors that Fantasy Morphs are bargaining with various owners concerning the selling of morphs based off of their copy right species.

Fantasy Morphs do offer private custom morphs for those looking to create a certain race, be it humanoid or animal, particularly one of their own making. Many artist from various art sites have approached the company to create a morph that has all of the appearance and physical abilities of their creation. Fantasy Morphs do save this information and will only allow those with permission from their creator to acquire said morph.

Although Fantasy Morphs will continue to expand their data banks concerning morphs, the company does seem to be opening a side business by selling engineered plants which is an attempt to counter the pollution that we, humans, have been releasing through using fossil fuels. The company even created a type of tree that is capable of releasing ozone particles.

It causes one to wonder if soon we'll be seeing a new kind of weed trying to finish what the Yeerks started.

Leon snorts softly at the article. They had done decades of research until they finally found a way to make their plants totally dependent upon the simple energy wave their specifically designed plant boxes would radiate with. The energy wave is harmless although they don't plan to release the fact they're using it as they'll likely be targeted by cons.

The twenty looking blond glances up at the kitchen cloak as he finishes eating his pancakes. Once done, Leon piles his plate with his fork and knife, quickly downs his juice; even after two decades he doesn't like coffee in any form. Placing the empty glass upon his plate, he stands up and then picks up the plate, heading for the dish washer.

Once that's done, Leon stands before a mirror. The blond rubs his left cheek with his fingers. Ever since the demon calling it... himself Kyuubi manage to force an episode of morphing-sickness while he was in mid-morph, his whisker like marks upon his face became almost invisible upon his face, although they can be made visible if he allowed himself to tan.

If it hadn't been for the Kyuubi, the Yeerk he voluntarily allowed to crawl into his head wouldn't have died upon first infestation or attempt at taking over his mind. The crimson energy the demon is capable of emanating killed Iniss 213's mind and the Kyuubi made Iniss 213's body a puppet; causing the body to exit and reenter him, he would have likely continue to host a Yeerk until either something happened and he died in a fight or the war ended.

Although Iniss 213 mentally died, the Yeerk's memories became his so he manage to successfully pretend to be Iniss 213. The blond had only been nine when he joined the Sharing. Leon had always felt like an outsider, he had been great at sports as few had his reflexes, speed, strength, or stamina. He had been intelligent and could have skipped ahead but wanted to stay with his age-mates.

How ironic that my life really did change that day, but not in the way they wanted. Leon muses as he heads out of his house, being sure to activate the morph helper, it allows for non-skin tight cloths to be stored in the Z-space. Once sure that it's functioning, Leon steps into a screened area to transform into his goshawk morph.

His cloths vanish within a second of his first changes begin to happen. As the morph's instincts arise, Leon moves to stand before the porch before taking off. Leon could have used one of his 'fantasy' morphs to fly to work but enjoyed the lack of drag that comes with more then one set of legs. I wonder if we shouldn't add a phoenix morph to the list of mythical beasts. We can base the feathers off of a hummingbird's own feathers to give the illusion of being made of fire.

About thirty minutes later, Leon arrives at the office building serving as the main base of Fantasy Morphs. The ex-demon possessed business owner lands upon the flight door. Landing upon perch set up to open the dog size flap, he hops from the perch to the porch before the door. With that done, Leon walks through and once he's on the carpet, the door flap closes.

Leon moves to glance to the right and finds that somebody is occupying that room so he checks to the left. Upon finding it empty, he walks over into it and pressing this button using his beak. The door closes behind Leon and with a minor glide, he moves from the porch by the small door to the floor. With that, Leon de-morphs and before leaving the room, he flips the switch to allow the tiny to open.

As Leon gets a foot or two away, a customer's eyes light up at the sight of the room and enters into the room. The light above the door goes from green to red, signaling that somebody is using it. Ever since morphing became available to the public, most have taken to flying into work instead of driving to, which is how the morphing helper became a common house hold item.

"Leon, we have another asking for the chick special." Estril 465 says as the blond is about to enter into his office. Leon glances over at the Nothlit Yeerk, one of Estril's five eyes have risen up from its usual position upon the large, flat skull.

Like all Yeerks stranded upon Earth, Estril 465's Nothlit stands seven feet in height, sporting five eyes, two positioned where a human's is, another pair of eyes are more to the side of the head and up a few inches while the last is positioned at the top of the head. Along the bottom of the jaw are heat sensing glands and the upper jaw sport a series of six nostrils about an inch round.

Leon designed their Nothlit form to possess an array of senses from the basics like sight and smell to heat sensing pits and a gel throughout their body to allow them to detect electric impulses while submerged in water. Leon had even gifted them with gills upon their backs to prolong their time underwater.

Leon had also given them the ability to switch genders between male, female, and neuter which is neither, at last once every two years. The minimum amount of offspring they can have is five with the maximum being twelve. It had been rather troublesome to ensure that each Yeerk acquired unique DNA, the Chee had helped by creating a program that altered one of the 'parent' chromosomes, which kind of gives a Yeerk two half siblings at the most. The same program is in use today to ensure their policy of everyone getting a unique set of genetics for their morphs.

"Another one, huh? That's the third this week." Leon muses while Estril 645 merely nods while finishing filing some documents before returning to his own office.

A chick special is an elderly client looking to create a young, practically a babe, morph in which to restart their life. It's not that surprising actually as the elderly always wanting a way to recapture their youth. Not long after the discovery of the old acquiring young, beautiful and becoming Nothlits, did it the first law suits began concerning the legality of DNA ownership.

The first case of an elderly person coming to Fantasy Morphs had been two weeks after the first series of advertisements for the company began show up in sci-fi and fantasy magazines. As the DNA they possess doesn't have actual, living members, it wasn't a crime to acquire young members of these fictional species. The person had been rich and slowly dying from cancer, but hadn't felt ready to give up on life.

After a lot of wheeling and dealing, they settled upon not only the new age of the morph but how long the creature would live. It had been trying but doable and so, this person settled upon an unicorn base morph, as the person did plan on breeding, as they manage to get a few other people on board for this, they had to pay more special mind to the internal systems, which they then applied to the basic unicorn design that they sell.

They would go onto applying that same dedication to detail to the rest of their morphs that they are selling now and in the future. As they hadn't sold many morphs before this particular client, so they hadn't needed to do a recall as it were.

Make you wonder how many Yeerks thought to make use of Arn technology to create specialized hosts. Leon muses as he enters into his office, ready to face this client, thoughts of other business pushed aside.

"Tobias." Leon says, nodding towards the young blond teen, the co-founder of Xanadu, a 'retirement' resort. "How's Allen?" The blond asks as he closes the door before glancing over at the group consisting of an elderly couple with likely their lawyers.

"He's doing fine, Rachel hopes to have him potty trained by Halloween." Tobias replies before moving on to introducing the couple. It's not as though they need to met face to face or have lawyers present but, then, it likely gave the clients a feeling of security; not that it would do much good since the majority of those in the office are war-veterans and if they don't already possess the physical means to tear a man apart, then they can morph into something that can.

And thus, the meeting began.

The Broken. The Animorphs. The two seem so interchangeable but back then, they each had started at different times and with different founders. The Broken began a few years before the Andilites fleet arrived and though it had possessed very few members and lack the ability to morph, it didn't mean that they didn't have a presence before the Animorphs formed and began their notable raids.

Leon Gounding, posing as Iniss 213, began the Broken by placing minor counter ads and ominous warnings concerning the Sharing. These minor ads were rarely given much mind, even by the Yeerks as most believed it was the ramblings of a crazy person looking for some organization to pin conspiracies to but we now know that they were in actuality warning against the Sharing and trying to warn people off from becoming full members. Those that joined typically were bore, anti-social teens looking for something to do in their spare time.

With the aid of these teens, Leon began to make minor changes to Yeerk feeding schedules, targeting particularly cruel but minor Yeerks and arrange for their abduction upon the day they needed to return to the Yeerk pool to feed. Within twenty-four hours, those teen who thought it just a prank soon learnt otherwise when something crawled out of the, then, controller's head and the person suddenly began thanking them for holding them hostage.

With a small number of freed human controllers, the groups activities truly began as the ex-host possessed their Yeerk's memories and as none of the entrances possessed screening technology, the free hosts were able to gain entrance to the Yeerk pool to liberate weapons and items as it was too risky to attempt to free anyone from the cages. Once they had the items they needed, the humans would exit out of the Yeerk pool, make one last stop at the bank before vanishing off both the human radar and the Yeerk's own.

Since Leon targeted not just Yeerks in control of non-voluntary hosts, but those possessing semi-specialized skills, those newly freed humans began to make use of those skills to create the necessary items to help create bases and looking for ways to hack into the Yeerk data banks. Leon would also smuggle out spare parts and drop them off at pre-arranged spots, since none of the Broken; it continued to allow for Leon's identity and goals remain secret, even if the Yeerks did begin hunting the Broken down.

As the demon that resided in Leon's body continued to use the mindless body of Iniss 213 as a puppet, Leon had to tread carefully as Leon could not afford for Iniss to get promoted out of him and into a more 'suitable' hose less his condition be revealed and likely killed upon discovery but also had to remain high enough in rank to access more restrictive files. It should be noted that whie Leon no longer hosts the demon known as Kyuubi, he does continue to be immune to the energies that the Kyuubi welds and that the demon had used to kill Iniss' mind and allowed the demon to control the dead Yeerk's body.

Upon the defeat of the Andilite fleet above Earth at the hands of the Visser Three and Elfangor's last moments upon our world, the Broken still consisted of thirty ex-human controllers and twenty members who hadn't been controllers. The Broken had been getting ready to begin taking bolder actions against the Yeerks when the Animorphs began their first, clumsy raids against the Yeerks. While the first raid of the Animorphs did free a large group of human controllers, the Broken hadn't been able to keep more then five from being recaptured as the arrival of the 'Andilitie Bandits' came as a surprise.

It wouldn't take long before the Broken began to take a different course of action then they had originally planned to take. Instead of starting to raid the Yeerks head on, they began to watch and wait to see how this new fraction would act and react while only stepping up upon placing warning ads concerning the Sharing. After a year, Leon decided to do something concerning the blood samples the 'Andilite Bandits' leave behind and one simple DNA test revealed the truth of the 'Andilite Bandits'.

Leon tries to piece together what it could mean as he deleted his test results. Leon would also go on to authorize the use of DNA eliminating chemicals, using a few cases concerning where a reporter would find some blood pool that their people within the police force often missed. Leon, as Iniss, suggested spraying these chemicals at the sites they can't easily close off or control the access of. It soon every human controller possessed a bottle concerning a chemical compound to be used encase of emergencies.

With that delaying the unveiling of the truth, Leon then had the Broken keep an eye upon the construction site Elfangor had landed upon and died at. They were to keep an eye out for any alien technology that the Yeerk clean up crew could have missed. This proved to be a brilliant idea as a young teen name David discovered the Escafil device and a member of the Broken paid the boy for finding their 'lost' sculpture, the member paid David forty dollars as a reward.

And so, the Broken gain possession of the Escafil device with each member but Leon gaining the ability to morph. The Escafil device also brought the two rebel groups together as the Animorphs raid one of their bases to get the Escafil device, the Broken would hand the device over to the Animorphs as Leon had ordered them to do if they ever came face to face with the 'Andilite Bandits'. Because of this standing order, the Animorphs revealed who and what they truly were. Through this, the Broken and the Animorphs began to work together as the Animorphs, being expert morphers, taught the members of Broken the 'art' of morphing.

While the two groups would go on missions together, they remain separate as the Animorphs continued to live their lives with their family while the Broken remain apart from human society for their safety. It would be until the arrival of a Black Ops team of Andilites would Leon be exposed as Leon had witnessed select members de-morphing but they hadn't had the time to do much other then escape while Leon said that the 'Andilite Bandits' had escape in human morphs. A few days later, Leon would appear in the base and members of both groups wanted to imprison him but manage to convince both that he was indeed the founder of the Broken like he claimed.

Both were highly skeptical concerning Leon's claim concerning being possessed by a demon and that it had killed his Yeerk's consciousness while using the Yeerk's body as a puppet. Upon examining the body and finding something seriously wrong with it did either groups believe Leon's claim, although they seem to be more convinced that Leon just has some kind of mutation to explain what happen to the Yeerk. Leon would then be up front with the groups and bring up the idea that they need to acquire Andilitie morphs to throw off any future DNA tests the Yeerk could do to unspoiled samples of their blood, using how he discovered that the 'Andilite Bandits' being humans posing as Andilites.

It is believed that after a few days of thinking it over, Leon revealed blood samples of Andilites that the Yeerks possessed and they used the Frolis Maneuver to create unique Andilite morphs. Other then morphing into Andilites just to see what they appear to be, neither the Broken or the Animorphs have made any use of their Andilite morphs.

As both groups come to terms with Leon's presence in their respective pasts, they offered to allow Leon to pick up the ability to morph but Leon declines, not thinking it a wise idea. Considering what happened concerning the Kyuubi's release from Leon, it was likely a wise choice, although the groups tried to change Leon's mind while they tried to keep the Escafil device out of Yeerk hands.

As the Yeerks go after the Escafil device, Leon and the Yeerk pool played host to a pair of unusual humans, one of which is said to sport blue skin and sports certain features that suggests a shark. While their origin is unknown, what is known is that the pair caused massive amounts of damage trying to get at Leon. Eye witnesses and filmed records show the blue skinned some how manipulating water to floor specific areas while the young, unassuming one calls forth fire, the majority of which seems the basic kind but also this strange black flames that consume anything, including stone and metal.

The pool area was evacuated as best as they could, more then a few hosts managing to escape in the chaos while Visser Three and his warriors try to fend the pair off. After about three hours, the pair vanish as suddenly as they arrived. It would take weeks before the pool to be repaired.

It would be three months before the pair would reappear and this time, at Leon and the Animorphs' school. The area became blanketed with thick mist and they once more, try for Leon but Leon manages to make it to the parking lot where he hot wiring a car before leading the pair away from the school. Jake had been given a note telling the Animorphs to stay at school but Rachel disobeyed and went after the three.

Leon lead the pair about the city, disobeying various traffic laws and it wasn't long before a news helicopter also got involved in the chase. The chase ended when Leon managed to run the ruby eyed, fire welding man over, causing him to vanish in a puff of smoke. Gun fire from the near by police station, likely one of the controllers on the force, caued the blue skinned one to vanish in another puff of smoke.

Before a third occurrence could happen, Visser Three sent Leon up onto one of the orbiting ships under the pretense of Leon being pulled out of school. While the Yeerks would examine Leon for a month, they would only find that Leon's brain activity different ever so slightly from most humans, bones denser, muscles denser, above average reflexes, and as a very tiny variation genetic difference from other humans, not enough to get him classified as another species but still is rather noticable. None of these tests revealed the demon, Kyuubi's presence within Leon.

While Leon was bored upon the ship, he began to toy with a genetic sequencer that the Arn created. Leon would take different blood samples from races the Yeerks encountered and began running them through. In time, Leon would focus upon the Taxxon DNA, looking for the markers that characterized their eternal hunger. When asked what he was doing with either, Leon claimed to be developing hunger suppressant for the Taxxons as humans did come up with the same thing.

While Leon was up on the orbiting ship and the two rebel groups dealing with other things, the pair that seem focus upon capturing Leon made contact with Visser Three. They came to some agreement that involved turning over Iniss' host body over to them upon the condition that they allow Visser Three acquire their DNA. Leon hadn't been happy to hear but it would be the Kyuubi that would give Leon the distraction that he needed to flee.

The Kyuubi had altered Iniss' body enough to cause it to explode and to wash its energies over an area. As Leon proved immune to the energy and the others weren't, Leon managed to get away before anyone managed to chase after him. Leon would arrive at a Broken safe house possessing the altered

Taxxon DNA and the only copy of the Taxxon hunger suppressant.

Without much of an excuse not to accept the ability to morph, Leon would acquire the ability and would acquire a male goshawk, a crow, a barn owl, a Hork-Bajir, a dog, a fox, a coyote, an elk, leopard, hyena, a python, a dolphin, a river otter, and a rino before the Kyuubi would make use of these DNA sample to create its current body.

During the arrival of Visser Two, Arbron would make contact with the two groups. And as we all know, the Taxxons would all rebel from the Yeerks while the Visser Two was on Earth. As the Broken had reproduced the Escafil device, the majority of Taxxons upon Earth had quickly gained the ability to morph and acquired the altered DNA that Leon supplied.

With the Taxxons now fighting to stop the rebellion and the Hork-Bajir pressing to free more of their people, the Yeerks stopped with their cover war and came out into the open. The Animorphs would further cause fraction within the Yeerk forces by allowing them to take the reconstructed box version of the Escafil device and the Yeerk Peace Movement would capitalize upon its appearance to open their fellow Yeerk's mind concerning why should they continue to infest when they can gain their own bodies through becoming Nothlits.

Visser Three tries to squash this movement by starving the morph capable Yeerks, the movement applied to both human groups and once more, it would be Leon that would construct the Yeerk's Nothlit form. With help from those Yeerks sympathetic to their fellow Yeerk's suffering, they would allow the lab upon one of the newly landed ships to be 'captured' for Leon's use. By the end of the first day, Leon had come up with the morph the Yeerks would live as for the rest of their life in.

The Andilite fleet would appear two weeks after the Yeerks surrendered and open diplomatic relations with Earth's many nations. Much to their chagrin, the secrets of the Escafil device had been figured out. By the end of the year, alien scientists would begin to create the morph helper as morphing would become something that the common man, woman, and child get and use.

How did something that simple get so complicated? Leon wonders as the group finally leaves while Tobias remains. "You sure they're not with any government organization? They seem to like asking a lot of questions, particularly after we showed them that storyboard."

"Jake hasn't mentioned anything concerning an investigation targeting either of us. Although it's been a while since any of us has spoken with Cassie." Tobias says. "But that's likely because she's been out of the country doing that tour for the pass four months."

"Marco is rather busy with his book tour." Leon adds thoughtfully. "The Kyuubi hasn't messaged me in the last two years. Ax is visiting his folks with Estrid."

Tobias hums while Leon finishes putting on this dimensional location bracelet that he keeps in his desk encase that dimensional group decides to pluck him from this world to theirs. The blond had almost forgotten about it in all of the hustle with the five hour long meeting. Tobias had taken breaks to de-morph while he had some drinks delivered to the office for everyone.

"I should head home. Rachel likely can do with a break." Tobais says as they head for the door.

As Leon is about to respond, the blond feels unbalanced. "What..." Leon murmurs while reach out for the wall to lean on.

"You ok?" Tobias asks and as something seems to jerk Leon, Tobias begins to curse. As the teen appearing ex-Animorph reaches out to grab Leon but the hand is shocked back upon touching the twenty year old blond ex-Broken.

Leon vanish in a puff of smoke, leaving Tobias alone by the open door for a few seconds before the seemingly younger blond heads back to Leon's desk to use the phone.

To be continued . . . ?

Cursing Using Fairy Tales 1

I don't own Harry Potter or the fairy tale, Beauty and the Beast.

The spell book costed him a fortune but then, the money he used to purchase it had been stolen from the goblin bank. He had used a time turn to do so but it had been well worth the effort. Here's hoping that the enchanted gold won't be noticed until the spell runs out.

He doesn't feel an ounce of guilt about the thief as the goblins clearly weren't neutral in this silent war going on between Draco and his own. Ever since he had cured himself of a certain love potion's effect and spent a solid two years in the 'muggle' world, he has found few allies among European Wizarding Society. It didn't help matters that he got engaged to a woman who's family comes from a long line of magical priests and priestesses from Central America.

His wife's family could trace their linage back before the founding of the Aztec empire. He's lucky to have had the chance to met her, let alone be engaged to her, but that, of course, didn't mean much since the majority of the European magical communities just saw her skin color and her slight accent. But then, what can you expect from a society stuck in the age just before the Victorian age?

A dog barking causes him to glance up and come out of his thoughts. If he was going to do this, he best get on with it, particularly as the make up and other effects were becoming uncomfortable. No magic went into the creation of his disguise, although the fairy tale concerning this spell about to be casted clearly stated that the sorceress had used magic to alter her appearance. Perhaps Liz is right and she used an illusion spell to appear beautiful before applying the curse.

Leaning slightly heavily upon the cane, he finally arrives at Draco Malfoy's manor, one that his father had given him a month after the war trails were over. He had a vague idea of who was in attendance as he walks up to the door of the house. Coughing slightly, he raps his knuckle upon the door.

A house elf appears seconds after such an action. "Jolly is under orders to only allow those with invites into the house." The fragile being says.

"I am a poor fellow down upon his luck. I hope to ask the owner of this fine manor for a room for the night." He says in a soft voice that he hopes will keep anyone from identifying himself upon hearing him.

"Jolly will fetch master then." The house elf states and pops away.

He waits at the door for thirty minutes before rapping his knuckles upon the door once more. Again, the house elf appears. "Master says that yous got to leave the property or else." Jolly the house elf says.

He smiles inwardly upon hearing this. "Perhaps he'll be interested in purchasing this rose for a few coins? With the coins, I can at least purchase a room at an inn. This night is fairly chilly for someone like me." He tells Jolly, holding out a rose stem as thick as any wand, sporting a bud that sparkles like fire in the light of the porch light.

Jolly stares in wonderment at the rose and remains so for close to two minutes before popping away. With that, the trap is baited. He thinks to himself as he moves the rose back into his sleeve.

The door jerks open within the next four minutes to reveal a very disgruntled Draco Malfoy. "My elf says you are selling a pretty rose. Well? Get on with it! I don't have all night!"

The rose sparkles magnificently in the light supplied within the hall. Draco's face displays awe for a few seconds before a sneer gets fixated upon his face. "Might I see it? The light here is rather poor." His old rival asks as politely as a Malfoy could.

"I better get my coin if you, my good sir, finds the rose to your liking." He murmurs before handing the rose over. Malfoy steps back from the door and holds it to one of the torches and it's clear that Draco enjoys how it sparkles like fire within the light provided by said torch.

"My coin, good sir? This night is not getting any warmer." He says after three minutes.

That stirs Malfoy out of his admiration and the man merely sneers and with a wave of his hand, the door slams shut upon his face. "Then you shouldn't have let me hold it, you fool." Draco replies.

He waits a few seconds as he feels magic surge about him before it rushes into the house. As all of the lights get blown out and Draco begins to scream, he finally allows himself to chuckle under his breath before it becomes full blown laughter.

"I had hoped you enjoyed what seeing your reflection one last time, Draco! For I doubt after this night you'll find it as appealing as you once did. You should have remember your manners or given thought of entering into verbal contracts! Enjoy your new perspective on things, for I believe you'll have the rest of your life to get use to them!" He calls out while Draco's screams become that of kelling beast.

Once he's out of the gate, Draco howls in rage while a chorus of other screams ring through the night. He turns about and watches as the curse's magic transforms the wall and the gate, causing it to take on a more sinister appearance. In time, the human screams die off, he wonders what fate those guests of Draco's were but doesn't care, be they become enchanted furniture or take on ghostly attributes, they're fate was decided when they attended Draco's party.

With a soft crack, he vanishes from the cursed manor and appears at his home. "And?" Liz asks as he begins to take off his outer wear.

"Like a charm. We shall see who missing in the morning or later. For now though, I hope you're willing to help me in a little venture concerning restoring my good looks to me." He says to his wife, their wedding had happened earlier that day. It had sadden him to find so few people at their wedding.

"Of course, my husband, I wouldn't want to be seen in our wedding bed with a man clearly not my husband." Liz says as she moves to aid him in taking off the layers of rags that he put on to add to his disguise.

Four Days Later . . .

"Huh, I never would have guessed..." He murmurs as he catches sight of a head line concerning a list of absentee government workers, their families, and other such people which, sadly enough, included certain branches of the Weasley family.

"Master Harry, there are some people here to speak with you." Kreacher says with a sniff of disdain. It's clear that the old house elf didn't particularly like his visitors.

"Thank you Kreacher. I take it they're in the dining room?" He asks the house elf and Kreacher nods.

"Could you inform my wife of this, please? I rather not want her to stumble in on this meeting without at least having a cup of tea or coffee." He says to Kreacher.

With a pop, Kreacher vanishes after nodding in understanding. One transfiguration later and he's sitting in the dining hall with Neville Longbottom and Susan Bones. "I take it you've heard about what happened at Draco's party?" Susan finally asks after a few minutes of silence upon their finishing their greetings.

"What about his party?" He asks, wondering what part of it they're inquiring about. "My wife and I began our honey moon activities that night." He remarks and the two flush slightly, likely knowing just what they had been up to then.

"He became a beast and the party goers began ghostly." Neville says. "So, congratulations, Harry. You manage to recreate a spell everyone thought was destroyed." His ex-dorm-mate says.

"So, am I under arrest?" He asks and the two shake their head.

"Did you know there's a law concerning how to define an Animagus and a beast?" Susan asks him and he shakes his head, frowning slightly as he gets the feeling it's one of those anti-werewolf laws.

"It's that if an Animagus can return to their human form within thirty seconds, then they're a being but if one can't..." Susan trails off with a slight mischievous look upon her face.

"They're a beast and thus, can not claim rights of a being, even if they are capable of speech. After all, any animals can mimic speech." Neville says.

"So, since Draco can't regain human form within thirty seconds after the transformation, he lost his status as a wizard." He summarizes and the two nod with smirks.

"Then he lost that status in our fourth year." He remarks and the two look slightly confused before they snort in amusement. "After all, he was a ferret for at least a full minute and I'm sure he really would have liked to be human instead of a ferret at the time."

"Yes, I see what you mean. It would be such a shame for such a law to remain with that loop, wouldn't it? So many people could take advantage of it and we wouldn't want that now would we?" Susan muses.

"But, a last, without a Minister of Magic or a full meeting of the Wizengamet with thirteen members or more, we can't fix that law, can we?" Neville says with fake sympathy.

"And being that we have less then nine members, it will take time to find people to fill those seats and then to elect a new Minister of Magic. That is, unless we approach the Queen and appeal for her to give the changes to the law for her to review and approve." He muses, rather stunned at how that simple mission to apply that fairy tale curse could have such far reaching effects.

"It's so sad that so many survivors from Tom's second terror war attended Draco's party. Sadder still that they'll never get a chance to pass this new law in the council chambers." Neville says, placing a folded bill upon the table. "They had just finish signing it at that party too, darn it."

He gives the two a questioning look but they didn't seem to mind so he pulls the bill over and begins to read it. If he were a canine Animagus(unsurprisingly he's a bat Animagus), he would be growling at the contents of this bill. To summarize, they just made it illegal for a mix couple to marry unless they get approval from the Ministry of Magic and that it notes his name at the top of a list of those in violation of this new law.

Oh, Liz is just going to love that. I almost pity those that signed this. He thinks to himself, her family has special methods concerning death and benefiting from it or even controlling lingering spirits.

"Honey? What's got you so riled up?" Liz asks upon entering into the dinning hall. He hands the unfinished bill over to his wife and it wasn't long before she's cursing up a storm in Spanish, Portuguese, Latin, English, and her family's native tongue.

"That's rather... colorful." Susan murmurs an observation. Neville nods while looking rather pale.

"Liz is fluent in over ten languages. Give her time and you'll hear her curse in Hebrew and Chinese." He says before calling for Kreacher and has the house elf to bring them all some tea.

"I hadn't known she spoke so many." Neville says as Liz finally stops cursing and seems to gaze out at some random point in the room. It's more then likely she's reviewing her spell lists to find ones to use.

"I take it that as Draco's guests sport ghostly attributes that they are considered dead?" He asks, he assumes that they've gone the ghostly route or else he'd hear about who became what as the curse took effect.

"What was the other opinion?" Neville asks while pouring some tea that Kreacher made.

"Getting transformed into enchanted items, like an animated candle stick or a coat rack." He answers. "Oddly enough, Disney had a film featuring that opinion." He adds.

"Huh, might have to see that one, sounds fairly interesting." Neville confesses while Susan merely hums her agreement as she drinks from her cup.

I wonder what kind of a future we'll be building now? And how will we come up with ways to keep the rot out of this new government? So many things to plan. So many mistakes to avoid. He thinks to himself before wondering if Liz would want to hold off on the honey moon in order to properly curse the signers of that bill.

The End

2 Year, Cold and Kanga Go To Hogwarts

I don't own Harry Potter nor do I own Dimars! Dimars are (c) to Dee Dreslough!

He sets the little wooden puppet down and then withdrew his hand. Within seconds, the wooden snake shakes itself before moving across the counter's surface. Between the wooden segments a orange light escapes while the wooden snake's red tinted eyes glow. He built the wooden snake puppet using what their summer tutors had taught them while at the community learning center.

As the wooden snake puppet moves along the edge of the counter, trying to find a way off without falling off, its magically charged batteries die. The orange glow is gone and the crimson gaze of the snake's eyes die. Taking of the wooden ring that would feed the puppet some of his magic to recharge its batteries, he picks up the two inch long snake puppet with a frown fixated upon his face, after all, the puppet wasn't suppose to move unless it received orders from him.

Back to the drawing board it seems. He thinks as he pockets the puppet. He heads for the fridge and grabs a bottle of apple juice. Closing it, he glances up to find his mom making a bee line for the coffee maker.

"Harry dear, could you bring a plate of pancakes over to the table?" His mom asks him after taking that first sip of coffee. "Sure, mom." He says as he puts down his juice bottle to grab one of the plates with a glass cover.

He takes the whole of it over and then pulls the enchanted glass that sports a stasis spell upon it away. His mom hums and relying upon her necklace foci to summon a fork and other condiments. He returns to drinking his juice while he stares at the calender with a frown.

Today is Neville's birthday, which means that they'll be using a Port Key to return to Britain and remain there for the rest of today, tomorrow, and then return to this hotel room to finish off their summer vacation. He, personally, see the point in celebrating their twelfth birthday in Britain or for doing what they did last year either.

"Morning!" Colin chirps upon arriving in the kitchen unit of the apartment style hotel room. He glances at Colin's wrist to see those tiny rune that have been painted on like a tattoo. He had given his elder brother tips on which runes to use but ultimately, the rune design that Colin had painted on using specialized temporary tattoo ink is his own.

He had tested Colin's design and found that on a bright day, alters slightly to keep Colin from getting the full blunt of sunlight. He applauds his brother's forethought and creativity on the matter of painting the rune scheme directly on a part of him, but didn't like the idea that anyone can see it and thus duplicate it. It's Colin's problem not mine. I have other things to occupy my time with.

"Morning honey." Their mother says while Colin pulls out a bottle of orange juice. With a shrug, he finishes his bottle and puts it by the sink as Colin grabs a plate with waffles on it before walking over to the table.

He grabs another bottle of apple juice and then moves over to the plates with prepared dishes. After a few seconds thought, he grabs one that sports scrambled eyes, bacon, and hash-browns. Unlike the two at the table, he balances his un-open bottle onto of the glass covering in order to grab a fork and knife.

As he takes the enchanted glass off his plate, the fourth member of the Potter family shows up. He might not see the rune scheme upon his dad's body, it doesn't mean that it isn't there, just means that his dad likely put the stencil of Colin's some place like his shoulder or chest. It's likely that if it's on their dad's shoulder then their mom likely helped by painting the ink upon it.

Like Lilly, James makes a bee line for the coffee maker but unlike Lilly, their dad wakes after drinking his first cup. "Just think, our boys will be twelve tomorrow." Their dad says and he shares a look with Colin, it seems that this is about to turn into a mushy family moment.

"You think Sirius and May will tear themselves away from each other to attend our party tomorrow?" Colin wonders, trying to change the topic. After all, it had come as something of a surprise when, seemingly out of the blue, Uncle Padfoot not only arrives over with a woman, but declares that she's his wife within days of their summer holidays just getting started.

May Grace Vila nee Black is a spell researcher who accidentally used an ancient stone known for bringing soul-mates together, although it had a range of five hundred kilometers. Well, May kind of used this stone while it was on a magical recharger. Next thing Sirius or May knew, May had teleported into Sirius' room and, well, as a bonus of the stone teleporting May to Sirius, it also kind of super charged some, they ended up, well, doing things.

Then, during a breather, still a little drunk on the extra bit of magic done to her from the stone but trying to fight it, May says that they've got to end it as she feels as though they should marry before continuing such activities. Well, with that, Sirius pops the question which lead to them finding a nice chapel, some random guy off the street to serve as witness to their marriage, a few charms, a priest, and one bit of paper later, they were married and they teleported back to Sirius' room to continue with their activities.

Even with that magic worn off, neither Sirius or May seem incline of getting a divorce but they were taking the time to grow use to each other. Oddly enough, May does sport one canine animagus form, she has a total of five, but the canine one is an Akita Inu, which could likely explain they're not considering that option as they're both loyal.

Although he does recall Colin asking permission to do research into bedroom actives and considering their parents' reactions to it, he plans to steer clear of that until he has to bring up the topic. Colin is wearing some kind of charm that keeps him from seeing that kind of information, be it from books, TV, and accidentally hearing about it or walking into the act, although the charm will fade when Colin is fourteen years old. And he's not going to get into trouble trying to satisfy his brother's curiosity on the matter.

Even so, he's been researching how to break said charm just encase his parents thought to cast it on him before they return to Hogwarts. He thinks he's got a rune scheme that could absorb the magic, so making it look as though was successfully cast on him when in fact, it hadn't. It would be a bit before he finds a rune scheme capable of neutralizing all kinds of spells being send in one's direction.

He becomes absorbed in his thoughts that he doesn't really pay much mind to the conversation taking place between his parents and his brother. He cleans off his plate and then goes on to finish his second bottle of apple juice. With that done, he excuses himself from the table to take the empty bottle and plate over to the sink.

With that done, he heads for his room to take a shower before they leave. He's sure to take out his snake puppet and the ring to charge its battery. He won't be taking it with him as he won't have the time to himself to work on it and he rather not let his parents know about his experiments since they believe he's only learning the theory behind golems, after all, few magi have any real understanding of that fine art and it's more typical to enchant something to move as directed then to create something that's much more capable of taking orders and carrying them out without you being around.

And yet, that's what make golems so dangerous. He thinks as he undresses until only his boxers and leather bracelets remain. With that, he heads out of the room to shower in the bathroom.

- [T] -

"So this is where you two are holding up in." Fred muses while holding the yurt's cloth door while George pokes his head in under Fred's arm. "Is that TV working?" Fred asks with a hint of awe while finally walking into the yurt.

"What? No happy birthday Kanga?" Neville asks the pair, beating him to say it. He snorts while un-muting the sound, the commercials are still running, although he could have fast forward the tape, he hadn't since Neville and him often continued their conversations while they're playing.

He had bought the recorder by the end of Christmas holidays and managed to set it up, only he hadn't set it to record anything. He did leave Flare with the instructions and the house elf has used it to record daytime shows that Flare wanted to watch but often finds himself too busy with his duties.

Before he left Hogwarts, he had installed another recorder with that entertainment center to record certain programs with certain words in the title. He won't know if it had until they returned for the new school year. He's rather hopeful that it had worked and the memory space isn't much of a problem as the memory is enchanted to expand as needed.

"Oh, right." George says. "Happy birthday Kanga!" The twins chime in together before they move to sit upon one of the bean bags that rest around the center of the yurt while their eyes never leaving the TV screen.

Neville and him share a look as the movie, The Guyver. They are watching the part where the hero, Sean, is battling the Zoanoids in a warehouse. "Is this real?" Fred asks and for a moment, he forgot that the twins have never seen a movie before.

"Think live theater only every moment of it captured on a painting. This is entitled The Guyver." He answers while the twins only hum in acknowledgment, likely not really listening to him.

He had given Neville books concerning television, films, and special movie effects so most of Neville's questions likely had been answered during Neville's reading of the books. It wouldn't have surprised him if Neville had also owled Hermione to learn more or to answer his questions. I wonder if Neville will be using the TV at my other yurt...

As the movie comes to an end, the door opens to reveal Colin. His elder brother pauses and about before his brother's gaze landing upon the TV. "So this is where you set yourself up in, Harry... Kanga." Colin says, using his preferred name then his birth one upon him sending a hooded look his brother's way.

"So... How is it that the TV works?" Colin asks as his fellow birthday boy comes to rest upon his bench bed while he returns his attention to stopping the recorder.

"Ward's are the thinnest at this point of the property. Don't worry, Flare's set up other kinds of wards, ones that won't interfere with receiving a TV signal." He answer while mentally adding, Of course the signal receiver is a good mile off the property anyway thus the wards don't interfere with the signal that gets sent from it to the TV set through a matching set of a rune scheme.

"What are we going to watch next, Kanga?" Neville asks while Fred and George read the titles of what has been recorded. He hums before grinning at seeing a certain movie that Flare had recorded.

Moving the highlight down until it covers the name, he presses the enter button on the remote and within a few seconds, the recording begins. The theme for Star Wars begins and he hears Fred wonder, "How can stars have wars?"

"Interesting choice, little brother." Colin says and he sighs, but doesn't raise to the bait as the only time Colin ever use the term little brother is when Colin wants to have an argument. He does wonder who riled up his usually calm and level headed sibling that drove Colin not only to search for him but with the desire to pick a fight.

- [T] -

"Have you seen your brother?" Hermione asks upon arriving opening the door of the compartment. Neville and himself glance up from watching their illusionary fighters battling it out on this cardboard mat that's hovering between Neville and himself to look at the still bookish witch.

"Haven't seen him after Ron dragged him off to the side for a chit chat." He replies. "And I thought you out grew your fascination concerning Cold."

His winged wolf howls in pain and he glances to find Neville's spine boar chopping down on the wolf's tail. The winged wolf snarls while moving to attack the boar's face, teeth managing to grip the boar's eyebrow. The boar bellows in out rage, allowing the winged wolf to leap away from the spine covered boar.

"What kind of game is that? It's rather violent isn't it?" Hermione asks as though just seeing the hovering board and it likely is that it just registered in her mind as well.

"Just a way to 'flex' one's magic. Cold and I used it to create our own cities and then had them fight. That's a little complicated so I thought this way, Leander gets the feel for using the board while also entertaining us during our train trip to Hogwarts." He explains to Hermione. "You want to give it a go, Kyden?"

Hermione shakes her head while backing out of the compartment. "I think I'll continue my search. I believe the Weasley twins are trying to prank some Slytherins." Hermione says, it's clear that Hermione planned to tell somebody about Fred and George's plans.

The door closes before Hermione walks away. "She really needs to loosen up." Neville remarks and he nods in agreement.

Neville and him return to watching the two mutated beast duke it out. The two beasties had back away from each other and had been standing still. Feeding the board magic, the two beasts once more engage in combat, his wolf being nimble and often taking to the air to evade the charges from the boar.

Upon one of the beast losing, they vanish while Neville and himself think of their next set of fighters, causing silver fire to float at the ends closest to their side of the board. Neville creates a feline sporting a mane of fire while his creation is a hovering weasel sporting a white glow about its form. The two wait there for a few seconds before they charge each other with either a growl or a snarl.

- [T] -

Hermione scowls while glancing between Fred and George to Neville and himself as, unlike every other student, they weren't wearing their school robes. Yea, like I want to be another ram in the flock. He thinks to himself, he guesses that it might have been a bad idea to gift that ritual to Hermione since she seems to feel much more vindicated concerning her attendance in the United Kingdom's Wizarding Community.

Although, it could be because we've brought our own food for the sorting... He thinks as he sips hot chocolate from his space enchanted thermos while eating some gummy crabs from Mexico, their flavor is crab apple. Neville is eating some mini donuts that he placed between them.

He vaguely notices that Colin and Ron weren't sitting at the table, which causes him to wonder where they are. Ron must be holding him up. He concludes while studying the latest defense professor. What an idiot. Talk about a male version of a Goldilocks.

Finally, the doors open and the new group of students arrive. He watches as awe settle upon their faces at the sight of the ceiling. And then the hat sings its song, he rolls his eyes while chewing on a mini doughnut that's covered in brown sugar. If you're looking for school unity, you'd expect the house of badgers to be the glue to bind us all together. After all, loyalty is key when it comes to creating friendships.

The last student gets sorted and Dumblies begins his speech. With the coming of fried food, he collects his gummies and donuts before putting the thermos into the bag sitting under the bench. Flipping about to have his legs under the table, he waits for the food to arrive.

As the feasting is over, he heads to speak with his head of house. "Professor? Professor! Have you seen Ron or my brother? They seem to have missed out on the feast." He asks Minerva McGonagall just as she heads out of a side door with the headmaster.

"We're just about to speak with them now." Professor McGonagall says. "Now, run along, I'll be sure to send to send him along."

He frowns as he watches as the staff head off. He pats his pocket and feels his shrunken trunk. He uses an illusion to hide himself. Once it's clear, he takes the trunk out and expands it. It takes a few seconds to find the tiny golem that's capable of flight. Putting on the headband over his eyes and feeding it magic, the golem activates and takes to the air while he sees through its eyes.

He then activates the tracking enchantments and it flies after McGonagall. He feels his stomach flop as the golem just zooms through the air until it catches sight the McGonagall. The dagonfly golem lands on the professor's hat and after a few minutes, the golem is in the headmaster's office, where he activates its listening charms, he catches the bit about Snape saying something about expelling the pair for flying the Weasley's magical car about London uncloaked.

He has the dragonfly golem fly to one of the book shelves and stay there, even when everyone leaves. Dumblies sits for a few extra minutes before consulting with one of the silver instruments. "So he did send it along. Good good, I almost thought he wouldn't." He hears Dumblies murmur out loud before the paintings of the previous headmasters and headmistresses begin to dig into the still living headmaster about how fatal allowing the Basilisk to haunt the halls once more.

"And why allow that diary in when that Diadem is just sitting in the Come and Go Room?" One of the Ravenclaw headmasters asks. Oh, this is just so juicy... He thinks and in the end, all he learnt about was that Voldie made a bunch of Horcruxes, which is why the Dork Lord is still hanging about and that, as of now, there are three Horcruxes within the school.

He has the dragonfly golem hide in a cloud of dust that's resting on top of the books. With that done, he stops feeding magic to the golem and then takes off the headband, drops it down in the open trunk before packing it up. One charm later and he's heading out of the castle, he can only hope that Dumblies doesn't find that tiny golem any time soon.

What's a Horcrux and what spells would one use to ID them? He wonders to himself. He'll spend time writing a letter and focusing upon those memories to send to his mother, he's fairly sure that she'll be interest in this as it does effect the family.

- [T] -

"Young Master Kanga! Mistress Lilly wanted Is to give yous this in person." Flare says upon him arriving in his yurt. It's been close to a month since school started and he's more then a little relieved to see that his mom didn't trust any kind of bird to deliver her reply.

"Thank you, Flare. I hope this isn't interfering with your free time." He says as he takes the letter Flare is holding out to him.

"Its Is job to serve the Potters, Young Master Kanga." Flare says before popping away, leaving him alone within the yurt. It wasn't long before the letter in his hand is opened and he's rereading what his mom had wrote as a reply.

"Shouldn't be too hard to summon these using a ritual. Might take a bit to get the proper stones prepared but do able before November." He muses out loud. He walks over and puts the letter in one of this Fidelius hidden chests, he has seven of them and he's the secret keeper for all seven.

Once the letter is in one, he begins to undress to have his shower. He wants to check on his cameras that he placed about the forest. Two weeks into September, a certain bushy haired witch informed him that he needs a more constructive hobby then hunting giant spiders, gathering herbs, or just generally hanging out with Neville so he decided to try creating a documentary about unicorns. He had been rather surprised to find that cameras with tracking charms on them often lose the unicorn herd so he decided to create a network of cameras throughout the forest in hopes of capturing their comings and goings.

He couldn't funnel the raw footage to his yurt, he really didn't want Dumblies to pick up on the feed and turn it into something else, so he took a map and sectioned off various areas. Each section has its own memory box hidden in a semi-dimensional pocket that he has the 'keys' to. He hasn't told anyone of what he's doing as Gred and Forge seem to be creating some kind of arcade in one of the abandoned classrooms, Hermione is busy helping the first years with their homework(although the smart first years of the house paid the ten galleons to get the outlines for first year's course work, homework assignments, and what questions are typically used on tests), and Neville is busy with his portable glass house. He doesn't pay much mind to what the others are up to, he does know that Colin is finally trying his hand at pranks though.

Once he's dressed and brings out the flight frame, it's got all the enchantments that one can find on a flight broom. Actually, the wooden bike like frame has a few extra spells on it to keep it hovering in the air for up to thirty minutes without anyone on it. He's engraved weather control schemes upon the inside panels to keep the temperature at a comfortable degree. Another enchantment he has on it is this map feature that allows him to navigate throughout the Forbidden Forest and, of course, there are a lot more useful enchantments upon it.

As he gets within sight of Hagrid's hut, he finds a young Ravenclaw stroking thin air, until something blows in the blond's hair. "Thestral?" He asks the witch who seems a bit startled from hearing his voice.

"You seem them too?" The young blond, who he finally IDs as Luna Lovegood. He shakes his head while he lowers the wooden flight frame down in order to approach the blond.

He notices where Luna's hands were and slowly feels about in that area. It didn't take long before he feels something warm under his hand. "I know they're living in the forest from using detection spells." He then adds as he strokes the leathery feeling horse, "I know they're what pull the carriages. Not many place that can boast a herd of trained Thestrals."

"They're not as pretty as unicorns though." Luna says wistfully and he snorts softly, which seems to cause the Thestral to give its own snort in reply to his own.

"Few things in the world are or ever will be as beautiful as a wild unicorn." He says. "Even capturing them on film doesn't do them justice."

Luna turns to study him before saying, "I didn't know you have a camera on your person." He doesn't say much while moving to see if he couldn't find the Thestral's neck to pet.

"I'm actually on my way to collect the film. It's a muggle technique. You leave the camera at the angle you want and then set up this triggering pad so that when the animal steps on it, the camera snaps its picture." He explains to Luna, it's just a little white lie about what kind of camera he set up or about what kind of film he's going to collect.

"That is a rather good tactic to capture those that don't like people." Luna admits. "I'll have to mention this method to daddy, I'm sure he would be thrilled to use it for our paper."

They don't say much else for a few minutes. Then, with a sigh, he gives the Thestral one last pat upon its neck before pulling away. "I should go collect it while there's still light out. I won't be that stealthy if I need a light to light my path for me." He says and glances over to Luna. "It's nice seeing you again, Luna. Perhaps when I'm done with this project, I'll invite you to be among the first to view it." He muses before adding, "As long as it doesn't alter your schedule too much, after all, you are a hard nose reporter, aren't you? You're likely busy writing about how Snape's role as Potions Teacher is affecting the number of graduate looking to become Healers or about the bullying going on between houses, how the point system is encouraging the students to have little to no contact with students from other houses."

Luna blinks as her expression turns thoughtful. "I doubt daddy would want such trivial matter to be in his paper. Sounds more like something the Daily Prophet would sport." Luna says and he nods his head at Luna.

"Well, I'm not really connected to the media the way you are. Still, it's a shame that nobody thought to write about those facts. But then, maybe that's because we don't have a school paper. Muggle schools have such things, although most of those schools are high schools so they likely stick to newsletters." He says. "Still, you would think that Hogwarts students would like to have their voices heard, or is that printed?"

He notices Luna smile. They then say good bye to each other and he heads over to pick up his flight frame. Once he's in the trees does he activate it, it hovers low enough for him to walk into it, and then he lowers it before sitting upon the seat. Once his hands touch the steering wheel, the sides of the frame suddenly sprout doors and a floor 'grows' under foot just after the flight frame raises another two feet in the air.

He shifts the lever from park to flight one. The steering wheel's dash panel comes alive to show a map while the steering wheel suddenly extends itself, allowing him to lean into the back of the seat. He turns a dial and the cloaking spells take effect. With that done, he pulls down upon the steering wheel, causing the flight frame to raise into the air. Once he's about twenty feet in the air, his right foot lightly touches the pedal that appeared when the floor did, causing the flight frame to move forward. He based the controls off of a go kart.

It's not long before he's once more gets a feel for the controls and flies to retrieve the first of the raw film from a recording box. Shielding charms upon the flight frame ensures that nothing can hit the frame from any angle. It also protects him from wind coming right up to his face or the weather to hit either him or the wooden flight frame.

Sure, it wasn't a broom or riding a winged animal, but he created it and thus its something he values. I am so going to pass my driving test the first time around. He thinks as he has the flight frame park itself next to the massive branch so that he can climb out to get the film from the recording box.

It's close to nine when he's collected from the last box and is prepared to head home. He does notice, once again, the lack of spider webs about the forest, which is likely due in no small part of what happened last winter. It's very likely that the centaurs have also been destroying what egg sacks remain in the forest as the sacks lack adult protectors.

He doesn't feel an ounce of guilt about destroying the Forbidden Forest's colony of Acromantula. That particular spider race just isn't native to the UK and had been killing native species. It wouldn't surprise him that, in time, mundane animals become a much more common sight within this forest. He's pretty sure that the centaurs will like to have more meat in their diet.

- [T] -

"Happy Halloween!" He groans and gets up onto his elbows to glare at Neville. Then he blinks at what Neville is wearing.

"We brought you your costume!" Colin adds and he glances over to see what his brother is holding. He slowly blinks before sighing.

He sits up and then swings his body to the side. He ignores them as he heads for his potions cupboard. It unlocks upon him touching it and within seconds, he has three potions. He studies the symbols for a seconds before downing the one that seems to featuring a bear paw. As black fur sprouts about his body, he downs the one featuring an open mouth. He feels his teeth alter and then downs the third, this one featuring a rainbow of blue shades. The last alters the black fur to adopt a blue shine.

He glances at his hands to find them sporting claw shaped nails, then at his feet to see them sporting a four toes with the big one kind of riding up his leg. With his tongue, he checks his teeth. With a hum, he finds another potion bottle featuring an open mouth and this one causes his skull to alter while his hands and feet get finished.

He moves to stand before his mirror and sighs at the still unfinished sight of his ears, muzzle, and tail. He goes back and downs another potion with the open mouth symbol upon it. He stands once more before the mirror and then hums in satisfaction at the 'werewolf' staring back.

He picks up a leather necklace sporting tiny brown, black, and red wooden beads and a painted skull of a raven. Once it's on, he turns to this two 'guests' and says, "Now this is a costume." His speaking is unhindered by the muzzle.

"I would have thought you'd go another root." Neville, dressed as a druid, muses while looking a tad envious of his altered appearance, the jester costume resting on his bed now. He flickers his ears while turning to glance at his knight of a bother.

He studies the two before sighing. He moves back to the cupboard and after a few seconds, takes out two. "Here, drink these. One will elongate your ears while causing them to end with a point. The other will get rid of that spare tire." He says as he hands the two over to Neville.

He studies Neville as the potions take effect. With a nod, he takes another two and hand them over to Neville. "One will sharpen your features and the other will add a tan to your skin." He says and once they take effect, he nods and motions for Neville to stand before the mirror.

Neville gasps and touches his own ears and cheek. "An elf, nice." Colin says while Neville glances questioningly over to them. "Cosplay potions. You brewed them yourself, didn't you?" Colin asks and he nods as he turns to glance at his potion collect for a few seconds.

"Huh?" Neville grunts but he's already studying his bother with a critical eye. He hums as he walks around his brother, trying to think of what race would suit. "What's Cosplay?" Neville asks while he being to take a few potions from the cupboard.

"Cosplay is role playing, err... acting. You've seen muggle movies right?" Colin asks Neville.

"Oh! You mean, instead of being casted in a role by somebody else, you create your own character!" Neville exclaims.

"Yea, that's pretty much it. Although, with Cosplay, you can dress up as your favorite character from movies, games, shows, manga, and novels." Colin adds and he sees Neville nodding as he hands the first potion to Colin.

"So, what do I get to be?" Colin asks and he replies, "Undead."

"Undead huh? Cool, err... it won't hurt, will it? The potions I mean." Colin asks and he replies, "Do you think I'd hear the end of it if I endangered your life? Mostly they'll pale your skin, cause a slight odor, and, of course, cause parts of you to become transparent, like your ribs, arms, and ribs. You know, pretty much make it seem as though you're a walking death knight."

"Oh, ok then." Colin says and downs the first. It takes a good five of the transparency potions to get the right effect, leaving Colin's face and back untouched. He watches as Colin touches his arms and mid-section. "I can still feel my stomach being there." Colin says.

He snorts and closes the cupboard before walking over to pick up the camera. After ten minutes of posing for the camera, they leave the yurt. He has his book bag hanging over his left shoulder, it carries not only his wand but also cloths for when the potions wear off in about four hours.

A lot of people would stop and stare at them. Many were pointing at Colin while a few girls would blush and look away from Neville. He merely grins at their reactions, his tail waging lazily behind him. He does note that none of the other houses were dressed up for Halloween, but then, that's not much of a surprise as the Weasley twins were the ones to put in the request.

As they enter into the dinning hall, almost everyone stops to look in their direction. A new murmur engulfs the student body as they approach their house's table. "Neville? Colin? Harry?" Hermione, dressed up as a nun, asks as they sit down and begin to eat.

"Yes Hermione?" Colin replies politely. "Is something the matter?"

"Your bones are showing." Hermione replies faintly, she looks a bit green. "How can you be alive?" He hears her murmur but is rather busy carefully eating his breakfast.

"It's a little thing called magic, Hermione, M-A-G-I-C." Seamus says while rolling her eyes. He's unmoved by Hermione's plight as the witch hasn't grown as much as she should have since the incident with the troll.

While everyone at the table is questioning Colin and Neville about their additions, he's busy thinking about the results of that summoning. At least I don't have that scar any more... But why did I have the soul bit? Could it be that I'm the one that Voldie tried to kill that night? He thinks to himself but, in the end, decides to remain silent about it, as it no longer matters.

I wonder what mom is doing with those items... Hopefully they won't be damage, after all, most of those are historical items. He thinks to himself as he is slowly chewing what's in his mouth as best as he can since he's unfamiliar with eating with a muzzle.

Soon, breakfast is over and they file out to spend attend the grand opening of the Weasley's arcade. They watch as the Weasley twins lead a parade through the halls with Gryffindors doing their part. The music for the parade is Hungry Like the Wolf, with him at the semi head position as he is dressed up as a werewolf.

The few professors that were in attendance clearly didn't like the noise or the decor. He didn't care as he moves to use the pool table that's by the drink bar, it serves not only butterbeer but also different flavors of soda, likely from mundane sources. He doesn't see a menu so he guesses they just serve drinks.

"How do you play this?" Luna asks while he's selecting a pool table que. He explains the rule while playing, he makes sure to mention how two players can play, so he's not that surprised when Luna asks, "Can I play a few games with you?"

He nods and helps her pick a que. Over time, Neville appears as does his elder brother. They take turns playing each other, although Neville did need to have the rules explained. As he plays against Colin for the second time, he notices that George is standing behind the drink bar.

"Hey Forge! Could we get four butterbeers over here, please?" He calls out and George nods, it wasn't long before they each have their own mug of butterbeer. It wasn't long before George finds himself busy serving drink, Lee Jordan soon gets recruited to help behind the bar.

Four hours later and he heads out to change before the potions wear off as he was nude when he drank them, once in his cloths he heads for lunch which everyone leaves to eat. Upon returning to the arcade, they play a few of the games but return to the pool table when more and more of the students return to play the game. Very few seem interested in playing pool, they seem to be more interested in watching then anything else.

When supper comes, they head for the Great Hall but after wards, he mentions watching some movies back at his yurt. He even goes so far as to invite Luna, seeing as she seems rather reluctant to return to the arcade without them. Ron almost singles Colin out but Fred grabs a hold of Ron's shoulder and speaks with him.

"So, what movie are we going to watch?" Neville asks while Luna looks rather interested in the TV. Colin digs about his veggie and fruit crate as he replies, "How about The Monster Squad?"

"Why not some cartoon? Like It's the Great Pumpkin, Charlie Brown?" Colin asks. "Or some comedy like Teen Wolf?" Colin adds while finally pulling out some carrot sticks and walks over to take a seat.

"Teen Wolf good with you, Leander? Luna?" He asks and they just shrug while Luna sits down.

By ten o'cloak, Luna looks like she's about to curl up and fall asleep while Neville looks rather jumpy as they watch Predator. They continued to eat and drink from what he has stocked up in the yurt. Guess they're going to be spending the night. He thinks as he doubts that Neville will have recovered enough to venture out in the darkness.

"Luna, you can have my bed. It's got some charms on it to tune out the TV." He says, he had added them when he began getting visitors only interested in watching the TV set during the weekends.

Luna jerks awake and shakes her head. "No, I'm fine." Luna says and he frowns. He summons a blanket and puts it over Luna's shoulders. "There you go." He says and Luna blushes but wraps it more about her body.

"Thanks." Luna says. It wasn't long before Neville and Colin summon their own blankets, it seems that it's getting rather cool in the yurt, not that he notices. Or perhaps they're just getting tired and want to sleep. He mentally muses as Colin yawn and gives himself a shake to wake himself up.

He sighs and continues to read Jurassic Park by Michael Crichton. He's already got a book lined up to read after he's done with this one and it's Howl's Moving Castle by Diana Wynne Jones. Huh, I wonder if there aren't rituals so we can view the lives of the dead using only a bone that belonged to subject of the vision.

- [T] -

"Looks like Kyden has been spurred by the girls again." He says as he notices the slight puffiness upon Hermione's face. Hermione hasn't spent much time with him this year but then, it's likely that Hermione's previous beliefs got reinforced since she learnt about some old family whom's vault she inherited and, likely, feeling very vindicated about her place in this community by that.

"She really is all over the place this year." Neville observes. "You really didn't do her any favors when it came to that Christmas present." Neville remarks and he merely sighs.

"It seemed like a good idea at the time... I thought she could use the confidence boost." He defenses himself. "She's such a teacher's pet. You'd think she would have gotten over it seeing as it hasn't done her any good."

"Some people just don't want to be saved from their mistakes." Neville sums up and he nods in agreement. "Hey Luna." Neville says and he glance to find the young blond behind him.

"Hey Luna." He says and Luna responds by greeting them, "Hello Leander. Kanga."

"Have you manage to catch any of those dimensionally displaced creatures on film yet?" He asks curiously and Luna replies, "It is rather hard to get them to stand still long enough to get a clear focus on it before it moves."

"The light waves aren't helping either, are they?" Neville asks and Luna nods in agreement. "Perhaps you should try using a fairy wing to filter the image. After all, they're more then able to alter space and time." Neville suggests.

"Such messy business concerning how they constructed Time Turners. So many lives wasted, all they had to do was brush some of the powder from their wings, give them a drop of healing potion before setting them free." He muses with a shake of his head.

"Perhaps I will try using using a thin strip of Thestral wing." Luna says but before they can continue their conversation, something happens to Luna that causes her to become a rabbit. He glances around and upon spying a group of giggling Ravenclaw students, he marches over.

"Undo it." He says in a very cold tone. "Or I will do worst to you." He threatens and the girls glance around, gaining confidence that there's too many people about for him to follow through with his threat.

"No. Loony makes such a nice rabbit, doesn't she?" The leader of the clique says.

He smiles and three spells later, he moves away from them and returns to Neville. Neville has picked up Luna the rabbit from the ground. Sudden screams of terror and murder echo about the platform just as the whistle in the distance sounds.

"Now what's going on here?" Demands Hagrid and the clique point in his direction while exclaiming, "Harry Potter did this to us! He and that Loony Lovegood!"

As the train arrives and McGonagall comes over. "I don't know what these girls are so hysterical about, I never used my wand on them! Check my wand if you don't believe me!" He says as his head of house comes near him.

"And they transfigured Luna Lovegood into a rabbit though! See?" Neville says and after McGonagall does indeed check his wand, finding the last few spells to be a shrinking charm, a light charm, and a hovering charm.

Then McGonagall checks on the rabbit. "Please put Miss Lovegood on the ground, Mr Longbottom and everyone step away." The Transfiguration Professor says.

Once Luna is back to normal does McGonagall herd the clique of Ravenclaws towards the castle. "I believe a talk with your parents are in order." McGonagall says, not bothering to listen to their cries.

With that over with, they head onto the train. He's sure to place a protective arm around Luna's shoulders, guiding her to a compartment. Once they're in, he asks, "Are you ok, Luna?"

"You didn't have to do that for me. It'll only cause them to be meaner the next time they do something like that." Luna says and he scowls.

"Are you saying that you've spoken with Professor Flitwick about being bullied?" Neville asks and Luna nods. "And they only got worst?" Neville asks once more, with a touch more anger then before.

"They think I'm loony." Luna says as though that explains everything. He sighs, he's rather frustrated about a head of house not being able to stop the bullying going on in Luna's life.

"There's nothing wrong with you." He says ferociously. "Don't let anyone tell you differently! And if you're bully in Ravenclaw dorms then get your father to buy you a magic tent and live outside of the castle! None of the professors seem to notice that I'm not living in the Gryffindor's dorms." He says.

"I'm sure Kanga won't mind if you use his bathroom cabinet." Neville pipes in and he nods, although he's already drawing up a list of things that would make Luna's tent more bearable. "That way you're only in their company during classes and meals." Neville says.

Luna nods and then Ginny arrives. "Luna! I just heard! Are you ok?" The youngest Weasley says, giving Luna a hug.

"Thanks for standing up for her, Harry." Ginny says, nodding to Neville. "See you guys!" The red haired witch says while pulling Luna along behind her, leaving Neville and him alone.

"Good to see that Luna has at least one girl friend." Neville observes and he nods with a sigh. "So... We going to, you know?"

With a snort, he grins while bringing out the shrunken board. It wasn't long before they're building their own settlements at opposite ends of the board, War Fog hiding each settlement from each other. He's not sure what species Neville has created but he's using beast people. The peons are rodents, grunts being badgers, scouts being canines, range units being reptilian, shock troops being rhinos, and flight units being bats.

- [T] -

"Wow... He looks almost solid..." Colin says as they stare at the reconstructed soul of Voldie. The soul glares balefully at them but the soul can't do anything as the various rune schemes keep the soul hovering in a secure place. "So that's what dad and our uncles were hinting about when they mentioned finally getting rid of him for good..."

"Actually, we're bringing in a few specialists to examine him. This is a rare opportunity to examine a soul. We do know where the rest of him is though. We might collect him later but for now, we'll leave what out there alone." Uncle Moony says and he nods in understanding.

"So... how did you find all of the bits, Kanga?" Colin asks and he merely gives his elder brother a grin. "Do you really want me to answer something so obvious, Cold?" He asks his brother who just rolls his eyes.

"Now, now, boys, is that the holiday spirit you're suppose to be having?" Moony asks in a teasing tone. Colin and him share a look.

"You know, we were just acting like brothers. Nobody ever said family has to get along, right Uncle Padfoot?" He says, glancing over to Sirius, who just arrived with a cup of hot butterbeer.

"Eh? Ah, yea, families don't always get along I guess." Sirius says. Remus stares at Sirius, which causes Sirius to wonder, "What did I do wrong this time?"

Colin chuckles while he heads off to work on the few projects he left behind. He does wonder if his parents got any new information concerning what Dumblies is up to, after all, his mother had wanted the headset to control that dragonfly golem stationed in the office.

Hopefully I'm not in trouble for creating that little golem... He thinks to himself before musing, I wonder if I shouldn't practice flying in my Dimar form... I haven't transformed into it since school started.

In the end, a few feet from leaving the basement, he transforms into his Dimar form. The base color of his fur is a bright teal with silver stripes. The under fur is black in color while his mane is a dark silver, his coloration for his wing membrane is a deep purple. His horns are dark crimson color, the red shows up when the light hits it. His eyes remain the same color.

With his wings folded, he trots through the manor, heading to the room he claimed as a work room. His claws click upon the floor, he moves out of the way of May and his parents. "Perhaps we should get a bell for you to wear if you're going to be spending a lot of time as a Dimar." His dad says as they turn to look at him.

"A Dimar? I've never heard of somebody with that as one of their animagus forms." May says while admiring him in his current form.

He shifts his weight back and forth but does stretch his wings so that May can get a better look at them. "Colin is still human when I left the room." He says as he closes his wings and they each head off to different points in the house.

- [T] -

"... I can't believe it!"

"I know but..."

"... to Fawkes before they..."

He sighs, it wasn't that surprising that everyone is talking about Dumblies getting arrested by the ICW. Of course they had to force a burning day on Fawkes to keep the phoenix from teleporting the headmaster out of their custody. They even confiscated the man's pensive along with all of the silver instruments.

The reports of the silver instruments reveals that a lot of them are illegally keyed to Colin and a few other people. They also managed to break the charms upon Fawkes. They had also located the Chamber of Secrets and have teleported the huge Basilisk away into the care of some country's zoo. It's unlikely that anyone cares about the giant serpent, not when Dumblies is still in custody and will be getting a trail, although it's unlikely that anyone knows what the trail is going to be about.

I wonder when the ICW will start rounding up ex-Corpse Eaters and other members of the Ministry and the Wizengamot using the evidence in Dumblies' pensive and testimony... He thinks to himself. Hopefully before they get wind of their arrests.

"Guess you've heard about Dumbledore getting arrested, huh?" Neville asks upon walking over to Colin and him. "Heard they killed Fawkes too."

He rolls his eyes while Colin sighs. "You can't kill a phoenix that easily. Besides, they likely only forced a burning day to keep Fawkes from teleporting Dumbledore away from their custody." His brother explains.

"But why did he get arrested?" Neville wonders out loud but neither Colin and himself were willing to answer that, after all, it's not their play to gossip about such things, so he replies, "Must have done an audit or something. You know how it is, governments are very money driven."

Those listening in quickly move to circulate a new rumor using that tidbit of information. I'll make it up to him later, when we're in a secure location and after the hype dies down. He decides as they get around to boarding the train.

"I wonder what school will be like, now that he's gone?" Colin wonders to him before Ron pulls Colin away from Neville and him. Likely the same old stuff until the end of the year.

Ending the Chapter Here

Theory of Werewolf Magic: Harry Potter

I don't own Harry Potter

Harry studies Greyback as the werewolf tries to wriggle out of the chains keeping the furry bastard from moving. The chains and bindings had adjusted to fit the more beastly looking version of Greyback. The flumes of the puddle made out of a potion he made sure to pour upon the floor just a foot from the infamous werewolf.

"He sure makes me look like a saint, doesn't he?" Harry muses out loud. The two adults couldn't reply as he casted a spell to keep them quiet. "I doubt he's house broken though..." The twenty-one year old says.

Turning to the pair, Harry grins wolfishly. "When I put out that reward bit over three years now, instead of bringing me Greyback's head, they brought me the most infamous werewolf to me alive." The very much changed Potter explains.

"I wanted to skin him alive, particular since he bite Remus, causing so many of Moony's problems but then, it dawned on me of the research benefits studying him could reap!" Harry says, grinning. "The irony it would be if because of Greyback, I could come up with a cure for this ancient, magical curse!"

"It wasn't hard to contact others around the world to see what they've learnt concerning this curse. Sure, it was fragmented, particularly as they each research was only interested in different parts of the curse and guarded each of their research rather jealously." Harry continues on to say.

"Of course, if you have enough money, you can buy just about anything." Harry remarks. The wizard pauses, reminiscing about everything that's happened since he toured the mine.

"Once I had the majority of their research, I began to compare it and slowly, I learnt not only to delay the transformation but how to sped it up like I just did." Harry says finally, nodding towards the struggling werewolf. "I recently came up with a theory about something but I didn't know how to test it out."

He pauses before looking over to the silenced pair, Harry notes the wet stain upon their underwear. The raven haired wizard is sure that if they could, they would have fainted from the moment Greyback's limbs started to pop and crack. Their braces keep the pair from being anything but conscious and memorizing everything he's saying.

"Then I recall some bank statements made out to the pair of you for my... keep." Under his emerald gaze the pair paled even more. "As you've already been paid for a task, yet you didn't fulfill your side, I figured that I'm within my legal right to call you on your debt to me. So you're going to help me with my research. I've already submitted forms to formalize my collection of this debt, making you two my legal, indented servants for the next sixteen years, of course, I doubt you'll survive to see the end of your indented serves."

"Oh, don't worry, nobody will miss you, after all, you've been legally dead since two am yesterday morning. It seems that Vernon here had a little too much to drink and drove right into a gun shop. Huge explosion as the fat idiot flickered a cigarette onto a bin of bullets. Shame that his wife was sleeping in the back, drunk too and sleeping it off." Harry says, savoring those memories of using a pair of mice to aid in 'killing' his 'loving' family.

Harry moves two feet from his perch, being sure to bring the stool along with him. Touching something within a pouch hanging from his jeans, bars suddenly shimmer into existence. 'Bite them once, no killing.' Harry says in a mid African dialect.

With a howl, the chain give and Greyback charges forth. Greyback paces between the two before taking a mouthful of Vernon's belly. Greyback licks the wound after swallowing the chunk of belly from Vernon. Harry watches as Greyback bites Petunia upon her inner thigh.

"Moon or no moon, the curse should be passed onto you two." Harry says lightly while Greyback rages against the bars, not touching them, likely sensing what they were. Before Greyback could return his attention upon the two bitten members of the Dursley family, bars appear and this causes the beastly Greyback to howl in outrage.

Harry's watch beeps and the effects of the potion flumes causes Greyback to take on his human appearance. With all of his lab 'rats' human, the emerald eyed wizard touches his watch upon his left hand and the three vanish with a soft pop. Touching the item within his belt pouch, the silver bars shimmer out of existence and with a wave of his wand, everything gets cleaned up, nothing remains, not even the stool the former Boy-Who-Lived had sat upon.

Glancing about the suddenly smaller basement, Harry vanish without a sound. If this works as I theorized, the 'worlds' will never be divided ever again.

Three Months Later

"The collars, Master Harry, they be active." The elderly Kreacher informs Harry upon arriving with Harry's breakfast. Harry sinks back into his chair as he considers this turn of event.

"Only took three transformations to install a core, huh? I would have thought it would take more, all things considered." The raven haired head of the Potter family murmurs to himself out loud.

"Shall Is give them cloths?" Kreacher asks the twenty three year old. Harry shakes his head and Kreacher nods before popping away to do other duties, likely to over see the other house elves at the other properties that he's regained, those forcefully taken from him by the previous members of the United Kingdom's magical community.

After the dust had settled, it became well known that he's the reward postings and it wasn't long before everything that had been stolen from him had been returned. Harry had finally gotten to honor Hedwig and to put her body to 'rest'. Sure Harry didn't get his monies back or the stuff sold to international buyers, but with the mine back in operation, money isn't a problem any more.

Harry glances over at one of the files from his own bank, he got back at the goblins by opening and funding his own bank as he has just so much money that he rather see it used rather then sitting around, gathering dust. It helps that his loans didn't have the same 'bite' as the goblins and the terms being much more agreeable. The goblins had been rather slow in reacting to his appearance upon, what used to be a goblin only scene, and thus, weren't quick enough to keep a lot of accounts from switching over to his bank.

While he doesn't know the first thing about running a bank personally, it wasn't hard to find mundanes with some thin connections to the magical community to hire to run it in his stead. Harry knew that his bank manager is have the time of her life molding the bank into her own image and is slowly becoming something very different then either the mundane run banks and the goblin ones. After all, Harry is still feeding the bank gold, thus the bank won't be running out of money any time soon.

And now, if only I can speed up the process of installing magic inside of a mundane before their first transformation by moonlight, then I'll be able to sell magic to a much wider market. Harry thinks to himself before recalling that he's got breakfast in front of him and he begins to eat it before it become totally cold.

The raven haired wizard mentally files to use feed the two permanent polyjuice potions to cure the pair of being a werewolf. If they keep their magic, well, at least he knew that his theory pays off but he would need a new mundanes to work with to learn how to speed up the causing magic to bloom within them. It also means that he won't need the Dursleys any more, which kind of suck until Harry wonders if he couldn't alter the wolf base of the curse to some other animal.

As Harry finishes his meal, the wizard feels the hairs on the back of his neck raise up. With a sigh, the twenty-three year old teleports to the mine. "It seems you lot have yet to learn your lesson." Harry muses while standing in the shadows of a earthen ledge, staring down at the team of goblins and magi.

With a grin, Harry touches the fire ruby upon his wooden pendent and those goblins that survived Greyback's attack suddenly begin to wriggle about on the ground. Five months ago, he fed a special potion to Greyback before releasing the werewolf upon the previous group of raiders, he had ordered the werewolf to be sure to bite each goblin, knowing that they would be sent on a future attempt to learn the secrets of the panned out mine.

The humans among the raiding party look on in bewilderment as changes begin to be wrot upon their tiny employers. Their leather armor strains under the pressure the changes to their body are undergoing. Some goblins grew scales instead of fur, a few grow horns or spines, the cursed goblins become mutant wolves, some might even go to say hell hounds.

Once the wolven goblins have shaken themselves, they soon attack each other and the humans among them. The wards prevents them from fleeing from the mine. Harry watches the carnage from the safety of his prepared look out, just one of many located throughout the mine in case invaders every make it pass this area.

The goblin-wolves raise up upon their back legs and howl their victory over the humans before they begin to feed upon the bodies, they shove each other about as they fight over the choice parts. As they're about to turn on each other in an all out bawl, Harry pulls his hand away from the fire ruby and with that, the spell of the curse fades but the memory likely remains every clear in their minds.

"I told you lot to shove off but yet, here you are once more." Harry says, his voice echos through this part of the mine. "You might not change viva the lunar cycle but you do suffer from the curse and I have the key to activate it."

"Tell your masters that I have found a way to pass the curse onto your race. Tell them to leave the affairs of Harry James Potter be and I won't curse more of your race." Harry states before banishing the goblins away.

Seconds later, a pair of house elves arrive to collect the equipment while Harry doubts that this will be the end of things between the goblins and himself. Perhaps its time for a counter offensive? I grew tired of always defending little over three years ago and here I am, following that same pattern once more.

Harry sighs and massages the bridge of his nose as he recalls the relic he found in the mine back during his first visit. It's hard to forget as it caused his eyesight to be corrected and that it seems to have numbed his emotions, even now, Harry struggles to feel anything but shades of emotions. Even after looking through any records he has that once belonged to the Black family, Harry still doesn't know what the energy ball is nor what it is capable of doing.

He wonders if the device has changed since he last saw it before putting it in that repaired vault but Harry refuses to go check as he rather keeps his exposure to it at a minimum. Harry doubts anything he has can protect him from the devices' effects. "I really need to widen my search for the answer..." Harry murmurs out loud before vanishing back to his previous location to continue through his mail before heading for the underground lab to see the results of using the permanent polyjuice potion to return the Dursleys back to their previous genus and solve the answer as to whether or not doing so will rob them of their 'seed' of magic.

Five Years Later

Harry sighs and wonders just how it was that he got into this particular mess concerning him becoming the true power behind the Ministry for a brief moment before snorting at the thought and laid the blame squarely where it belonged, upon the previous generations of United Kingdom magi and focused upon the results of the last year, particularly after the incident with that raiding party where he forced those goblins bitten by Greyback to transform within the mine.

Sure, the Britain has been quarantined due to an out break of a deadly case of rabies. Of course, the magical communities around the world isolated Britain because of a reporting of a altered werewolf curse, one reported by the goblins, as this new version of the werewolf curse, that it effects non-humans now as well.

Sadly, the only thing that potion did was increase the power a werewolf's infect bite so that instead of a one in twenty chance of their bite affecting a non-human to a hundred percent, same as a human when the werewolf is transformed. The now ruler of Britain thinks to himself while watching the news upon the still experimental, organic television that consists of a wooden frame with cotton cloth stretched over the frame.

Any day now, Harry expects some team from the outside to arrive to check on the situation, not that it matters much as they now have a much more secure and safe way to 'install' magic into mundanes. It didn't take long for those few intellectuals that got left behind to research and experiment with their new found abilities, particularly when they got their hands on text books talking about transfiguration and runes.

As all of magi native to Britain fled, refusing to be left behind with the werewolf epidemic, and as they were in a rush, they didn't take everything with them. Which he easily handed over for examination and dismemberment as Harry had been the only one of the magi to remain behind, thus granting him rights of everything left behind by those fleeing to escape the 'epidemic'.

"And yet, despite the number of more qualified people, I got voted to lead... Or is it because I'm the one that had the needed resources and contacts with those races left behind?" The raven haired twenty-eight year old wonders out loud, after all, the house elves weren't ordered to follow their masters out of Britain and, being the only natural wizard among the population that got left behind, it seems to be the reason why they looked to him out of all of the humans left. It likely helped that he's famous for being the Boy-Who-Lived and Kreacher quickly began ordering them about.

Sure, those that remained resented the fact that he's the cause of the quarantine but they sure loved the ability to preform magic that the curse granted them. It also didn't hurt that there is an easy cure for the lycanthrope cure too, with or without the permanent polyjuice potion. Actually, that potion is likely the reason why those that had once been over fifty are once more in their twenties or thirties(typically whatever age the hair used for the potion was cut at), thus granting a path to immortality as the potion can be safely used again after the drinker took it ten years ago. It also didn't remove their ability to use magic so it's a very valid route, not that it looks like he'll be needing it.

Harry's left hand goes to the center of his chest, to where the device's key component resides now. While he doesn't know what its really capable of, it had granted him the ability to polymorph into any living being as well as to alter parts of his body, similar to a Metamorphmagus but at the same time, not the same. Primary though, the core of the device seems to grant him the ability to take the form of a spectral humanoid sporting unearthly beauty while glowing a silvery blue light.

Harry's unsure if this hosting the core within his body will affect his ability to have children as he has yet to find somebody to marry. Soon Harry scowls and glances at the clock, not particularly happy that his mind has wondered down memory lane for as long as it had as there is a future to build and a world to be ready to face when the lands beyond Britain finally decide to visit to see how they've dealt with the out brake of rabies.

The End

To Readers: This is a kind of sequel to Heart of the Mine.

Wilderness Shadows 1

I don't own Naruto.

The newly turned seven year old turns the package this way and that, rather reluctant to ripe the gift wrap for fear of triggering some kind of trap. Finally, Naruto does so, his curiosity getting the better of various lessens upon caution on strange gifts left before his door. Upon seeing the image upon the box, the young blond forgets to breath for a good thirty seconds.

Shaking his head, Naruto narrows his eyes at the box containing the most popular game of the year, although it did come out just after last year's school year. Better not get your hopes up, there's likely nothing good in it. The wanna-be ninja thinks, preparing himself for the disappointment he's about to suffer. Even if there is something within the box, it's likely a trap of some kind.

Naruto holds the box as far away as possible while using one hand to opening the box. It doesn't escape the blond's notice that somebody had already slit the tape to keep the lid closed either. Slowly, the blond uses an old chop stick to open the lid of the box.

The young blond flinches as the lid fully opens but then, not thing happens, which causes the child to frown. Slowly, the blond pokes the contains using the chop stick and yet, still nothing. Naruto walks over and puts the box onto the couch before moving to take a look.

The blond just stares at the undamaged game and game system. The birthday boy drops the chop stick to pick up the stuff still in its plastic wrapping. Seconds tick away as Naruto turns the game system this way and that while it's still in its wrapping. He then lowers it down onto the ratty couch to take out the cardboard that held the game system in place.

After about an hour of looking at everything without taking anything out of the plastic. Naruto couldn't make heads nor tails of the booklet that came with everything, which only causes his inability to read the printed word all the more irritating and depressing as it means he didn't know how to get the game system to work or how to play the game.

Not that it'll stop me, just slow me down. The birthday boy thinks to himself, focusing on other emotions then those that have always haunt him, that fuel nightmares. It takes a few minutes to get everything connected, Naruto's just glad that only certain plugs could fit in the right places or else it would be a big long guessing game.

Placing the head piece onto his head, the ear pieces slide over his ears while a something with a padded ball rests next to his mouth. Some words flash before his eyes and then, with a, 'oh yea', the blond puts in the game. This action causes the words to vanish, leaving a white area to engulf his vision, a strange lighten grips his senses.

Suddenly, images play before him and seemingly around him, as no matter where he turns his head, he sees images of canines, felines, and other beasts done up in crazy pattern of unrealistic colors. All those within the images are four legged ranging from small foxes and cats to huge bears. A few seconds and words hang before his eyes, without thinking, he reaches out to touch the words, which causes a flash to erupt, taking him somewhere that seems to be a clearing but at the same time, it wasn't as there's this big flat rock platform at the heart of the clearing.

"Welcome to Wilderness Shadows! Please say name of an animal to begin." A woman's voice says from almost nowhere and yet everywhere.

"Ah... crow?" Naruto asks and suddenly, a gray blob in the shape of a crow appears. This time, a board featuring colors, patterns, and a scroll with a brush hovering over it.

A few touches of the panels shows that they affect the crow model hovering over the rocks with slightly out stretched wing. Slowly, Naruto learns how to alter colors independently. He comes up with an all orange crow and was ready to go for it but pauses as that would be advertising who he really was in life, which means, he won't use orange as a color and he also erased Ramen from the scroll.

With a sigh, Naruto begins to alter the eyes, changing them from blue to purple. The beak to a black and then worked on the layers of feathers. Upon having a rainbow colored crow, the seven year old snorts and once more makes changes. Upon his seventh design which features the tips of his primaries, secondaries, tertials and tail feathers sporting bright crimson colors while the rest is a dull yellow. The whole back and back of the head are also the same yellow. The under side of the head, chest, and under wing feathers are white. Eyes are green with the beak and legs being a stormy gray.

Naruto puts Hikage, Sun Shade, which he thought was a good name as the crow certainly got enough yellow on it. Rolling up the scroll, two round spheres appear, one is green with this circle in it and the other is red with two intersecting lines. The child touches the green orb and suddenly, he's being pulled towards the crow model.

Blackness greets him and when Hikage opens his eyes, the crow finds himself in a tree. Getting to his feet, Hikage first studies himself before studying his surroundings. Moving out from under the main part of the trunk, the fire style crow gets a better view of the meadow about the tree.

"New?" And the crow looks down to finds a cheetah sporting a royal blue coat with purple stripes. The cheetah's silver eyes peer up at Hikage.

"Guess I am." The crow says while studying the cheetah with his green eyes. "You waiting for somebody? Or are you just trying to nap?" Hikage asks the cheetah.

"Mostly here to greet new comers, like yourself." Then goes on to add, "My name is Indigo."

"Hikage." He says to the cheetah named Indigo. Indigo chuckles softly.

"Sounds like you've got ties with ninja." Indigo says and the crow shrugs his shoulders. "Could be but I've never heard of a village called Hidden Sun, have you?" Hikage asks Indigo.

"Might have been at one time. The wars likely wiped it out." Indigo muses darkly and Hikage didn't say anything, after all, it's not like he can read any history books to prove or disprove that statement that the other guy has made.

"You got something against ninjas?" Hikage asks after a few seconds. Indigo looks away from the crow.

"I'm not thrilled about them." Hikage admits. "Only reason why I want to be one is so I can protect myself from them."

"Yea?" Indigo says, looking up at the crow with new interest. "Guess I never thought of what it would be like, growing up in a ninja village. Never visited one either." The cheetah says thoughtfully.

"I got a lot of pressure to become one. The old-man use to talk about the good that ninjas did. Not that a ninja's ever been helpful to me... I guess you'd have to be part of their forces to be accepted." Hikage continues to explain.

"F'eh, guess if it don't work, you could always go Missing Nin." Indigo adds, likely trying to lighten Hikage's mood. That does cause Hikage to considers it what little he knows of rogue nin.

"So, mind showing me around?" The crow asks the cheetah. "I might as well get to try these wings out, right?" Hikage says, spreading them wide.

Indigo laughs before moving from his sitting pose. "Sure, why not!" To which Hikage launches himself from the tree branch, it takes a few flaps for the crow to raise up into the air while following after the loping feline.

Now this will take getting use to! Hikage thinks as he flies after the blue and purple cheetah. "Anyway, this meadow is call the Welcoming Meadow, the tree you were perched on is often referred to as the Greeting Tree."

Gaara stares blankly down at the box, at age eight, the youngest son of the Kazekage has been the target for assassination plots since he was six. And yet, since that period began, the young red head kind of misses getting gifts. Sure, the shop owner toss the strange game at him, begging Gaara to accept it instead of his life, but it counts.

The eight year old recalls that his elder siblings possess the same game, which causes him to pull the box to his chest as he walks to the house that contains the majority of his possessions. The voice of the demon he houses has moved on from scolding him about allowing the man to live to ranting and raving about what a poor 'son' he was to it. Gaara's use to the noise of the chakra demon, it had grown louder since that day...

Gaara suddenly picks up his pace, hoping to leave the street before he gives into the thing's rants and kills some random person. Although, lately, the red haired child hasn't had much of a problem with that behavior...

Leaning upon the door of his house, Gaara sighs and looks up at the ceiling, allowing his head to touch the door. Then, Gaara mentally shoves the blood thirsty thing within him into a corner, it was only a temporary measure but it'll allow him to concentrate upon playing the game he now owns. His chance to finally have a friend, even if they never met in the real world, it was still better then the existence he's living now.

Gaara heads for his room, eager to give Wilderness Shadows a try. Sitting upon his bed, the eight year old uses his sand to slice the tape so that he can open the box up. His hand trembles while holding just one piece of the device but a few breaths help calm his emotions while steely ignoring the presence of the chakra beast within him.

It wasn't long before everything is connected and he's read the booklet. Once everything is ready, he engages the power of the system and suddenly, Gaara feels like something is suddenly missing while the various image panels show scenes. He comes out of his thoughts when the menu shows up.

Once selecting the only option and a greeting is given to him, Gaara is trying to decide which animal to pick. Hm... I could always go with a feline... Nay, nor a canine. Weasel? No badger either... How about a bear? "Bear."

It wasn't long before a gray model of a bear hovers at the center of the clearing, over the big, flat stone. With a sigh, Gaara says out loud, "Otter." And the sleek, muscular body of that beast hovers where the bear had been.

"Status of species?" Gaara asks and the female voice answers, "Twenty-four otter avatars exist within game."

Gaara goes through most of the large breeds, be they feline or canine, before going into the herbivores. The red head sighs, there wasn't many impressive creatures to chose from that would stand out, that would turn heads and get people to be interested in him. "Vulture." Gaara says before adding, "Status of species?" He didn't recall if birds were forbidden as avatars or not.

"Zero vulture avatars exist within game." The voice says and so Gaara names a bunch of other bird species, the answer remains the same until he said crow. "One crow avatars exist within game."

At that, Gaara blinks. "Names and activity status of crow avatars." The red head says and the game replies, "Hikage. One year and eight months."

So, not a recently created avatar. Gaara muses but, still, it would suit his purposes as it means that means people did know of a crow avatar. It didn't take long for him to put Karasu as his name and to have the crow avatar done up with the wings and back being a copper, the head and tail being primarily brass in color. The beak is red while the legs being the typical black. The eyes, Gaara decide, would be a standard blue.

Trying to submit the avatar, Gaara couldn't as it seems that Karasu was taken. With a roll of his eyes and wrote Aragane. That gets accepted but then, with the board out of the way, something causes the avatar to move and suddenly, Gaara is pulled right into the body.

Aragane wakes within the branches of a tree. The metal colored crow stretches his wings and then angles them this way and that before moving from the main trunk. Aragane glances around the meadow to find a pair of wrestling beasts, one of which seems to be a white leopard with red spots and the other is a gray fox with neon green socks with the back of the ears and tail tip being bright red.

Sure, the fox isn't as large as the leopard but being smaller, the fox seems to be able to dart out of the leopard's reach. Aragane watches this for a few minutes but is startled when the crow realizes that a certain voice is absent. The crow is struck dumb for a few seconds before Aragane decides to experiment with his wings, pushing that matter out of mind for now.

With wings and shoulders hunched, the crow's body tenses and once leaping into the air, Aragane keeps flapping his wings while jerking about. It takes Aragane a few seconds to right himself and for the crow to circle about the meadow, allowing Aragane to spot at least three other pairs about the place.

Then, Aragane catches sight of some kind of billboard and the crow lands down upon the ground in order to read the notices. A few of them seem to be recruitment notices for packs and prides with a few being messages for certain people. But what catches his attention is the notice for an anti-ninja meeting being hosted by Hikage and Hydra, it seems to be held in the neutral valley that is called Waterfall Cliffs.

Ninjas, think the only good one is a dead one? Then this is the meeting for you! Come and find good reasons to hate these mercenary forces hidden throughout the Elemental Countries. Newcomer or not, all are welcome! Co-Organizers are Hikage and Hydra "Interesting..." Aragane muses out loud. The crow turns to study the map that's at the bottom, trying to figure out whether to fly there or to just teleport there using the mushroom ring.

"Which one?" Asks a voice and the crow glances around to find the fox and leopard sitting behind him. Aragane blinks before answering, "The anti-ninja one."

Both wrinkle their noses at the mention of that post. "Oh please, it's just hate propaganda. Not every hidden village is terrible." The fox states and the leopard nods in agreement.

"It doesn't tell you of all the good things ninja do either." The leopard remarks. "They do escort and guard missions, even been known to be rescue parties." The feline adds but Aragane mentally snorts, it's clear they want to ignore the assassinations, sabotage, and thieving missions.

Aragane tunes them out, it's clear that they're as pro-ninja as the poster is anti-ninja. The crow wouldn't mind finding others reasons for hating ninjas and the best place seems to be this meeting being hosted by Hikage and Hydra. Finally, Aragane manages to get away from the pair and takes to the air, heading for the mushroom ring to teleport to Waterfall Cliffs, thinking that maybe there are a few early arrivals at that meeting point.

"Wow... A feathered brother." Aragane hears someone say and turns to find another crow to his left, this one yellow with red tipped wing and tail feathers, although the belly and part of the lower head is white. Ah... I get the sun part at least. The metal hue crow thinks.

"Nice to meet you, Hikage." Aragane says and the other crow chuckles softly.

"Guess I am rather famous, aren't I? Up until you showed up, I was the only crow in the game. As you know my name, could you be kind and give me yours?" Hikage asks.

"Aragane, my name that is." Aragane replies and Hikage nods. They move out of the mushroom ring before they continue their conversation.

"So, how did ninja ruin your life?" Hikage asks and Aragane takes a few seconds to organize his thoughts.

"My mother died because the Kaz... because the leader of our village wanted to seal something into a babe." Aragane says, wondering if it matters to hide his village's name since he let a big clue slip. "Then there's these almost daily assassination attempts going on in the village... It's not pretty and it's like I don't have a say in what direction my future is going! They are all pushing me to be a monster and I never wanted to be one!" The metal hue crow rants while Hikage nods, likely in sympathy.

"Yea, most of the core group shares that out look." Hikage puases before continuing on to say, "My old man signed me up for the academy, only reason I never complain is the fact that I doubt I'll ever get taken on as an apprentice in an actual trade." Now it's Aragane's turn to nod in sympathy.

"If you're having trouble with some branch of jutsu, just show up a few hours before the actual meeting and there will be people around willing to help. Although, a lot of those around are from some new village that's seems to be settling upon the name Hidden Sound and, well, they do specialize in sound base jutsus, so, just beware of that when you're practicing in real life." Hikage says and then spreads his wings. "Come on, I'll give you an aerial tour of the valley."

Aragane spreads his own wings and leaps up after Hikage. The metal hue crow's mind is a whirl of what it would be like to preform an actual jutsu instead of him just mentally controlling his sand without any real effort on his part. Aragane notes the way Hikage flies and begins to mimic the other crow's movements, which does actually help steady him in the air. Must be all that practice he's had. Aragane muses while following Hikage in banking right, heading for one of the waterfalls that pour into the valley.

Enjoy

Readers: Ok, so maybe I've been spending a little too much time role playing on the BlackBlood Alliance Forum... Although, to be fair, I only got three characters there, 2 of which are sabers(Nardo and Stormcoat) and 1 is a wolverine(Anang).

The Looping Soul P1: Buffy

I don't own Buffy the Vampire Slayer.

"Oh this is so going to rile up the Slayer, you know." The possessed weasel/ferret puppet muses, none but Casper could hear. The greater spirit residing within the wooden doll moves from the mage's left shoulder to the right before leaping off onto the book case. "I'm going to find a better vantage point for this."

Casper watches as the possessed puppet races and climbs, leaving the sixteen year old alone. The dirty blond teen merely sighs while finishing setting the the trip wire. The hair growth potion waiting up high, waiting to pour down. It was only the ten minute version, so hair growth will be shed faster then the standard version of the potion which typically lasts for three to eight days.

Once everything is set, the time looping soul retreats out of the library, leaving the possessed doll behind, but Casper knows that destroying the puppet won't harm the spirit that's 'riding' it. Besides, Casper's many experiences during this time period, the mage knew that nothing important is going on with the slayer and her gang, so, no harm done really.

About twenty minutes later, Casper feels some get triggered and touches the stone in his jacket pocket. The stone is slightly warm and stroking the rune carved upon the stone, the heat vanishes. You know, one of these days I'm going to figure out how to clean this whole town of demonic energies without causing a massive explosion. He thinks to himself as some demon got lured into his trap that he created to weed out certain types of demons.

As the mage leaves the school gates, the dirty blond feels the trigger in the library activating. Casper begins to whistle a tune while he walks off to clean of trap of bloody remains of a demon.

First Time Loop

Nick, although to use the name from his last life, Xander, couldn't help but stare about the class of kindergartners. Particularly at the younger version of Xander Harris. That really drove it home that he can't really be Alexander Harris as there already is an Alexander Harris.

Then why do I still sport memories of being Xander Harris? And where does this leave me? Nick/Xander wonders to himself as he returns to the drawing he has been working on since the teacher left, likely to go for a smoke. And why put me in some other body other then Xander? What's the point of me relieving my childhood if I'm not me?

Nick/Xander is at a lost of what to do in the mean time. Sure, Nick/Xander plans to do what he can to change things for the better but that's years away. I wonder if it's time to see if some of my more, unconventional ideas about slaying demons and vampires to work?

Turning the sheet over, Nick/Xander begins to make a list of things he'll need to construct that pencil launcher. It's child's play to get a water gun and to get a priest to bless some water, so there's other projects that the time looping soul could work on.

Current Loop

Casper wipes the back of his hand against his forehead. The hyena puppet's back is finally repaired. The mage places his tools down upon the bench before taking some sand paper to take the roughness off of the wooden body of the hyena puppet.

The hairs along the back of Casper's neck raises up and he says out loud, "Just let me put some polish on the spot and then you can use it." Out of the corner of Casper's eye, a ghostly image of a snake can be seen.

"The legs... I am not terribly familiar with them." The nature spirit says. "Although, I do confess, it was a unique experience. I'm glad I came to this plane, even if it's too close to the fell dimensions."

"You would be surprise how many of your fellows try out serpent puppets." Casper says, rather relieved that the snake spirit seems to be in a good mood. "Water dwellers enjoy flying types while the flying types enjoy the puppets based off of water dwellers..."

"Having wings seems like a lot of work. I believe I shall wait a while before giving them a try." The spirit replies. "It is rather curious as to why a young human such as yourself, has come to own so much land, particularly considering what lies within the ring of properties."

Casper presses his lips together, it's not often that he's been asked about how he's acquiring the land around Sunnyhell and he think over a few answers before finally saying, "I wanted to become a farmer, once. I mean, it would be rather easy for me to use those aging spells on plants, good money to be had."

"As you've noticed, Sunnyhell being what it is, the land around the town doesn't have clear owners. It took a bit of time but I found the various deeds, most of the owners are dead but the papers themselves are being held in old lockboxes that some how, found their ways into various pawn shops." Casper explains. "Those that I didn't purchase that route came from making private deals with their owners."

"As I have tried to house anything about the properties, certain parties of the world have noticed my acquisition of said land." The dirty blond says while mentally adding, Of course a certain Mayor likely notices but doesn't seem to care as long as I don't use them for training camps for, well, anything.

"And thus, why you let us have the run of the properties." The snake, a rattler if Casper manages to glimpse the details right, muses.

"It's good for raising wood to make these puppets." Casper points out. "Although, I should work on using magic to make them look a bit more... eye pleasing."

The snake doesn't reply, which likely means that the spirit is done chatting him up. Likely due to the fact that he just finished putting the polish on the back. A second later, the hyena puppet's eyes gain color and as it raises up, the puppet quickly becomes organic, with fur sprouting while lungs grow.

The possessed puppet giggles as an ordinary hyena does before walking about the room. As the spirit gains confidence in moving the puppet about, the hyena breaks into a lope, the spirit gets tripped up but gets up and try again.

As Casper puts stuff away, the snake spirit takes the hyena puppet out of the workshop and out into the night through the ramp that leads out of the basement workshop. Hazel green eyes glance along the rows of wooden heads, he sales them as fake head trophies, pictures of living representatives of said trophies resting next to each. It brings to his mind the early loop where he managed to make it into teen-hood.

Casper muses for a few minutes upon those early loops, they had to be a good solid sixty something loops in which he died just by trying to give early training to the trio consisting of Jesse, Willow, and the other Xander. Those memories not only help Casper to recall why he picked the name Casper and came to conclude that he had to give up his previous role of protector of 'his' girls, leaving it to the other Xander.

Enough! Reminiscing of the past won't do me any good, I have research to continue. Particularly in the realm involving space and time. Casper thinks to himself while heading for a special room that's a few levels down from his carving workshop.

The three levels before that room consist of illusions really. The one right under the puppet workshop sports a miniature town. Tiny people go about their business, mimicking their real counterparts. The illusion magic updates every half a second from the visual tracking wards Casper had created to animate the small town.

The second level sports illusions of various breeds of demons he has encountered during his loops, hovering about these illusions are orbs containing memories of those encounters. Those sporting a red glowing base means that he doesn't know much about them beyond the dead bodies he's examined/cut into. Yellow base means that he's got more information about them beyond their physical nature. Blue base means that he knows pretty much everything there is to know about the breed.

The third level sports illusions of weapons that Casper himself have either made or used in the past. The labels next to those not designed by the teen himself typically have the name of the current owner as well as the location. The same tracking wards used for the small, illusionary town are used to display the labels.

Finally, the fourth level under the puppet workshop is the one that he wants to use. The room contains a chair that's tilted back with a foot rest, not unlike the chars one encounters at the dentist office. Guess I won't be making it to school for the rest of the week. Casper muses as he walks through the various paper walls sporting Asian paper spells painted upon their surfaces, certain cultures often got attracted to certain magic types and the spiritual magics were what the teen uses to progress his understandings of space and time.

Before Casper activates the spells, the young teen creates a body clone and then places a temporary tattoo upon the clone's body. The clone lacks a mind and the tattoo grants the clone a copy of his mind. The tattoo also links the clone's mind up to a memory orb so that Casper can learn what the clone has done during his absence. When the tattoo vanishes, the clone's mind will as well.

Once the clone has exited out of the room, the clone's awareness will occur once the clone has arrived at his current body's parent's house. The clone doesn't sport any particular memories beyond that he has programed the spell to grant the clone. Casper rather not have a copy try and kill him in thinking that such an action would make them real.

It take taken the time looping soul ages to find the original cloning spell. The original just clones the body perfectly, it doesn't grant the clone a mind of its own or becomes a house to a soul, unless that soul use to be housed in the original body. True, the clone body won't last very long without somebody programing it to breath or for it to under a stasis spell to be used at a later date, which is why nobody in the world uses the original spell as the produce can't function without somebody monitoring it. Mostly, Casper figured that the clone body is rather perfect for harvesting organs and other such gruesome things.

Although, if I can hook them up to a computer and have the computer be their brains, I'd have a rather effective labor force at my command. Casper muses to himself as he sinks into the chair. At least it's Wednesday night instead of Sunday night, I doubt that the programing will pass inspection for a whole week, a few days yes, but not for a week.

The enchantments upon the chair awake as Casper feeds it magic. Slowly, almost sluggishly, the rice paper walls that exist within the room begin to float in the air while beginning to rotate around the chair. Suddenly, the magical wards no longer need to be fed as they now take from his magical reserve directly, without him needing to consciously feed them.

Soon Casper feels heavy then, suddenly, his whole being is light before being dragged through this shimmering portal that could only be seen in astral form. Then the looping soul lands inside of a body, a demonic looking one that does sport trace amounts of his current body's blood. It hadn't been that difficult to create this demonic body nor to send it into other dimension.

Nose wrinkles at the smell of dung and as Casper opens his new eyes, all five of them, to find that a battle had taken place recently.

The paper spells become ashes as soon as he woke up within this body. Grasping the pack that's acting as a pillow, Casper gets to his cloven feet.

Where ever Casper looks there are young demons feasting upon the bodies of the dead. The mother of the brood is circling lazily over head. It wouldn't surprise Casper that the mother had been a late comer to the battle and killed the weaken victor.

With a thought, a tail grows from his rear end and at its tip is a formidable bone blade. Casper takes out a wooden disk that is rather thick and places it over his chest. Bracing himself, Casper hits the center of the wooden disk to his chest and suddenly, like in a certain anime/manga that he had seen once upon a time, the wood seemingly melts and engulfs Casper's whole body before hardening into actual armor.

As Casper moves to exit from his position, the brood of demonlings notice him and the bold among them decide that he's a better meal then the dead flesh all about them. Casper kills at least seventeen before the demonlings decide they're better off with the cold, dead flesh then the living flesh in their mist. The mother of the demonlings never gave any signs of coming down to deal with him, likely due to the fact that the brood consists of over a two hundred demonlings so such a small number of seventeen dead doesn't stir the mother into action.

The enchantments upon the wooden armor allows him to move unhindered out of the range of the dead demons and the demonlings that are eating the dead bodies. The feather light spells work just as well as the air filtering spells as Casper finds a few lingering spots of poisonous mist and the few demonlings that ventured into said spots.

After putting kilometers between demonlings and himself, Casper focuses upon dismissing the wooden armor. Soon the wooden disk has reformed before his chest and falls to the ground while his vision swims. As the effects fade and he mentally vows to work on the spells upon wooden Guyvers. The problem was, the armor is either covering him or in its disk form, unbonded from him, allowing pretty much anyone to use it.

Once the wooden Guyver is back within his pack, Casper takes out a stone with a simple location spell upon it. "Guide me to the closest master of magic." Casper states out loud in one of the common demonic tongues. His current body isn't well equipped to speak most human languages, it likely has to do with the fact he has a beak...

Casper had drained what resources he could in learning magic in his home dimension as the paths that he hasn't explored to be rather... scarring in a different sense, as in scarring the soul and the memories. Casper isn't prepare to sell his soul either as is all he is in the end, just a ghost moving from one body to another, haunted by his past in a vastly different sense then just mentally.

Casper has a good three months in which to seek out whatever magic users he can find and convince them to teach him. One way or another. Casper thinks to himself as he heads off in the direction the stone floats towards.

One Hundred and Fifty-second Loop

The current African-American teenager studies a certain Halloween store. The youth walks up to the store hoping that what he's about to do will wake at least one of the three up to the dangers of the world in which they're now living in. And hopefully, this minor change will be over looked. The soul who would one day settle upon the name Casper muses to himself as he enters into the store.

The owner wasn't around, which is why he picked this time to enter into the store. His right hand enters into the pocket holding the slips of paper with minor descriptions, one of which has the name of a slayer who had lived in the same time period that Buffy's costume typically has her transforming into. What little he had gathered upon this particular slayer, he hopes, will help Buffy deal with what's coming, particularly with a certain right of passage that the Watchers arrange.

One of the slips will be places within the toy gun a certain member of the Scooby gang picks up without failure every loop unless he buys it. The few times he did that, well, he learnt that somebody among the 'higher ups' want Xander to have the knowledge of a soldier and not whatever else the other Xander finds within that bin. Just how did they manage to arrange those stampedes?

The final slip goes into a certain ghost costume. That slip is meant to give Willow certain poltergeist abilities. It wouldn't surprise him if it also causes her to develop a bit of a temper or something while the spell is in effect.

He knew from other experiments that putting little information slips and hiding them upon generic costumes does effect how the spell is applied. The only problem is, he's never tried for any specific person before. Sure, he's caused those dressed up as magic users to be more talented in a specific type of magic or a soldier to have more specific set of skills, but never taking the generic costumes and turning them into persona ready costumes.

With the slips in place, he purchases a few costumes, he had won a bet that allowed him to pick their costumes, and left the store. He, of course, would be wearing some other costume that didn't come from Ethan's, not because he fears that the magic will mess with his memories but because the effects of him wearing a costume typically remains(AKA powers, skills, knowledge, and looks) with him for the rest of the loop, which often draws way too much attention from the 'higher ups'. That and I've grown bored with the selection of super heros that I can dress up as without anyone asking for details.

It's rough whenever he decides to dress up as fictional characters whom's series haven't been released yet. Although, he did enjoy the powers and the looks he got from dressing up as Sephiroth or Cloud from Final Fantasy VII, Nora from Nora: The Last Chronicle of Devildom, or Obito Uchiha from Naruto. Upon experiencing and using chakra, he found himself interested in Asian magics and he's been studying how to craft their paper spells as they seem rather easy to undo compared to most of the magics he's come across during the time loops.

It'll be interesting to see the results of the slips of papers cause. The current African-American thinks to himself before mentally reviewing that slips of papers to put on the costumes that he bought for his 'crew'. He purchased five knight costumes, one priest, and one wizard. Looks like I'll be reviewing those table top role playing books for ideas. Wouldn't be the first time I've used cheap make up and paint to active a desired effect. He had spent at least three loops working in on movies, learning a bit of how to make his own masks, fitting teeth, and some knowledge concerning how to use make up to paint the masks up so they look real.

Although, he did wonder how much effort Ethan goes to for this single event. Not that the time looper has any plans to learn magic beyond paper spells. He's has too many bad experiences with magic to want to learn it out side of knowing how to counter certain spells.

Halloween

Flexing his toes, he shifts his weight from one leg to another. The home made stilts seem fine even with the modification he had done to switch out one set of goat furry leggings for a cheetah pattern with four toes at the end. He created the tail and has it connected to a very simple computer that causes it to move the tip of the tail as well as have it swish side to side. The motor that powers these actions is long and thin, allowing him to wear it like a belt around his waist.

The stilts add about a foot and a half to his over all height. A rather simple mask, one that had been inspired by the Lion King the Broadway musical. Considering what's about to run rampage this Halloween, he figured at least this way, the 'heroes' won't attack him as they can see that he's human.

Once his costume is all done up, he heads to the meeting place. The necklaces and such clink and clanked as he walked out of the house. Unsurprisingly, he's the first one to arrive. And so, he turns off the belt motor so that he can sit down without his tail moving around, getting in the way.

"Yo, Even!" Cries one of his crew and 'Even' turns to look over at the approaching knights. Each sports a furry face with markings belonging to either a badger or a raccoon. "Nice shaman get up! Funny looking way to wear a mask though." Rus adds as the lead badger takes a few second studying him.

"You're tails are look like they're about to fall off." He remarks as he stares at one of the raccoon tails that fell onto the ground. Rus and Cassie decided to be a badger while the other three picked raccoons.

Soon the remaining two arrive, both had decided to be foxes. Crissie picked the priestess robes while Vincent found himself being the magus. Crissie's coloration is white while Vincent's coloration is rusty red. Vincent sports a wand and while Crissie is the one with the staff that he had carved when he was like, nine years old in this loop.

"Nice legs, bro." Vincent remarks upon giving him a thoughtful look. "How did you get that effect with your legs?"

"Professional secret." 'Even' sums up. He then glances up at the sky, trying to judge just how much time they had until the spell takes hold.

As they head for some grocery store to load up on eggs and toilet tissue, the spell causes his crew to become rather dazed for a second or three before they straighten up to glance around in bewilderment. Soon the seven murmur among themselves before those dressed as monsters begin to attack the group.

He manages to sneak away, leaving the group to deal with what's about to go down until the spell is ended. 'Even' has another group to watch this evening and he's fairly sure that his crew will do fine.

After all, with a mage and a priestess among them, they'll stay healthy and be able to deal with whatever strange magic that gets released this night viva those that dressed up as witches and mages.

It didn't take long before he arrives at the Summer's house and finds a spot to observe it comfortably. It takes about two hours but the four he's been expecting arrives. Willow's body being carry by Buffy instead of Xander. Willow soon exits out of the house a few minutes later, likely to go find Giles.

I wonder if Angel will visit? 'Even' wonders and sure enough, cries of vampire echo out of the house. He is rather surprised to see Angel getting thrown out of the window and then the en-scrolled Buffy yells out threats as Angel runs away.

I'm going to remember this night fondly for years to come. He decides after a few minutes of recovering from what he just witnessed. Sure, he knew it was the costume talking but it had always been a dream of his to witness this.

He then glances around but nothing seems to be wrong, which means that there might not be anything out to kill him for causing Buffy to act like that to Angel. He knew that there were certain things that typically cause those on another plane to off him in rage of 'interfering' with their plans.

One of these loops I'll turn the tables on the one who keeps offing me... He mentally vows to himself as he watches the house, waiting for the spell to end so it's safe to return home.

Months Later

'Even' jerks his head as something overhead ripples. He doesn't even get the chance to cry out as a vortex opens up over his bed. As he's pulled up into the vortex along with a few other items, a voice thunders, the time looping soul quickly realizes just who's voice it was as well.

"You worm! Do you know what you've done? Angel is dead because of you! Enjoy your stay in a hell plane!" Jasmine's works echo as he travels through the vortex.

Landing upon a large rib cage, he holds his breath while looking around at his new surroundings. He manages to grab a binder that holds a few art supplies. Quickly opening it and using the brush, he crafts a paper spell for barrier upon it.

Slamming it down, a energy barrier springs to life about ten foot sphere. Expelling the breath he's been holding as soon as he finishes writing an air purifying spell, he breaths easier. He sighs, knowing that he only has so many blank pages.

Then an idea strikes him and he takes off his shirt. Painting another paper spell upon another page, he then take it and presses it onto his chest. This one is to purify the air, hopefully, it'll allow him to breath the air without any trouble.

After ten minutes, he takes the page off his chest and discovers that the spell seems to be fused with his skin. He pokes at the spot but nothing rubs off. While confused, he shakes his head as he puts the brush away before putting his shirt on.

He then tries to locate more stuff that got sucked into the vortex. He flinches as it suddenly begins to rain down glowing lights. The tiny lights didn't hurt or anything, they just seem to get absorbed within his body. Huh... How strange, I feel a bit more energetic though. He muses as he drops down to the ground.

He sighs in relief that a few of his daggers had passed through. It didn't take long before he has placed them upon his body. Now armed, he looks around for other things that he can make use of. He is sure not to let his thoughts drift to imagining how bit the demon had been when it was alive as such thoughts would serve no purpose.

At least I finally have an idea of who to blame for all my previous deaths... He thinks as he finally gets ready to move away from the skeleton. He's unsure if he'll make back to Sunnyhell be it by resurrecting once more in the body of another babe or in his current body.

Current Loop

Casper growls at the sight of a very familiar face, the only name he's able to use is Tai'Jynn. Unsurprisingly, Tai'Jynn doesn't spot any of the scars of their last encounter, heck, Tai'Jynn actually sports both wings! The demon seems rather taken back by his reaction for a second before the twenty foot winged demon grins in a feral fashion, mandibles clicking against each other in excitement.

Tightening his grip upon the bone handle of his newly forged sword, he take up a defensive stance while Tai'Jynn takes out only one pair of swords, leaving the other half of the set of swords in their sheaths. Casper mentally smiles at this overconfidence, the last time they faced off, he came out on top and that's when Tai'Jynn was in his prime as a mercenary.

He never did learn just how old Tai'Jynn was during their previous encounters but all of the other times had Tai'Jynn missing a wing. Tai'Jynn had been the demon that sent him to his death when Jasmine first sent him into a hell plane. He managed to live to the 'ripe' old age of thirty-one when Tai'Jynn hunted him down and brought him to that meat dealer who sold him to be feasted upon alive.

Why do I always come up against him whenever I'm in a hell dimension? Casper wonders while a few money lenders start a betting ring about who's going to kill who. The time looping soul is rather use to this behavior but Tai'Jynn typically glares at those that put money on Casper instead of Tai'Jynn.

He manages to keep his tail from twitching from side to side. As the betting dies down, a ticked off Tai'Jynn finally gives his total focus upon Casper. Let's see if I can manage to kill you again. He thinks as he struggles to keep himself from moving from his position, trying to keep his limbs loose and yet ready to take a blow from Tai'Jynn's swords.

Tai'Jynn makes the first move and he hurries to block while using his tail to cause Tai'Jynn to bleed. It wasn't long before Tai'Jynn tries to use his wings to baffle Casper, not that it works as he could make out Tai'Jynn's movements in his sleep. Although his blade's edge continues to find their marks upon Tai'Jynn's body while he also deals with the few scores that his opponent manages to get in.

He manages to get behind Tai'Jynn and he slices along Tai'Jynn's spine, causing the other to scream in pain. Casper winces at how high pitched it was compared to their previous encounter. While Casper is pushed back by the wings, the human within a demon's body manages to get to the right side and beheads Tai'Jynn while Tai'Jynn tries to bring out his other set of swords.

With the death of the younger Tai'Jynn, the demons move to collect their winnings while Casper wonders if this wasn't a hollow victory since this particular Tai'Jynn just didn't have the same experiences as the previous incarnations. With a flick of his tail and a shrug from his shoulders, he moves to preform the traditional looting of one's opponent. It likely won't be long before Tai'Jynn's body gets taken away and sold by a meat dealer.

You would think that after so many encounters with him, I would be thrilled to know that I could win in a straight out fight against him. And yet... yea, not much sanctification in killing Tai'Jynn at such a young age. Casper muses to himself as he finally leaves the body alone, he has taken Tai'Jynn's swords and various hidden pouches, including the two that Tai'Jynn put within his actual body.

Hopefully our next encounter, he will be older and more experienced and then we'll know which one of us is the stronger. Casper mentally thinks before trying to figure out how much time he has in his current body before he's called back to his human one located in Sunnyhell.

To Be Continued

Wilderness Shadows 2

I don't own Naruto.

Not bad, could be better but it works. The eight year old blond commonly known as Naruto or to use his other name, Hikage. A yellow circle ringed by spikes point outward while the yin-yang image is within the circle upon this red vest. The blond uses his index finger to trace the sown pieces before putting the vest on over his washed out orange T-Shirt sporting a red painted swirl on he front.

While orange is his favorite color, him wearing red causes fearful reactions among those living in Hidden Leaf. At least when he's wearing the color. The response had caught him off guard during the supposed one time Naruto was to wear it but the boy found he privately enjoyed that reaction so has taken to wearing it more often. It also helps that yellow and orange also go with red, so at least the child got to wear those colors too.

Maybe I should continue to practice sowing... I'm sure it's easier to get cloth then getting actual made cloths from the shops. The blond thinks while turning to study what the group of water clones have been preforming in their own attempts at sowing the sun symbol upon the other jackets, hoodies, and upon certain types of pants.

Perhaps I should paint it on my shirts too? Naruto wonders as he glances at the pile of untouched shirts. With a slight hum, the blond takes out this pocket watch, he took it off a dead Uchiha while they were taking the bodies out of the Uchiha district to check the time.

The blond closes it and with a thought causes the done water clones to head for this apartment's bathroom to dispel. Naruto waits for the few remaining clones to finish up with their tasks before sending them to follow the others. The blond glances around this apartment, once again wonders why the building wasn't condemned or under repair as while this apartment wasn't as bad as his actual one, it still has its issues.

Hmmm, if I didn't have that one plan concern faking my death, I'd give burning this place down in the hopes of getting a better place in a second. The blond thinks to himself. It would be something to see the Third actually do something to improve my situation instead of sitting back and watching the abuse hemp up on itself.

Is it any surprise I help found that anti-ninja group in Wilderness Shadows? Or contribute jutsus typical of used by Leaf ninja? Naruto thinks to himself. It wouldn't be right learning what they had without adding my own jutsus to the group.

Soon the remaining water clones finish their job and with a mental command, they head for the bathroom to dispel. With the water clones gone, Naruto heads out of the apartment and down the stairs to the main level in order to leave. He's got two hours to kill and with the system on him, Naruto knew just how he wants to spend them, but not before he's within the academy.

Hikage shakes his wings before moving from his nest in Waterfall Cliffs. The brightly colored crow moves out of the center of the next to the stone ledge. With wings half spread, Hikage falls off the ledge and as the water comes rushing up, Hikage snaps open his wings to their full length and comes out of the dive.

The crow then begins to flap his wings to raise higher into the air while heading for the usual meeting place. Hikage croaks in delight, one of his legs drops down for a second before returning to its usual spot. The crow, once high enough in the air, begins to do aerial stunts just for the fun of it.

Hikage notices movement down below and angles his body to get a closer look. As the crow gets a better view, Hikage finds a shy looking doe sporting autumn colors. The doe's head turns to face the crow, allowing Hikage to notice the bright blue eyes, the light hits them in such a way that seems to cause them to appear to appear white.

Hikage calls out, "Nice scenery, isn't it?" The crow circles the doe, deciding not to land as the doe is a stranger and there could be any number of reasons why the doe would come here. The group lives in fear that somebody would learn what they were doing and they'd all face persecution, particularly those who live in the village that discovers them.

"Breath taking." The doe replies before add, "I hadn't known bird avatars were an option." The autumn coated doe's ears twist while the head stays in one place, likely due to the doe's eyes being on either side of the head.

"It was the first animal that came to my mind." Hikage admits. "Just about three months ago, another made a crow too." The crow adds as an after thought.

"I see." The doe replies calmly. "This whole game... It's not what I was expecting." The doe admits as the autumn colored doe moving to stand close to the ledge. "It's as though I can smell the water coming from the waterfalls..."

"I wouldn't know, crows don't have much in the way of smelling things or taste." Hikage admits before adding, "You'd be surprise at how a lot of newbies jump into the water thinking that they won't sink into it. Of course, their struggles to get out of it isn't much of a joke, particularly when the shore line is a few miles away from their spot."

The doe reacts by turning to looking to the left with ears going backward. "Do they drown?" The doe asks and the crow replies, "No."

"I see." The doe murmurs before leaning her head over the ledge, moving it towards the mists raising up from the waterfall. Hikage lands upon the ground, to the doe's right while cocking his head so he can watch the doe's reaction.

The doe giggles a bit, causing the doe to seem younger then her previous manner had portrayed her as. A beeping rings out and the crow sighs but before taking to the air, Hikage says to the doe, "Perhaps I'll see you around at a later date."

An ear flickers towards the crow and with that, Hikage takes to the air, heading back to the nest before logging out of the game.

Konoha-Aki follows the crow's flight path for a few minutes until the unusually colorful crow is out of sight. Perhaps this game won't be a waste of time after all. The doe muses before beginning to walk along the edge of the land island.

This land is only the third place Konoha-Aki has visited upon registering with the game. The doe had read an old notice about an anti-ninja meeting and had been curious about the place that is their meeting. The crow had been the ninth other avatar that Konoha-AKi met since entering into this game world. The crow also had been the only one to withhold their name, but then, the doe hadn't offered a name either.

It shouldn't be too hard to learn his name if what he said about there only being two crow avatars in this game. The doe muses thoughtfully to herself. Konoha-Aki's tail flickers back and forth as the doe wonders what it would be feel like to run while within this avatar body.

Finally, the doe's tail holds still just a few seconds before Konoha-Aki rears up while twisting so that the front hooves are facing towards the other end of the meadow. With ears against the skull and heart seemingly pounding, Konoha-Aki sprints forth as quick as the doe can.

It wasn't long before the doe trips and lands upon the ground in an indulgent fashion. The doe begins to laugh while moving to bring wayward legs under the doe's body. Minutes pass until the laughter dies down, leaving Konoha-Aki feeling only slightly drained and yet, in high spirits.

"When was the last time I laughed like that?" The autumn colored doe murmurs out loud. The doe sighs before getting up off the ground. There were other lands to visit and other people to get to know, so with a flick of a tail, the doe walks over to the mushroom ring to teleport to another location.

Konoha-Aki shrugs off the thoughts of shying upon this anti-ninja group. After all, the doe reasons, there are likely just a bunch of civis needing to release their negativity in regards to ninja and their 'carefree' life style. Besides, the Kages likely already have spies among the ranks. Konoha-Aki thinks as the ring activates.

Gaara stares at the orb of water. The skin of the orb is the red head's chakra. The water frightens the child's demon, which Gaara comes to view as unsurprised as sand turns into mud when wet, which is really difficult to manipulate. Not that Gaara is worried about falling in, not when he knows how to walk upon it and is slowly coming to get the 'feel' of the water.

Gaara unknowingly sticks out his tongue as he pours chakra over the orb in order to create two smaller orbs. The eight year old has been at the beach for close to three weeks now and while progress has been slow in regards to him getting comfortable using water, he's enjoying the new scenery and the fact that few of the people around the port seem to be overly interested in him. As he doesn't wear a headband, none of the people knew he's capable of using chakra or that he's killed over twenty assassins.

They saw the eight year old red head as a street urchin and not their concern. Considering the usual reaction he causes back in Hidden Sand, their attitude come as something of a welcome relief. It helps that the demon within him is more interested in getting away from the ocean then in having him kill somebody.

Gaara scowls at having two uneven orbs of water but is rather relieved that he managed to keep the water together instead of splashing about like his previous efforts result in. The red head gives the two orbs a thoughtful look and then decides to see if he can't merge them together once more. The result has the smaller orb floating around within the larger one, much to his amusement.

"Wonder if I can repeat this effect?" Gaara wonders out loud while using his other hand to brush his bangs from his face. Or substitute using water for paint... I'm sure Hikage will love to know if this control exercise could be applied to other kinds of liquids.

In the few months that Gaara has know Hikage while being Aragane, the eight year old learnt that Hikage's got a pranking streak over a kilometer wide. The only thing that dwarfs that streak is Hikage's creativity when it comes to applying jutsus to every day use. Which reminds me...

A few handsigns later and a small army of water clones march into the ocean to bring back clams, oysters, and eatable kelp. He wants a change of pace then fish, lobster, and crab that he usually has his clones retrieve. With that done, Gaara heads off to go collect drift wood for a campfire, retracting what chakra he can from the two water orbs. The water orb splashes all over but Gaara didn't care.

Although, the wayward third child of the Kazekage does check this watch to see what time it is. Skeleton has something to share with the group tonight and he doesn't want to be late to learn what Skeleton has to say or think of as news.

Skeleton blinks and raises up from the ground, heading out of the earthen den. The coyote's white and black coat is slightly dirty, more from inactivity then from the den's dirt. Skeleton heads for the small pond just a few feet from the current lair that Skeleton constructed less then a month ago.

Once the dip in the water clears the dirt from Skeleton's coat, the coyote heads for the mushroom ring to head to Waterfall Cliffs. Unsurprisingly, Skeleton arrives to find Hyrda and Hyorinmaru waiting for the coyote. "Hydra. Hyorinmaru."

Skeleton nods towards the brown and green genet known as Hydra before nodding towards the water hued otter known as Hyorinmaru. "Skeleton." Hydra states as the forest coated genet flickers their tail before walking into the mushroom ring, the otter follows a second or two behind Hydra.

From what Skeleton has managed to gather from conversations with either, the coyote comes to conclude that the pair know each other outside of the game and were close. Their names has caused Skeleton to also conclude that the pair are ninja from Hidden Mist, but then, considering certain policies, it's not that odd that Mist ninja weren't happy with their village, much less who's running it.

Typically, the two switch concerning lending their knowledge of chakra control exercise, tips concerning taijutsu, genjutsu, and ninjutsu. They did seem rather interested in the current research concerning using the standard storage seal to see if one can seal a living thing using it and then release it without the being in question suffering from being sealed. Concerning the sentiments of ninja attending these extra group activities, is it any wonder that most are looking for ways to fake their deaths? The coyote muses as they walk out of the ring upon arriving at their destination.

I wonder how many Kages would have a heart attack if they knew that most of their genin and academy students are looking to escape military service? Skeleton muses as Hikage comes hopping towards them. Skeleton could only guess what Hikage's real position is in their village, the coyote highly doubts somebody as charismatic, sneaky, and bright as Hikage is to be a mere academy student.

Might be from a lesser village. Skeleton muses while turning to watch Hikage greet Hydra. The coyote smiles as best as a coyote can as the crow uses a wing to alter the genet's direction, heading off to some secluded area to speak about how to manage tonight's members. Hyorinmaru soon gets called over by a group of sabers and leopard for help about some argument.

"You don't mind if I land on you're back, do you Skeleton?" The coyote looks up and within a few seconds, spies the second crow of the group, Aragane, circling over head. With a shake of a head and a few seconds later, the metallic hued crow lands upon Skeleton's back.

"So, how have you been, Aragane?" Skeleton asks as the crow leaps off of the coyote's back and lands upon the ground. Skeleton has grown rather fond the shyer of the two crow avatars as Aragane brings to the coyote's mind a certain younger sibling.

Skeleton knew that said sibling had long since erased the avatar they had used before what happened to cause their partying, but that doesn't mean that Skeleton doesn't hope to encounter them within this game. "Been good, though water is still giving me trouble. It's so difficult to get it to do what I want it to." Aragane admits.

"That might be because you're leaning towards Earth for your element." Skeleton says upon sitting down. "Have you tried any earth based jutsus?" The coyote asks and the crow shakes their head.

"I think I want to continue giving water a try before I move onto another element. It's not like I have anything better to do in the meantime." Aragane remarks before some group arrives to ask for Skeleton's help in regards to using a genjutsu to improve one's smell when they haven't bathed in a week or two.

Two hours later and those that weren't ninja or studying to be ninja begin to show up. A half an hour after everyone is settled, Hikage and Hydra greet the group. The meeting goes onto have those in attendance to tell their latest stories about why they hate ninja before calling on certain members to share their current findings about kidnappings going on concerning goods, children, or of power shifts going on within their country.

Once all of these have been addressed, Hikage calls upon Skeleton to address the 'assembly'. Many heads turn towards the black and white coyote as said avatar moves from laying down to sitting up. "The news might surprise and horrify many of you, but what I'm about to say is true." Skeleton says slowly.

"I'm sure some of you know of the nine demons?" Skeleton asks and a few pipe in answers about the one tail and the most famous, the nine tail. "During my travels, I heard of a group looking to capture those hosting the demons."

A lot of those in attendance explode, most tossing out certain villages they don't particularly like as culprits. It takes a few minutes for Hikage and Hydra to get everyone to be silent so that the coyote could continue. "I don't know much about this group. I only heard a few Rain ninja mention this group but they seem to believe that there is a host for the nine tail demon commonly referred to as Kyuubi."

That announcement causes a lot of chaos, especially since many of those gathered still held Hidden Leaf in high regard. It takes much longer before the coyote can continue, after all, it stands to reason that some of the demon hosts manage to get their hands on this game and game system. As they have more then enough reason to hate ninjas, it stands to reason that a few were likely part of this group.

Now they've been warned. Hopefully, they will prepare for what's to come. If not, well, I'm sure the Kages will try to keep a closer eye upon their 'weapons'. Skeleton thinks while saying, "I did not get any more information from these ninja as I was more focused upon evading detection. Whether or not Hidden Rain is behind this movement doesn't matter, what does is that Hidden Leaf has lied about how the Kyuubi was defeated and can't help but wonder what else they've lied about."

Ok, so maybe Skeleton is a 'bit' sore about the order to kill his clan and the treatment of said demon container. The boy's parents are likely regretting every sacrifice they've ever made in regards to Hidden Leaf. Their son is considered scum, not even worth being taught any way to control his massive reserve of chakra. It's doubtful the boy's education could be salvaged now or ever. Thinks Skeleton as while envisioning Minato and Kushina with looks of contempt at Hidden Leaf.

Enjoy

Hidden Societies: Naruto

I don't own Naruto.

Two Weeks After Wave Mission

"Hey! Where do you think you're going?" Naruto pauses to glance towards the owner of the voice. The young genin points to himself while this talking cat steps out of an alleyway.

"Yes, you! Get over here before somebody sees you!" The gray pelted cat snaps who's wearing a ratty brown vest. The blond genin hurries over to the feline.

"And drop that Henge! You won't fit otherwise!" The old tom says and Naruto stiffens slightly, mind racing but it's clear from the look in the old tom's eyes is he can't spend any more time and so, Naruto transforms into the first thing that comes to mind.

The tom cat gives him just nods before turning back into the alleyway with Naruto current transformed as a off white fox sporting two tails, the usual black markings are light blue and wears an orange vest sporting the leaf symbol in white upon the back. Naruto blinks as the tom cat stands up and places his paw upon this red spot upon this stone wall.

To the genin's amazement, a portal opens in what Naruto had thought was a solid wall. Without needing much encouraging, Naruto darts through the opening, relieved that he managed to fit through and then slips upon something, causing him to slide down. The old tom come sliding down after the two tailed fox.

Just as the slide comes to an end, Naruto finds himself to be at the beginnings of some kind of under-city, only for animals then for humans. Naruto manages to get out of the way before the old tom cat bumps into him. The current fox shaped genin stands by the rail to gaze around at the lower levels of this strange place.

"Well, well, handsome. You can grace my den anytime." A silky voice says and Naruto glances to find a black furred vixen who's also sporting twin tails with gray socks and tail tips.

"Please keep your mind out of the gutter, Akiko. This one was strolling down the street without a care in the world." The old tom says while grabbing a belt with a few small pouches.

"I'm just passing through." Naruto protests, his team is only here to grab some package then they're heading back to Hidden Leaf. Naruto's ears flicker backward as the old tom glares at Naruto.

"Then you should hurry on your way out! Haven't you noticed the lack of crows or pigeons around here? That should have been the only warning you needed!" The old tom snaps at the current genin posing as a white two tailed fox.

"Don't mind old Takahiro here. He over dramatizes things." Akiko pipes in while one of her tails brush against Naruto's noses, causing to the twelve year old to sneeze slightly. "Some new restaurant rolled into town and instead of buying their meat, they've been trapping any small beast to use for their meat dishes."

"They are serving crows?" Naruto asks in alarm and feels suddenly ill as he recalls that Sakura wanted to try the latest restaurant for tonight's supper. "How could they live with themselves?"

"Likely by keeping their hand on the money." The old tom, Takahiro remarks dryly. "Perhaps you'd like to give a tour to..."

"Ah... the humans call me Naruto but Tatsuya is what I use among my own kind." The genin says, after all, if he'd ever met up with another demon container, he just might ask for them to call him Tatsuya so it's not a lie per say.

And so, another one of Akiko's tails rub along his jaw line while the black furred vixen sways her hips while walking down the ramp. Feeling rather embarrassed, Naruto follows after the vixen. The disguised genin cocks his head to the side as he follows the vixen, wondering if she's just being a teasing or being serious.

Ah well, at least I'll get to see sights that the others won't. Maybe I might even find a Ramen vendor down here... Naruto licks his lips at the thought as Kakashi has been trying to break him of his 'addiction'. "So, how many foxes are in these parts?" Naruto asks, deciding to make conversation with the vixen, being sure to pick up his pace as he notices a few squirrels eyeing him from what looks to be a bar.

Mission: Paw Encyclopedia!

Naruto eyes the cat ears being offered. I'm sure they'll be willing to let a fox in. The blond genin thinks to himself before putting them on, he'll make a shadow clone once he's alone before heading to the fortress in the disguised as the two tailed white fox Tatsuya.

The blond does create a clone and then uses the replacement jutsu to appear in the surrounding forest. With a sight puff of smoke, Naruto transforms into his fox disguise but instead of wearing an orange vest with the leaf symbol, he's wearing a black vest with an image of a blue flame on the back. With a flicker of his twin tails, Tatsuya heads off towards the trail of cat scents.

The guards keep Tatsuya from entering ahead of other cats so the disguised genin is around to see his clone and team-mates approach the bridge. "Hey now! Am I going to be let in or not?" The disguised Naruto asks the guards as the last pair of cats enter.

"Ah fox?" Tatsuya hears Sakura murmurs to the others. The guards glance over at Tatsuya before waving him in, much to his relief. Standing up, Tatsuya bows to the two guards before walking pass them.

A few minutes later, alarms sound and guards rush the gate. Tatsuya watches as Sakura and Sasuke manage to get pass the rush while his clone is held at point. Tatsuya couldn't help but feel a slight headache come on at the fact that the guards continue to mistake Sakura and Sasuke for cats. Unless this is all a set up... Tatsuya muses while a guard frisks him.

Then, as soon as Sakura and Sasuke leave the courtyard, the cat guards apologizes to Tatsuya about his treatment, which, Tatsuya accepts. And so, Tatsuya finds his way to the mini market. "Welcome good sir! Perhaps you'd like a tour of our fair market?"

Tatsuya glances up to find a bat hanging from the welcome sign. "A generous offer but I'm merely here to say that I've visited this famous fortress." Tatsuya explains but the silver furred bat sporting brown kanji for guide upon, sniff, his font.

"Ah! But that doesn't mean you can't get the lay out of the market!" The bat says upon letting go and taking to the air. The disguised genin bobs his head while the bat bobs up and down in the air before him. "Besides, it's a free tour, although tips are appreciated!"

Tatsuya sighs before waving one of his forearms while saying, "Well then, honored bat, lead the way if you will." The bat chuckles, which is rather high pitch clicking.

"My name, honored fox, is Naoto." Naoto the bat replies. "My name is Tatsuya." The two tailed fox replies and with that, Naoto begins to take point while Tatsuya drops to all fours before following after his flying guide.

A large boom causes everyone in the market to pause, glancing in the direction of the sound. "Sounds like Itachi's younger brother is having a blast." Somebody says dryly.

"I was wondering why the guards would let humans in while they were wearing such flimsy disguises. Are you saying that it was all set up for this younger sibling of this Itachi?" Tatsuya asks while Naoto drops to the ground.

"Aliyah! Of course! You think we can't sniff a human out if we put half a mind to it? Just because we're not famed for our noses doesn't mean we can't smell the differences between a human and one of our own!" Grumbles one of the cats around Tatsuya.

Well, you learn something new everyday. If Itachi set this up years ago for Sasuke, then, does this mean that Itachi never meant to kill Sasuke? If Itachi cared back then about Sasuke, then what changed? The transformed Naruto wonders to himself as Naoto is in the air once more and everybody returns to their business.

Soon, Naoto begins to point out the various sights and Tatsuya puts the mission out of his mind, confident that his shadow clone has fulfilled his position until he gets out of the fortress.

After Kazekage Rescue Arc

"How did you talk me into this?" Gaara wonders while Naruto just rolls his eyes. "Particularly, how do you expect them not to realize that you left a shadow clone as my replacement?" The red head asks the blond as Naruto pulls Gaara into an abandon building.

"Shh!" The blond hisses at the Kazekage of Hidden Sand. "You do know how to do a Henge jutsu, don't you?" Naruto asks after a moment's thought and then narrows his eyes at Gaara gives him a blank look.

"Oh for the love of... Just do these hand signs while thinking of an animal!" The blond genin from Hidden Leaf says and does the Henge jutsu handsigns slowly to give Gaara an idea of what signs to make before a puff of smoke erupts and vanishes to reveal Naruto in his fox disguise, Tatsuya.

Gaara stares down at the white furred fox for a few seconds before preforming said jutsu. Tatsuya's ears go back at the sight of a primary red furred tanuki sporting green markings and a mini gourd upon the back. "Ok, just follow my lead. By the way, call me Tatsuya too." Tatsuya says before heading to the next building's basement.

The basement smells overwhelmingly of feline and bird. Slipping through the window, Tatsuya waits for the tanuki to come down before heading for the secret gate. Standing upon his back legs, Tatsuya presses three seemingly random spots and the brick wall begins to moving inwards before parting.

Beckoning the tanuki forward, Tatsuya waits until Gaara is pass him before entering as well. Gaara stops before the ramp leading down and gives Tatsuya a look before heading down the ramp. Tatsuya shakes his head and pats the pouch upon the belt around his waist to be sure that he's got money for the bar the disguised genin is taking the Kazekage to.

Dropping down upon all fours, Tatsuya walks about two feet behind the red tanuki with green markings. Twin tails move up and down independently of each other. About ten feet down into the ground, the ramp opens up to reveal the tops of buildings and another five feet before the ramp comes to an end.

"Pretty neat set up, huh?" Tatsuya asks his companion. "The bar isn't far from this entrance." The disguised genin adds while taking point. A bewildered Gaara follows after after a few seconds.

About three blocks from that entrance stands the Man-Eater, a bar run by a weasel. Behind the counter is a black furred squirrel while the four waitresses are a ferret, ground squirrel, and a cat. "Are all the back rooms filled up?" Tatsuya asks as he places a coin upon the counter.

The bartender signals for one of the waitresses to attend to them after taking the coin from the counter. "This way, gentle beasts." The ground squirrel says, motioning for them to follow.

Once they're in a room, Gaara the tanuki asks, "What is this place?" Tatsuya takes a seat upon one of the couches instead of answering.

"I wondered that myself, actually, a few years back. Some old tom hissed for me to come to him and then told me to drop my Henge. Not knowing what else to do, I Henged into the first animal that came to mind." Tatsuya says while picking up one of the menus.

"You know how animals sometimes teach themselves how to use chakra and to speak human?" Tatsuya asks while looking at the lists for beverages. "Well, a lot more animals do so then what show themselves to humans. And guess what? Some of those pair off with others who did so and their children could follow in their parents' paw prints and so on until you got countless generations do so."

"So they build places like this under the noses of humans?" Gaara muses and Tatsuya nods. "Just how many places are there like this?" Gaara asks.

"It depends more upon how the country. Fire Country has two thirds of their cities and towns sporting these kind of places while in some countries, maybe one eight of the cities and towns sporting them. The more proven to civil war a country is, the less you'll find refuges like this." Tatsuya answers.

"And you generally use this particular disguise to walk among these places?" Gaara asks and the fox nods with a shrug. "Why not? I mean, they do have members who go around pretending to be human, so why not a human pretending to be one of them? Of course, you really got to watch out, these women are very different then human women."

"Meaning...?" Gaara asks and Tatsuya lowers his menu to give the disguised Kazekage a fox equivalent to a raised eyebrow. "..."

"They got fangs and claws, they're not shy about using them if they don't like your pursue. Although, they can be very persistent when it comes to a male they like." Tatsuya finally explains.

The waitress arrives with a grilled fish appetizer and takes their drink orders. Tatsuya places a few coins to ensure that they keep their privacy before picking up one of the wooden skewers that has diced fish and veggies speared upon it. Gaara follows suit after seeing Tatsuya taking a few bites from his.

"You know, I've never visited a bar before." Gaara admits after the waitress brings them their drink orders. "Oh, I've been in them to grab wayward ninja, but never really to sit down and relax in one before." Gaara explains. "I kind of like this."

"Yea, well, bars like this one typically have up to fifteen back rooms. Considering their senses, can't really blame them. The most human bars have is one, three if they're owners are rich enough." Tatsuya admits. "I should know, Pervy Sage spent a lot of time in them."

"At least you got trained." Gaara murmurs while picking up his fourth skewer. "All I know how to use my chakra for is to control sand."

"Bummer. You know, I'm sure I can teach you the shadow clone jutsu. We both have more chakra then some kage level ninja out there. Maybe that way, you'll be able to spend time looking through jutsu scrolls and practicing them." Tatsuya muses. "I sure as hell plan to use them when I become Hokage." The disguised genin pauses before saying in a low voice, "Although, I've been working on a seal array that's suppose to mimic the brain part of shadow clone jutsu. If it works out properly then this brain array will not only read and sign the stuff, but send it to where it needs to go."

"That sounds like it could be very useful seal array, for office work at least." Gaara admits and Tatsuya's ears flicker backward. Tatsuya takes a sip from his clay cup before continuing.

"Don't you mean it could be useful in spying upon an enemy's office. I mean, I've figured out how to get it to copy what's in its box, but it's getting the seal array to think about what it's looking at that's the problem. Sure I can have it on sign, but then, it doesn't really read what its signing, which is rather useless as the document could be some sneaky law about cutting the influence of your office upon the village or it could be some clan looking to block out a rival family from some business." Tatsuya says.

"Heck, do you really think about any of the paperwork that passes through your office? It must get fairly tiring work, reading scroll after scroll. A lot of it likely blurs together." Tatsuya muses. "Privately, if you got enemies within the village, what better way to keep you busy then generating paperwork for you to go through? They then know where you are and what you're doing, they might as well chain you to the desk!"

The tanuki slowly nods while taking a sip out of his own clay cup. The waitress comes back with another plate of fish skewers. With more food upon the table, they change the topic to something, less personal and threatening. They spoke of policies of their respected countries, comparing the laws of their land against each other, then discussing laws they both find rather bizarre while they continue to drink and eat.

Finally, after a good three hours, Tatsuya and Gaara were ready to return to Hidden Sand. Tatsuya is sure to add a few extra coins as a tip as they stagger out of the room. Once they're out upon the street, Tatsuya manages to get directions to head upside.

By the time they're out of the underground city, Tatsuya is sure to teleport them both back to Gaara's house. The Henges get cancel as they stagger into Gaara's room. Naruto did wonder if its such a good idea to let Gaara doze, but figured that without a certain demon, Gaara sleeping wasn't going to cause an uproar.

Leaving Hidden Sand

"Just where did you two go to get smashed?" Sakura shouts, which causes Naruto to wince. The blond might not have a hang over but he's still rather sleepy.

"We just went to a bar in disguised. Besides, Gaara's never been in one and I thought it was time for him to experience one." Naruto says while the rest of the ninja of their party remain silent. Sure as hell doubt you'd believe just what ran the bar, let alone the fact that they're stuff is superior to anything you'd find in most bars.

This is going to be a long trip back, isn't it? Naruto thinks while Sakura harps upon why he shouldn't have taken the Kazekage of Hidden Sand out to a bar. Is it too late to give up my human life and live the rest of my years as Tatsuya?

The End

To Readers: I was watching Sasuke's Paws Encyclopedia when I thought this story up. I can't help but notice that some beasts in Naruto's world seem to learn how to speak, these beasts also typically know how to use chakra. So, I decided that breeding between two of these speaking, chakra using animals could, in time, result or already have resulted in some hidden cities build strictly for themselves. I'm sure some of you have seen the episode Animal District, which kind of introduces this kind of idea.

Digimon Side Adventures 1

I don't own Digimon.

Interesting... Thinks a young Gigimon while staring down at this odd being who's kind of like a humanoid Digimon. The crimson in-training Digimon moves away from the head to check and see if the strange not-Digimon is bleeding from another point.

Other then sporting rips and mud upon the green cloths, nothing seems to hint that the being is bleeding from another spot other then their head. Gigimon glances around before moving to the not-Digimon's side and tries to roll them upon their back. Gigimon gets a better look at the head injury.

Gigimon sits frowns and rips some cloth off to put it by the bleeding spot and tries to keep it pressed upon the wound. After a few minutes, the not-Digimon groans and opens their eyes, revealing blue eyes with an unfocused look in them. "Mom?" The not-Digimon croaks out before falling back into unconsciousness.

Suddenly, a flutter of wings signal the aerial arrival of a Digimon. Gigimon glances around and finds a pair of Angemon accompanying a Seraphimon. Gigimon gulps at the sight and while the in-training Digimon does so, one of the Angemon says, "What shall we do with it, sir?"

"Bring him along. Gigimon clearly is concerned about the human." The mega muses after a few seconds, causing the crimson in-training Digimon to jerk a bit while the spoken Angemon replies, "Yes sir."

Suddenly, the not-Digimon and Gigimon are engulf in a light as the two Angemon hold out their hands. The light causes the two of them to raise in the air. The three holy types take to the air with the human child and Gigimon floating after them. Gigimon clings to the not-Digimon's chest.

What's a human? Gigimon wonders upon recalling what the mega Digimon had said about bringing him along. Gigimon spends much of the trip thinking and having his imagination go into overdrive. After a long time, a castle comes into view and Gigimon comes out of his thoughts at the sight.

A patrol of Pegasusmon and Nefertimon come to greet the mega and his escorts. What's so important about the not-Digimon? Will they heal him? Gigimon wonders as they land upon a balcony and a group of ultimate holy types come to greet the mega while a Gatomon comes over while wearing a sling.

"Move!" The white champion snaps at the young Digimon. Gigimon jerks away while the champion begins to inspect the make shift bandage that Gigimon made. Gigimon just stands off to the side and watches in bewilderment at the Gatomon's actions. Why not have one of the more evolved Digimon use their healing programs upon him? Gigimon wonders.

"How is the human?" Asks Seraphimon to the Gatomon currently attending to the human. Gigimon notices the number of those surrounding them and quickly moves to the human's side while the digital cat Digimon reports.

Gigimon didn't really get much out of the report of the human's injuries, only that the human will be fine with some rest and food. The master of the castle, Seraphimon then orders that they'll be taken to a room. One of the Angemon causes them raise up off the floor and they're taken through various halls and stairwells until they stop before a set of doors.

Once they're hovering over the bed, they are lowered down. The Angemon leaves the room, closing the door behind them. Gigimon glances around the room before glancing at the hurt human. "I hope you get well." A brief pause. "Still, I don't see what's the fuss is over you being human." Gigimon says to the resting human before snuggling next to the human's side and falling asleep.

"I hope you get well." Who's that? "Still, I don't see what's the fuss is over you being human." What are you talking about? If I'm human, what are you? He shifts a bit, before opening his eyes.

His vision is hazy but as he blinks his eyes, they clear. His body aches and he's got a massive headache. He turns his head and finds sunlight coming in from the window. "Morning! Although, it's more like lunch though..."

He blinks at the sight of this red plushie toy speaking to him and blinking their yellow eyes. "Hungry?" The same toy asks him.

"Starved." He replies with a frown. His mouth is rather dry and he adds, "What are you?"

"Me? A Digimon." The creature that looks like a stuff toy replies. "So, you're a human, huh? What kind of special attacks do you possess?" The Digimon asks him and he can't help but stare at the crimson Digimon.

"Huh? What are you talking about? Special... attacks?" He replies but before the red Digimon could form a reply, the door opens and into the room walks an angel.

"Here, let me help you sit up." The angel says and he gets a good view of the angel's pink cloths. The angel kind of reminds him of someone... someone important but thinking about it only makes his head hurt worse.

The pink robed angel then puts the tray with the soup upon his lap. "Thanks." He says as he takes the spoon from the tray to begin eating the soup.

"Not a problem at all. I'll be back in an hour to take it away." The angel says upon putting down a bowl containing a fruit salad upon the bed, right where the red Digimon is standing. "Thanks!" The Digimon cries out before beginning to eat the salad.

"You're really weird." He can't help but say at the sight of the Digimon enjoying the large bowl. The creature's tail wagging back and forth, he shake his head and begins to eat his soup.

The Digimon finishes his salad long before he manages to finish his soup. He had to pause at times since his hand would ache and he's switch to his bad one. In the end, he picks up the bowl and drinks it as soon as he is sure it's not too hot.

"So... am I in heaven?" He asks the red creature sharing his bed. Yellow eyes blink up at him looking throughly puzzled.

"Heaven? Oh! No, we're just in Seraphimon's castle. We were brought here two days ago. You must have hit your head really hard since you were bleeding heavily from your head. I kind of ripped your shirt to try and stop the bleeding."

"Oh..." He murmurs and lifts a hand to feel the head bandage. "Ah... we never met, have we?" He asks as the Digimon invokes familiarity to him.

"No, heck, before I found you, I didn't even know humans existed!" The crimson Digimon says before cocking their head to the side. "So... You got a name I can call you by? Gigimon is what I go by, at least until I evolve."

"Name?" He murmurs before frowning while trying to think of not just his name but his memories of what happened to him. "I... I don't remember." He says with fright. "I don't remember who I am!" His voice raise up in panic.

"Hey, hey, hey! Calm down! Just cause you don't remember now doesn't mean you won't later!" Gigimon cries out while moving to stand on his legs. "There are plenty of ways to recover memories!

So... just... calm... down." Gigimon states and as trying to move quickly causes him pain, he reluctantly remains upon the bed.

He takes deep, calming breaths and his vision slowly returns to what it once was. "You going to be ok?" The crimson body of Gigimon comes to stand by his face with a worried look.

"No. No I'm not!" He says with tears beginning to well up in his eyes. His headache is becoming unbearable and his sense of balance is like it doesn't even exist. It wasn't long before he's cuddling with Gigimon while he's crying. Gigimon is saying smoothing things and, after a while, he finds himself drifting off to sleep.

"Reizo! What's over that ridge?" He calls out to the Guilmon that's already at the top of the hill.

"Just floating rocks in a great chasm like that pack of Gabumon had said we would find. The cavern is likely somewhere close to the magma." Reizo replies while looking over to him.

That pack sure wasn't kidding when they mentioned seeing liquid fire. He thinks upon gazing within the great chasm. "Impressive, eh Maro?" Reizo the Guilmon says, nudging him gently in the side.

"Rather beautiful, in a dangerous kind of way." He says while glancing at the floating islands of rock. "There's some crystals down there." He says as he gesturing to a stone pillar that's real close to the sluggish magma. "The vault has to be on our side." He adds as he turns to glance almost straight down from where he's standing.

"Makes you wonder what kind of artifact could do something like this, huh?" Reizo muses while the rookie moves to the edge of the ridge and glances downwards as well. "We'd get a better view if we climb down to that ledge, although I won't know what we'd do for food and water."

"We'll collect what supplies we can tomorrow and the day after that before we begin to climb down." He decides. "I've waited five years to find this fruit tree, I can wait a few extra days." He fingers the thin, plastic red bracelet sporting a half an inch coin.

Glancing over to the Guilmon, he studies the matching item that binds them together, a green necklace about Reizo's neck with a larger device hanging down from the plastic band that makes up the chain. His coin sports the symbol that's on Reizo's chest while Reizo's coin sports the symbol that means Hope in the various Digital Worlds. The coins allows him to channel energy into Reizo, allowing the crimson Digimon to Digivolve up to his ultimate stage of WarGrowlmon.

"So, we're camping here or back down there?" Reizo asks him and he glances around the ridge before glancing back down the trail that sports a meadow and a few berry bushes. "Might be safer to camp in the meadow." The Guilmon murmurs after a few seconds of looking at the meadow.

He nods in agreement although he does find a spot to sit down before walking back down. "Just give me a few minutes to rest. We have traveled a long way, after all." He says to his friend.

"Sounds good to me." Chimes Reizo and the rookie Digimon takes off the pack he's been carrying to eat a berry loaf that's likely already going bad. He watches Reizo's actions fondly, still amazed that they've been together for little over five years.

They had their share of arguments, certainly, but they remain together throughout whatever has been thrown at them or placed before them. For their first year together, they believed that his memories would come back on their own. Then they spent the year after that one studying up on various methods Digimon have used to recall their previous life before they reformatted as eggs.

Finally, the last three years have been them chasing down leads. They've located various artifacts and respected Digimons, they didn't do much other then prove that some methods were only meant to be used on Digimon. This tree though... It's ancient so perhaps it'll be able to restore my memories.

While no longer feeling as empty as he once had, he couldn't help but wonder. The wondering is sometimes the reason why he can't sleep some nights. He looks away from Reizo to look up at the sky.

"Ready?" The Guilmon asks and he nods as he brings his gaze back down. He hikes up his pack before getting off the rock.

They walk back down the trail in silence with a few insect type Digimon flying over head.

Four Days Later

"Oh look, a Birdramon." He couldn't help but say dryly from his position above Reizo. "So, how much do you want to bet that they're the vault's guardian?"

"Oh please, there's no takers for that one." Reizo pipes in while the fire bird champion Digimon let's out another screech. A spot about two feet over head is where the champion Digimon's attack hit, making him glad that he has yet to grow during his stay here in this world. It also allows Reizo to carry me when I get tired of walking around too. He muses while Reizo and him begin to hurry their pace downwards.

Reizo fires off a few attacks at some of those floating rocks, causing them to ram into the angry champion Digimon. Birdramon shakes those off rather quickly but the lower they go, the larger the floating islands of rock there are. Many of them interfere with the guardian's attempts at getting at them.

Suddenly, the rock he's griping comes loose and he begins to fall, only for Reizo to snag him out of the air. He quickly finds new holds upon the rocky wall so that the crimson rookie could let go of him. They also begin to notice crystals upon the bottom of the various floating islands and he risks a glance down to find a large ledge made totally out of crystal.

"I think we should just fall." He says. "Yea, well, good call as we've got incoming!" Shouts Reizo and he doesn't even look, he mostly feels the impact of the incoming floating islands that Birdramon sent at their position.

They fall just a foot before the raining wall face. Reizo quickly moves to cover him as that rock rains down, shielding him nicely from the rocky debris. Without a word, Reizo collects him up and bolts for the entrance of the vault.

After a few moments, Reizo lets him down and he brushes his cloths off. As he finishes, Reizo has a torch going, lighting up the crystal passage fairly nicely. "Hopefully, there's another way out then that one." Reizo grumbles and he nods in agreement as they walk down the tunnel.

A few miles in and they arrive before a massive gate that's seen better days. There are cracks large enough to them to slip through the metal door. "Wow... That's one huge tree." Reizo murmurs, they're standing more then a few kilometers from said tree and they can't see the top of it.

"That must be that dimensional gate." He says as he squints at the base of the tree. "Not sure if it's in one piece though, not with the tree being so close to it." He remarks.

"Well, look on the bright side, at least we got hover boards now." Reizo says after causing dust to raise from picking up a flat carved disk. The disk sluggishly begins to glow white before Reizo would let go of it, it hovers about a foot in the air.

He steps onto it with a grin and with both feet upon the flat surface, a compass design flares up with him at the center of it. "A rather old design." He muses while Reizo picks up another for his own use.

With each of them upon a hover disk, they raise a few feet height into the air before they fly over the rest of the collection that stands between them and the tree. They weren't here for anything besides the fruit from that tree, at least until they learn if the fruit will restore his memory, then they might take a look at the collection that's stored away within this vault.

Upon reaching the tree, he raises up to one of the branches with Reizo following suit. As he studies various examples of the fruit, Reizo muses, "Hmmm... If my nose is working right then none of these are ripe."

He glances over to Reizo but before he could form a reply, a woman's voice says in a soft tone, "You're friend is correct. None of the fruit on the outer branches are ripe." Glancing sharping at the sound, they find a ghostly image of a temple priestess.

"Though, I must admit, I had not yet had the pleasure to meet a human child before." The ghostly priestess bows at him, causing him to feel embarrassed. "Though I am rather puzzled as to why you wish to eat one of my ripen fruit."

"I have amnesia." He confesses after a second. "We're hoping that eating one of your fruits will restore my memories." He adds and the ghostly priestess studies him for a few minutes.

The priestess' gaze drops to his red plastic bracelet that sports the coin. "I take it this Guilmon isn't your actual partner then? No Digivice manifested even after all the time you have spent together?" The digital image asks and they could only nod.

The ghostly priestess' eyes soften and she brushes her hand upon his left cheek. "I fear that upon eating this fruit, you may forget your time in this world as well as be transported back to your own world. It is not uncommon for Digimon from other dimensions to lose their memory upon arriving to this one. If they continue to be dissatisfied with their time in this world, they would come to me and eat of my fruit." The ghostly image says and he swallows upon hearing that, particularly as he really doesn't want to forget about his time with Reizo or what he's learnt during his time in this world.

"But he's human, right? Doesn't that mean that perhaps, just a thought mind you, that there is a chance he could remember?" Reizo asks and the priestess looks thoughtful.

"There is that, but it would likely be your presence that would spark his memory. It is rather doubtful that you'll be able to follow him." The ghostly priestess explains. "And he is needed in his world. He has a destiny to fulfill and you are not a part of it."

"And yet, here I am. I helped to bring him here and thus, I have helped him to return to that destiny." Reizo huffs, folding his arms over his chest. "Sure, he could have befriend another Digimon but I'm the one that's here with him in the here and now." The Guilmon states and he smiles, everyone always said that Reizo didn't act like a typical Guilmon and the looks upon their faces upon realizing it always proved to be rather humorous, this ghost priestess isn't the exception either.

"You are rather odd for your species. You sound more like a Gallantmon then a Guilmon." The ghostly priestess muses after recovering from Reizo's out burst.

"Could I please get a fruit?" He asks, swallowing before he asked that. His mind a whirl of questions to ask this being about this destiny he's to be returning to, but couldn't pin down one long enough to think of asking it.

And so, the priestess image guides them to the center of the tree. The fruit hanging upon this part sparkles with the torch light upon it. He pauses and glances over to Reizo, but the rookie just gives him a half smile while sporting a look of sorrow.

Turning away and fighting the urge to cry, he takes hold of one of the large fruit and yanks on it, successfully snapping it off after two minutes of yanking upon it. Bye, Reizo... He thinks before biting down upon the fruit.

Bye, Maro. Reizo thinks as a sparking glow engulfs the human child. Within seconds, even the fruit that Maro had taken a single bite out of vanishes. Soon, only the crimson rookie and the ghostly image of a fictional priestess remains.

"How odd..." Murmurs the image and Reizo glances to find that only a pack remain upon the hover disk that Maro had stood upon. Then looking back at the hovering image, the rookie Digimon realizes where the tree's consciousness is looking.

Reizo's hand claw goes to the coin hanging from the necklace about the Guilmon's neck. "That should have fallen off... I don't sense his bracelet with the belongings either..." The digital image muses and Reizo smiles slightly as the rookie realizes what that means.

Till we meet again, Maro. The red rookie Digimon thinks while moving forward to collect the fallen pack. "Is it alright if I stick around here and take a look at what else the vault houses?" Reizo asks the projection.

"Guilmons are viral types..." Guilmon? "What's wrong with viruses?" Plenty things are wrong with them. "They have a tenancy to be rather territorial." That's putting it lightly. The garden is unbelievably beautiful but he can't see every detail clearly. Not even his companion with whom he is speaking to.

"They have a hard time letting go of those they regard as theirs." "Well, I guess I'm not much better then. He's become my dearest friend. I can't imagine my life without him." Did I really say that? He struggles to see whom he's talking to, the voice suggests a woman, almost like Angewomon but different.

"If you truly feel like that, then here. These will allow you to channel energies from yourself into Reizo so that he may achieve his higher evolutions." Reizo? He can almost feel the weight of something dropping down upon his hand. That's that bracelet!

"What you got there?" "Something to help us on our quest. Guess they're to symbolize our friendship since I'll be able to help you Digivolve." "Its not like we'll run into much trouble. It shouldn't take us more then a few weeks to find Wisemon." Wisemon? He knew the scenery has changed as he can see this particular Digimon with ease.

The Digimon is red with a white belly that sports black markings that were dead on for the symbol upon the coin that's on the bracelet. The Digimon towers over him and as the Digimon looks down at him, he sees yellow eyes and ears oh so similar as Patamon's own. Has to be a champion. He thinks, although, he feels as though it's not correct.

"Hey look! Mine's becoming green and sporting this sun raise or is it setting symbol?" He watches as the white plastic becomes red and the coin's surface glow as the metal raises up until the symbol from the red Digimon's chest is on the coin. "I guess a little piece of me for you to carry around, huh?" "Guess so, Reizo, guess so."

"TK! Wake up!" Patamon says while hopping up and down upon his chest. For a half a second, he thought of a small red Digimon was hopping upon and down on his chest.

"I'm up, I'm up!" He murmurs before yawning and sitting up. He's careful to scoop Patamon up before he sits up. He shakes his head before glancing at his clock. He yawns once more before turning to get off his bed, he puts Patamon down before he stands up.

"TK... You were struggling in your sleep again." The orange rookie says and he sighs, his hand going to the red plastic bracelet that he saw in his dreams. Ever since that adventure in America, he has been plagued by strange dreams, last night's dream is the first time that he's hear a complete conversation and saw at least one of his dream companions as well.

"Patamon... Have you ever heard of a Guilmon?" He asks after a few seconds of silence. He fingers the coin, his thumb moving over the surface of it.

"Not really. Why?" Patamon asks him and he stares at his dresser, not really seeing it as he brings to his mind the red Digimon he had been talking to before waking up.

"I was talking to somebody about Guilmon type Digimon. Then, before you woke me, I was talking to one." He informs his partner. What he didn't say is that Guilmon is a virus type or that for some odd reason, the Digimon goes by the name Reizo.

He continues to stare down at the bracelet and then, puts it on while Patamon says, "Maybe we can have Izzy ask Gennai about this species of Digimon." He nods as he moves to get out of his PJs.

Once dressed, he's sure to check his school bag to see if his homework is in it. He checks his desk calendar to see if any scheduled tests for the day. "You want to spend the day here or hanging around the school?" He asks his friend and partner.

"School since that's where the others will be." Patamon says while coming to land upon his shoulder. For a brief moment, he feels rather ashamed about the fact that the Digimon don't have much to do during their school day. It must be boring having to stay out of sight and only get to watch us instead of being with us...

"TK?" Patamon asks questioningly, startling him a bit. "Sorry, it just struck me how boring you guys must be while we're attending class." He explains as he brushes his bangs into his hat before leaving the room.

"Yea, it kind of is but at least we know you're safe." The orange rookie replies while taking to the air and following him to the kitchen for something to eat. It wasn't long before he's got an omelet cooking on the stove while he's getting some plates out for them to use.

For a moment, he studies Patamon while mentally seeing his partner's mega form, Seraphimon. "So... am I in heaven?" "Heaven? Oh! No, we're just in Seraphimon's castle. We were brought here two days ago. You must have hit your head really hard since you were bleeding heavily from your head. I kind of ripped your shirt to try and stop the bleeding." He looks away from Patamon while wondering where that came from while a hand of his moves to his forehead, almost expecting to feel a bandage.

Jerking his hand away, he hurries to the stove to get the omelet. He flips it before turning the element off. After about a minute, he takes the pan off the element and while walking over to the table, cuts the omelet in half. He puts one half on the plate before Patamon and the other on his own. He takes the pan to the stove and puts it on one of the elements he hadn't used before returning to the table to eat his breakfast.

Soon they finished their breakfast and once the plates are in the sink, Patamon gets into his back pack. With his keys, he locks the door but even as they reach the elevator, this minor headache seems to be blooming into something more. Flashes of scenes and of book pages often obscure his vision, making it hard for him to focus on what's happening around him.

A dull splashing of waves slowly becomes louder. His sense of balance fades and everything around him vanishes. As he blinks, he finds himself standing before a beautiful ocean. He looks off from shore but glances down when he feels something pulling on his shirt.

He can't help but be alarmed at the sight of an eight year old version of himself, only dressed very differently then he usually dressed. "You can't be me..." He murmurs but the young blond merely looks bemused.

"I'm complied from the memories of the five years we spent with Reizo in a different dimension." The child with oddly old eyes explains. "I woke when you were de-aged in that confrontation in America. You can call me Maro."

"Maro?" He muses and the child replies, "Amnesia. Couldn't go around being called human, you know."

"You said we spent five years... How come you're not older then eight years?" He asks, suddenly suspicious of the child.

"Just how many months did you spend in that one Digital world before time between the two became synchronized? How come you didn't age during those few months?" Maro counters and he never thought of it like that.

"Who knows, if you spend a whole year in the Digital World, maybe you'd find your growth stunted. There likely haven't been many studies of the effects of a human living for years in the Digital World." The child states calmly and he sighs.

"So now what?" He asks the boy and Maro simply says, "Now, we wake up for we are whole."

His eyes flutter and finds a concerned Cody standing over him as he hears Yolei saying something to someone. "How long was I out?" He asks the youngest Digidestine of the new group as he moves to sit up.

"You shouldn't move, TK." Cody cautions him but he does so anyway. "It was just a delayed effect of what happened back in America. I'm fine." He tells Cody, giving Cody a slight smile.

Not that Yolei would have any of that since as he moves to stand, it seems that Yolei finished with her call and is already ordering him to lay back down on the ground. He tries to reassure them that he's ok and just has a minor headache, but Patamon joins Yolei about him needing to go to the hospital.

How troublesome. He couldn't help but think while rubbing his thumb over the coin upon his bracelet. It's not as though they'll find anything wrong... Knowing the others, they'll want Izzy to take try something to find out what's wrong. He thinks to himself.

After School

He can't help but find himself to be rather bored. The doctors want to keep him overnight to be sure that he won't have a relapse and a rather worried Matt had shown up around lunch but had to leave soon after to return to school. He almost wished he had taken his older brother up on his offer to grab him a book from the store as he became rather bored playing games on his D-Terminal and listening to the music he has on his phone before being told to turn it off.

Currently, his dad is speaking with a doctor about the results from the tests that already got completed and there's nothing on television that he wants to watch. His father had showed up with a can of soda and a candy bar before heading off to get the run down from which ever doctor he could find. There had been an E-Mail from the others saying they can't come as there's an emergency in the Digital World but he did get one from Sora saying she'll be over as she doesn't have practice after school.

He glances over to where he can hear soft snores from his partner Digimon and friend. He had given his lunch to Patamon as he didn't feel that hungry. At least one of us can nap. He thinks fondly with a slight smile upon his lips.

He presses deeper into the pillows and mentally reviews his memories of those five years while being Maro. He wonders what Reizo's been up to since they parted and if Reizo has or hasn't been reformatted. It kind of hurt to think that so many years have passed that Reizo has likely became a mega or died in a battle.

"I wonder what would happen if..." He trails off with a frown but that train of thought is totally dismissed when Sora arrives. He sighs in relief, finally, somebody he can visit with and perhaps, confide in.

"Sora!" He says with a grin. "How has your day been?" He asks as she drops her bag next to his back pack in which contains his sleeping partner.

"Good to see you too, TK." Sora says as she moves to sit on the other chair. "It's been rather typical, although I can see you're bored already."

"Stir crazy." He agrees. "I should have taken Matt up on his offer to grab me a novel or something from the gift shop." He admits. He then begins to think of a way to tell Sora of his time in that other Digital World, although speaking about it in the hospital might be a bit too public for his liking...

The End

An Owl's Human: Harry Potter

I don't own Harry Potter.

November 1st

"Why are they leaving him there like that? I mean, your humans didn't want them left there, at this address!" He says to his mother while stretching out his wings every so slightly. "Can't we do anything?" He asks but his mother merely clicks her beak while looking away.

"Humans, even magical humans, do the strangest things for the strangest reasons, Talan." His mother answers finally. "I know you had hopes of claiming Harry as your human, but it's likely you'll never see him after tonight." He glances sharply over at his mom, feathers raising up in alarm.

"But after what happened, shouldn't there be post to be delivered to him?" He asks while focusing on causing his feathers to sleek down. His mom takes to the air and he glances back towards the young human before following as best as he can, he's yet to be fully mature.

"That breaded one set up wards to keep Harry's post from getting to him, my son. It's best to move on and set your sights on another magical human." His mom states.

As they fly away, he can't help but vow to himself, I'll be back. I'll find his post and if I can't deliver it straight to that house, then I'll deliver it when he's out of it.

Five Years Later . . .

He screeches as one of the furry menaces tenses, ready to pounce. With his wings spread out, he gets ready to leap into the air. A growling echos behind him and just as the feline before him pounces, a human shouts, "Go on! Get!"

The cat's bolt away and he relaxes to turn to look over at the human he's waited years to meet again. He straightens and screeches meaninglessly at Harry and the six year old pauses before turning to look at him with a baffled expression. He hopes off the rather large package he managed to steal from a tower room at a certain magic school. Moving behind it, he uses his head to nudge it towards Harry, cooing as best as a barn owl could.

Unfocused eyes squint at the package. "It this for me?" Harry asks and he says, "Yes!" He bobs his head up and down.

Harry bites his lower lip but the child does pick up the package. He watches as Harry softly reads the address upon the package before opening it up. "There's a letter and... But I'm not allowed to..." He cocks his head in a questioning manner but Harry begins to read the letter without much encouragement, even though the six year old stumbles over words or a turn of speech.

"But my parents... they never died like that, did they?" Harry wonders and he looks away from the young human. "If I don't eat these now, I'll never get to eat them... Not with Dudley stealing my food, not sure why he does it, he's got more in his lunch kit then I do..." Harry grumbles after a few minutes of silence.

Harry moves into the small alley and begins to dig into the chocolate eagerly. He hops after the boy and then, seeing enough room, leaps to perch upon Harry's leg. The boy turns his emerald eyes to him and swallows what's in his mouth before speaking, this time, addressing him. "Don't you need to go return to your owner?"

He clicks his beak and fluffs his feathers. After a few seconds, Harry quickly wipes his hand upon his pants before reaching out to touch him. He regards the out stretched hand gently grips the out stretch index finger with his beak for a few seconds and then releases it. It takes a minute before Harry gathers his courage and touches his breast with said index finger.

He half closes his eyes as Harry continues to stroke his breast feathers. It wasn't long before Harry returns to eating the rest of the package. Then, Harry just sits there, looking at the letter once more. "This letter... it's rather old, isn't it? Why didn't it get delivered the day it got sent out?" Harry wonders and he clicks his beak a bit before preening.

"I don't suppose... I mean, it's rather foolish..." He turns to regard Harry's face. He wants to know if there's more like that one. He realizes and with a screech, he leaps into the air, determined to wrestle another parcel or even a few letters from that room.

"Where are you going? You'll be back, won't you?" Harry cries out and he shouts, "I'll be back! Just you wait!"

It doesn't take long to arrive at Hogwarts, not with certain magics placed upon him to help speed him along to deliver mail and the like. None of the owls or crows seem incline to do anything more then give him a glance. He lands upon the ledge sporting an opening large enough for him to fit through.

Once within the stone walls of the school, he flies through the halls, none noticing his passage at all. Owls are known for their silent flight after all. If I were any other kind of bird, I'd be heard flapping my wings within minutes! He thinks as he goes directly to the room holding Harry's undelivered mail.

Slipping behind the tapestry that hides the hole over the door of the room, he waits until his eyes adjust to the room before picking out another parcel that he feels he'll be able to slip out of that broken corner of the window. It takes a few minutes and perching upon other spots throughout the room before he spies a small one next to a bundle of letters.

Without a screech, he launches himself from his perch and manages to grab the parcel before spells start flying through the air. Looks like they're weaker then they were during my first time here... Makes sense, unless somebody comes through the door, the wards won't alert that man concerning what's happening within here. He thinks as he gets pass the tapestry and then flies through the hall to the broken window.

By the time he finds Harry, the boy is huddled in some bushes. He screeches as he gets within a mile of the boy. Soon enough, he's on the ground before the bushes feeling very proud of himself, particularly as Harry crawls out of them. Harry stands up and wipes his hands upon his pants before picking up the parcel he brought off the ground.

"Another one? Is that why you left? So there's more of them?" Harry asks and he allow his wings to open slightly as he nods yes. "Thanks." The young wizard says softly before reading the address upon this parcel.

The parcel contained a healing potion and instructions to owl the person if Harry wanted any more. "I guess instead of a postman, it's owls that deliver the mail, huh?" Harry asks and he clicks his beak.

"Well, I think I got a crayon... You won't mind taking a message to this person?" Harry asks and he clicks his beak once more. Then he looks at the potion in Harry's hand and screeches a bit, startling Harry a bit but the boy looks at the potion.

"I should drink it, shouldn't I?" Harry muses and he clicks his beak. With a sigh, Harry takes the cork and downs the potion. "Ick!" Harry says making a face but he can hear bones cracking and popping within the boy's body.

The potion is done with Harry growing an inch. "My wrist... My shoulder! They don't hurt no more!" Harry says in amazement and if he sported the factories, he would have frowned upon hearing that from his human.

After a few minutes of Harry poking parts of his body, the boy finally gets around to writing that note. Harry pauses and wonders out loud and addressing him, "Do you think I should mention I just got the parcel today?"

He clicks his beak and bobs his head. "Well, you would know better then me, I guess..." Harry decides after a few seconds and he clicks his beak in agreement. Once the letter is written, he holds out the foot sporting the leather strap sporting leather strings. It takes Harry a few seconds to tie the message upon his foot and he gently holds onto Harry's index finger for a few seconds before taking off, towards America it seems.

Harry

He remains in the park, determined to wait for the white owl to return as it seems to him that something likely kept the bird from coming to him while he's at his aunt and uncle's house. As a clock chimes midnight, a whistling sound erupts and suddenly, a screech rings out and he glances up to find the owl coming towards him.

"Harry Potter?" A woman's voice asks as the owl lands upon his out stretched left arm. It's talon trying not to press too roughly upon his arm.

"Who are you?" He asks and the brown haired woman crouches down to look at him viva the same eye level. "How did you get here?" He manages to ask but his voice breaks up although the owl makes this sound that seems to be a coo.

"I'm Sarah Naomi. I'm the one that send you that healing potion back when you were but a babe." The woman says, moving away from these other two adults, men if he's to judge as they haven't spoken and he can't see them properly. "You mentioned you haven't received any post before today?"

"Yea. This owl just showed up and was getting attacked by a pair of cats when I scared them off. It seemed to be determined to give me the first package. Then, after I ate the chocolates, it flew off and brought me your package." He says. "It didn't occur to me to send a thank you to the previous package and when it did, the owl was already gone." He admits and out of the corner of his eye, the owl gives him what appears to be a startled look.

"Just what kind of owl is it?" He asks after a few minutes, he might not see very well, but it's clear that Sarah is frowning. "Hmm? Oh, he's a barn owl. A very clever one at that." Sarah says and the barn owl puffs out his chest in pride, causing him say, "Oh..."

"Harry, would you mind if a friend of mine sends your owl to where he got your packages from? He's rather keen on seeing if he can't bring you the rest of your mail. No offense to your owl but, the number of people who written to you over the years... There would be too much for him to carry." Sarah says but he is rather confused.

"Why do you keep calling him mine? I never met him before today!" He says and Sarah smiles while the barn owl seems to be a bit put out.

"You're mother had a barn owl as her post owl. It wouldn't be that unusual if he's that owl's son." Sarah says. "It's likely he hatched a bit before you had your first birthday. It's not that unusual for the chick to decide that they belong to their parent's owner's child." The woman explains and he blinks while ohhing.

The barn owl clicks his beak, which means that he agrees with what Sarah had said. "I guess that means that my parents gave him a name then? I wonder what it is." He admits as he regards the owl perched upon his arm, he doesn't wince as the talons kind of poke him a bit more sharply as the barn owl shifts his weight as the wind blows.

"If he wants to do so, I don't have a problem with it." He says after a moment and the barn owl clicks his beak before leaping into the air to land upon one of the out stretched arms of the men.

And so, once the barn owl is flying away, the men come and introduce themselves. It takes a bit before they convince him to lead them to his aunt and uncle's place. Luckily, none of them seem interest in speaking with his guardians, just looking at the property while the men grumble about the shitty wards around the place.

In the end, the grown ups tell him that they just need a bit of his blood and they'll send a copy of him to continue to say with his relatives while he can come with them away. While they also want to get him check over in a hospital before they proceed with any more plans since they need to know what kind of home life he had lead while staying at the Dursleys.

They soon use something called a port-key to leave to be at that hospital.

Talan

He's glad he at those two mice that Sarah had summoned for him as it is, he's strength is rather stretched out. Just one more visit and all that mail will be transported out of that room. They don't have any reason to keep it from him, beyond screening to make sure nothing sports a curse or hex. He tells himself as he gets within sight of the castle.

Once he gets upon that ledge next to the broken window, he yawns and finally scratches that spot behind one of his ears before glancing into the halls. He then pulls his head out and glances around outside of the castle. Puffing his feathers out for a few seconds, he yawns once more before slipping into the Hogwarts viva the window.

With ease, he flies through the halls once more. None of the chatting paintings in this tower seem to notice him silently flying a few feet below the ceiling of the hall. He lands, his talons land upon the cloth, thus no sound rings out to cause alarm. He quickly gets to the side of the cloth and push his way between the tapestry and the wall.

He hunches and leans down towards the pile of mail, cocking his head this way and that, trying to hear if something else is within the room. He glides to different positions once more and as minutes tic by, he finally works up the courage needed to land upon the mail and to screech to activate the port-key that his sports about one of his legs.

He takes a moment to untie it and to grip it with his left foot. Taking a deep breath, he launches himself from his position and once upon the pile, screeches. The magic takes effect just as he gets hit with a spell.

He wakes to find a concerned Harry looking down at him and he gives a weak screech before once more, blacking out. The next time he wakes, he finds himself on his back. He yawns and struggles to stand but once he does, he fines Harry resting upon the bed to his right. The boy is sleeping fairly soundly and he fluffs his feathers a bit before looking around for something to eat.

He finds this odd mouse looking item at the foot of his 'bed'. "Go on, eat it. It's a nutria-mouse." He glances up to find screech owl perched upon Harry's other side. "It's safe."

He returns to looking at the thing that looks like a plastic mouse but decides not to argue. It goes down in one go. "How long was I out?" He asks the screech, moving to face the other owl.

"About a day. More from stress and exhaustion then from the stunner." The screech reports and he relaxes, glad that it hadn't been for long.

"Is there a reason why you're here?" He asks the screech. "I mean, they don't exactly let our kind into these places, not unless delivering mail." He adds.

"Mostly because the boy didn't want you out of his sight. The port-key had some minor interference so instead of arriving in the basement, it arrived over top of him." The screech explains, chuckling as only an owl can. "I'm told it was rather funny sight, it all coming down from the air, hovers there for a second, and then ploop! It just drops down, almost at the same rate."

He stares at the screech before deciding to take a look at his surroundings. Well, at least Harry's safe, take that mom! An owl finally won one over a wizard! He thinks, his chest puffs out in pride and satisfaction at a job well done.

The End

A New Beginning: Bleach

I don't own Bleach or Pokemon!

A de-aged Ichigo sighs while laying down in a hospital bed. Upon arrival in this world, the substitute Soul Reaper found himself under attack by creepy black balls with faces at the heart of purple mist and this huge purple stuff toy looking thing sporting red eyes. Without certain items, the orange haired six year old hadn't been able to exit out of his body to do battle with the ghostly gang, particularly when one of them licked him.

The dimensional traveler's rescuer had been a twelve year old girl who caused some fire horse to appear and then went on to give the beast commands, causing the things to be driven off. The animal trainer then picked him up and carried Ichigo away. Although, if it weren't for the fire horse, they would be taken unawares by the next gang of ghostly beings. The girl had been forced to release a huge canine sporting gray fur and black mane that goes all the way towards the tail when a third encounter with these things made themselves known.

With the canine with them, they didn't encounter any more of those ghost like creatures and once in town, they went straight to the hospital. They did give Ichigo something and he fell asleep. The girl had mentioned Gastlies, Haunters, a Gengar, and used the name dusk a lot too to the doctors while Ichigo was getting onto a stretcher.

Ichigo is just trying to come to grips about what happened not being a dream and that he's not only stranded in an alien world, been attacked by alien creatures, and worst, Ichigo is once more a kid again. The previous teenager soon begins to wrack his memories for how he ended up here in the first place. Nothing really comes to mind beyond Yuzu watching some show and he was just walking pass the television while Yuzu is busy in the kitchen.

I wonder how long until somebody notices that I'm gone? Will they think I ran away? And what about my duties as a Soul Reaper? Ichigo wonders until his stomach reminds him that he's yet to eat.

The six year old glances over to the oatmeal that's been placed on the table to his side. Ichigo moves and pulls the rolling table to bring the bowl over to him. Taking the warmer off the bowl, Ichigo soon digs into his breakfast. He hadn't eaten supper last night.

With that gone, he sinks into his pillow upon pushing the moving table away. The warm meal and boredom causing him to drift off to sleep, although he does fight it. Ichigo wakes to a scream and finds a nurse surrounded by a group of purple balloons with a pair of larger ones sporting red markings at the bottom.

"Where did all these Drifloons and Drifblims come from?" Some new arrival demands. "Someone get a trainer over here! Particularly one with a dark type or even a normal type!" A third orders.

Trainer? Dark type? Normal? Ichigo wonders while the balloons move away from the doorway, almost like they want to get away from the others and yet, they didn't seem to mind his presence. Could they be attracted to my spirit pressure? But only Hollows can sense that and hunger for it... Ichigo thinks with a frown upon his young face.

"Chase them off, Crow!" A young sounding voice orders and soon a black bird charges through the doorway. The some of the balloon beings flee, phasing through the walls and ceiling.

Those that remain team up on the huge black bird. "Helping Hand, Pro!" And in comes what seems to be a primary yellow furred, red marked mouse sporting a cross for a tail. The little mouse claps and the black bird cries out before fading from sight.

Before appearing again, a few of the balloon beings cry out as something hits them. "Good work, Crow! Pro!" Ichigo look back to the door to find a twelve/thirteen year old sporting blue dyed bangs.

The bird, ironically called Crow, gets hit by a series of black balls coming from the balloons. Crow manages to shrug a few of those hits off and the bird again fades from view, causing damage to the balloons before reappearing. It's then the mouse's cheeks spark and with a cry, electricity snakes through the air, hitting many of the balloons.

One of the larger balloons seems to be paralyze and the others' nerve finally vanish, causing them to flee. The preteen by the door tosses a ball at the downed balloon and to Ichigo's surprise, the balloon glows before vanishing. The ball lands on the floor and shakes for a bit before stilling.

The mouse moves and picks the ball up off the floor after sniffing the ball a few seconds. "I've never heard of Drifloons and Drifblims showing up in town. Let alone in a building..." The preteen mutters while moving to take the ball from the little mouse.

"They generally are rather harmless compared to most ghost types." One of the doctors agree. "Although..." The doctor glances at Ichigo while sporting a thoughtful look. "The young lad here had been admitted yesterday. The trainer who brought him in mentioned getting attacked by two other different gangs of ghost types after rescuing the boy from the first."

"Don't look at me, I didn't do anything to cause them to attract them." Ichigo says in his defense. Other then breath or exist. The orange haired kid thinks to privately to himself.

"Still pretty strange though. You are the common theme in these instances." The doctor muses. "Particularly as we can't find any record of you in any country."

"I really don't know what happened. One minute I was home then, I was in a field and..." Ichigo finds to his embarrassment, he's voice breaks and he begins to sniffle. It seems that just because he has all of his memories doesn't mean he'll react like he's use to.

In the end, the nurse comforts the six year old while the doctors and trainer leave, likely to continue the conversation else where. The nurse asks Ichigo for his name and the child gives his name. Before the nurse leaves, the kindly woman causes a section of the wall to go from black to some soap opera.

It didn't take long for him to grab the remote and flips through the channels, looking for a documentary to begin gathering information. Of course, being six and slowing beginning to act that age, Ichigo finds a cartoon marathon featuring space colonies, aliens, and combining giant robot Pokemon to form some ultimate hero. While Ichigo knows it's corny, he still couldn't find it within him to change the channel though.

Two Weeks Later

"Hope you like her, Ichigo! Go on! Let her out." Doctor Shirley says to the orange haired six year old Ichigo while the ex-teenager is examining the tiny ball. With a frown, Ichigo touches the button and the ball expands.

Touching it once more and a light escapes, taking shape of a beast. As the light fades, Ichigo stares at the Poochyena, the dark canine, who in turns gazes at him. "Ah, don't you need to be ten to train Pokemon?" The orange haired child inquires while the Poochyena points her noses up and sniffs the air.

"You need to be ten to keep more then one Pokemon. Everyone can own up to one Pokemon, it's when they want more then one that they need to acquire the proper license." Doctor Shirley explains. "And considering how often ghost types keep showing up around you, we knew you'd need a Pokemon that's capable of driving them off. Typically, the more common pet types wouldn't do and Eevees are rather rare as they're so popular."

"I guess I should give her a name." Ichigo muses while watching the dark dog sit down, looking at him once more with her red eyes. "Gin is a little too obvious... Ranae. I'll call her Ranae." An ironic name, all things considered.

Ranae's ears flicker back, it's clear that the canine seems to be considering the name. Ichigo holds out his hand and Ranae's nose twitches for a few seconds before the canine leans towards his hand. Ichigo smiles gently at Ranae, moving to scratch behind Ranae's ears, causing Ranae's tail to beat up and down upon the floor, eyes close in pleasure.

"There's a park a few blocks away. Why don't you two run along and enjoy the fresh air, hm?" The good doctor says and Ichigo glances up from Ranae to point out, "I don't have any cloths that fit, remember?"

"Ah, that explains why this bag of cloths and a pair of runners are doing by the door, doesn't it?" Doctor Shirley muses and Ichigo blinks at the sight of the cloth bag next to a pair of white runners. The doctor leaves and he grabs the bag, Ranae follows him into the washroom, where he then proceeds to put on the cloths, a yellow shirt featuring a large red lightning bolt and black pants.

Once the socks were on, Ichigo and Ranae leave the washroom. Slipping the runners on, they soon head down the stairs, heading for the main level. Once outside, Ichigo sighs and smiles widely before taking the map out. Two blocks away and they arrive at the park to find kids playing game like soccer or playing with a Pokemon, typically with a Rattata or some small bird type.

It didn't take long for them to find a spot to play fetch using some random twig that Ichigo found on the ground. About a half hour later, Ichigo and Ranae grow bored with the game so they move off in search for something else to do. The orange haired child notices some play equipment where a bunch of kids playing tag and with some Pokemon.

A Growlithe barks at Ranae and Ranae turns her nose up at the orange with black stripe furred canine. Ichigo glances between Ranae and the fire dog with a bemused expression while they walk pass. He reaches out and pats Ranae on the back, Ranae leans into him, giving Ichigo a chance to scratch behind Ranae's ears, causing the Poochyena's tail to wag.

Suddenly a black ghost Pokemon appears that's holding this golden mask rock with its tail. Ranae is suddenly between them, barking something at the ghost Pokemon. Just what kind of attacks does Ranae know?

Ranae

Ranae is still rather ticked at the nerve that that Growlithe to think she'd be interested in him that when the Desumasu suddenly appears before her new owner, she quickly moves to stand between Ichigo and the ghost Pokemon. ("Back off!")

("Hey now! I'm just seeing what's generating all of those vibes. Don't mean much harm.") The Desumasu says, moving up a foot into the air. ("How strange, he's the source huh?")

Ranae's ears flatten against her skull as she uses Astonish on the Desumasu. ("You still plan to harm him! It's my duty to keep you from harming him at all!") She snaps.

"Yumi! Stop that!" An adult comes jogging over and the Desumasu, Yumi, pauses to turn towards the incoming human. "Return, Yumi!" And with that, the ghost Pokemon vanishes into their ball.

"Sorry about that. I've never had him run off like that before." The older human explains.

"It's all right, I've gotten use to having ghost types show up at random times." Her own explains. "It's why I have Ranae." Ranae wags her tail, glad at that Ichigo is happy to have her.

"Really? How strange..." The trainer mutters then somebody call out to the adult. "Again, I'm sorry for Yumi. I'll be sure to keep him in his ball for the rest of the time we're here."

Ichigo nods and soon, it's back to being Ranae and her owner. "Guess we should head back to the hospital, Ranae. It's been a while since I've been outside and I'm kind of exhausted." Her owner says and Ranae merely licks one of his hands, it wasn't long before Ichigo is scratching behind another one of her ears for a few seconds before they began to walk, heading for the street they walked in from.

End of the Month

Ichigo

The teen-turn-child just blinks at the papers before him, not sure what to make of the fact that he's to be adopted by the sister of Doctor Shirley. The woman owns a Pokemon Ranch a day or so away from Celestic Town in the Sinnoh region. Ranae whines and Ichigo blinks owlishly upon looking at the young Poochyena sitting at his feet.

Ichigo reaches down and scratches behind Ranae's ear, his mind finally rebooting over the papers. "What do you think, Ranae? Would you like living on a ranch?" He asks and Ranae stands before wagging her tail.

"Any place is better then living in a hospital," Bad enough over a clinic. He muses. "And I'll be able to keep my last name too." Ichigo adds out loud as he gives thought to the benefits of the move in not only in town but in region. He's become rather famous in Dew Valley for attracting ghost Pokemon.

Never owned a pet before Ranae. She's not like a normal animal either. He muses thoughtfully. A lot of papers support that claim, particularly when psychic types get to the point where they can project their thoughts into human minds.

Ichigo sighs and begins to wonder how he'll be arriving at said ranch. "I wonder how Celestic Town got its name..." The orange haired child wonders out loud.

He feels slightly guilty about not having the discipline to study ways to leave this world or how best to fit in. He's been rather busy just taking care of Ranae or watching the TV. It's not as though he has much of his own stuff to keep him entertained. It's not as if he expected it to take this long for the Soul Society to do something concerning his disappearance.

Celestic Town

Ranae

Well, that proved restful. The Poochyena mentally muses while stretching her body, being sure to be careful of the many people moving around her owner and herself. As they were traveling, few ghosts bothered to track them down to take a look at Ichigo or to suck up some of her owner's dreams.

As Ichigo doesn't know much about being a trainer, Ranae found it rather awkward to battle without a human giving her commands during those confrontations between those ghost types and herself. Although, without humans, it does makes the battles from being predictable. I've gained a lot of experience without needing to follow orders. Ranae muses, she's still got a long way before she can evolve but she will likely evolve before Ichigo could become a trainer and she doubts that as a Mightyena she'll be allowed to attend classes with Ichigo.

"Over here, kiddo!" ("Hurry up! It's too crowded here for my liking!") Ichigo and Ranae turn to find a cart with a Rapidash stallion harassed to the light, two wheeled cart. Without much more prompting, Ichigo and Ranae approach.

"Miss Shirley?" Her owner asks and the woman snorts before replying, "Call me Dash! And this here is Blaze."

("Greetings, Blaze. I am Ranae.") She says in way of introduction before joining her owner in the back of the cart. "And this must be Ranae? What a well groom Poochyena you got there. You must take real good care of her, ah?" Dash, Blaze's trainer, muses while peering at Ranae.

"Really? She wouldn't let me really touch her tail too much with a comb." Her owner admits and she just flickers her ears at that.

Dash chuckles while Blaze begins to move, pulling the cart along. "Don't worry too much. My Tobi was the same when he was a Poochyena." Dash explains with a touch of humor. "Just take comfort in the fact that she even allows you near her tail with a comb. Means she trusts you a great deal."

"Will I be home schooled or will you be bringing me into town to attend school?" Her owner asks after a few minutes of silence as the cart moves down the street. Ranae watches as buildings slowly pass from her view, the cart smells strongly of medicine, food, and, of course, Pokemon. The rocking of the cart and the steady rhythm of Blaze's hooves upon the street, slowly but surely, Ranae drifts off to sleep while resting next to her owner.

Ichigo

He slowly strokes sleeping Ranae's back while the cart pulls away from the town. Once out of the town, more like small city, Blaze's pace begins to pick up while Dash chuckles causing him to glance over at the fire horse. While he's not a good judge of animal behavior, he couldn't help but think that Blaze seems to be prancing as the fire type is being sure to step high.

"Ok, ok, Blaze! Hold your horses." Dash says, chuckling when the stallion snorts. "Hold on tight to that Poochyena, kiddo! This is going to a rough ride!" His new guardian says and he quickly gathers Ranae in his arms as Dash seemingly causes the reins to crack.

With that signal, the Rapidash whinings before suddenly breaking out into a run. The cart jerks and Ichigo moves to hold Ranae with only one hand while the other grips the rope that's along the rim of the bench. The jerk of his body also alarms the canine in his arms, Ranae growls, likely expecting some ghost Pokemon appearing but Ranae's growls transforms into a questioning whine.

"Blaze has been given the go ahead to go all out." The orange haired dimensionally displaced ex-teen explains to Ranae. Blaze makes a throaty rumble, not sure if the fire stallion is agreeing with that or merely swallowed something like a fly and is trying to get it out. Ranae stops whining and moves to place her head over a shoulder.

It wasn't long before Ranae's tail is wagging while the wind whips about over and through the Poohyena's furry head. Ichigo smiles while shaking his head slightly to either side for a few seconds. Ranae suddenly howls and Blaze nickers a reply before picking up a bit more speed.

Well, at least this mode of transportation doesn't produce any pollution. The ex-teen muses dryly. Most do seem to prefer Pokemon as mode of transportation, specially considering that the larger flying types are used to fly from one city to another.

As the ranch comes into view, Blaze's pace slows. The ex-teenager gets his first glimpse of the many Pokemon that his new guardian owns, particularly as a flock of various fliers circling overhead, at the head of the flock seems to be a Charizard. Ranae howls a greeting and he turns to find a huge dog racing along side the cart, the canine sports an orange coat and black markings.

"Hey there, Varg! Guess this means Sam's waiting for me at the house, huh?" Dash asks Varg the Arcanine.

Varg glances over at Ichigo and Ranae before glancing back over at Dash. "This is Ichigo and his Poochyena Ranae. Ichigo, Ranae, this is Varg, he belongs to my neighbor Sam Benoit." Dash pauses before adding, "Sam's an old friend and we use to travel together during our first year as Pokemon Trainers. Sam is one of the breeding farms that supply Growlithes to the police forces. Varg, here, is a prized breeding stud."

He just blinks, trying to connect the few Growlithes he's seen to the huge Varg. "Hello." He finally says to Varg and the canine barks twice, to which Ranae responses with a bark of her own. The great canine seems satisfied with whatever Ranae had said as the large fire dog picks up his pace and passes Blaze, heading for the house while Blaze slows to a trot and heads for the barn.

Finally Blaze comes to halt and it takes him a few seconds to recover his balance, although Ranae has already leaped over the side of the cart and gone to greet the welcoming committee that seems to be organized by the Charizard. Dash lowers the back of the cart, which allows him to get off without any trouble as he doesn't feel like climbing over the side of the cart.

"Thanks." He says and Dash responds by ruffle Ichigo's orange hair. "No problem, kiddo!" Dash says, it's clear to him that Dash must have been one heck of a tom boy growing up.

"Seems like Ranae's already introduced you to the welcoming party too." Dash says and sure enough, the Pokemon seem to regarding him with curious and yet measuring looks. "This is Ichigo Kurosaki, I am now his legal guardian and he'll be staying here at the ranch until he passes the test to become a licensed Pokemon Trainer." Dash addresses the group of twenty or so Pokemon, placing an arm about his shoulders.

Well, at least they're not out to eat me. He thinks as Dash tells the Charizard, Forge, to keep an eye on Ranae and him as they explore the ranch while Dash goes to see what Sam wants.

First Day of School

With Ranae curled up in his jacket, Ichigo's orange hair whips about as Blaze races across a field, normal bugs erupt from the grass at Blaze's passing as does a few common wild Pokemon. He clings to the saddle tightly, even though he's gotten use to riding upon the Rapidash during the spring and summer, he's still possess a fear of the fiery mane and tail burning him by accident during a ride.

Soon, his surroundings change and Blaze's hooves click upon the tar road. Blaze slows from the break neck speed to something close to the speed limit of the town. With that, Ichigo pulls the zipper of his jacket down and help Ranae to stick a head out from the collar, Ichigo feels Ranae wagging her tail.

About thirty minutes of navigating around the town, they arrive at the school. He gets down from Blaze before he lets Ranae drop down onto the grass of the court yard. He checks the time from his wrist watch to find that he has about forty some minutes until the first bell goes. "Thanks Blaze!" He says politely to the stallion, stroking the Rapidash's muzzle.

A moment later, Blaze is heading for the closest Pokemon Center. Blaze will stay there until school is over to come and pick Ranae and himself up. Ichigo turns to regard the school's front for a few minutes before heading towards some play equipment, making a beeline for the swings with Ranae following after.

Slowly the school yard gets filled with kids from six years old to eleven years old. A few kids did take note of Ranae and some tried to get close enough to the Poochyena to pet her, but Ranae kept moving out of reach while also keeping him in her sights. Some of the kids give up and head off to do things with their friends with a few hanging about, giving Ranae longing looks.

Soon, the bell rings and he gets off the swing, with Ranae hot on his heels, he follows the stream of kids heading for the gym where they'll learn which class they'll be in. Most of the kids give Ranae and him space, most of the older ones snort and roll their eyes, it's clear they believe that he'll be asked to send Ranae home or get in trouble for having her here with him, but as none of the teachers possess Pokemon on their person or own one that's an experienced fighter, Ranae's place by his side will remain secure.

Ichigo finds a place next to a corner, trying to find a secluded sport to sit down. He finds a spot and Ranae sits next to him, a few of the surrounding students glance their way but didn't do much other then whisper to their neighbor, nodding in their direction. Ichigo struggles to keep an aloof expression upon his face, which is rather hard as his nerves seem to be all afire and his pulse is racing.

Being around all of these kids though, that really brought home the fact that he misses his friends, both among the living and among the dead. He had known he would be among kids that appear to be his age but that didn't do much to prepare him for being among them. He had spent certain mornings studying what text books Dash has in her study and had also managed to get access to a computer to learn more about what kind of subjects schools in this world teaches at their schools.

Ichigo glances at his teacher, Mr Baker, upon hearing his name being called. The man appears to be on the oldish side as he can spy gray in Mr Baker's bread and buzz cut. As the principal begins on the other teacher's class, his fellow classmates stand up as Mr Baker walks towards the entrance/exit. He hangs back a bit before falling in line with Ranae.

The room they enter into is room nine and he finds an empty desk close to the teacher's own desk. Mr Baker gives Ranae and himself a glance before greeting the class. The teacher also out lines the lesson plan, not that most of the class is paying it much mind as they seem to be more baffled by the fact that Mr Baker hasn't addressed him about Ranae resting by his feet.

"Mr Baker! What about the Pokemon next to him? I thought we're not allowed to bring our pets to class." Some girl with almost silvery hair asks when Mr Baker asks if there were any questions.

"Kurosaki is a special case as he has something of a problem with ghost Pokemon popping in at unusual times. Hence why his Poochyena is allowed to attend classes." Mr Baker explains and this causes his classmates to murmur among themselves.

"Does that mean we can bring Pokemon of our own?" Boy sporting green streaks through his black hair. A lot of the kids murmur agreements to that question.

"As far as I'm aware, only Kurosaki is the exception, not the rule." Mr Baker says before asking, "Are their any questions about school itself?"

There were none as many of his classmates clearly thought that it's unfair that he can have Ranae and they can't have their own pet Pokemon here at school during classes. Which is likely why so many of them were glaring and giving him envious looks. I wonder how many fights I'll get into by the day is out...

And so, Mr Baker moves onto handing out their text books and some note books. They also go through their back packs for their pencils and other things that their parents or guardians had bought that had been on the supply list the school had sent out. They put the stuff into their desks while a sheet of paper goes around the room and they're expected to put their names upon it, allowing Mr Baker to know where each student is sitting.

He puts his name on the sheet before putting the sheet onto Mr Baker's desk. Once that is done, they do a series of tests to see what they retained after summer vacation, likely giving Mr Baker an idea on what he has to review before proceeding to teach them new material. He, of course, found the various questions to be rather easy, the only problem he has is with history, but then, they weren't expected to know a lot of it, only local history revolving around the founding of the town and temples, he pretty much knew he wouldn't do well on that as he is new to the area in more ways then one.

Recess finally arrives and everyone is more then happy to bolt out of the classroom, heading for an assigned play area. Ranae and him follow the rest of the class out, only at a slower pace. Once on the play ground, he glances around while trying to find a place where he can let Ranae cut loose as she has been rather patient with laying upon the floor next to his feet.

Getting to a tree line, he takes out a ball from his back pack and tosses it as far as he can. Ranae bolts after the ball and manages to grab the ball in the air upon leaping for it. Just a second after all four feet touch the ground does Ranae head in his direction with the ball in her mouth, her Ever Stone pendant swaying as Ranae comes towards him.

When Ranae gets bored with catching and bringing the ball back to him, she leaves the ball about a foot away from where he's standing and runs off. It's around this time does this group of older kids approach, Ichigo can tell from their very familiar expressions that they mean to use force to have their way with him.

Some things stay the same, don't they? He muses while giving the approaching group a blank look. "Can I help you?" He asks the four.

"Yea, you can call my Poochyena over here." The leader of the four states and the other three are sure to sport threatening looks. "She's mine during recess, got it?"

"I'm sorry but Ranae is unlikely to agree with that." He says calmly. "She will if it keeps us from pounding on you." The leader counters.

He smirks in a very predatory fashion upon hearing that. "Who says you're going to even get so much as a punch on me? Now, why don't you boys go back to playing cops and robbers before you cause me to give you lot reasons to stay out of the public eye?" He says, feeling a great deal like his old self then he has in a long time.

Ranae has come to see what's happening and growls at the four, but stops when he say, "I can handle this Ranae." The Poochyena sounds out a questioning whine but likely remains where she is as Ichigo refuses to look away from the four boys before him.

The boys seem rather confused about him counter threatening them. They clearly didn't feel as confident as they had when they arrived. Unsurprisingly, some kids began to gather around, clearly expecting something to happen, but this also attracts the attention of the teacher supervising recces.

"Getting into trouble already, Stevenson?" The teacher demands, causing the four boys to jump slightly in surprise. It seems that they hadn't noticed the approach of the teacher.

"Just having a discussion with him, sir. About his Pokemon." The leader says, trying to look innocent before the suspicious teacher.

"Is this true, Kurosaki?" The teacher asks and he responds, "A rather heated discussion, sir. Although I doubt I got my point got across to Stevenson and his friends. They seemed rather stumped with my reply and had yet to respond to it."

The four glare darkly over at him while the teacher studies him for a second. "Just let me know if they try anything, Kurosaki." The teacher says at last and he nods.

The teacher glances once more over to Stevenson and the three before walking away. "Next time, Kurosaki." Stevenson says before walking away.

"Yea, next time." He murmurs as he finally glances around to watch as the other kids slowly head off as there wasn't a fight to entertain them. Ranae walks over and gives him a frown.

"I don't want you in trouble for harming another kid, Ranae. Their parents can get you banned from school by raising the issue of you not being well behaved enough to come with me." He explains and Ranae gives him an 'Oh' look.

"Besides, as long as they throw the first punch, anything I do after that is considered self defense." He says upon kneeling down to scratch behind Ranae's ears. "You just focus on any ghost types that show up and leave me to deal with the threatening human elements, ok?"

Ranae growls softly but doesn't retreat from his touch. Once that's done, Ranae quickly goes off to hide behind a bush. The bell rings a few seconds later and when Ranae returns, they walk back to enter into the school. A few of his classmates watches as they return to the desk.

I wonder how many of them will try and sit with us at lunch? He wonders as the final bell rings and Mr Baker begins by having them do talk about what they did this pass summer. He can only sigh at this, but then, this was a class containing a few six year olds and seven year olds.

Week Later

The lights suddenly die and Ichigo sighs. "Ranae?" He asks and the Poochyena arfs while his classmates begin to panic.

"Where's the ghost?" He asks and he senses Ranae moving out from under his desk to circle around the desk. Mr Baker is out in the hallway, likely heading to find a flash light.

The door suddenly slams and the lights outside of the class flicker one before flaring so brightly that the glass tubes burst. "A Rotom..." He murmurs while the others crowd around the window of the door, likely in hopes of catching a glimpse of said Pokemon.

Ranae begins to growl just a minute before a girl screams. "And he's brought friends." The orange haired ex-teen murmurs under his breath. A few more startled cries ring out and a cry of a laughing

Haunter causes every single classmate to scream about some murderous, blood hungry Haunter here to drink their blood.

Ranae pauses in her growls and he sighs, rubbing a few fingers on his forehead while murmuring about the horror genre being the same everywhere. The lights begin to flicker, a sign that the Rotom has decided to enter into the classroom. It wasn't long before a giggling Rotom becomes visible, lighting up the room while giving him a chance to note the number of ghost types that fill the classroom.

He finds beyond the Haunter and Rotom to be three Sableyes and a Shedinja. Ranae howls before charging at the closest ghost type, a Sableye.

Ranae

She uses Howl before she charges the nearest Sableye to Bite them. ("Ouch! You little...") The Sableye cries out while the other cries out, ("Use Lick on her, Joker!")

She manages to evade the incoming Lick attack while the Rotom gives Thunder Wave a try. Though that electric attack hits, it did little to paralyze her because of her Quick Feet ability. She manages to evade a few attacks from the two Sableye.

The screaming children reminded her that their were others about the classroom. With a flick of her tail, she gives Astonish a try on the Haunter called Joker. The floating Shedinja uses Spite, which makes her feels a bit weak.

That one just needs one good Bite and they'd be out of this battle. Ranae thinks as she evades the twin Fury Swipes coming from the Sableyes. She tries to move either around or between the two as she wants to get to that insect that's just hovering there.

She Growls at the incoming Rotom while bolting under the electronic ghost. ("Where are you going? You're human is over here!") Taunts the Haunter as the Shedinja uses Spite once again.

She is hit with it but she does manage to get a Bite in, causing the Shedinja to fall to the ground. ("That's no nice! The poor guy wasn't very healthy at the best of times!") The Rotom cries out as sparks fly from the ghost Pokemon.

("Then you shouldn't have brought him!") She snaps at the ghost while evading the incoming Thundershock. The Haunter had disappeared while the two Sableyes comes at her with Fury Swipes. She takes a few hits from the two and uses Roar, sending the two fleeing away from her.

The Rotom attacks once more, causing metal desks to go flying. She notices that Ichigo had long since moved away from the fight and seems to have climbed up onto one of the shelves. With her owner bring fine, she focuses back on the battle between herself and these ghost types, once more intent on defeating them as quickly as she can.

She decides to focus on the Haunter, wary of that one's Lick attack as that type enjoys suddenly appearing out of nowhere and delivering an attack. She doesn't have much time to duck when Joker the Haunter makes an appearance right before her. Managing to duck in time, she quickly uses Bite on the Haunter.

Then she's forced to retreat as the Rotom flings an attack in her direction with the two Sableyes in pursuit. Ranae tries to guess where that Haunter, Joker, plans to make an appearance once more as she plans to give him a good Bite, hopefully to cause the other to flinch. ("Hold still!")

("You must be mental if you think I'm going to obey that.") She finds herself remarking before Roaring at the pair, sending them running while she uses Oder Sleuth to try and find that Haunter. Upon finding them, she manages to get in a few Bites and an Astonish before the other three come charging at her.

She Tackles Joker the Haunter before Biting the nearest Sableye. The Rotom's attack did land while Ranae's mouth is about the Sableye's arm, thus the Sableye receives damage from the attack. ("Watch where you fling those attacks! You hit my brother, you light-bulb!")

("Not my fault she wasn't quick enough to let go of him! And don't insult me!") The Rotom snaps as she sniffs out a Oran berry that her owner had tossed her way at some point during the fight.

It wasn't long before she feels ready to continue with the fight a few seconds after swallowing the berry. "Looks like their partnership has soured." She hears Ichigo muse softly and she glances towards the door to find that it's open, one of the kids must have gotten it open and the class fled.

As Joker the Haunter seems to raise up from floor to do something, a Weavile makes an appearance by suddenly leaping from a dark corner, with a single blow, the Haunter falls back down while the new comer is using Night Slash on the Rotom. She charges forth and Bites one of the Sableyes again.

As the ghost types all faint, a trainer appears from the door and says, "Good work, Sleath." The Weavile salutes the trainer while the girl glances around the classroom with a touch of awe. "I just thought it was a few ghosts trying to frighten a few kids... They really did some damage didn't they?"

"Yea, they did. Ranae's pretty good at dealing with them when it's three on one but more then that..." Her owner trails off.

("You didn't do such a bad job.") Sleath says to her. ("The Rotom gave you the most trouble I take it?") Sleath asks upon getting onto the teen's shoulders.

("Yea. There's a good bit of glass about the floor. Not sure if I avoided it all...") She replies and begins to examine one of her paws, not that surprise to find that she does sport cuts.

She yips as she's picked up off the floor only to begin wagging her tail upon looking up at her owner's face. "Looks like you got some glass stuck in your paws, huh? Come on, there's likely somebody outside who'll want to take care of that." Ichigo says to her before saying, "You did great, Ranae, specially considering the site of the battle field."

Ranae snuggles against Ichigo, knowing that the rag tag gang could have done things very differently. Like have most of them distract her while a member of their group approach her owner before she'd be aware that they're there. I hope nobody will blame Ichigo for my cuts...

Next Day

Ichigo

With Ranae currently restrained to the bed for rest, his current protector is Tobi, Dash's Mightyena. He's lounging in the living room of the house when the door bell rings and is then followed by a knock on the door a few seconds after the bell rings. Tobi looks at him and he stares back before it dawns on him that he's the one with hands.

"Oh, right. I'll go get it then." He murmurs as he feels his cheeks heat up in embarrassment while Tobi just thumps his tail. Ichigo sighs, not particularly liking the fact that he should be doing something other then watching cartoons this morning like reading a book or to search for myths concerning dimensional travel. It happens regularly, some cartoon with explosions comes on or some action movie and he just loses track of what he should be doing beyond watching the TV.

I can't remember having this problem back home... He thinks to himself but then, he knew that back home he also had other diversions beyond studying like fighting Hollows and what new villain that decides to attack the Soul Society. He opens the door to find an adult and then three of his classmates upon the porch.

"Ichigo I take it?" The adult asks and the ex-teen nods while he hears Tobi coming up behind him. The three kids all to a quick intake, signaling that they've gotten a good view of the Mightyena. "Is Miss Shirley in?"

"Ah, I think she's out in the field mending a fence." The orange haired ex-teen glances over at Tobi, who moves to stand to his right. "If you want, Tobi can guide you to her."

The adult nods and before leaving say to the three, who's names are Harvey, Riley, and Ten, to behave. Then vaulting onto the back of a Dodrio, the man heads away from the house, following Tobi to find Dash. "That's my dad." Harvey states and then asks, "Is Ranae ok?"

"She's suppose to stay in bed. Her feet are still a little tender." He explains as he moves to let the trio in. "Come on, I'll show where she's resting." He adds while leading the three up to his room so they can pay their respects to Ranae.

Ranae's head snaps towards the door and she barks a greeting as he opens the door. He smiles softly at the sight of her, a flash of guilt flares up at the reminder of his failure of not being able to defend himself against these ghost Pokemon. I really should have gotten in the habit of carrying those candies around. He thinks while re-introducing the three to Ranae.

"We just want to make sure that you were ok." Riley says while Harvey just grunts an agreement. "That and to thank her for causing us to get a whole week off!" Ten adds with a wide grin. "Right Harvey?" Ten adds, nudging the silent Harvey with an elbow.

"I guess..." Harvey mutters and Riley scowls at Harvey. "You can't be upset that at the first chance you got, you ran out the door, can you?" The tomboy asks, it's clear that they've had this argument before as Ten seems to sport a rather bemused expression upon his face.

Harvey gives Riley a glare while he is sitting upon the bed, scratching behind one of Ranae's ears. I wonder what my friends are up to now? Ichigo wonders as the three kids before him remind him strongly of the friends he has back home. He can almost feel his eyes burn slightly after a few seconds of witnessing the pair argue with a sad sort of smile.

He feels Ranae snuggle closer to him as his hand moves to stroke the Poochyena's head and back. He manages to recover from his despairing thoughts before any of his three guests could notice anything wrong. He rubs his eyes before he picks up Ranae and cradle her in his arms.

"Perhaps you guys would like something to drink?" He suggests when silence had fallen between Harvey and Riley. Ten is the one to answer to their little group, "Yes please."

"Hey, do you get movies on demand?" Ten asks as they make it to the stairs. A bit puzzled by this particular question, he glances over his shoulder to reply, "We might. I'm trying to make it a habit not to watch TV, especially since there's a lot to do here on the ranch."

The three sport looks of horror, as if he just caused their world crashing down around them. "He's got to be a space alien! No way can he be human!" Ten murmurs and he's rather startled by this before he just rolls his eyes while shaking his head gently to either side as he walks down the stairs.

I should have expected something like that. He decides as the three go directly into the living room, likely following the sounds from the TV that he had been watching before they arrived. He stops and looks down at the gray furred canine in his arms for a second before turning around to head into the living room to put Ranae down before grabbing the drinks.

He isn't that surprised to find Riley with the remote and seems to be going through a list of movie titles. Grabbing a pillow, Ichigo then lowers Ranae gently upon it before heading for the kitchen once more. The ex-teen finds the pitcher of strawberry-lemonade and takes it out before retrieving some glasses.

Returning the pitcher back into the fridge, he is careful on how he carries the four glasses. Taking measured steps, particularly since he doesn't want to spill on himself, he's more then glad when Ten gets up to grab two glasses from him. Ten hands one of the glasses to Harvey, leaving him to give one of the two he has to Riley while the opening sequence for a horror movie plays on the television screen.

Sitting down on the other chair in the living room, he is rather bemused to find that the movie they're watching seems to be a take upon the fictional Werewolf, only instead of having the main character transform during a full moon, it's the new moon and instead of a canine, the character becomes something based upon a Marowak slash Linoone. The Weremon stands about five feet while sporting the bone helmet and stance while the rest seems to come from Linoone, although the fur is more gray and black then two shades of brown. The curse is passed viva a wrist spur that is retractable, known to come out when the Weremon is about to be killed and it thrashes around in hopes of spearing someone with the wrist spur.

Not a very good stand in for a Werewolf. Ichigo admits to himself but it seems that the three guests were enthralled by the movie. He makes a mental note to see what other classic movie monsters have counterparts here in this world.

"I though it would be more scary then that!" Riley scuffs and he privately agrees, after all, having the Weremon out to fed off of a sleeper's dreams just didn't seem that scary to him, although considering there are moves meant to steal the health of a sleep, he guesses it works. "I mean, who wouldn't thought to use a steel to kill a monster?"

"Where I come from, the monster transforms during the full moon and is typically killed using silver." He says with a frown as he stares down into his drink. "Of course there's a great deal more gore, particularly when they make the transformation look painful instead of like an Evolution." He adds and then looks up to find the three look rather intrigued about what he's saying.

"Really? What else does your Weremon do?" Asks Ten and he thinks about it for a second before seeing no harm in continuing.

"Well, for one, there's not wrist spur. If the beast bites you and you survive, you're cursed. In some movies, the victims of the guy take to haunting them as they can't cross over until the guy either gets cured or is killed." He tells them. "The cure is usual has to do with killing the one that had bit them."

He remembers a certain poem and recites it.

"Even a man who is pure in heart and says his prayers by night may become a wolf when the wolfbane blooms and the autumn moon is bright."

"Wow..." Ten says in amazement while the other two look rather impressed with that little poem. It is rather better then the one the recently watched movie had.

"Although... Why a wolf?" Harvey asks and he says, "Well, for one thing, instead of Weremon, the monster is called a Werewolf, although there have been various types of animals used, you just take the Were and put the animal name behind it, like Weretiger or Wereleopard. Mostly they stick to some large, predatory beast."

"So, they don't use Pokemon then?" Asks Riley and he shrugs. "Why install unnecessary fear of a certain Pokemon type when there are other beasts that could be used? Besides, it gives them a way to make the transformation look painful and drawing it out then what they showed." He answers, doubting that they would believe him if he told them that where he's from, they don't have Pokemon.

So, while they all want him to tell them what kind of movies he's seen featuring Werewolves, Dash and the adult walk. "Are you three ready to leave?" The visitor asks and grumbling, the three get up and head for the kitchen.

He follows them to the kitchen. "Ah... can't we stay just a little longer? We just started on an interesting subject, Dad..." Harvey grumbles and his classmate's father raises an eyebrow while sporting a bemused expression, likely surprised by his son's change in attitude.

"Come along, you three have some studying to do. I doubt your parents would be happy to know that I allowed you to skip your assigned reading." The man says. "I'm sure Ichigo has much the same to do today as well."

"See you, Mark." Dash says and Harvey's dad, Mark nods. He says his good byes while his three classmates do the same.

As the three exit out of the house, Dash turns to regard him for a few seconds. "Well, might as well see what assignments they sent along in that package that we got in the mail." His guardian says and he shrugs, he's not worried about it as he's fairly confident that he can complete them within the next day or so.

He does grab something for Ranae to eat and takes it to her before heating up something for lunch. Tobi seems more interested in getting a bowl of water then a bite of something to eat. Dash returns and seems to be reading through some of the sheets. "Hmmm... A lot of this stuff seems to be what we've already reviewed."

"Then it shouldn't take long for me to complete." He replies after drinking some more lemonade. "Did I get accepted by that online high school course?" He asks, he figured it's something he should ask about since it's been close to three weeks since he sent in an application to continue his high school education viva the computer.

"Ah, I know I was forgetting something." Dash says cheerfully and it wasn't long before Ichigo's guardian returns with an envelop. "Here you go, it came little over four days ago."

Eagerly, he opens the envelop and after a few minutes of reading and rereading its contains, he smiles. Well, looks like I won't idle during my time in this world. He thinks, glad that he'll have something challenging to do, his attending the local school is more so he can be close to kids his current age then he has something to learn from the local school.

Soon lunch is served and he folds the letters back up, putting them back into the envelop they came in so that he can begin eating lunch. Ichigo decides to give the site a look after lunch, it'll be a bit before he'll chose which subjects to renew his studies with.

To Be Continued . . .

The Assessment: Bleach

I don't own Bleach or Naruto!

"Fairly interest to see the two of you sitting across from each other." Aozora remarks as he cleans up his quarters. "You two could almost switch places, if you allow yourself to grow up a bit more." Aozora muses in a teasing tone and he smiles a bit while gently shaking his head.

"I doubt we'll be seeing him much, Aozora. Besides, could you imagine what could have happened if he did find me during that certain period? No, we went our separate ways long time ago and it'll likely remain thus as well." He remarks to his Zanpakuto while he finishes putting his freshly cleaned dishes and cups away.

Pressing his lips together as he frowns as he recalls a few things his father, Minato, had let slip during their conversation. As he puts the dish cloths away in a hamper, he wonders if he's going to get more visitors, the sort from when he was alive. Well, nothing for it, I guess. All I can do is wait for them to come out of the wood work, I guess. He muses as he walks out of the kitchen, turning off the lights as he does so.

"You seem to find something depressing. Want to share? As they say, misery loves company." Aozora no Kemono muses while still resting upon a couch. It doesn't surprise him, after all, Aozora has been with him since he arrived in this afterlife. He turns to regard Aozora, once more struck by their relationship, particularly since somewhere down the line, he has come to find it strange to think that, once upon a time, he had considered Aozora to be nothing but an object with a mouth on it.

Not that I kept that impression for long, particularly since I hadn't been in the right frame of mind to try and connect with my fellow students since I got dragged to the academy. He muses while he gets around to answering Aozora's question. "Well, I for one think that this is just the beginning of s string of visitations from people I knew while I was alive."

"Perhaps I should have expected this to happen after I got my memories back." He adds as an afterthought as he pauses by the door to his room. "Anyway, it's not something to fret about, I guess. There's just so much on our plate as it is without adding this to the mix." He says while looking over to his friend, partner, and killing instrument. "See you tomorrow, oh, by the way, I got you a set of wireless headphones for you, so you don't have to worry about waking me with the volume of your stuff."

Aozora jerks, clearly surprised by what he said while he just smirks widely, glad to see that shocked look upon Aozora's face. Really, if he wanted that stuff, he could have asked me to get it for him instead of faking notes in my name to send those rookies on those errands. He muses, although, to be honest, this likely wasn't the first time Aozora has done this, not that he's going to press Aozora about previous times.

Ichigo

He tries to relax but finds it rather impossible since he's about to met with a new captain from the Soul Society. Considering his usual meet and greets with members of this society, he feels he has every right to be. It doesn't help that his inner Hollow seems to be yappying his mental ears off concerning the many positions he wants the majority of the women he knows in and the kind of settings that would go with those.

What's got you so chatty all of a sudden anyway? he finally asks his Hollow half. This causes his Hollow to pause for a few seconds before replying, Isn't it obvious? The new captain is a woman! I mean, think of how unbalanced the captaincy is, they got to be promoting some babes to fill the open slots.

He shivers slightly upon the way his Hollow half said that phrase. He can't believe what a pervert his other half is but before his Hollow half picks up from where he left off, the new captain arrives. "Sorry I'm a little late. I had to deal with somebody who wanted to spar with me while three of his seats casually kept the gate staff at bay."

He couldn't help but only stare at the blond who steps out of the gate. He's like seventeen years old! And... is that sword taller then him? He wonders, his gaze moves from the blond's face to the hilt of the sword upon the captain's back. "It's like you're compensating for something..."

The blond chuckles and it's then that it dawns on him that he said that part out loud. "It's not that I can't alter his shape, it's more that I don't see any reason to. I've gone accustom to having Aozora like this. But since you seem to have your mind in the gutter... Perhaps this might give you an idea with your own Zanpakuto." The blond muses.

With ease, the blond captain takes hold of the sword's hilt and as he watches, the blond casually holds his Zanpakuto, Aozora, aloof in the air singled handedly. Then the sheath and blade seem to shimmer before, almost in a liquid fashion, alters to take shape of a typical Zanpakuto. With that done, the blond then slides the altered Zanpakuto into his belt.

"I know your name, but has anyone thought to give you mine?" The blond asks after a few seconds and he just moves his sight from the Zanpakuto to the owner's face. "I see. Anyway, I am Naruto Uzumaki, newly appointed captain of Ninth Division. I use to teach at the academy until the previous captain thought I would be better off on patrolling some place far from the Seireitei."

"You taught at the Soul Reaper Academy? For how long?" He demands and Naruto goes on to murmur, "Well, let's see... I was around when the academy first got started... I graduated... Hm... Then I would go on patrol for... Hm, that is a rather large number."

"Well, if you wonder if I taught Aizen and the majority of those you've encountered, then the answer is yes, I likely did have them in my class at one point or another." Naruto tells him. "Aizen got top marks, too. Although I didn't know how far his proficiency with illusions was, but I did know he could pull them off as he managed to snap out an illusion during a test. The only one of its kind too, not a lot of people were happy that I was trying to encourage thought in 'grunts'."

"Anyway, you're not here to hear me go on like an old man, but for an assessment of your skills." Naruto says while he closes his mouth, rather bewildered by the idea that Aizen had been a 'grunt' at one point. "But before we do that..." The blond captain muses, he then jerks as he watches as the chipper ancient blond takes out a scroll.

He watches as the blond bites his thumb and then smears blood upon it. "A gift a member of Zero thoughtfully sent me this morning. It should help with your assessment as we can't have the locals wonder how this part of the world got destroyed, now can we?" The blond seemingly chirps while rolling the scroll up.

"Zero? What do you mean by that? Is there a fourteenth division that nobody saw fit to inform me about?" He demands while Naruto slams the scroll upon the ground.

Suddenly, the scroll breaks apart and a kind of energy just explodes, covering not just the landscape but Naruto and himself. "What the hell was that?" He demands while pointing his Zanpakuto at the blond.

"Relax, kid. You're a bit high-strung, you know?" Naruto says with his hands out before him and holding the palms towards him. "And to answer your questions, Zero is often considered the Royal Guard, which means they don't take orders from the council. They're said to answer directly to the Emperor, so they're not usually hanging around the Seireitei."

He frowns, wondering how the blond couldn't know it while Naruto goes on to address his other concerns. "As to why nobody mentioned it to you, well, if I arrived wearing some typically attire that defines a sub-society, would you assume I know nothing of what the cloths stand for or just assume that I know how to fit in? Hence why we're meeting, I'm here to see what kind of holes you have in your education of what it means to be a Shinigami."

He lowers his sword, finding that Naruto seems to have a lot of good points. "Yea, I guess... But what did that scroll do?" He asks, stressing the word do.

"I'm sure you've seen most of the typical branches that Shinigami use in battle? That scroll, for lack of a better word, is like a program that becomes active viva being smeared with blood. This program that I just activated is kind of like a save. I just saved us and this landscape so that when we're through, hopefully before the five hours are up, the damage done after the save will be totally reversed, which means that I could cut off a finger and when the five hours are up, you'll have that finger back on your hand without a mark showing that it was ever gone. You get it?" Naruto watches as he slowly nods, rather stunned that the blond could get his hands on something like that.

"Ok, I doubt you've been given anything resembling a rule book or any kind of book from the Seireitei, so, let's move onto the physical branches, shall we?" Naruto says. "We'll start with hand to hand." The blond says while taking out his Zanpakuto and spearing it into the ground, a move he mimics.

Naruto

Ichigo is breathing heavily while he himself is just beginning to sweat. He's not one for pacing himself, is he? But then, I am a stamina freak. He muses to himself. He had been warned that Ichigo is a quick learner, but then, he's always been quick when it came to hand on lessons too. I'm more interested in how he became a Visored though.

He's never had spent time around those that had acquired Hollow abilities so his time with the orange haired teen is rather enlightening. He's been trying to get the feel of Ichigo's energy and hadn't put much thought upon those two energies co-existing, the last time he's felt anything like it had been... When I had the Kyuubi in me and in a fight for my life. He thinks to himself, a little bemused that he did manage to shave the teen's hair, although he doubts Ichigo has noticed the cosmetic job.

"And time..." He says with a sigh as Ichigo's hair suddenly shimmers into existence and the rips and tears of their cloths repair themselves as the landscape does as well. "I'll be sure to send along some books and scrolls, I'll be sure that some of them are about Kido." He tells Ichigo as he puts Aozora back in the sheath.

Ichigo sports a bewildered look, it's clear that the young teen isn't use to sparring with somebody. "But... who won?" The orange haired Ichigo wonders and he merely presses his lips together.

"Have you had formal training before?" He asks and Ichigo nods. "When was the last time you've sparred with somebody?" Ichigo doesn't answer and he sighs. "That long huh? Well, if you see either of my exiled students, badger one of them into becoming a regular sparring partner. You need safer ways to practice or pick up battle strategies."

"I some how doubt that it'll be that easy." Ichigo mutters while glancing around their surroundings. "Yoruichi seems more concerned with bedding me then teaching me."

He snorts upon hearing that. If I didn't know better, I'd swear that Yoruichi is some kind of attempt at cloning a saner Anko. He muses to himself as he stretches his limbs, checking to see if there's any stiffness or after-effects to the scroll his father sent him.

I wonder if I display my non-impressive skills in Seals will I get recruited by Zero Division? He wonders to himself before trying to muse upon an idea. "So, going to give the Fox Sage a try again?"

I just might, all things considered. But then, these upcoming trials aren't about me, but about Ichigo and his friends. I've had my time in the sun, as it were, and I'm more then happy to take a mentor or teaching role in this then a direct one. He thinks to Aozora.

"Oh crap! Look at the time! I got to go!" Ichigo curses, suddenly coming out of his thoughts just by taking a look at the position of the sun. The orange haired teen runs away without so much as a good bye.

"Might want to add something concerning Flash Steps too..." He murmurs out loud and a few seconds later, the gate appears and he enters it, his mind going through its old teacher mode concerning his assessment of Ichigo Kurosaki.

Naruto and the Dragon Pearl

I don't own Naruto.

Naruto groans softly before trying to roll about only to find that he's trapped. Alarmed by this, the blond begins to do what he can to get out from the dry mud bank. As the Leaf Genin manages to pull himself out of the bank, the twelve year old then begins to look around upon expressing his dismay over the state of his cloths as they're ruined, in his opinion. The blond continues to try to work upon the patches clinging to his cloths while he walks towards this healthy, leafy tree in an otherwise desolate place.

Naruto begins to dig around in his various pockets to see what he still has on him. He closes his eyes and allows himself to lean upon the trunk of the tree, looking up at its branches while trying to recall just how he ended up here and if either of his team-mates got pulled along in that storm with him when they got ambushed by those ninja using a mud jutsu. Cursing loudly and violently, the blond genin looks towards the spot where he dug himself out of.

The pack he had been wearing is likely somewhere in that bank and if he want's a decent meal that's not covered in mud. Then his eyes light up and a clever grin crosses upon Naruto's face as he makes his familiar handsign. Within seconds, a hundred shadow clones pop into existence and with so many of them, they began searching about the mud bank for the pack or a hint of where it could be.

"Man, now would be a good time to use an earth style jutsu..." Murmurs one of the shadow clones after a few minutes of them all realizing that they don't have anything to use to dig into the dry mud bank. The various Naruto each curse up a storm while those few who weren't were focus on looking around for things that can be used to create a shovel or just dig into the hardened mud.

By the time noon has come and gone, the clones and Naruto hadn't found the back pack nor did it look like there's any water about them. "You know, there's something wrong with the fact that this tree looks as healthy as can be and yet, there's not a drop of water about." One of the clones muses out loud.

"If there was water around, there would be more green plants." Another clone murmurs in agreement while another adds in, "Maybe the tree's roots is edible?"

"Might find some underground mushrooms growing on the roots too." Another chimes in but another points out, "And how would we be able to dig up these roots or mushrooms? We're missing out on a shovel!"

"We could always use a kunai." The one that suggested edible roots. Naruto just watches as the remaining clones debate various points, counter-points, and then for it to get to the point where they're saying "Could not! Could too!"

I have a lot of issues. The blond genin thinks privately to himself while amused by how his clones are acting. After getting a minor headache, Naruto dispels the remaining clones before he begins to look about the bottom of the tree for some indication of loose ground.

The blond scratches his head as he finally realizes that it's not just the tree that's doing well, but the ground upon which the leafy branches shelter. Crouching down, the Leaf Genin runs a hand over the tops of the grass. "Huh, no flowers or bushes, just grass."

As night falls, the blond manages to find a small gap between the tree trunk and the grass cover ground. Lying upon his belly, Naruto reaches into that gap in hopes of finding some cash of seeds and nuts. With his tongue sticking out as he moves to the point where his shoulder is beginning to enter into said gap, his finger tips touches something cool and smooth. Sporting a concentrating look, the twelve year old focuses on the spot and once his fingers are about the object as much as he could get them, he focuses chakra to his finger tips so he has a better grip upon the object.

It's slow going as not only is the object in there firmly but it's trial and error for him concerning using chakra to grip the pearl with only his finger tips touching it. Naruto doesn't care if the muscles of his arms are cramping and his belly is empty, he wants to find out what the object is and he won't pull out his arm until it's in the palm of his hand! Finally, something gives and it isn't his hand, the ground around the object crumbles after a series of hard yanks while almost rolling away from the gap.

"Got it!" Naruto shouts out and he wiggles away from the gap. Once most of his hand is out from under the gap, the blond sits up and gazes upon his prize with a rather confused expression upon his face.

"Huh." Was all the blond ninja could think of grunting after rubbing the ball like object upon his cloths. The object is the size of his fist and under the starlight, seems to glows dimly white. Then, by accident, Naruto's arm almost falls and almost automatically, the blond channels chakra to the palm of his hand in hopes of keeping the object from slipping off his hand.

This cause the smooth, ball object to glow not just blue but also green. The interplay of these to colors captivates Naruto's attention for a few minutes before his belly growls, his free hand goes to his belly while also gripping the ball with his fingers upon that hand. Without chakra flowing into the ball from the palm of his hand, it returns to its typical off white color.

Naruto glances around before putting the ball back into the gap, figuring that it'll be safer in there until he wakes in the morning. Though hungry, the blond ignores it out of habit as he rarely got a steady orphan fund before he became a ninja so going to be with an empty belly isn't a hardship, just something that happens at some point in the month. Finding a comfortable pose, Naruto soon fell into a relatively, peaceful sleep.

Unknown to the genin Naruto Uzumaki, what he had found is a dragon's pearl that was hidden long before the time of chakra using ninja. The dragon who once owned the pearl had been hunted throughout various kingdoms at the time, each leader of these mini countries believing that eating the meat of a dragon would grant one a body of agelessness, its blood would make them immune to all poisons and sicknesses, its bones to be ground up and bathed to grant one beauty, and etc, etc. Although, they never gave much thought of what the pearl could proved beyond it being something to be included into jewelry.

Once more, unknown to the blond genin, this desolate place is where the dragon had met its end. Three armies had joined forces to bring the dragon down had soon turned on each other for possession of the dragon's body. And thus the battle field became a cursed place as not only didn't the body of the dragon prove to have the qualities they thought it had, but lead to a major war between the three kingdoms that brought the downfall to them and their allies. Thus the story of the dragon killing was lost to the mists of time and history.

Many stories, myths, and legends would spring up concerning why the tree and the ground around it remains green. Most of the stories told of a kitsune making its lair under the tree, a couple say it's all that remains of a shrine with variations concerning what became of the shrine, since the founding of Hidden Leaf village a story concerning the First Hokage planting the tree circulated for a while, it's enough to say that there is a story out there that can appeal to a listener if you search for the right story teller.

So when dawn arrives and finds the preteen ninja sleeping, the pearl's magic causes water to flood the small gap under the tree. As the water flows out of the gap, Naruto begins to get soaked from the water. Within seconds, the blond wakes and looks around in bewilderment with denials ready to be spoken, only for the Leaf Genin to find nobody standing over him with a pail.

Naruto follows the path of the water and is rather surprised to find that it's coming from the gap. With a look, he bends down and sucks in as much water as he can from the gap. He finds the water to be very refreshing but the water vanishes as the sun is above the rocky ridge. Naruto sighs and after a few seconds, finally reaches into the gap and brings out the pearl he unknowingly freed from where the dragon had originally put it.

In the light of the sun, the pearl is a brilliant white, appearing to be very differently then it had under the light of stars. With a thoughtful hum, the blond channels chakra upon the palm of his hand and is rewarded with a much more brilliant display of colors then last night. Naruto couldn't help but smile widely at the sight, giddy with his new possession until it dawns on him that his 'ball' could belong to somebody and that smile fades to a slight pout.

"Well, I could leave it here or I can take it with me..." Naruto mentally debates as it's unlikely he'll ever come back to this place to find out if the owner has retrieved their ball so he'll never know who it belongs to. "But then, it had some grim on it so it's been there for some years... Plus, if it's the reason why this tree is so green, it's been here for some decades."

He regards the tree, then the grass before looking around. "Damn, this place is so depressing... And if this is the reason for the tree being so green then maybe I shouldn't take it? This place could use more things growing in it, that's for sure." He says out loud to himself.

Then, almost as if having a mind of its own, the pearl flashes brightly, catching Naruto off guard, while it also shrinks down until it's the size of a Soldier Pill. A bit alarmed but mostly bewildered, Naruto gazes down at the pearl for a few seconds and then puts it into a hidden pocket that had been untouched during his trial with the mud attack. The pocket is water proof and is where he typically holds some matches when he knows he's going to be spending time out in the wilderness.

Funneling chakra into his legs, the Leaf Genin leaves the ancient battle field behind while an unknown specter manifests itself. The long dead dragon hovers around the tree as it watches as the young human sporting a mighty burden heads away with its treasure. How funny life works. He'll be a fine son when the time comes, which, hopefully won't be until he's an old man with a houseful of grandchildren.

With a sigh, the dragon ghost allows itself to be called back to the palace where it'll start its life again as a hatching. In time, the dragon will work on creating another pearl and then leave the palace once more, to wander about until finding another world lacking a dragon, taking up the duty of listening to prayers and deciding how best to fulfill them. There isn't a doubt in the dragon's mind that the youth will be powerful, the question was if the boy will retain that spark that caused the dragon to entrust its previously gained power and status to him in the first place.

Inspired by the Story Xiao Sheng and the Dragon's Pearl

A long time ago, during the great drought, a boy named Xiao Sheng found a patch of lush grass that never diminished, no matter how often he cut it to sell it in the market as cattle feed. One day it occurred to Xiao Sheng that instead of travelling all the way to the patch each day to cut grass, he could dig it up and replant it at home. So he dug up the turf by the roots and beneath it found a wonderful pearl. Considering himself doubly lucky, the boy put it in his pocket and went home, where he planted the grass beside the hut he shared with his widowed mother and then hid the pearl in an almost empty rice jar where no burglar would think of looking.

Next morning they woke to find that the grass had withered and died, but the rice jar was brimming over. That was when they realized they had found a dragon's pearl, because it is a virtue of these gems to multiply whatever they are kept with, be it rice, money or the patch of grass where this one had been found. From that day Xiao Sheng and his mother lacked for nothing, but because they were generous to their neighbours, rumours soon spread as to the source of their new-found prosperity. In time these tales reached the ears of the local landlord who soon turned up with soldiers to demand the pearl, claiming that it must have been found on his property (since he owned all the land in that region) and so rightfully belonged to him.

Rather than hand it over, Xiao Sheng swallowed the pearl. Immediately his stomach felt filled with a raging fire so he ran to the muddy trickled nearby which was all that remained of the drought-stricken river and drank and drank till it seemed he would drain it dry. And as he drank, he grew larger and larger and his form changed until the onlookers saw not a boy, but a mighty dragon which finally stopped drinking and turned to look around him with a certain wonder in his eyes. The landlord and his soldiers fled but the dragon flew swiftly after them and unleashed a flood which both drowned them and brought blessed relief to the parched land, so that the paddy fields filled and the river flowed strong and full again.

Finally, the dragon that had been Xiao Sheng took sad leave of his mother and swam away down river. To this day that stretch of it is called "Wang Niang Tan", which means the "looking back at mother bends" because when the dragon left the village through the river, it turned its head many times, and each time he turned, the dragon's massive body cut into the river's edge, sculpting the banks with his last farewell.

A Vampire of His Very Own: Buffy

I don't own Buffy the Vampire Slayer universe!

With the setting of the sun, they stirred from the nest. The vampire once known as Gab, now answering to Bilal, closes his eyes to listen to the thunderous beats of these drums that seem to be located all over the city. Though only fifty years of age, Bilal has never come across whatever song they're thundering out all over the city, only that it made it so easy to catch a meal as two leaders seem indifferent to the month long festival that the humans and some demons are holding in the city.

Moving through the vampire made caves, ones likely made by previous covens of vampires that settled in the city before they arrived. The youngest vampire in the nest did wonder, once more, whatever became of those previous covens and for a second, wondered if these festival might have something to do with them vanishing. Mentally shaking those thoughts from his mind, the demon operating the body of the long dead Gab continues forth, figuring that the coven elders' responsibility to make that connection as all he wants this night is a meal and to find a nice spot to listen to the music of this festival until dawn drives him underground.

Bilal finds that the coven is all group together not far from the entrance. The vampire frowns at the idea of a group hunt, Bilal weighs his options while Amar's voice carries through the night in a harsh tone, not that it matters that the leader is whispering, their hearing is far superior then their appearance shows so none of them had trouble hearing Amar over the beating of the festival drums. Just listening to Amar, Bilal could tell that the two hundred year old coven leader plans to keep going for a bit more, which he rather doesn't like the idea of since he's hungry now and wants to eat now, not when Amar runs out of things to lecture about.

With his mind made up, Bilal uses the memories left behind by Gab to sneak off. There are times where he's glad that the corpse he's living in use to be a thief as it made sneaking away from coven meetings like the one going on so much easier. Sure, Amar and most of the others will likely have more then some words for him for doing this, but then, Amar had turn Gab simply because Gab had discovered a secret entrance into this rival's lair, so Amar 'rewarded' Gab with immortality.

Upon raising, Amar had going put him through the ceremony of 'joining' the coven and even bestowed a new name to him. Once that had been done, Bilal had found himself being taught by the coven's demon expert which included explaining what a vampire actually was, a demon that can't live without existing within a dead human that has drunk blood from an already demon possessed corpse. Bilal had been rather surprised to learn that but had grown to accept it and move on.

Bilal successfully finds a meal a few blocks away from the surprsie coven meeting and with that, the young vampire heads for his usual spot on high. Laying down to view the stars and the full moon, Bilal kind of drifts off in a semi sleeping state, allowing his mind to think up scenes that would go with the music that's filled the night since the last full moon. It's when his reverse daydream ends does Bilal realizes that the music has ended.

The fifty year old vampire sits up and with yellow eyes glinting in the moonlight, Bilal finds fire all along the streets. What confuses him even more has to do with the fact that all of their hearts seem to be beating as one. Then comes the screams begin and he's confused since no blood seems to being carried by the gentle wind.

Then Bilal hears Amar and then the words, they killed him. That causes Gab's old reflexes to cause him to draw away from the edge of the roof before dropping down upon his belly while his mind race over what that means. Long after the torch lights vanish and the strange effect of the party goers turn hunters' heart beats beating as one vanish still finds Bilal upon the roof.

In the end, it's the threat of dawn's light that causes the ex-thief to get down but instead of going for the caves, Bilal heads for the closest warehouse. It takes the vampire a few minutes but he rigs up a hiding spot to wait out the day and when night returns, he'll then head for the cave to see if any of the rest of his coven survived the night.

= - [T

An older Bilal, now Ghazi's eyes snap open at the sound of the drums beating out a beat that he had heard only forty years previously. "Get up! All of you! Come on you lazy louses!" He snaps as he moves among his spawn, kicking those that don't automatically wake.

Now ninety years old, Ghazi is now leader of his own coven, which numbers twenty odd instead of the two hundred that his old coven had sported. The number was kept low for a reason. "What's the matter?" Murmurs more then a few of his underlings.

"We're leaving this city tonight. I hope you all remember the plan for evacuation cause if you're left behind, we aren't coming back for ya." Ghazi snaps and this causes his coven to stiffen, clearly remembering the various plans he had drilled into their heads concerning leaving the city.

Soon, Ghazi's children head off to check and recheck preparations for leaving this city. The slaves will soon be serving a new purpose once they're out of the city. Ghazi marches off to check his stores to be sure that they had enough food to feed the slaves they'll be marching out of the city with.

Hopefully, they won't come beyond the city to get us. Ghazi thinks to himself, ignoring the thoughts concerning the other coven that has shown up about thirty years ago. If what happened forty years back happens again, then when they return, the other coven shall be gone, leaving them to reign the night without contest once more.

Then, as Ghazi had managed to get a wagon loaded, something happens and the world spins...

= - [T

Ghazi wakes to find the chaos humming in the air and the panicking heartbeats of humans around him. Their fear so sweet but that isn't want occupies his thoughts, it's his surroundings like these metal torch posts, metal wagons, and the strange buildings that line the black stone road upon which he stands. The vampire is unsure what has happened to bring him here but he does freeze for a second as he feels something that he only knows about through Gab's memories.

Ghazi puts two fingers upon the side of his neck and feels blood pumping through his neck. Placing a hand over his chest, he feels a heart beat within the ribcage. His breath catches and then he coughs while he begins to panic about how he could be...

He stills himself and fights to control himself. Deep, calming breaths soon give him a chance to review what's happening around him instead of with him. First things first, what can I do? And with that, the vampire heads for the nearest house to get some answers from those that live within it, reasoning that since he's alive he doesn't need to be invited into the dwelling.

Ramming through the door, he pauses to listen for the heart beats of those that live in this house. Once that's done, he moves down the stair, only pausing every so often to take note of the strange devices that are placed about the house, things that somehow get names and descriptions popping into his mind as though slow remembering what they are. As he snaps the door knob off the basement door, he opens to find a cross thrusted at him, causing him to growl before reaching out and destroying the wood, some part of him wondering just how it was he still manages to keep his demonic abilities while in a living body, particularly as his kind of demon needs their 'host' to be dead and departed.

"Where am I?" He snaps in some new language that his mind now tells him to be English. "Answer before I decide to make a meal of you two." Ghazi snarls, although not the least bit hungry.

"Sunnydale!" Is the answer and he frowns at the name. "Which part of the world is Sunnydale in?" He asks and the answer is, "America!"

That brings forth a lot more information then Sunnydale did. Letting go of the man, he reviews what's revealed and is rather stunned to realize that he's in the future as the Persian Empire has come and gone as had the empire that conquered it and so on and so forth. Rubbing an index finger about a temple, he leaves without harming either of the two.

As he leaves the down stairs, he allows his face to revert to that of a human and once out of the house, some red haired girl arrives calling him Xander and that they need to find Buffy. More then willing to go along with the ghost, Ghazi follows to find this Buffy and within spending a few minutes with her wants to twist her pretty little neck to get some peace and quiet, it's not as though Ghazi is a particularly violent vampire but this Buffy is sure grinding away at his patients.

It didn't help that he had been in a foul mood before finding himself spirited away so he feels as though he can be excused with snapping at the girl in the puffy cloths. "Shut it or I'll see how many times that pretty little head of yours can be twisted around upon that neck before it'll pop off." To his relief, she faints, thus allowing silence to reign for a period of time in which he reviews the new amount of information he has concerning the 'timeline'.

"Buffy!" He turns to find some other vampire bending down to check the girl's pulse, which is he considers redundant as they can both hear the girl's heart beating. "What happened to Buffy, Xander?"

"She just fainted." Ghazi states calmly while regarding the current actual vampire with very little interest. If the other wanted to cultivate humans as contact, he's not going to interfere, particularly as he'll be returning to his real existence if this Giles knows what's going on. It wasn't the first time he wonders why Willow never thought about questioning if he's really Xander or is just deciding to ignore that idea since he's being helpful.

A few seconds after he said that and while the other vampire regards him curiously, Buffy decides to stop playing dead, likely due to the fact that there's somebody here who's willing to play protector for her. "That man just threatened to kill me!" Whines the so call noble lady.

He's bemused how easily Buffy moves to place the other vampire between them. "I asked you to shut up twice since Willow left and you did not." He states. "Hence the third time came with a threat." Ghazi adds oh so helpfully.

"You're not Xander." The other states rather bluntly while almost becoming more protective of Buffy. He just smirks in an ironic fashion.

"Gee, I wonder what gave it away?" He says with a scuff in his tone. "Besides, aren't you a little cold to warm the girl's bed? I never could see why one of us would want to lay with a human. They're meals, not friends, family, or lovers. It wouldn't take much for one to worm something to bed and stick it in you." He muses after a few seconds. "Besides, if you play with your food, it has the chance to get away."

"Vampire." Buffy stutters after a few minutes of silence, clearly just connecting the dots, which proves that she's got a brain, even if it's full of fluff. Buffy begins to back away from them both with a look of terror upon her face, all he does is roll his eyes while turning to regard the ghost's former body.

Somewhere under Ghazi's magical skin, Xander struggles with laughter concerning the look of dismay Angel sported when Buffy began to back away. Sure, the teen hates that he accidentally dressed up as a vampire, he does consul himself that Ghazi doesn't seem to have a pathological need to kill every human that he comes across. Xander's also more then relieved that Ghazi decided to follow Willow earlier, but then, what little Xander has observed, Ghazi was looking for something, anything really, to distract him from his current status of being alive and yet still possessing his demonic abilities.

What little of Ghazi's memories he's managed to review reveals that Ghazi is close to being a century, leads his own, to use Ghazi's word, coven, and is worried about some month long festival which concludes with the festival goers scouring around the city to kill vampires. Although, Xander did pick up on Ghazi's worry about the way their hearts beat in unison during that hunt as well.

And there goes Buffy. Xander think as Ghazi picks up the soft foot steps of Buffy heading for the back door. Angel chases after and a second later, Cordie comes down the stairs to ask, "Where's Buffy?"

Ghazi turns to regard the remaining, living, human and answers, "She and her... boyfriend decided to take a walk. I'm sure with him around, she felt safe with him watching her back." Cordie seems rather startled by this but in the end, the thin human moves to sit down while he returns to watching out the window.

"I can't believe you let Angel walk around with Buffy." Cordie finally says and Ghazi turns to look over at the young woman. "I mean, you've always been up in arms when ever Angel is brought up and suddenly, with all of what's going on tonight, you would trust to have her out of your sight."

"Who says I'm really Xander?" Ghazi decides to ask, rather curious as to why people mistake him for this human. Cordie seems to stiffen while her heart speeds up.

"If you're not Xander, then why help Willow find Buffy?" Cordie asks as casual as can be. He can tell that her pose has stiffen slightly even though she tries to be casual.

"Oh, I don't know, likely because I'm at a loose end and wanted something to do instead of giving into panic." Ghazi remarks calmly. "After all, this place is rather alien to me and it was a way to get my barrings. If you want to place blame, perhaps you should blame Willow for just making assumptions."

"Well then, why don't you tell me who you are? It's not like we have another way to spent the night." Cordie states and Ghazi snorts softly after studying her briefly. Then, the world changes once more...

-) = O

Xander sighs and then yelps for joy for finally being able to control his body. Until he realizes that he can hear something thundering in his ears and the clear scent of fright. Then he turns to look right at Cordie, it dawning on him that there seems to be certain traits left over from dressing up as Ghazi, a 'fictional' ex-thief turned 'immortal'.

Xander focuses on some other sound and is more then happy to head out of the living room to see if there anything he can do to return those kids home.

= - [T

Ghazi wakes to find himself among the crates. With a shake of his head, the ninety year old vampire moves to stand up, moving to the back to find that the wagon is moving. With ease, he jumps over the back and moves around to stop the camel. Glancing around, the vampire merely sighs, realizes what happened. He hobbles the camel before he goes through the crate, glad to find a huge tent, he feels confident about his chances of survival.

Once he's done going through the crates, collecting what he can sell at a future date, Ghazi decides to head for Rome, spend some time there before leaving eastward, heading for China where he believes he'll find a boat. Where he'll go once landing upon America, he didn't know, but he did know that if he wants to leave a lasting mark in this world, it'll be in America, in a particular sunny place that would one day have a town called Sunnydale upon it.

With everything packed, Ghazi rides upon the camel, heading north, trusting that he'll come across humans during his travel. It's not as though he couldn't drink from the camel, sure his kind prefers humans but animal blood will do in a pinch and it wouldn't be hard to find animals to feed from considering they all have heart beats that he can hear.

With the full moon watching, Ghazi has unfinished business with Cordie and with Xander. He can only hope that he survives long enough to at least complete that business.

= - [T

"So, you are Xander." Ghazi muses having woken from an enchanted sleep when the sun had set. Xander stiffens to turn to look over at the vampire, his first thought is at how short Ghazi is and another was about why the vampire searched him out.

"I guess you survived that festival again, huh?" Xander muses while the vampire snorts softly. "More like my children took advantage of my state and sent me out of the city. Fools the lot of them, they didn't survive for long when the festival ended." The rather old vampire states while leaning upon the bar, studying the dancers.

"You know, I tried to find information about you from the Watcher diaries." Xander says and Ghazi frowns before turning to regard him. "You don't know what a Watcher is, do you?" Xander asks.

"I never heard of the Slayer until I spent some time in Rome and again in China. Never heard of a support group for the Slayer either, but then, I've never encountered one of them either." The vampire states rather calmly.

"You visited Rome?" Xander asks, he didn't get many of Ghazi's memories, most Gab's. "I visited when it still possessed a king. I left for China after spending a decade there. Spent a few centuries heading for China, though, spent a few centuries in India, even payed an enchanter for a hibernating spell that was meant to end when a version of me appears in this world. Used it after finding a natural cave, stored my boat in it before breaking the charm that held the spell."

"Took me most of last night to break through the rocks that sealed the entrance." Ghazi adds helpfully. Xander could only stare at the vampire, not really sure what to think concerning this guy's dedication to coming to this time mostly unharmed.

"But... but... why? Why go to all that trouble to be here? To see me?" Xander can't help but wonder and the vampire turns to regard Xander with a bemused look.

"I never got the chance to learn about why you and I were so interchangeable in personality. Then there's Cordie wanting to know about me and it's not as though I have anything better to do once I knew how things ended from then until this point." Ghazi states.

"That's rather... honorable of you." Xander admits, although he didn't like being reminded that Willow had just taken it for granted that he wasn't affected by the spell. "Although, I thought humans were only good for meals." He decides to toss Ghazi's own words in his face, not a smart move he decides after he said it.

"I do prefer you as meals, you don't live for very long and if you do, you get mentally feeble." Ghazi states and he wanted to remark about them getting physically weaker until he realized that to a vampire, all humans were considered physically weaker then them. "Having a human owe means you have to cash it in within a couple of decade instead of at some point in a future century. That's a rather short time considering our life spans."

"And of course vampires have such long lives. It's not like you're allergic to blessed water or the sun." Xander finds himself saying only for the vampire to snort in bemusement. "I've never heard of a vampire dying of old age, have you? I know demons die of old age, but never vampires." Remarks Ghazi.

"All a vampire does when they get older is begin to change to take on a more demonic appearance, becoming tougher to kill, 'smarter', and generally begin to dabble in magic." Ghazi states and Xander found he couldn't argue with that. "I take it you're surprised why I haven't taken offense to anything you've said?"

Xander nods and Ghazi regards him for a moment before saying, "Call it curiosity if you will, but for that one night, I knew what it was like to have a pulse. To breathe air and depend on that action to keep on living. That experience is mine own and not some memories I inherited upon slipping into this body." Ghazi motions at himself.

"Then there's the fact that something of you remained..." Xander muses and Ghazi gives him a raise eye brow look. "Ok, my senses seem to be more... keen. Not sure why, but then, as you said, your kind of demon prefers dead bodies. They can't survive in living ones and yet..."

"And yet, I had." Ghazi mutters, not in English. The bar tender would arrive, taking Xander's drink order while Ghazi just ignored the man in favor of watching the band, the vampire's head often nodding to the beat of the song, it's clear that Ghazi liked what he heard.

For a time, Xander stands by a vampire, one that just last night had inhabited his body for a few hours and yet, Xander found he didn't hate Ghazi. As odd as it sounds, but then Xander had kind of been in the vampire's head, Xander found something respectable in this soulless corpse and the fact that the vampire didn't try to change history kind of help him keep that respect.

Guilmon's Task: Digimon

Legendary Horses

I don't own Digimon!

Guilmon's Task

Takato watches as a colorful group of young colts and fillies try to race each other along some rocks that weren't far from beginnings of a mountains. The stallion's ears continue to face forward, straining to catch their words. Though the wingless pegasus stallion has been living in this low land area, complete with trees and open patches of greenery for the pass ten years, Takato still has trouble puzzling the language of these land bound magic horses. It would help if one would allow me to approach them.

Sure, these low lands provide plenty of food, Takato can't recall when he's been as stuffed as during the years living in this place but the stallion found the going to be too easy. The wingless pagasus truly misses the way mountains sported different level that demands one to have a good sense of balance and challenges the mind when it comes to navigating one's way around. He also has come to miss the way wind runs about the mountains and how there were few large ground predators to watch for.

Some filly or colt cries out in pain and Takato merely sighs, the youngling hadn't stepped high enough and a hoof tripped over a rock jetting up out of the ground. Ears going back, he raises his head up from pretending to graze to glance around to see if anyone comes running while the youngling whimpers and whines, what little Takato's able to make out, it seems that the youngling believe that they sprained something. The other fillies and colts ring about the fallen youngling, speaking softly to each other.

One of the grown suddenly shows up at a run before switching to a slower gate and then walking towards the fallen youngling while the rest of the younglings part. Takato strains to hear what the grown behorned stallion had to say while moving to graze in a different direction. Soon enough, the behorned stallion snorts and nudges the youngling to get up, the wingless pegasus decides that the youngling has been told that they're find but to be more careful.

As the stallion heads back for the treeline, the group of younglings try to regain their playful spirit but it doesn't work, so they follow after the other stallion, soon making a race of it to see who can reach some spot beyond the treeline. Once they're gone, Takato swishes his tail and begins to head for the mountains, suddenly wanting to be in a setting that reminds hm of home then the alien landscape and those behorned magical horses that call it home.

Rika watches as the strange stallion walks towards the mountains. She had been napping when young Renji had been screaming about his leg being sprained. The ruby coated unicorn mare hadn't moved from her spot as she hadn't seen a reason to hurry over to check on the young colt. It seems as though Senji thought something serious had happened as the unicorn stallion had teleport to check upon Renji, which Rika believes to be a waste of energy as there weren't any wolves in the area right now.

Likely hoping to win points in order to keep from being expelled from the herd with the approach of the Scattering Ceremony coming up next year. Rika muses to herself while trying to watch the stranger walking away. The mare reminds herself that it's not her problem, particularly as it's likely that the strange stallion is heading off to die, after all, the stallion has to be around fifteen years old, that's fairly old for a non-magical creature to live.

It has been close to ten years, hasn't it? Rika muses as the other seemingly vanishes from her sight, not usual as the strange horse is mostly brown in color and hard to track as most unicorns tend to be brightly colored, easily seen at a distance. Dismissing such thoughts, the unicorn mare returns to trying to nap once more.

It take taken a few days to travel to this particular spot, Takato stands, once more, at the large gap that separates him from the way to return to his birth place. Various birds dart about, those that eat insects hunting for flies and such while an eagle soars upon the thermals that the mountain rocks produce with the sun beaming down. The stallion turns and heads north instead of south, back to the low land filled with those strange magical horses sporting colors of rainbows and a single horn upon their foreheads.

It will soon be dusk but the wingless pegasus stallion doesn't feel the least bit tired. Takato walks and walks until dawn arrives, at which point, the wingless pegasus rests under a ledge and waking as the dusk arrives. Thus it became a pattern with the stallion traveling during the night and resting during the day, there were times when Takato would find a place to graze and dew to suck off of rocks as the wingless stallion journeys northwest at times before heading east in hopes of finding a way to cross the divide.

Takato found it surprisingly easy to return to living in the mountains once more and the fat that the stallion had gained slowly fades into well tone muscles. The wingless pegasus stallion is glad to have something to occupy his mind with as he navigates through treacherous ledges. He even welcomes the storms that rain down upon the mountains.

Days turn into weeks, weeks into months. After a good ten months of traveling northward, Takato comes across something strange, stranger then those behorned magical horses. They stand up on two legs and seem to use their forelimbs in a manner that reminds him of a squirrel or some rodent. What disturbs Takato is that they seem to ride upon the backs of donkeys while having the spares carrying something else upon their backs.

Takato shadows these strangers, following them south for a few days. Upon the fifth, the stallion snorts and heads northeast in search for a passage to the eastern mountains that were his birth place. Finally, three months pass and Takato finds a bridge that will take him across. Bellowing in triumph that his travels weren't in vain, the wingless pegasus crosses over the mile long flat stone.

Once upon the other side, Takato rears up and whinnies loudly before galloping eastward. As the stallion looks for a place to rest, something comes down from the sky and snatches him up. "Put me down!" The stallion shouts and the being, Takato peers up to find a scaly ventage of a dragon, seems to falter slightly.

"You speak the tongue of Air?" The crimson dragon muses out loud, rather surprised that its meal could speak. "I was born wingless!" Is all Takato could say in his defense, not really happy to be snatched just after he found a way to head back to his birth place, to the range he called him since he had been a foal.

The mighty dragon lands and Takato almost doesn't manage to land upon his four hooves. "You seem rather big for a pegasus." The dragon adds upon getting a better look at him.

"Tell me about it. But the lack of wings is likely why I grew to be so big." Takato replies, if he hadn't been tired and irritated, the stallion would realize that he's talking with an actual dragon and the conversation they would have had would be rather different.

"Well, you have to admit, when we speak of pegasi, we generally think small and winged horses." The crimson dragon remarks and then, the fire-breather hums in a thoughtful manner. "Have you seen a party of men and a train of donkeys recently?"

Takato looks up into the amber eye of the dragon, rather puzzled about what men were. "I saw donkeys being ridden upon by strange beings that walk on two legs." The stallion answers before asking, "Why?"

"How long ago? How many men?" The dragon suddenly demands and Takato takes a few steps away from the dragon's lowered head while answering, "I believe there were eight of the two legged ones and about eighteen of the donkeys. They were following the western part of the mountains south."

The scent of the dragon's breath wasn't a pleasant smell and is relieved when the crimson colored dragon turns westward. "Damn, they're moving fast." The dragon curses and Takato's ears go backwards, not flatting upon his skull though.

"Renamon isn't going to like this... We had hoped they'd spend time at that vein to take some more samples..." The dragon murmurs while a growl underscores the dragon's tone.

Then the dragon suddenly seem to fold in on their self until something similar to the two legged beings stand a few feet away from him. As Takato watches, a mini cloud seems to form where the transform dragon stands. Suddenly, a new voice seems to thunder from a point before the altered dragon, the language wasn't that of Air and considering the magical beasts involved, Takato wonders if it might not be the language of Fire being spoken.

As the sun fully raises, the dragon finishes speaking with whoever they're talking with. The cloud vanishes and the former crimson dragon seems to be brooding. "Am I free to go?" Takato ventures to ask the great beast, who seems to be a bit startled by his question.

"I thought you left some time ago." The dragon says in answer. "Yea, sure, go." The dragon says, waving a forelimb at him.

"As long as you don't need anything, I'll go." Takato says, more then a little nervous to be around such a powerful predator but something... something didn't want to go, not if this beast could use some help with its task. "Are you sure I can't help you?"

"If they're on the look out for a dragon pursuing them and you're incapable of flying at all, even if you had wings you couldn't take off with me on your back." The transformed dragon states and Takato paws the rocky ground a bit.

"So you're going to approach them in this form?" Takato inquires and that seems to give the dragon pause. "I doubt you'd be able to catch them like that. Also, you're not use to navigating from the ground, are you?"

"Are you offering to take me to this party?" The dragon asks and Takato pauses, not sure how to answer that. "I guess it wouldn't hurt, as long as you agree to take me east of that divide once your task has been completed. It took me about a year to find that stone bridge to cross over on my own." The stallion states.

The dragon's face alters as the lips turn upward. "Deal!" And then the dragon pauses to say, "Oh yes, I forgot. My name is Guilmon."

"Mine's Takato." The wingless pegasus stallion replies as he approaches the dragon shyly. "Nice to meet you, Guilmon."

"Likewise, Takato." Guilmon says and before they left, Guilmon takes some pebbles to create some riding gear, something that Guilmon said he needed as it would cause worst aches on both their ends if there wasn't padding between his back and Guilmon's own rear end.

Takato's more then glad that nothing like those vines are about his head. Although Takato does find it rather odd to have something upon his back, it didn't seem to do any harm so Takato heads south, knowing a quicker way to head that party off, particularly if they stop long enough to allow the donkeys to spend a day or two grazing. The only trouble that they encountered has more to do with the fact that the usual paths Takato usually takes on his own would unbalance Guilmon, which often leads to the transformed dragon to falling off.

It takes only seven days before they did catch up and that's with them only take a break during at noon and continuing at dusk. Sure enough, they got got their aches but they managed to get close to the humans, as Guilmon calls him, so that the dragon can kill the whole party, including the donkeys, which Guilmon ate unlike the dead humans. The blood and such didn't sit right with Takato but knows that the dragons had some reason for killing off this party.

The riding gear soon returns to its original state of being tiny rocks. As night falls, Guilmon gets a 'call' from Renamon that, in the end, has the crimson dragon needing to leave without fulfilling his end of their deal but Takato assured the dragon that it wouldn't be hard for him to travel back to that rock bridge.

And so, Takato and Guilmon part, leaving Takato feeling oddly fulfilled and wondering if he made a friend in the form of Guilmon the dragon. Takato finds a nice spot to rest after eating his fill.

"Lord Megidramon! The humans, they're heading for the rookery!" Another crimson dragon, this one sporting a metal arm. "Their cannons and archers make it difficult for us to flame them with our fire! Their mages are working on getting pass our wards! What are your orders?"

The huge crimson dragon flares his seemingly tattered wings that seem more orange then red. "Drop the kegs of black powder on the lot. Once they're in the human mist, fire up the night flare. That should break up their lines. Get the younglings and whelp to hit the mages, they should be able to get pass their shields." This huge and ancient dragon orders.

"I'll deal with their siege engines." Megidramon says and then glances at the dragon sporting a metal arm. "Be careful, Wargrowlmon, we wouldn't want you to loose another limb, now would we?" With that said, the great dragon takes to the air.

"Do or die! My children! Don't let these magicless ones get through to the rookery!" Megidramon bellows upon arriving out in the air. "Our future lies within those stone walls!"

"Guilmon... Stay with Renamon's unit." Wargrowlmon says and a battle scarred Guilmon nods, though not looking very happy upon hearing this. With that, the dragon with a metal limb takes to the air, heading for some unknown place.

"Yes... grandfather." Murmurs a sullen Guilmon who sports a burnt symbol upon a breastplate. "Be careful down there, Takatomon." The dragon murmurs before moving to close the open gate.

Takato wakes and shivers while mentally replaying what the older Guilmon had said, particularly upon how the dragon had added mon to his name. Why would I be involved in a battle between dragons and humans? The wingless pegasus wonders for a while before trying to go back to sleep.

To be continued . . .

Different Gender: Naruto

I don't own Naruto.

Typical black locks swing as the wind blows over the naked twenty something year old as he stands before the open window. The naked man stares down at the city, marveling at the fireworks that continue to explode in the distance while the streets are alight by lanterns. The celebrations of the local lord's marriage seems to be going strongly within the city. If the man thought to turn to look into the temple courtyard, it's likely he would find the monks, priests, priestesses, and other workers at the temple drinking and eating happening.

"Itachi..." Slender arms snake about the man's waist and chest while a head moves to rest upon the man's shoulder. "Come back to bed. I don't believe we're done just yet." The silver haired woman says softly while nuzzling his neck.

"You are rather insensible, aren't you?" The man muses, his sapphire eyes moving to look upon the bandaged arm. "You always manage to have your dastardly way with me, don't you?" He sighs before saying softly, "You are married, Sachi, even if that man is an unemployed, drunkard."

Sachi sighs softly before pulling away from the man she named Itachi. He soon feels Sachi trace the tattoo of her nickname for him, a orange/red image of a weasel sporting a sickle for a tail. "You worry too much, Itachi. My husband only cares of about the connection to my cousin Samuru that I represent, nothing more." Sachi states and he turns to regard the woman who's been his lover for a solid five years.

"And how would your famous cousin react upon hearing that you've been unfaithful to your husband? Particularly with a priest of the local temple?" Itachi asks. "Men aren't known to be kind to unfaithful spouses after all." Itachi adds as he follows Sachi back to the bed. "I fear that if we keep this up, dear heart, you will be killed."

Sachi's hazel red eyes soften upon seeing the concern in his eyes. Itachi grips Sachi's hand after it touches his face. "I'm sorry for causing you unnecessary worry, my Itachi, but I get the feeling that Samuru has other things to be concerned about, particularly as he's got all those people to train. It's highly unlikely that Samuru will be able to come here to do anything about us." Sachi tells her lover honestly.

"As for my husband, he rarely see anyone as he's too busy with reviewing records for his family's business." Sachi reminds Itachi once more. "He has never graced my bed for well over eight years now, nor do I see him doing so in the future." Then Sachi snorts as she adds, "It's more likely for the Jubi to be brought to heel by my cousin and his Mystical Art then my husband tearing himself away from his office."

Itachi merely sighs as he moves under the sheets to join Sachi in bed. He didn't want to continue the discussion, particularly as he wanted to savor his time with Sachi before they are parted.

Sachi walks through the streets, heading to the house her so called husband's relatives gifted them. Sachi closes her eyes and focuses upon reaching out to the body of the man she had been roped into marrying. Memories of what the body had done during the time she had last mentally reached out and review play out, once that is done, she allows the body to return to its tasks.

Then her mood sours as she recalls the morning when she woke to find herself trapped in a room and told that she had no choice but to marry what was suppose to be her one night stand or for the news of what happened to be released. The white hair woman had given in only because it would have set her back as Samuru. Fortunately, her husband proved to have no real defense against her slowly expanding skills with combining Yin and Yang energies, thus she now has two bodies at her command.

Not that I wanted another body to command, particularly as just maintaining her 'cousin' Samuru was exhausting, particularly with the distance between us. Sachi thinks sourly to herself. It had come as something of a relief when her husband's relatives wanted to move them to the city of the local noble, which is about a day away from where Samuru's training compound is located.

Once they were away from the watchful eye of the man's relatives, she rarely had to worry about them noticing something off concerning him. So, she had the body be busy in the office with paper work while using her skills to craft illusions to hide the door, confusing everyone that entered into it and left it. After a few years, people did stop trying to visit her husband and the invitations to the local court also stopped coming. It's not that usual now for Samuru to receive them, particularly as Samuru was granted land upon which to build that learning compound around the time the visitors began to tamper off.

And then Itachi got transferred to the temple. Sachi muses while keeping her face relatively blank. Sure, that's not his name but it's the one she prefers to use. It's been almost five years since he moved here, hasn't it? Time sure seems to fly by, doesn't it?

It had been four years into the sham of a marriage she found herself in and with things looking up as Samuru, she began to focus on her personal life. It had been years since she shared her bed with a man, she didn't consider the empty shell to be a man nor did she allow it into her bedroom unless to maintain appearances that is. Within the last few weeks before Itachi moved into the temple, she had been considering ways to permanently place her mind in Samuru's body.

Sachi had heard a few of the local gossips mentioning that a new head priest is coming to replace the previous one. That one had challenged Samuru to a duel concerning which path is superior, that of the traditional priesthood or the battle oriented one that she, as Samuru, preaches and practices. Deciding to size up the new head priest, Sachi heads for the temple under the pretense of bringing a welcoming gift.

It had been a faint spike but a spike nonetheless that set her on edge. Glancing around to be sure nobody is about, Sachi heads for where she feels the faint feeling. She stops as she finds a young man standing upon the water's surface. His black hair done up in a ponytail as he seems to be searching for something. As she watches in udder amazement, the twenty something year old crouches while reaching into the water for something.

I wonder if I could do the same? It shouldn't be that difficult if a priest could do it. Were her thoughts concerning the man, as by then, Sachi has come to regard those of the temples with disdain for how often they try and sabotage her, as Samuru, attempts to teach the other way to use Yin and Yang energy. She didn't even think to study the priest beyond noting the cloths marking him as a priest.

"Excuse me? What are you looking for?" Sachi asks upon reaching the edge of the pond. The priest turns to regard her while pausing in pulling up what seems to be a necklace out of the pond.

"Hmm? Oh, just noticed this crystal in the pond. I thought I should retrieve it as it might belong to somebody. Looks like it's been in there for quite some time." The priest says, holding the necklace out after standing up.

"That's it? That's all you set out to get?" Sachi asks in a suspicious tone. She didn't buy it, after all, the priests rarely displayed their skills in a manner they considering flirtatious as retrieving an old necklace.

Blue eyes study her in a puzzled manner while a slight frown mars the priest's face. "Pretty much. I didn't want to use a pole or something to get it as that would distress the fish." The priest says, waving a hand over the pond, Sachi notes the fish that are swimming lazily about.

"You were tipped off that I was coming, weren't you?" She states as soon as the young man is standing on solid ground. The priest looks rather bewildered about the accusation and cocks his head to the side.

"I'm Samuru's cousin. You know, the man who killed the head priest." She snaps and the priest looks rather surprised.

"You're his cousin? Really? Have you received training from him?" The young man asks and she scowls up at him, crossing her arms over her less then ample chest. Sachi just knew that he's making fun at her.

"Women aren't allowed to learn that particular Art!" She snaps and the priest just stares in surprise. "Really? When was that decided? And by who?"

Anger flares up and she slaps the priest before storming off.

Sachi sighs, it wasn't the greatest of meetings but then, it had been a while since she had come across a decent man while in her actual body. Its as though once she got married, the quality of men seem to go down hill. Was it any wonder why she found it hard to believe that Itachi was any different? Especially as he's a priest and they all seem to be snobs.

Then there's the fact that I learnt just how hard it was to walk on water. The balance of chakra had to be right and she had learnt that the soles of the feet to be rather hard to funnel chakra into. There's still a lot to learn about the new frontier that using Yin and Yang energy could open up to be used in everyday life.

I'm ending it here

To Readers:

How many stories do you see that has the Sage being a woman pretending to be a man?

Island of Dragons: Naruto

I don't own Naruto or Temeraire universe.

Naruto pouts as he watches as the various academy instructors direct groups of students of various age groups around. It's not his fault that the seal demonstration went wrong, Sakura and Ino were the ones who tossed him towards the seal scheme, which caused the eleven year old blond to smear one section of the kanji.

Sure, Sasuke wasn't at the academy because the Uchiha had gotten sick, complete with vomiting, but it's not like he had anything to do with the Ice Prince of Hidden Leaf that caused him to get sick. Nobody forced the Uchiha to eat that rotten tomato, which belonged to Kiba and was under Kiba's genjutsu at that. His part in it had to do with him betting to Kiba that he couldn't hold an illusion over the tomato to make it smell, look, and taste perfectly fine. They had only left the tomato on the table cause they both went off to get Chouji to see if his sense could pick up on the fact that the tomato was rotten, they weren't going to feed it to anyone either, they just wanted somebody known to know a thing or two about food and Chouji's clan is rather known for knowing what's good to eat based around smell and touch.

The blond's pout turns into a scowl. He's not sure how Ino and Sakura arrived that it's all his fault either. Kiba had equal blame, maybe more so as he's the one who brought the rotten fruit to school! Naruto's gaze drifts to the pair of girls, crush or no crush, the blond isn't going to forget what they did, particularly as neither of the girls were getting any blame for their part in sending him flying to that section of kanji.

And just why would Sasuke-teme want to eat a tomato for? Even worst, why would he eat a tomato he didn't know where it came from? The blond demon container wonders, his thoughts going back to the source of what happened, as he stuffs his hands into his pockets, hunched over while turning away from the displaced building. Kicking a few pebbles, Naruto walks away from the displaced grounds, heading for the mountain cause he thought he's seen something odd flying over that way as he was waking up.

After putting some distance between the displaced building and him, Naruto's mood swings upwards at the idea that he'll be the first to really explore beyond the beach, which is about a kilometer west of their landing. The fading light doesn't do anything to dampen his spirits either, particularly as he does find a edible things as he heads for the tallest point in view, some mountain that's got to be a few days away from the academy. The idea of being the first to see things and having the right to name them rather appeals to the young blond as he takes to the tree tops.

Too bad that there's not way to get ramen around here... The blond thinks as he pauses to look down at a doe and her fawn for a few seconds before continuing on his way, too hyped up to feel tired, particularly as he had been the last to wake, although he had been rather confused about how he ended up on the roof...

Old Volcano

Naruto watches as something rather large lands on some rocks a mile or two away. He tries to make out details of the winged beast, he's seen rather a number of them as he got closer to the mountain. The blond had also left behind a trail of 'Naruto was here' at noticeable spots like a shallow lake that he's decided to call the Bowl or a stand of trees in the middle of a flowery meadow that he's mentally labeled the Peace Field.

Most of the beasts that he's come across typically sport dual colors, likely to break their form up in the surrounding forests. It's not that he got close enough to pick up on much detail as the blond typically stayed up in the trees. Naruto didn't dare get close to them, sure he's kind of a goof off but he knows when to leave sleeping beasts be.

At the bottom of the mountain, he knew that there would be little to no cover. Sure, Naruto's confident in his stealth capabilities but he didn't have a change of cloths, even if his orange hoody is rather dirty, sporting various juice stains as well as sap, he had taken to sleeping in trees as he had seen other predator tracks about beyond those belonging to these strange winged lizard looking creatures. He rather not end up on the wrong end of a tiger or leopard.

It hadn't taken long to weave some reeds together. What proved harder had been adding the leaves onto the one side before making some glue from tree sap and bones he found around the bottom. He put this on the leaves before putting that side upon the dirt. It takes a bit for it to dry and then do it again on the patches where it didn't take but it's worth it as the stiff cloak hasn't brought any unwanted attention to him as he travels up the side of the mountain as the cover is a bit over as tall he is and at least thrice his width.

The winged beast seems to be done looking around and then heads for this cave. A few minutes later, another of them exits out and then take off. What is it that they're guarding? Naruto wonders to himself, he's been in this position for the last two days, his goggles help keep the dust that the wind picks up from getting in his eyes.

With a soft sigh, the blond slowly crawls towards the entrance, something he's been slowly doing since he spotted the changing of the guard as it were. He's unsure if any of them spotted him during his travels but he's certain that they spied him during his time around the bottom of the mountain. So far, the blond has come to conclude they did possess smarts, as evidence of the changing of the guard he's witnessed over the last two days. They change during dawn, mid-day, and dusk, no activity during midnight, at least none he witnessed during the one night he managed to pull an all nighter.

Once at the entrance, Naruto eats some tiny berries that he picked back during his time in the forest. It's too early in the season for seeds so he's had to make do with smoked fish, berries, and previously cooked meat that he has stashed away in some bark container that he had hastily created. He's just glad that he's come across some tiny ponds, likely prints filled with rain, but it works to keep him hydrated. With the last of his third handful is gone down, the blond then begins to hug the wall, using the straps at the edge to curl the edges of the cloak.

Naruto slowly shuffles through the tunnel, making sure not to raise his feet up. Sure, he got sand in his sandals but it didn't much in the way of noise. At time, he would pause for a few heart beats before continuing down. Slowly the temperature raises noticeably when something moves from deep within the mountain.

Soon, the beast passes by him. He had done what he can to slow his heart rate when shuffling dirt moves and low pitched noise echos through the tunnel. Once the guard is gone, Naruto picks up his pace before the replacement comes. He arrives in a chamber that is stifling. He slowly walks around the edge of the chamber, as the replacement arrives, he is already climbing up the sides. A soft breeze plays with his blond hair and he cautiously tries to determine where the breeze is coming from.

It takes hours of climbing up and down the walls, the guard doesn't seem to be listening for anything as the guard seems to be more interested in murmuring into the chamber. Only when the guard is asleep does he finally venture beyond the sides of the chamber and finds a bunch of eggs about it. Touching them, he finds some to move, likely ready to hatch while others not so ready.

Then he finds one that's slightly raised up on this stone slab. He finds this egg to be a bit bigger then the rest. "I wonder what your parents grew to be. I doubt I'll be around to witness that." Naruto muses to the egg as he kneels down to press an ear to the shell.

Naruto hears a heart beat within the egg. "Well, you seem healthy enough, but then, who am I to judge? What do I know of eggs?" He murmurs out loud, it's been a while since he had spoken out loud and he glances towards the soft snores of the guard.

"Well, since you seem to be such a captive audience, I'm sure you're dying to know what I'm doing here instead of being shunned at the academy?" The blond didn't know if he'll be able to get out of here and has become rather lonely, after all, it's not like the hatchling within the egg is aware of what's going on outside of the shell, right?

Naruto feels drained, both emotionally and physically and the heat within this chamber kind of makes him feel sleepy. So, to keep himself awake, Naruto softly whispers about what happened that brought the academy to this place and then goes on to tell of his exploits as a prankster. Naruto is kind of dozing when the guard changes.

The blond feels his stomach tighten and with a sigh, gets up to eat something a little more fulfilling. With some of the dry fish in his belly, Naruto gets up and once more tests the air. He says good bye to the egg before heading to the wall he hadn't been able to get to due to some holes. Climbing the rock face, he feels a burst of cold air, which heartens him.

Upon finding a hole and it's his size, he quickly takes out a kunai and stabs at some point above the space. He then hooks the reed cloak onto it before crawling along the smaller tunnel. It surprises him to learn that it's a lot shorter then the main tunnel that those winged beasts use as after what feels like an hour, he's poking his head out into the sun shine.

He then works at opening this wide enough for him to get through. With that done, he stretches in the opening. Glancing around, he leaves to find something to drink as he's thirsty. Once that's done, he finds a shady spot and finally falls asleep.

Month Later

There isn't any guards in the chamber any more, so he doesn't feel the need to whisper in the chamber. The likely reason for this is because the adults don't seem to see a need to have a guard to hang over the hardening eggs as they had only done so to be there for the hatchlings that come out of their shells and to quickly take them out of the cave to begin feeding them. Naruto had made sure to be away when those eggs began to crack as he didn't want to deal with protective parental beasts seeing him as a quick meal to feed the hatchling or as a threat to said hatchling. He's seen them come out with hatchlings riding upon their backs and adults bringing in boar, deer, geese, or anything larger then the hatchling in question.

Over the time he's spent in the egg chamber, the blond had got into the habit of speaking out loud in the cave. Naruto has even recited lessen plans he had attended, going so far as to mimic the instructor's tone and pronunciation. It had served as an eye opener to the blond to realize just how many lessons he retained, but there's only so much the blond had memorized from the academy classes, which is why the blond would talk about myths and legends he over heard, dirty songs he learnt during the few times he infiltrated bars in disguise to popular, proper sing songs he learnt from traders unloading their goods, what little poetry he knew, to what gossip he overheard before the accident with the seal, and to made up stories that the blond clobbered together using bits of other parts of stories he had learnt.

Being unskilled in the written language pretty much is why the blond didn't know too many stories to share to his 'captive' audience. And since telling jokes got old without anyone doing the other part, it left Naruto with a lot of time to focus on making things out of some mixture of volcanic dirt and water, he's not sure if it's clay but it sure didn't crumble when he put them in a campfire, it might not be a potter's oven but it does work.

He had also spent time building a thin shed to smoke whatever creatures he manages to catch. Water wasn't hard to find and as such, Naruto sticking around a spring proves to be a simple enough strategy as it brings what mountain dwelling wild animals to him instead of him having to spend a lot of time wandering the mountain side or heading down into the forested area around the base of the mountain. The young boy still uses that cloak as cover as he still doesn't want to wind up a meal for the winged, scale beasts that claim this island.

But with little over a full lunar cycle have come and gone, the blond wanted to return to the academy in hopes of seeing familiar faces and maybe, telling them of this egg chamber. Although, the blond is hopeful that they will accept his offering of clay pots and smoked meat to forgive his absence. At least the meat will add to the stock pile of food, even if it won't win my any good tidings. The blond thinks to himself.

Shaking his head, the blond then picks up the large pack and begins to head down the mountain, heading towards the place he had left little over a month ago. Naruto doubts that the academy has moved since he left, after all, it's not like the building will grow legs and walk away.

The Academy

"I don't think we're home yet, sensei." Sakura says while staring as this swarm of cat size spiders fling themselves at the window. Most of the students tighten their grip upon their weapons while the teachers wonder what went wrong.

Naruto-kun... Hinata thinks sadly to herself. She wished that the blond hadn't stormed off. Although, Hinata did wonder if maybe she shouldn't have followed her first impulse and followed him away from the building.

The young Hyuuga begins to blush at the idea of them alone on the beach. How the blond prankster would take her into his arms to comfort her about the fact they might never return to Hidden Leaf as they weren't there for when the teachers and students participated in the seal scheme in hopes of returning home...

Naruto

After searching around for some sign of what happened, the blond would give up after a solid month of searching. With a sigh, the eleven year old makes the best of his situation to begin turning his hand at leather working as his cloths have seen better days. It helped to hunt from the tree branches as the deer rarely notice him that way, although since he only has a limited number of kunai, the blond has decided to take as good care of them as it's unlikely that he'll be able to get more.

Naruto is rather torn between sticking around at the spot or traveling to the base of the mountain to set up a base. With a sigh, the blond focuses on the here and now instead of what ifs and what could have been. He's set up traps around to catch small animals and even set up a smoking hut to smoke them.

The young blond had a lot to do and not a lot of time to do it either. The days slowing just blurred together until Naruto woke to find at least eight of those winged beasts ringed about his camp. "Ah, you're wake. You seem smaller then we thought you'd be." Says the one sporting blue forehead stripes.

"When did you guys learn to speak?" Naruto asks as he tries not to yawn or make any sudden moves. I wonder if I'm dreaming... Although, I don't see any giant bowls of ramen yet, but can't rule that out though.

"From you chatting while we were in our shells. You had a lot to say in that time period too." The one sporting red at the tip of his muzzle, this one had a slight different tone.

"So, did you guys want anything in particular? I mean, you do look pretty mature enough to fend for yourselves." The blond points out, he couldn't help but be curious as to why they came to speak with him though. Not that I can't use the company.

I wouldn't have done any harm to leave a note saying good bye. The blond thinks with a slight scowl gracing his face while he listens to the one with blue stripes to finish speaking, "We want to see these jutsus you spoke about."

"Oh! Um, sure, just remember, I haven't master many of them." Naruto says as he stands up and walks to stand about two to three feet from his sleeping mat. Forming a single sign and a puff of smoke later and a tiger sporting orange coat and dark red stripes. A second later and Naruto returns to normal with smoke puffing away.

His audience murmur among themselves, their tones seem to indicate they where impressed. With a grin, he preforms that substitution jutsu with a vase of water. They quiet down and look around for him only to find him leaning on a tree trunk.

Well, they seem to be enjoying this. Naruto muses after he tries, yet again, to create some clones. The eight of the beast make this sound that he just knew was their version of laughter, not that he blames them as the crowd of clones he created seem rather off with some having extra arms and fingers or lacking an arm and two eyes. He rubs the back of his neck in embarrassment at the fifteen clones.

"They lack a scent." Muses one of the eight while one tries to touch a clone, causing it to puff away. It wasn't long before the rest of the clones mimicked that one.

"So, what are you?" The one with blue stripes asks and Naruto blinks before answering a few seconds later. "I'm a human, a male at that."

"What about you guys? What are you and what's your gender?" He thinks to ask as he moves to stand by the old fire pit, sure it brought him close to one of the beasts but the young blond doubts they're looking to turn him into a meal, not yet at least.

"I'm a male." The one with blue stripes states. "I'm a female." The one with some red upon their nose. As they all chime in their gender, the consensus is two males in the group and the remaining six are female.

The blond, though, is rather puzzled when they hadn't mentioned what they were. "You don't know what you are, do you?" He asks but the one with blue stripes responses by answering, "Well, it's more like a lack of translation."

"Oh, that explains it." The blond muses before deciding to introduce himself, "I'm Naruto, Naruto Uzumaki!"

"Tora is the one I chose." The one mainly black male that seems to be the main spokesmen for the group. "I picked Hokori." The one mainly brown with red at the tip of her muzzle and leg socks.

"Kuma." Rumbles the other male, Kuma is much bulkier then Tora and sports yellow under his jaw and belly. "Bara." The female with red upon her back and wings, she sports a lot of spines.

"Karyuudo." The female primarily green while sporting brown spots. "Kanki." The female with black and splashes of green.

"Yasei." The female with brown and splashes of yellow. The last female, a brown with green splashes gives, "Eikou."

Naruto does note similarities of features, like horn placement, muzzle shape, and size between Karyuudo, Kanki, Yasei, and Eikou. At least two of them share the same base color while the other two don't. While he couldn't see their tails or wing shape to compare them, he figures they must have something similar going one.

"Nice names." Naruto says while trying to think of something new to talk about. "So... what do you guys eat besides deer and boar?" The eleven year old blond asks the eight as he tries to ignore his own hunger.

The Academy

Hinata sighs at the viewing of the familiar beach front while her cousin stands scowling next to her. The last world rather shook them all up, it wasn't enough that they had been racing against a horde of ape-people and a volcano erupting. Any minor changes to the beach and surrounding area is put down to some large storm swiping through.

They all found it hard to remember the details of the original world upon which they landed but the location seems to confirm they were upon the right world in which to find Naruto. It helps that they used some of the blond's hair, although many of the students can't help but wonder why the adults among them suddenly wish to retrieve the prankster. Many of those belonging to a certain fan club are still sore about Naruto's part in causing Sasuke to get sick.

A few more observant students figured out that Naruto held part of the key that would lead them back home. Although, that would mean that the blond has a permenant seal upon his, which begs the question as to why the blond would have something like that. The two Hyuuga hadn't been asked about it, while Neji wouldn't know the answer as he never bothered to study the prankster using his family's bloodline limit as for Hinata, most wouldn't think she would know as the girl is rather shy and many would find it hard to believe that she had ever thought to use her bloodline limit upon her crush, sadly they would be wrong as Hinata had spent a lot of time trailing her crush around and overhearing whispers that should have never be uttered, even under ones breathe.

As the instructors and students exit out of the academy building, particularly after they have rested, it was about late afternoon when they did so. Everyone is nervous even though both Hinata and Neji have pronounced they are in a safe place. Considering what their two weeks have been like, few would blame them.

And so, as shadows suddenly cover the ground, they all look up and their grip upon their weapons tighten. The beasts that land, while not the strangest they've encountered were still up there, particularly as the smallest stands, at the shoulder, ten feet tall but proves to be longer in the body.

"Huh, I was wondering where you guys got too."

Cliff Hanger... Maybe.

The Ghost and the Fox Ch 1: DP

I don't own Danny Phantom or Naruto.

"Sometimes I wish I can forget about all of this! To begin a new where my power's wouldn't be noticed as different!"

"You sometimes act like you're a little kid, Danny! I think you wish you were one again!" The line dies.

"As you two have wished it, so it shall be!"

Naruto blinks and then runs as this green light flares up not that far ahead. Soon the ten year old blond student slows at the sight of this young kid laying upon the ground butt naked. Scratching his head, Naruto looks around as he rather not get caught so far from Hidden Leaf or that he's found ways to get beyond the wall without anyone knowing about it.

Tension seems to hang all around the blond for what seems like hours. As the typical noises of the forest begin to fill the air, Naruto's muscles begin to relax and his alarm is slowly giving way to curiosity concerning the black haired kid laying on the forest floor. The ten year old moves to sit in a more comfortable pose while still doing sweeps about the surroundings for a few seconds before his gaze returns to the little kid down there.

With a sigh, the ninja student drops to the ground and approaches the shivering boy. As Naruto brushes back the kid's bangs, the boy murmurs something that didn't make sense before the kid's eyes opens and two different shades of blue meet for a second before the younger boy blinks and stiffens. The blond moves back to give the other some room.

The black haired boy's body shakes violently, it's clear to Naruto that the boy needs something to wear. With a sigh, the blond takes off his yellow shirt with a red image of a flame and holds it out to the smaller boy. The child blinks and sits up for a second, studying the older blond for a second before grabbing the shirt and putting it on, not that it fits as it hangs over the child's frame like a night shirt.

Naruto tries to engage the younger boy in conversation but the other merely gives the blond a blank look. When the black headed boy says something, again, the blond can't make sense of it. In the end, the blond points to himself and repeats his name out loud, "Naruto."

It takes a few tries but the younger boy does manage to repeat the name perfectly. Then, when the ten year old points to the black haired boy with a questioning expression, the child bites his lip and begins to tear up a few seconds later. Naruto doesn't know what to do but it wasn't long before the younger moves in close to the older boy and holds onto the blond as though the blond was a life line.

While bewildered, Naruto mimics what he's seen others in this particular position do and begin to rub the younger's back while putting an arm about the unnamed boy's lower back. It wasn't until the younger seems to have fallen asleep while clinging to Naruto's neck does the blond notice that dusk has come and gone.

With a soft look, the blond picks up the smaller boy before heading for that super, secret passage way into his home village. So... what should I do with you now? Naruto wonders while walking through the streets of the village, keeping to the back streets so nobody will think he's up to no good with the boy in his arms.

Though hungry, the blond decides to head for his apartment to put the boy into his bed before eating anything. Although Naruto did wonder if he shouldn't head to find the Old Man and get report the younger boy, but the memory of the boy's face as something seems to dawn on the other causes Naruto to pause.

"I guess you're goin' to stay with me, kiddo. I wonder if this means I'm your dad now?" The blond wonders thoughtfully while heading for his apartment building. "I mean, I'm the man of the house, that kind of makes me the father, don't it?" Naruto wonders out loud even though silence is his only answer.

T (=] - N

The five year old wakes to the bright light beaming onto the bed. The amnesic Danny Fenton rubs the sleep from his eyes upon sitting up and yawning widely. Once the boy is fully alert, Danny hurriedly gets out of the bed and heads for the bathroom to do his business.

Once that's done, the amnesic halfa tries to get up wash his hands only to find it's too high. Without thinking about it, a pair of rings causes a transformation and the now white haired boy floats into the air to get at the sink. With that done, the rings appear once more and the five year old returns to being human once more. Wiping hands upon a towel, Danny then leaves the bathroom a minute before the blond from last night gets up off the couch to use it.

It's then does the five year old becomes aware of the apartment. "What a mess..." The teen turn child mutters while slowly moving towards the fridge, being sure to move about the stuff on the floor.

Pausing before an open book, Danny stares down at the characters upon the page with a confused expression. Then, slowly, a frown grows upon the five year old's face after picking it up and flipping through it, only to find nothing readable upon any of the pages. Finding a scroll, Danny picks it up and unrolls it a bit to again discover more of those characters upon it.

In the end, it's his rumbling stomach that causes the ex-teen to continue towards the fridge while still carrying the two items. Then, upon opening the fridge, Danny can't help but stare bewilderingly into the almost empty appliance. "Where's the food?" The current five year old wonders out loud.

Then the blond says something that Danny couldn't understand while approaching the fridge. The five year old moves out of the way of the older kid, watching as the blond picks up this milk carton and gives it a sniff upon opening it. The blond murmurs something while Danny moves to sit upon a chair while watching as the older boy moves to put the milk on the counter before bringing out bowls and spoons.

Danny's nose wrinkles up as the bowl of cereal that the older boy, Naruto, put before him. Looking up, the amnesia Danny finds that Naruto is digging into his own bowl. With a sigh, Danny gives his own a taste and while it has this odd after taste, it didn't do much for his stomach so the five year old eats what he can stomach.

As Naruto takes and puts their bowls in the sink, Danny glances around, trying to figure out what about this place is off to his sensibilities. Danny snaps out of it when the blond Naruto says something and Danny gives the older boy a blank look. The blond looks around and picks up a pair of boxers, which causes Danny to realize that he's not wearing underwear.

Naruto's eyes show the older boy's bemusement while he just scowls, his arms crossing over his chest. With a sigh, the blond snaps his fingers and dives into a ratty box. Oddly enough, the older boy tosses some cloths that are clearly smaller then the shirt Danny's wearing. In the end, the five year old Danny picks what he wants to wear while the blond seems to curse upon looking at the clock.

Naruto then points out the window while speaking rapidly and moving his hands about. With a final look at the clock, the blond rushes out of the apartment, leaving Danny pretty much alone and unsure what to do. A few seconds tick by and the five year old spies a tv, but it doesn't do much other then show white static.

With a sigh, Danny once more transforms into a ghost and floats through the wall of the apartment. Oddly enough, the five year old's stomach feels much better while looking down at the street below.

The current invisible, flying Danny gives the apartment a look before flying towards the faces on the cliff. The appearance of the village baffles the child but turns to awe when he views it from one of the four heads craved into the cliff.

"Wow..." The white haired Danny murmurs, the cloths' colors were inverted from their previous colors. It doesn't take long before the halfa to pick out a park and heads for it, sure he might not know who he is or who his parents are but for now, it seems as though there's a lot to see and do before worrying about such things.

Never once did the five year old wonder about the transformation between human and ghost or about the powers he's displaying. After all, to the young amnesic ex-teen everything he does, he does without thinking about it for it just comes naturally to him.

] - N

Naruto heads for the Old Man's office to fill out forms to adopt the five year old, after all, the blond always wanted a family and the ten year old sees this has his chance to get one. Most of the day, the blond's mind had been reviewing what to do in regards to the kid and didn't like the idea of the boy winding up in a cell being investigated. Naruto can still recall the green light as it reaches up to the sky...

It likely didn't help Naruto in that the teacher was reviewing measures concerning unauthorized personal managing to sneak into the village without going through the proper channels. If anything, it only added fuel to the ten year old's mental imagines of what could happen to the five year old. More then likely the instructor noticed subtle ques of worry from the blond and thus changed the lesson plan on the spot to add to the demon 's worry, not particularly caring about what could be bothering Naruto either.

It wouldn't be until Naruto is within sight of the tower's walls when it dawns on the blond that maybe, just maybe, he should use a henge to push through the adoption papers as he's not very well liked in the village. With a frown, the blond takes a few minutes to debate this, it's likely if a certain instructor hadn't been droning on and on about what happens to enemy spies, the blond would have proceeded straight to the Hokage's office and demand those papers but as it stands, Naruto is very much aware that if he doesn't do this right then the kid will end up in a cell.

With a shake of his head, Naruto focuses on what kind of adult to henge into. In the end, the blond's hands slowly but steadily goes through the hand signs for the jutsu and with a puff of smoke, the blond appears to be a thirty something year old with typical black hair and hazel green eyes. The cloths were dull in the ten year old's opinion but they should allow the blond to vanish in the faceless masses if it comes down to it.

Upon entering, Naruto is directed and then redirected throughout the building for a good hour before the blond finally grabs a chuunin and asks, politely, about where he needed to go to get the necessary documents needed to adopt his orphan nephew. The young woman's expression softens a bit before she gives him the right directions. Naruto says his thanks and follows them.

But the henged Naruto finds that the office is about to close and once he makes it clear what he wanted, a bunch of sheets are thrusted into his arms and in a minor daze, the disguised ten year old finds himself outside of the door of the office. With pressed lips, Naruto takes a look at the sheet and while he can only make out a few of them, is confident that they're right.

Before releasing the henge, Naruto decides to grab a few things before heading back to the apartment. It proved to be a rather awkward experience as the ten year old blond student is so use to having people watching him like a hawk when ever he's out in the market place that the henged blond's nerves are slightly fried by the time he's at the cashier with a lot of groceries which includes prime looking veggies and fruit to some small toys.

If it weren't for the papers and the cashier glimpsing them, it's likely that the cashier would have been weirded out and called for the police about how suspicious the disguised blond is acting. In the end the man reminisces about his time being a father while ringing Naruto through. When asked about which kid he's adopting, the blond sticks to his story concerning his newly orphaned nephew, who just arrived with the news of his little sister and her husband's death.

Naruto is glad to get out of the shop while mentally noting to remember what features he's wearing in order to use this particular disguise for any future shopping trips, particularly when he's shopping for kid stuff. Dropping the henge a block before the building, the blond then picks up his pace, wondering what the kid had been up to since he left him alone in the apartment.

"I'm home!" Naruto calls out as the door swings open and the blond picks up the bags he had to put down in order to open the door. The five year old is startled and quickly gets up from the couch to follow the older boy to the kitchen.

The five year old speaks in that odd language while watching as the blond unloads the bags and then put the stuff away. Unsurprisingly, the kid picks up an apple, asks something, to which the blond nods, and then washes the apple before eating it. "Guess you haven't eaten all day, huh?"

Naruto feels rather guilty about that but it doesn't seem as though the five year old had suffered from it. With new milk, the blond takes the old one to the bathroom, unloads it into the toilet and then flushes it. Tossing the carton out, the blond ten year old continues putting the stuff away until there's only the papers.

Taking those over to the table, the five year old peers at the top page with a frown. Naruto hums a second before looking around for that dictionary. It's slow going but the blond does find the definitions needed between the various options. When it asks if he's head of his clan, the blond checks it since as far as he knows, he's the only Uzumaki in the village, well, not for long if these papers go through the blond muses while trying to get what the next question is asking.

The five year old seems to be rather busy toying around with Naruto's tv set before looking through some of the junk he has in his closet. By the time Naruto is done, the blond finds that the five year old has hooked up this strange thing to the tv and seems to be having fun moving this controller back and forth with a tongue sticking out. The blond's pen taps upon the table top while trying to come up with the kid's name.

As the young ninja to be watches the five year old, he thinks up and discards a lot of names. One of the names is Ichiro, a second name is Kaito, a third name is Kenji, and finally, Mizu. After thinking about it, Naruto smirks at the thought of Mizu Uzumaki. It has a certain ring to it.

And so, for the name of the child slot, the blond writes Mizu, leaving the clan slot empty as Naruto doubts that the five year old would know his last name if he can't remember his first. The blond then reviews the papers before putting them all together, he'll skip morning classes in order to see these papers pushed through. Might be a good idea to bring Mizu along too.

] - N

The amnesic Danny pauses the game as Naruto seems to be reading the back of this box. When is the parent getting home? I'm starving! The halfa thinks to himself, glancing expectantly towards the door, sure, he might not understand a word of the written language but the ex-teen deduces which of the choices will allow him to play or advance.

Danny sighs and gets up to use the bathroom. The child enjoyed his explorations throughout the village. Sure, he might not understand a single word but there were some gestures that just transcend language. Although the halfa is rather confused about the cardboard weapons he had been handed before the game begun, seeing what they're for had helped Danny know what they're for. The throwing stars reminded him of ninja weapons which did cause him to wonder if the game had been playing ninja.

By the time the kid exits out of the bathroom, he finds some microwave dinners set out. Then Naruto calls Danny over, the amnesia child is curious as to what Mizu means and so, upon sitting down, he asks, "Mizu?"

Naruto jabs a thumb at himself and repeat his name and then points to him and repeats Mizu. Blinking, he points to himself and says, "Mizu." Naruto nods, grinning widely at him as it dawns on him that Mizu is now his name. Not like I had one before. The ex-teen thinks while climbing up onto the chair to eat supper.

Danny had been happy to find that game system, ancient though it seems, as it means that there is some technology in this world. The halfa did begin to wonder what's in those other boxes he had found in the closest. Danny wonders if there's a VCR machine and movies to go along with it or games for the system he recently hooked up.

Once clearing off the box of food, the amnesic boy heads back to his position before the tv. The older boy seems to decide to do the dishes, which is fine by him. Still, as it grows late, no adult comes to the apartment, which causes the current five year old to wonder what kind of adult Naruto's parent or parents are, leaving their son alone for close to a whole day. Poor ones, in more ways then one it seems.

Having grown bored, Danny saves the game before turning off the system. Naruto seems to be done clearing up the apartment. A few bags are by the door, the books and scrolls are resting on the table or counter top, and then the throwing stars and strange knives are on the couch. The five year old looks back to the couch and stares at the collection of stuff on the couch. Getting up, Danny picks up one of the knives and is surprised by the weight of it.

Putting it down, the amnesic Danny Fenton picks up the wire before one of these tags. Naruto yelps and seemingly is standing next to him holding that tag, saying something in that strange, alien language while picking up the rest of the stacks of paper tags, stuffing them into a cloth pouch. The five year old puts the wire down and when Naruto is away from the couch does he pick up one of the throwing stars, careful of the edge.

Naruto glances his way and he drops it but the blond doesn't come to the couch to put those throwing stars away, which means that something about those paper tags makes them more dangerous then the rest of the stuff on the couch. It causes him to make a mental note to beware of similar paper tags. What kind of parent leaves potentially deadly weapons around their house where kids can get at them? Danny thinks with a scowl as he, again, picks up one of the knives and gently uses an index finger to touch the point of the knife.

"Kunai." Naruto says and he blinks, slightly startled. Danny looks at the blond for a few seconds before he realizes that's either how they say knife or it's what this particular knife is called. "Kunai." He repeats a few times while staring down at the knife.

Then, as Naruto finishes putting everything that's off the floor away, mostly in the various cardboards in the kitchen, but then, as Danny looks around, it's not like there's any extra dressers or shelves to put such stuff into or onto. Yawning and struggling to stay awake. In the end, Naruto tosses him a shirt and directs him to the bathroom to change.

Naruto then tucks him into the bed next to the window, the lights of the apartment is out. Danny looks out of the window, noting for the first time, if sleepily, that the faces upon the cliff looks rather different then during his time about the park. They don't look as though they're looking down at him and a few minutes later, the ex-teen has fallen asleep.

T (=

Naruto seems to be rather nervous about something as the five year old Danny Fenton, now Mizu, exits out of the bathroom. The blond seems to be going through the various pouches before putting them on. Naruto looks up at him and the blond's facial features become fixated, a few seconds later, the blond nods thoughtfully.

And then the blond did something and then, there's this adult standing where Naruto had been. The transformed Naruto picks up those sheets off the counter and then calls him while motioning for Danny to come over. This kind of causes him to be rather bewildered since Danny had been expecting the same routine as yesterday, only instead of leaving the apartment, the five year old wanted to spend the day looking through those boxes in the closest.

Huh, I wonder if this has to do with those papers he had brought home. Am I going to be registered for school now? Is that where we're going? Danny wonders while walk next to the changed blond.

They stop at a restaurant for breakfast before they continued on their way. Danny hadn't under stood a single thing Naruto had said to the waiter but the food wasn't what he had expected. Fish, rices, pickles, and stir fried veggies weren't what he would call a breakfast but they did hit the spot. Danny is glad that he got juice instead of tea as it was something familiar, although it didn't taste like orange or apple juice.

Their destination is this tower where people wearing green vests stand guard. They also sport headbands sporting this spiraling leaf that's on the metal of the cloth. The guards didn't stop them, allowing them to continue on. Naruto did seem to know where to go and yet, the disguised blond does seem a bit nervous but seems rather determined to see this through.

They arrive at an office and Naruto knocks before walking through the door. The woman behind the desk glances up at them and soon, the two are speaking. Boredom quickly over comes the ex-teen and he glances around.

Oddly enough, ten minutes later, they're done, he gets his picture taken and that's that. Naruto seems rather happy and relieved that it's all done. What they did next was go on a shopping spree in which he got new cloths, sandals, and toys. They then spent time at a furniture place where the blond bought some kind of rolled mat.

They ate lunch before they headed to the apartment. Whatever Naruto did to take on the appearance of an adult gives once within it. Once the stuff is on the couch, Naruto quickly takes off, leaving Danny alone in the apartment.

"I wonder what that was all about..." Danny wonders before heading straight to the closest and the boxes within.

] - N

Seeing Uzumaki upon the report before him, the Third Hokage focus on the report, reading and rereading it before taking a look at the photo, which didn't get developed very well, making it hard to know what Mizu Uzumaki looks like. Taking out his pipe, the current Hokage muses about it for a few seconds before just approving it since it's likely a prank done to Naruto by someone within the village.

Ah well, at least this way I can send him more money, being an underage father and all. The Hokage muses. The Third had seen this particular prank before, some group of students recruit a young academy student to pretend to be the target's kid from the future. Ah well, no harm no foul. The Third muses before dismissing the matter.

T (=] - N

Naruto is rather relieved at the cheque that came in the mail. The money will help to pay for the renovations to the apartment as well as pay for their stay at an inn. Sure, it means that he has to take everything that marks it as Naruto Uzumaki's residents but it will give him his own bed once more. The couch isn't that comfortable, which probably means that the ten year old needs a new one, among other things.

"Mizu! We're moving out for a few days. The cheque came and we can push through the renovations." Naruto tells Mizu, sure, the kid still doesn't seem to understand much of what's being said but the way the blond see it, the more he speaks to Mizu, the more Mizu will try and puzzle out the various words.

The five year old blinks before shrugging and going back to playing with that remote. The blond had been rather surprised to find that Mizu knew how to hook up the VCR and the game system, not that Naruto felt the need to sit in one place and focus on a certain thing. He has always found it hard to sit still for more then a minute, he's always vibrating with energy but it had been worst when he had been around Mizu's age.

"I wonder why I didn't get a request for Mizu to start going to school... Maybe the Old Man knows he doesn't speak a word of our language?" The blond student muses while putting stuff into boxes that will then be taken to the basement for storage.

Sadly, it didn't take long for Naruto to pack everything up, although Mizu had been slightly grumpy about the fact he packed up the tv and the other stuff. Giving Mizu a picture book while he then focuses on taking the boxes down to the basement. "Go. Outside." Mizu says upon coming back from his third trip.

"Dusk." Naruto states slowly and Mizu nods before leaving the apartment. The blond pauses to pack some cloths for them both before continuing to take the boxes down, it's tiring work but the blond recovers after spending at least ten minutes of sitting down and drinking some water.

"Times like these, I wish there were more of me." Murmurs the blond while laying on the couch after carrying the tv set down to the basement. His sore arms and shoulders resting upon the back of the couch while staring up at the ceiling until the aches vanish so he can continue with moving the boxes down stairs.

] - N

Danny realizes it's been at least two weeks since he found that game system and then hold up in the apartment. In those two weeks, Naruto had slowly been helping him get familiar with the language, spoken at least as he's at a lose on the written one. The five year old had transformed shortly after getting to ground level and takes off through the village in search for another park to visit then the one he previously visited.

As Danny flies through the air, the amnesic halfa catches sight of a masked squad running about the roof tops. Curious about what's going on, the current five year old tails the squad of four. Danny almost loses them in the forest but suddenly, there's twenty of him and he's seeing things from all twenty of them.

In the end, it was the explosion that allows the five year old to locate them, all twenty of him combine together once more. Slowly, Danny realizes that he's witnessing an actual ninja battle, although the attacks that are flying remind him of magic. Seeing as one of the masked leaf ninja were about to lose their head, Danny flies into that ninja and suddenly, the current ghost boy turns his focus inward, wondering if he can find something to help him understand the language.

The halfa finds something and just as Danny grabs it, the current ghost boy is flung out of the body. Quickly realizing that he's been seen, Danny vanishes from view and goes into the ground. A few miles away, the ghost child floats out of the ground and stares in bewilderment at this glowing green orb. With a shake, the current white haired kid works on absorbing the energy.

Suddenly a huge headache graces him. As Danny recovers, the kid thinks about his name, Mizu, and snorts. "Water..." Danny muses and then the kid glances around before cursing. Vanishing from view, Danny flies for the village as fast as he can, heading for the apartment.

"I'm back!" Danny says after transforming back into a human. At this Naruto glances sharply at him. "Mizu?"

"Yea?" Danny says. "What's wrong?" The current black haired five year old asks until it dawns on him that he's speaking that same, alien language. "Oh..." The current child muses, trailing off.

"Huh, what happened?" Naruto asks him and after giving it a thought, he just answers by saying, "Well, there was this enemy ninja and I kind of bumped into him, got a headache and I then I realized what Mizu means before racing back here." It's as honest an answer as he's willing to give, not wanting the older blond to know that he chased after a group of masked ninja for the hell of it.

"Must have been some jutsu then. Anyway, we better get going. I need to cash this before I can contact that company to renovate this place." Naruto says before asking a second later, "Did anyone see you?"

"If they did, they didn't stop me from fleeing the scene." He answers before deciding to ask something that's been bothering him since he woke up here. "Ah, do your parents know you're renovating this place?"

"I'm an orphan so the apartment is mine. Also, I filed adoption papers to make you an Uzumaki so you won't get taken away and put in a cell until they figure out where you came from." Naruto explains and this causes Danny to be rather stunned as it means that either Naruto claimed him as a brother or as a son.

Before Danny could form a reply, the blond ushers him out of the apartment after grabbing some ratty bags. Once on ground level, Naruto does a henge jutsu to take the appearance of an adult before heading away from the building. He just decides not to press the issue now and follows his adopted relative through the village, likely to visit a bank before making arrangements for a crew to remodel the apartment. Well, if he's sure it'll keep me out of trouble, I guess I'll just go with it. It's not like I know a thing about my real parents, my real family.

To Be Continued . . .

Summoning Horror Story: WarCraft

I don't own Naruto or the WarCraft universe.

It had just been a shallow bite upon the wrist. Boar frowns while staring at the blood dripping from the fanged muzzle of the wolf creature that had been summoned just last week. None knew just how the humanoid beast managed to escape from the cell but as they back track, they found carnage of at least three Lightning chuunin before the unsealed door.

"A rather messy killer." Ox muses but Boar doesn't respond as the ANBU bends down to get a better look at the neck of one of the enemy ninja. "You're rather lucky. Only a flesh wound."

"Go see the medic, who knows what kind of things lurk in the beast's mouth." Orders Deer upon hearing the report of how they felled the beast. Boar doesn't bother to salute, only nods sharply, if stiffly before darting away from the scene.

Boar merely tries to push the memory of having the beast lunging at him and how the monster seems to, for a split second, hastes, allowing Boar to pull him body away before the monster could rack its claws across his chest. How the monster recovers and lunges head first at the arm he was a little too slow to pull out of its range. Boar tries to ignore how those glowing red eyes switched to amber eyes for a second before returning to their usual red, Boar tries to ignore the expression those amber eyes had given him while gazing up into his own, the emotion of pity that had been housed there just as Ox uses the butt of their sword to knock the beast man out.

And yet, as Boar gets off his shift, the ninja can't help but feel as if something is worming its way up from the bite. Slowing wrapping itself about his very being. Boar reminds himself that there's nothing wrong as the medic had spent close to an hour making sure that nothing infectious about the bite Boar had received.

It's just a minor flesh wound, nothing more. I just need to get some rest, things will look better after wards. Boar thinks to himself as he walks through the street with the sun raising over the walls of the village.

Two Weeks Later

A snarls causes a young academy student, a twelve year old named Naruto Uzumaki to pause. Then a scream erupts behind Naruto, which causes him to turn and charge, vaguely noticing that it's a girl from his class is who he's rescuing. The monster's head snaps towards Naruto after Hinata's been racked on the shoulder viva the claws.

"Get away from her!" Naruto roars with kunai in each hand and leaping at the large wolfish human wearing tattered cloths that barely hang upon the beast. By the time Naruto's kunai kind of sink into the back of the strange beast, the beast has its teeth into Naruto's left shoulder and has arms coming in to embrace the blond.

As Naruto howls out in pain and his grip upon the kunai slips, allowing him to brace his hands upon the monster's chest as the wolfish man continues down. Naruto panics and tries to kicks out with his feet a second before his shoulders hit the grassy ground. The beast man lets go and Naruto's hands move to upturn the snout of the brown furred man-beast sporting glowing red eyes.

"NARUTO!" Screams Hinata, causing the monster to pause to look up from the pinned blond. Not knowing what else to do, Naruto goes for another kunai while reaching for what whiskers upon the muzzle that he can, pulling them while shouting, "Get out of here!"

The beast-man's attention is back on Naruto, particularly as Naruto manages to get a firm grip upon the monster's lip, twisting it this way. Naruto doesn't have a clue as to how to get himself out of this creature's embrace but is sure that some patrol will come. He tries to ignore the fact that his shoulder sports a rather deep looking bite and that he's endanger of dying from the blood loss.

As the beast kind of lets up, likely to free its own arms from being pinned, Naruto crawls out of the gap. In hand is a thing of wire and as quickly as his fingers will allow him, Naruto ties it before charging at the beast-man, slightly confident that he's got an advantage as he's the one standing up. The loop of wire goes over the muzzle and Naruto pulls upon the wire, causing the muzzle to close.

Suddenly blood sprays about while the beast-man collapses without a head. Naruto just stares with a very pale face while noting the masked ANBU seem rather rugged in appearance. "That makes eleven!" Mutters one of the special forces. "Where do they keep coming from? We sent the original home three days ago!"

"Shut it, Hawk. That's classified intel you're sprouting about." Snaps a woman's voice. "Ram, see to the bite." The woman orders and soon enough, the squad vanishes with the body, leaving Naruto with a bandage shoulder and a little shaken by the experience.

Feeling rather light headed, Naruto heads for his apartment, suddenly deciding that he's had enough action for the day. Although Naruto did pauses a bit away to glance over to the site of the attack, wondering if that monster had attacked somebody before him. "None of your business, just go and grab some ramen. Yea, that will work. Pork? Or beef? Oh, sea food special!"

With that, the student heads back into the village, trying to ignore the urge to glance about upon hearing a rustling of leaves or a twig snapping. Most of all, the young blond ignores the strange sensation of something wiggling into him viva the bite. Or the sudden burning sensation that's coming from his middle.

Academy

Naruto rubs the still bandaged shoulder bite. "Is it bothering you? Maybe I could change the bandage for you, Naruto-kun." Stutters Hinata and Naruto tries to smile at the girl he saved last night but it doesn't seem much of one.

"I don't know... Is it common for bite wounds to burn?" Naruto asks Hinata, within a second, the girl shakes her head.

"We got to go to the nurse's office. It sounds infected." Hinata says, surprising Naruto so much because the Hyuuga hadn't stammered at all. Which is why when Hinata pulls Naruto into the academy, he doesn't struggle against her.

Naruto almost stumbles onto the bed as he suddenly feels everything around him being very overwhelming all of a sudden. As he collapses upon the bed, Naruto kind of hears Hinata calling out his name but he just found his focus some place else. Something seems to be building up within Naruto, just waiting for this final push.

"It's the bite... That's how... Hinata... you got to... they need to know! It's the bite! It happens to those that are bitten!" Naruto suddenly shouts as last night's conversation between ANBU finally make sense, horrifying sense but sense none the least.

"Go! Get out of here! I think... gha..." Naruto flips onto his right side. Chakra engulfs the blond and as he struggles to pull the chakra back in, it doesn't work. Naruto snarls instead of saying something.

Hinata is running at the sound that exits out of Naruto's mouth. Her mind is a whirl as to what her crush means but she knew that she had to tell someone. Pausing for a second, she pales at the sight behind and to her left of the changes Naruto's whole being is undergoing.

Hinata makes it outside and shouts, "We have to get out of here! It's claimed Naruto! It's not safe!" She shivers as a beastly howl erupts and then a crashing sound.

"Hinata! What's wrong? What did the idiot do now?" Some random student asks but Hinata just shakes her head and pushes pass, running as fast as possible while funneling chakra into her legs. Already a roar of outrage sounds from within the building before high pitched screams follow.

Hinata is happy that her range isn't that great as it means that she doesn't get to witness more of what the thing that Naruto had transformed into tears into Sakura and, perhaps, some other Sasuke fangirl as Hinata knows that Ino was among the crowd that came to question her. Hinata doesn't stop only moves to take the roof tops, heading for the Hokage Tower. Tears run down Hinata's face, the guards manage to intercept her as she collapses at the gate.

"I have to see Lord Hokage! It's about Naruto! Please! It's important!" Hinata says, one of the chuunin feed her a soldier pill, which helps restore a bit of her chakra as they carry her to see the Third Hokage.

Two Months Later

The blond furred Worgen's ears flatten against his skull while he rests. Once more a battle rages on within Naruto's mind, the boy vs the combine rage of the naturally brutal Worgen form grants and that of the imprisoned Kyuubi sealed within. Most of the other Worgen have given the transformed Naruto a wide berth, instinctively knowing that the smaller Worgen is much more dangerous then his size hints at.

Once more the scene plays out, the newly transformed Naruto managing to break through the closed door. The sight of Sakura-chan and some other Sasuke fangirl coming stormily down the hall. They're eyes widening at the sight of him and Naruto roar in outrage before they scream, the other girl backing away but not fast enough.

Distracting him from Sakura, a welcome distraction that even the trapped human part is glad for in a guilty fashion as Naruto really didn't want Sakura to die by his hand. A few bounds and the blond furred Worgen is mauling the non-pink haired fangirl. Just as the mauling has begun, Sakura decides to give the role of heroine a try but just as the transformed Naruto bats Sakura away, Mizuki and two of the other instructors arrive.

Naruto stands and snarls in a threatening manner while the chuunin murmur something about being satisfied to see him as he truly is, a beast. Not that his raging mind cares, all it sees at the moment was new play things...

The sleeping Worgen shivers in memory of how many students and teachers it managed to bite and claw at that day, before the masked ninja arrived. Claw hands flex while the muzzle opens and closes, as if physically reenacting the mauling that Naruto had done at the academy. If it hadn't been for those fellow Worgen answering Naruto's summons, it's more then likely that would have been the end of Naruto Uzumaki's life.

"This sucks! Sure I feel guilty about what happened or since then, but if I had been in control none of it would have happened!" The boy rages at his current tormentors. "Besides, Hinata must have gotten the message through, we haven't seen other kid size of us around. They must be in cells or in the basement."

"I'm so going to figure out how to seal the two of you together and see if prison will alter your view of each other!" Naruto bellows while struggling to get out from under the paw of the huge warped wolf standing over top of him. The demonic fox snickers from its cage, the bars are all bent with a few snapped off. The paper seal at the middle looks very worn and the word's black ink is more a light brown with some of the edge kind of fading.

Naruto shutters to think of what kind of monster he'll be transformed into once the fox is free. Then there's always the possibility that the fox will gain its own body and reek terror as it had done before it had been sealed within him. Naruto knows he's making progress with slowly getting out from under the wolf creature's paw, the problem had always been how quickly the wolf realizes he's manage to wiggle out.

Which is why compared to the previous times, Naruto is taking it slow, not that he's sure that he'll be prepared to fend off an attack from the wolf to keep from getting pinned again. Naruto has always hated being forced to stay still for more then a minutes upon minute when he could be doing something more. The wolf had learnt its lesson about trying to swallow Naruto as the blond had spent a few minutes dangling from the dangly thing at the back of the throat, causing the monstrous wolf to spit him up.

Same goes for laying on him viva the belly. Sure, it had been dumb luck to find that while crawling under there but Naruto had done a rather nice job twisting and pinching it or else the wolf creature wouldn't have moved to pinning him down with a paw. Although, Naruto would have preferred one of the back ones as all the beast had to do was look down. Can't forget the fox's role in alerting the wolf either. Naruto muses with a scowl, glancing over to the cage which holds the crimson beast.

In the end, is wasn't if Naruto could get out from under the wolf, it's whether he can do more then get nabbed by the beast once more. It's rather a rather tall order as the warped canine is like taller then the Hokage Tower and is just plain huge. Naruto also has a sneaking suspicion that the massive beast is growing bigger too, how he doesn't know but he just can't shake the feeling that it was all the same.

Gods, I almost wish something would present itself to distract the two so I can get out from under here! Naruto thinks and as if in reply, something loud goes off in the real world, waking the sleeping blond furred Worgen that is Naruto.

Within seconds, the Worgen within the area are charging towards the explosion, all eager for a taste of whatever is making that noise. But as the pack get within a mile, a trap is sprung that results in all of them getting knocked out. "Looks like we caught the brat in this lot." Muses Ox upon coming upon the small beast-man.

Within seconds, a certain Toad Sage turns the smallest of the knocked out Worgen onto his back and checks the seal. "Damn it, we don't have much time. The seal's strength is waning too quickly. I'm taking him away right now, you deal with the rest." Jiraiya says as the others begin to release capture cages from storage scrolls.

As Jiraiya arrives outside of the Hokage Tower, he heads for the prepared seal room. None of the guards try and stop him, they all received orders about not hindering Jiraiya if he's carrying one of the transformed. Most of the guard head off to report to various heads about the demon container finally getting trapped, one in particular heads off to gather their supplies for the task before them.

It wasn't just the hope of keeping the fox demon sealed within Naruto, it's that they hope that the seal will give them clues they need to create a seal to help restore the minds of all of the transformed, as unlikely as it sounds. They had already encountered a few of the Hyuuga branch members among the beast and how ineffective their seal upon their forehead are since transforming into these beasts. If it weren't for that vital bit of information that Hinata had brought two months ago, it's likely the whole village would be over run with the transformed and spreading out into Fire Country.

As Jiraiya is putting the restraints upon the blond Worgen, he has to knock the child out once more as it looked as though Naruto was about to wake. With the restraints in place, Jiraiya activates the seals upon the chains to make it impossible for them to come out of the floor. Minutes tick by and the members of the preassigned squad to aid in the seal strengthening arrive.

Once the final members are within the room, the room is sealed off from the outside. By this time, the transformed demon container is awake and testing the chains, trying to get them to give so he can attack the human occupants within the room. Jiraiya grimly stares at his godson, realizing that this wasn't the way he wanted them to meet face to face but then, none of them expected some freaky transformation virus to elude them, it doesn't matter how you treat the bite or at what stage you try to stop the transformation, it's like chakra doesn't even touch it or can do anything to halt it.

As they go try to strength the seal, the blond furred beast that is Naruto Uzumaki begins to glow a fiery red, it's more then likely that the demon within knows what's happening and is trying to sped up the process. Though risky, they decide to waste no time in sending in members of the Yamanaka clan into the subject's head, everyone is relieved when they don't come out a few seconds afterwards.

"Hey! Watch it! It's quick for its size!" Naruto shouts while struggling to get his legs out from under the paw. It doesn't help that the giant wolf monster is now standing on all fours. Naruto gets some help in getting out while the crimson energy flows out of the demon's cage.

None of the mind walking ninja seem keen on lingering on the floor where the demonic chakra is hanging out. Naruto is more then happy to get out from under that paw but this gives the wolf a reason not to stand in one place any longer. As Naruto glances from the spot he's clinging onto the massive wolf and the cage, Naruto decides to cling to the cage, hoping that throwing himself at it will, hopefully, delay the decay and perhaps, the opening of the seal too.

It wasn't long before Naruto realizes a pitfall of that particular plan but decides it's too late to change his mind. And so, as those new comers fight off the black and crimson tainted wolf, Naruto stands steadfast at the cage, his arms hugging where the two doors meet in the middle, doing his best to ignore the laughter of the fox and its murmurs of his efforts being for nil. Naruto closes his eyes and focuses on keeping the doors closed.

As odd as it sounds, as the seconds tick by, Naruto desperately tries to find something, anything, to help keep the doors closed. Then a tickling sensation on his arms causes him to glance out, he finds chains on his arms and thin cords of blue energy slowly coming up his arms. With a shake, Naruto balls his fists, as if to grab those thin strings. Ignoring everything but the blue cords, Naruto tries to breath them into him, his efforts are clumsy but a minor gasp and the cords seem slightly thicker.

Naruto tries again and again, the cords grow larger and more power seems to flow into him but it wasn't enough. And so, Naruto strains to see something, something he knows is there, connected to the wolf that's in him. Upon finding those weak strings, Naruto attempts to re-channel the energy he's getting from those in the room with him into strengthening those frail ties.

It seems like years, decades but finally, those ties allow him to harvest energy from those on the other end. Then, Naruto finds himself back hugging the cage. Grinding his teeth, Naruto pours energy into the cage. He dimly notes that the fox has stopped laughing and that the crimson mist of the fox's energy is slowly being forced back by another mist, a blue one.

With the withdraw of the crimson energies, those other ninja seem to recover. Naruto feels more then sees them drinking in some of that blue energy but Naruto doesn't care, just as long as they keep the wolf from noticing him, from pinning him, he's confident that the cage can be repaired. Naruto continues to breath in that energy and it seems as though some blocks are giving way, allowing for more to come into him.

Naruto isn't even aware when the area of his mind has become overflowing with blue chakra but not only is the chakra done fixing the fox's cage, it seems to be removing the crimson color from the wolf's coat. Without the fox's own rage to add to the wolf's power, the canine seems to be shrinking and its mutations reversing. Soon, the wolf only appears to be ten feet high but it seems that those mind walkers are spent.

Naruto feels more confident in his chances of taking on the wolf. Naruto lets go of the cage and with that gesture, those connections that he's been taking chakra from. Somewhere in the fight, Naruto and the wolf finally call a truce, the wolf moves to lick its wounds a bit away, leaving the boy to be in the driver seat as it were.

Once more, Naruto is staring at strange marking written upon the floor. The chain's braces fall off rather easily and Naruto sits while running a hand through his blond hair, frowning at how matted it feels to him. "Man... does anyone have any mouth wash? I got this taste in it and I really don't want to know how I got it." Naruto says and within seconds, he's being bombard with all sorts of reactions.

Kind of cranky and exhausted, Naruto finally puts a foot down, demanding a meal before he answers anything. Although, before they leave the room, one of the men take off their shirt and gives it to him to put on. It's about then does Naruto realize he's rather naked and is rather glad to have something cover him.

Stifling a yawn, Naruto watches as the door appears. He struggles to walk down the hall, Naruto's limbs feel alien and he finds it rather difficult to keep his eyes open but some how, Naruto does manage to make it to a break room and within a few minutes, he's eating his second sandwich, mentally trying to organize his thought for the upcoming Q&A session.

The Ghost and the Fox Ch 2: DP

I don't own Danny Phantom or Naruto.

Looks like they earned their pay. Although, now we have to go shopping for a furniture for the new rooms. Naruto thinks while moving about the newly expanded and renovated apartment. "Is that a hot tub?"

Blinking, the blond heads for the master bedroom and finds a rather large ofuro in the connecting bathroom. "Oh, so that's why they had to take the outer wall out... I guess now I know why nobody wanted it and it was just sitting there, gathering all that dust." Naruto muses while Mizu climbs into the ofuro.

It had taken over fourteen months since Naruto had commissioned that company to renovate the apartment. It would have been completed sooner but upon inspecting the apartment, the company reported that the building wasn't up to code, which meant that the building had to be brought up before any kind of work could be started on the apartment. Things got found out and within two months since Naruto hired the company, the whole building was being striped bare and rebuilt from scratch, although for some strange reason, the Old Man stepped in and bought the apartment from the absence owners as nobody knows how to contact them as it seems that they left the village about seven years earlier and nobody noticed.

During that time, Naruto saved himself a headache and just kept using that Henge whenever he wasn't at the academy or training out at the train fields that are approved for academy level students as the blond didn't want to be kicked out onto the streets with Mizu in toe but the eleven year old's attention snaps out of reviewing his memories with Mizu saying, "And all my bathroom has is a shower..."

The black haired six year old is currently laying upon the bottom of the ofuro.

"At least you have a bathroom connected to your room. Most kids have to share with their parents." The blond remarks to the six year old.

"Yea and most kids your age don't have their own place, dad ." Mizu remarks from the ofuro while the blond merely sighs and leans at the frame of the door. There were times when Naruto gets this feeling that Mizu seems older then he appears which could be a result of some ninja village using genjutsu to teach kids academy lessons at a very young age, although, considering Mizu didn't understand a lick of his language seems to throw doubt upon Mizu being a child jonin.

"You're still sore that I wouldn't buy you that handled game for your birthday." The eleven year old muses with a soft snort. "As though you need any more excuse to hang around inside. There aren't a lot of kids interested in electronic games here in Hidden Leaf."

"Well, who says I want to be a ninja?" Mizu grumbles while climbing out of the ofuro. "You said it yourself, not everyone who attends the academy goes on to be a ninja." The younger of the two remarks.

"Maybe I should see about getting you to attend the academy anyway. You need to go out and make friends your own age." Naruto muses while moving out of his new bathroom after turning off the lights. "I know you get lonely." I know I am and I'm among my peers almost everyday.

"I don't want to make friends with those of my age group. They're just so... childish! When I'm in the park, I get reminded of puppies or kittens." Mizu snaps, not for the first time Mizu's eyes flash green and it seems as though the temperature lowers a few degrees.

The green retreats and Mizu's normal blue eyes are glancing away. "Well, it's not like you can rough house with kids taller and more physically stronger then you. I don't want to see you get bullied." The blond says while running a hand through his blond hair. Because that sure isn't want I want for myself let alone for somebody I care about. It's not like anyone has ever taken my side in anything and I doubt anyone will do so on Mizu's behalf when they learn that he's my son.

In the end, Mizu marches to his room and slams the door. It wasn't the first display of Mizu's frustrations coming to ahead nor will it likely be the last. "There are times when he reminds me of Sasuke..." Murmurs Naruto while the blond moves to the kitchen to unpack a few groceries that he had a Genin team go out and purchase while they packed up a cart with their belongings they've gathered over the pass year of living in said hotel room.

They each had stuff to unpack now that they brought it all the way up here. It'll likely take a few days to unpack everything within the boxes too. Although they'll have to wait a week for the latest cheque to come before they can purchase a couch and a bed. It'll take a few months before the apartment will look like somebody lives in it instead of visiting.

As supper rolls around, Mizu comes out of his room and sits at the old ratty desk that's now serving as a kitchen table. A pair of old bar stools serve as the chairs too. The previous stuff that had been in the apartment had been tossed out and the Old Man only replaced the one bed and the appliances. It's up to the eleven year old to find replacements for the rest.

"Do you remember which of the boxes has the tv and the other stuff?" Mizu asks as goat stew is served, Naruto found it easier to make stew out of the various cookbooks he purchased then most of the more delicious sounding recipes. But then, Mizu is still helping Naruto with his reading and written skills, which are much improved considering where they were thirteen months previously.

"Yea, I put your name on them." Naruto informs the six year old. Mizu groans, it's clear that the child did the same to his own boxes which means that Mizu will need to check each and every box with his name on it in order to find it. The blond rolls his eyes when Mizu mutters something in his native tongue, from the tone, Naruto could guess what the six year old is cursing about.

"Are you going to go train at a field after school tomorrow?" Mizu asks as Naruto is filling Mizu's bowl for a second helping of stew. "Doubtful, we do have a lot of unpacking to do." The blond informs his adopted son before handing back the bowl now filled with another helping of stew.

"Ah." Is Mizu's reply while stirring the stew with a spoon. Naruto frowns slightly before focusing on eating his third helping of stew.

T (=] - N

Hinata stares over at her crush, Naruto Uzumaki while letting out a soft little sigh. The eleven year old Hyuuga is rather confused as to why the eleven year old blond is using a Henge to be with that odd little boy who's chakra paths weren't only odd but sporting green energy. Hinata wanted to ask about it but doesn't want to cause Naruto any undo trouble either. The very idea of speaking to her crush let alone asking him something so private causes her to panic and almost faint at the very thought.

I wonder if Neji and Hanabi's investigate has turned up something... Hinata wonders, it's been close to two months since her little sister inquired about what's bothering her, more then what's usually bothering her and had managed to worm it out of her. Although Hinata is glad that some of the pressure is off, she is a little dismayed at the idea of her little sister investigating something she herself should have the nerve to do but also managed to roped their cousin into helping her too.

"Hinata... We have learnt who the child is." Neji says, startling Hinata a bit as it was lunch. "His name is Mizu Uzumaki and from what records we've managed to get our hands onto, he's Naruto's adopted son."

Hinata just stiffens while her mind races about what this means and more importantly, if it means Naruto isn't available. "We didn't find any medical reports and the picture we obtained, it's rather impossible to make Mizu out. Nor do we know where he came from, it's like he appeared out of thin air but as Lord Hokage hsa approved the adoption, there's a good possibility that Mizu's origins are black sheeted." Hanabi reports, her eyes glinting in contained excitement about this intel gathering operation, seeing it as ninja practice.

"He's also capable to altering his appearance with his black hair turning white and blue eyes going green. This transformation also effects any cloths he's wearing with their colors inverting." A pause. "It's clearly a bloodline limit, a superior one at that also grants him the ability to fly, phase through objects, and become invisible." Hanabi finishes.

"We have not confronted the boy to see if there are other special ability the boy may possess concerning his natural green chakra or have seen him preform any jutsu." Neji states blankly. "Although, there had been an incident where a kid matching the boy's altered appearance interfering with an ANBU operation little over a year ago."

Hinata nods, her mind a whirl at the idea that Naruto's involvement with this boy... this Mizu means that it could be something of a secret and if the Hokage entrusted Mizu to Naruto then they should stop their investigation at once. Although, as the eleven year old Hyuuga looks between her sister and cousin, Hinata becomes aware that perhaps they're not going to quit for those reasons. It's clear that Hanabi sees this as a way to put all those skills their father has been training her in to practical use while Neji will most likely continue to assist Hanabi, willingly or not.

"Are there any listings for Mizu's god-parents? Or adopted mother?" Hinata stutters, deciding to at least continue this if only to take the fall for involving Hanabi in all of this.

"None listed. There's no paper work for Mizu to attend the academy either. None of the listings for missing children matching Mizu's description have been found before the adoption or after." Neji explains before Hanabi could say anything and Hinata just nods.

"I highly doubt father will be pleased by the Hokage hiding such a powerful bloodline like this, let alone letting the current sole heir to remain out of school." Hanabi muses, pretty much saying something that Hinata had thought upon the revelation of Mizu's highly unusual abilities. "Particularly with having the boy get mixed up with Uzumaki... On that note, did you know that he's got the Kyuubi sealed in him?" Hinata's sister adds and Hinata glances over at Neji, only to find her cousin to be just as startled by this revelation too. "But we can't say anything to anyone about it because the Third created a law in hopes of keeping Uzumaki's status a secret, not that those involved are very good at keeping it a secret..."

"That certainly explains why Uzumaki can't control his chakra very well. Though, you would think that Lord Hokage would assign someone to teacher him chakra control." Neji states, it's as close to a rebuke of the Third Hokage's authority and judgment that her cousin will likely get.

"He might be hoping that his jonin instructor will catch on to Naruto's problem and set about correcting it." Hinata says in defense, although it's slightly hollow as Naruto's inability with chakra is hurting his chances of graduating to be a genin. The clone jutsu continues to be a thorn in Naruto's side, the blond has the other two down well enough but Naruto just puts too much chakra into it.

"Well, it sounds like you've got reason enough to speak with him, doesn't it Neji?" Hanabi remarks almost cheerfully at their cousin. Hinata can only guess when the usually emotionless mask will once more appear upon her little sister but for now, it seems as though Hanabi is enjoying not keeping her emotions under strict control, for the moment away.

As lunch ends, Hanabi stealthily vanishes from the academy courtyard, leaving Hinata alone with Neji. As Hinata heads to her spot at the back of the classroom, she wonders if Hanabi wasn't right about her having an opening in which to get to know Naruto in close quarters. It did cause her to wonder when, not if, this little investigation reaches her father, what steps he'll take to try and bring the matter before the council, after all, Naruto is rather young to be a father.

T (=] - N

"Sir, there's the head of the Hyuuga clan here to speak with you." The Third Hokage looks up from a ANBU report to watch as Hiashi Hyuuga walks into the office. Hiruzen Sarutobi mentally tries to recall reasons why Hiashi would wish to speak with him.

"Hokage, I wish to know what qualifications young Naruto Uzumaki have of being an adopted father to the boy known as Mizu." The head of the Hyuuga clan says to the Third Hokage. The old man blinks while his mind brings up the adoption papers Naruto filed about a year ago.

"Ah yes, I recall seeing papers to that effect little over a year ago." The elderly man says to the clan head. "I would have thought you would have recalled Iruka's little prank during his last year at the academy." The Hokage muses.

"Yes, I do seem to recall that particular prank. A rather thought out one but that does not explain the boy, Mizu, living with Uzumaki." Haishi states and this causes Hiruzen to stiffen while a number of things race through his mind.

"How old is this Mizu?" He asks. "Seems to be the same age as my youngest, Hanabi." Answers Haishi, which translate that the boy with Naruto is six to seven years of age.

Pressing a button, Hiruzen summons his secretary and asks her to have Naruto and Mizu Uzumaki escorted here.

] - N

Danny glances between the two masked ninja, while the halfa didn't want to be seen as weak, the amnesic ex-teen grasps his adopted father's hand. It helps him slightly with his nerves but it didn't stop the thoughts of being ripped away from Naruto and put through torture in order to learn whatever secrets he has. Somewhere in Danny's mind, torture and dissected became very interchangeable.

"Mizu?" Danny is startled out of his horrific thoughts to find Naruto looking very worried at him. His legs kind of refused to work and with a soft sigh, Naruto bends down and picks him up. His arms go about the blond's neck and feeling the eleven year old's arms wrapped around him causes him to feel safe, after all, Naruto has never harmed him and though he's given the blond trouble viva tantrums and such.

After a few minutes, Danny feels more then ready to walk and lets it be known, although he does keep hold of Naruto's hand, refusing to relinquish his grip upon it. They weren't far from the building and as they go up the stairs to get to the office of the Hokage, the six year old halfa wonders just how this particular encounter is going to result in and grimly prepares for the worst, although Danny really didn't want to leave Naruto, after all, the blond is the only one he knows and trusts in this world.

The first thought Danny had upon seeing the elderly Hokage had been, Geeze he's old, ancient even. And then the young halfa notices the few other adults in the room, one in particular sports white eyes, causing the amnesic boy to wonder if the man is blind. "Heya, Old Man! What's up?"

"Naruto, perhaps you can tell us how you came upon your... son." The geezer behind the desk says. The authoritative way the elderly man spoke, it kind of reminded the halfa of somebody, somebody also kind of on the oldish side of life.

"Well, ya see, I was coming in from a training field when I saw this green pillar of energy. It died and upon arriving at the site, I found Mizu laying there, naked and out of it." Naruto explains. "In the end, he wakes, I give him my shirt, then engage him in conversation only it kind of fails, he begins to cry, he clings to me, falls asleep, and I bring him back to my apartment."

Danny rather didn't want to be reminded of the moment it dawned on him that he not only woke without knowing his own name but not knowing a thing of the local language or customs. The amnesic ex-teen feels measuring look upon him and Danny swallows his embarrassment to not squirm under their looks. Even after a year, nothing comes to mind concerning his name or why he's here. Likely due to not being in familiar setting. The halfa privately reasons to himself.

"Then where did the name Mizu come from? If he has lost his memory?" The blond with his hair done up in a ponytail asks Naruto.

"Well, the forms needed a name and after thinking about it, I thought Mizu Uzumaki had a certain ring to it. Not that Mizu seem to care about what I decided to name him. Kind of seemed happy to have one." His adopted father explains and Danny privately thinks that last part could have been left out, not that the ex-teen feels like tossing in his two cents before a panel of strangers.

Kind of surprising that he's not nervous about it though. Danny muses, sure he might think of Naruto as a little slow when it came to books but the blond is the one who's feeding the both of them, making sure they had clothing, and manages the money. The amnesic Danny didn't know if he'd have the same restraint with money that Naruto shown to have.

At something, Danny had noticed how immature Naruto is for his age and yet when it comes to some of the more important aspects, Naruto's shown he's far more mature then his age. He's been forced to grow up too fast, which could be why he holds tightly to certain childish actions to try and capture his childhood at the same time. He thinks, rather stunned at this particular insight concerning his adopted father.

"And you, Mizu, what do you have to say?" The old man behind the desk asks him, which kind of startles Danny from his current thoughts to think of an answer that will, hopefully, satisfy them. "I don't know how I got here nor has anything here jogged my memory. I also get that I'm kind of a burden and that Naruto's way too young to take care of me, but since I got here, he's done a real good job of it, even though he's got school and other things to do in order to prepare for his graduation into a genin." Danny says, pausing to bite his lower lip for a second before continuing, very much aware that every adult in this room is paying him the utmost attention.

"The thing is, I feel safe with Naruto. He's the only one I really know here in this village and I've grown use to the idea of him being my adopted father." Danny admits, very much aware that he's still holding onto Naruto's hand. "He's the only family I have right now and I'd like for him to continue to be family."

Danny couldn't help but feel as though some of the tension hanging in the air kind of vanishes. "It's been a bit over a year since the adoption took place and it seems as though neither of you have suffered during that time." The man behind the desk muses. "But you both need adult supervision."

The geezer nods to himself, as if deciding something. "But until the one I'll have to supervise you both, I believe Haishi will be happy to fulfill that role as he's the one to bring this to my attention." The Hokage says and it takes Danny a few seconds to realize that the guy with white eyes is Haishi, the halfa mentally files that away.

"Inoichi is head of the Yamanaka. They have family jutsus capable of accessing the mind. I am sure that with his serves, you might be able to regain your memories." The old man says, pretty much volunteering the ponytail blond for such a thing.

Gee, isn't that subtle. Danny can't help but think while finally letting go of Naruto's hand, feeling relieved that it appears that nobody is objecting to his continue living with Naruto. Does this mean I have to attend the academy now?

T (=] - N

Naruto found it rather odd that he's in this office and yet, he's not in trouble. Mizu seems to be more interesting to staring at some point behind the head of the academy while swinging his feet. The blond looks away from his adopted son to glance over at a certain pervert leaning on the wall by the door, clearly more interested in what's written upon the note pad.

It's been four months since the incident where Ino's dad found that trying to enter into Mizu's mind is like running straight into a stone wall. Although, they did learn that Mizu is capable at possessing people, just not in the typical Yamanaka way but by phasing right into their bodies. I didn't even know he was capable of that stuff. Or that bloodline limits can cover so many different things, but that could have something to do with his chakra.

"We do believe we know why Mizu has been acting out." The academy headmaster says and Naruto wonders if he's going to get blamed for it. "He possesses knowledge in most of the subjects taught here with the exception of history, chakra usage, and physical aspects of ninja life."

"He's going to advance a grade then?" Naruto asks while Mizu sucks in a breath. "Or is he entering into an apprenticeship with somebody?" The blond thinks to add.

"He's going to be placed in your grade. It'll give him a year to catch up on the aspects he'll need to graduate." The headmaster answers and Naruto just blinks, not sure which emotion he should express, pride that Mizu is that much closer to graduating or dismay at how easily Mizu trumps his accomplishments.

"Wow... and to think he has only been attending for close to four months." Naruto says, settling for pride. "We might even end up on the same genin team too." The blond says and Mizu finally looks away from the spot behind the headmaster.

The tension in Mizu's shoulders give way and the young six year old falls onto the back of the chair. It seems that he said the right thing, if Naruto's to go from Mizu's reaction, not that Naruto really reacted to get Mizu to relax... "When will he begin attending the class?" Naruto asks.

"Tomorrow." Answers the headmaster and a soft giggle comes from Jiraiya. With that, Naruto places a hand on Mizu's shoulder while walking to the door. The Toad Sage follows them, the blond haired boy and black haired boy out of the office.

"And to think, you're going to be turning seven soon too." Naruto muses while Mizu adds, "I'll be following in the foot steps of a few famous ninja too. Sure, a few of them graduated when they were younger then me but, well, if I had started attending after the adoption, I might be a genin already."

"And here I thought you'd still be opposing to become a ninja." Naruto muses, recalling more then a few times when Mizu throw a tantrum, ending it by saying how he won't become a ninja, all the Toad Sage did was hum. "So, where do you want to go to grab a bite to eat?" The blond asks before remarking with a sly grin, "Jiraiya's buying."

The man hums, clearing not realizing what he's agreeing too. Mizu snorts softly, but that doesn't cause Jiraiya to wake to the outside world. Naruto merely shakes his head, not for the first time wondering if the Old Man really expects the pervert to be a proper role model for either of them. Considering how incline Mizu is to spying on the women only places, the blond shutters to think about what kind of influence the toad summoner will have on the impressionable Mizu after years of exposure.

It's one of the reasons why the blond is trying to think of ways to get Jiraiya out of the village as Naruto doesn't want Mizu to become a miniature pervert. The idea of Mizu treating women the way Jiraiya does. He'll be worst though, particular with his ability of flying, turning invisible, and allowing Mizu to phase through things. Naruto thinks with a scowl upon his face while imagining Mizu giggling while flying out of reach of enraged women.

As Mizu steals a few bills from Jiraiya's pouch, an ANBU suddenly appears and informs the toad summoner that he's needed. "Well, supper will still be on him." Mizu says and the blond smiles while nodding in agreement.

To Be Continued . . .

Time Loop: Celebrations: Harry Potter

I don't own Harry Potter.

The drums beat seems to cause the very air to tremble while a multitude of voice sings a song about All Hollow's Eve. Sure, Halloween is about eight days away but Harry didn't care as he rides upon the back of a massive wooden golem that's shape is a cross between an elephant and a ram. The majority of those participating in this parade as it snakes through the Forbidden Forest, heading to Hogsmeade before setting up camp across from the Hogwart's own lake.

All of those flying phantoms are actually tiny illusion generators, which is how they appear to move through the various objects, mainly trees but also certain incoming spiders and their webs. Although the fire that erupts when one of the specters go through an Acromantula is very real and boils the magical spiders alive. Although, if one of the Acromantula do end up in close quarters, one of the golems within range of said spider would quickly kill it before resuming their place in the parade.

The spells covering the various golems all work to allow the parade safely through the forest, seemingly causing a path to open up just a mile before the first part and seemingly closing back up a mile after the end part. Each golem acts as a magical amplifier taking a tiniest amount from him and magnifying it to ensure various effects of the spells they're carrying upon themselves. Not that it's a drain for Harry, after all, Dumbledore is the one who's been missing with time magic, causing time to loop for him, though why, the old man keeps sticking his nose in Harry's business, he really doesn't know nor really cares.

This whole parade is a result of spending hundred of thousands of loops as Dumbledore's little puppet before the Obliviate spell no longer worked on him. The subconscious mind can only suppress so many experiences before bits of information begins to migrate back into the conscious one or when the magic builds up to the point that binders might as well not exist either. Sure, you can put binds on so I can only access an eighth of my magic but if my magic keeps growing little by little with every time loop without any adjustments to my growing reserves... Some genius, he shouldn't have stopped looping and relying upon his previous experiences to keep me enslaved. Harry thinks as Hogsmeade comes into view.

Harry's sour mood and thoughts get pushed aside at the sight of the small number of inhabitants the village seem to come to the edge to see what's happening. Not that it remain uplifted as the sight strongly reminds him of how Dumbledore allowed the Magical Communities to decline so badly. He should have ramified the taxes to encourage families to have as many children as they can, it would have helped keep the bloodlines diverse. Then he shakes his head, banishing that kind of thinking, after all, Dumbledore's own time looped experience have been Oblivated every time time resets itself, it had been difficult bit of magic to work as the magic need to remain anchored in him but so worth it as Dumbledore's plans are now very predictable and much easier to counter.

The song's volume goes up as they begin to repeat the song anew with the golems beginning to preform their various acts before the watchful eyes of the local town. Their marching is a tad slower in order for the various acts to go through their routines but the looks upon the townfolks' faces were well worth it. As his section reaches the crowd, Harry begins tossing fake gold down into the thin ranks of the town's residents.

As they leave the town behind, some headed to their houses as those fake gold coins transform into fliers for a carnival being hosted by Harry James Potter. Unsurprisingly, none of the folk knew him on sight, although it likely didn't help matters that he's disguised as a handsome devil with bronze appearing skin, bright copper locks done up in braids, glowing purple eyes, appears to be an adult, a four foot tail sporting overlapping scales, and finally, sporting black antlers and horns while black leather pants cover his lower body, although glimmering jewelry graces his upper body and his antler prongs.

The volume of the parade increases and to his eyes, he spies that the fair grounds were already set up. The parade encircles the school and he's very pleased to find students rushing out of the castle to get a better look. He could only guess what look Albus is sporting at seeing this parade.

Now for the grandest spectacle yet! He thinks as the parade begins to march to the hidden fair. Harry closes his eyes as he reaches forth to transfer the spell upon the fair to place it upon the parade, the flying illusion generators seem to buzz in his ears as they begin to work overtime creating the illusion of the parade morphing into the various tents containing a wide range of features, although most of them serve as inns for international guests, typical food booths, a temporary goblin bank, open arcade grounds that are enclosed with only three entrances, and, of course, rides and haunted houses to entertain and thrill kids.

With the disguising spell successful employed, Harry gets down from the golem carrying him. With that done, he begins to select which golems will work the fair while directing the rest into the still disguised, expanded tent where they can remain until November first where there will be another parade signaling the end of the fair. He takes a few minutes to straighten out the clustered necklaces and bracelets before dismissing the illusion hiding him from view.

Within minutes the international guests begin to pour out of the various port-key booths. He had done extensive advertising beyond Europe as the whole fair is covered in networks of spells, one of which is a powerful language spell to allow those from different languages to pierce the language barrier so that language won't cause a conflict within the fair. He's most satisfied to see how quickly the various golem employed in the fair are already taking the guests to their booked rooms or directing them to the check in desks if they hadn't made arrangements back in August.

As the guests settle in, teachers from Hogwarts come barreling down upon the fair grounds with some students following them, although unlike the teachers, the students seem awestruck by the fair. One of the golems head the group off, likely the one with the assignment of being the organizer that had been 'hired' to make this fair happen. Harry already knew what kind of arguments the teachers and Dumbledore will likely use to get rid of all of this fun. He merely shakes his head and walks off to tour the fair grounds to be sure that it was constructed as he had envisioned it.

By the time noon arrives, families are already out and about. Harry even spies those students from outside of the UK walking around accompanied with their teachers, after all, he had constructed at least three museums, five theaters with their own theater group to enact their plays, four movie theaters with eight movie rooms, an indoor market for certain companies to set up their own booths to sell their wares, and two zoos where one features actual magical animals and one containing muggle animals. He would have included pools and wave pools but Harry just made sure that each of the motels sported them, none of the animals were fake, Harry just replaced those from muggle zoos with golems while he captured like the basilisk or rented like the various breeds of winged horses, although he had to use illusion magic so that the Thestral could be 'seen' with the naked eye. He got the idea of using illusions to make Thestrals visible from watching The Last Unicorn.

Sure, that seems a lot but between expansion charms upon the tents. Magic is such a wonderful thing when used with a clear purpose in mind. Lamp posts line the streets of the carnival, ready to be used for when night comes. Ads boards are up, each sporting posters for the various companies that have rented space in the indoor market as well as posters for the various theater groups are there too. Each visitor is given a magical map that allows them to track other members of their party as well as where they are in the carnival, they also alter when they're within the various tents too.

Harry does get hungry as his nerves settle and he sighs before setting off to find a vendor selling breakfast style food. He doesn't need to pay for the food, although he does give the illusion of paying by handing over fake money. Noticing that he's close to a live theater, Harry enters and again 'pays' for a ticket. He's sure to keep to the darker area as he could be mistaken for a worker as he's still appears in his devil costume.

I wonder if my Winter Celebration will have the same or greater attendance? Although instead of little over a week it'll be around for two whole weeks. I might even see an increase of businesses and maybe restaurants looking to get a piece of it too. The problem will be what kind of design I want to use and if I want it all under the same roof or not. Harry muses before heading off to get out of his costume.

Not that Harry's in a rush to get called to the headmaster's office and have a discussion concerning his organization of this event without permission. Not that he particularly cares as the man had signed off on allowing him to throw his own parties for the holidays. It just so happens I like to throw huge ass parties that involve everything from classic carnival rides to zoos and museums. Harry thinks before mentally adding, And I'm the one funding this party and not Hogwarts. Gee, you'd think he'd be happy with the positive publicity for Hogwarts and the UK in general.

The last time he threw a week long party, Albus had been very clear that such things aren't allowed within the castle. Harry smiles as he recalled how trashed Hogwarts was after that party. He had thrown it wide opens and made very good use of a certain room. Just what kind of limits are there to how big it can get? I think last time, I got it to be the size of London fairly easily. That was the largest water park in the world though. I wonder if I can get it to appear as a prehistoric jungle complete with dinosaurs? Now that would be something.

T (+

"So, just how much did you make from that celebration?" Neville asks as they rest in the hot tube that Harry thought up while walking thrice before the door. "I mean, as profit."

Harry hums, not sure how to break it to Neville that he bought pretty much all of the material from muggle sources. Then he had an army of golems take the bulk raw cloth and other such things to create what he needs for the coming celebrations of various holidays. "Probability more then what you'd expect."

"Those games you had were pretty fun." Neville says, changing the subject after about fifteen minutes of silence. "Earning those tickets and turning them over for special prizes that you can chose, so wick! Although it took me close to the whole week to get enough for one of those movie orbs. That's some fancy spell work, particularly when you have them under your pillow when you sleep."

"Yea, I know." Harry says smugly, sure, he's suppose to be a first year student. Even now, he's not sure why the Sorting Hat keeps sorting him, after all, it's not as though he's mentally an eleven year old. "You know, a lot of people wanted to purchase those while a few of the companies wanted to know who I ordered them from." He says to his best friend.

"Did you give them the name of the person?" Neville asks and he replies, "The maker wanted to remain anonymous."

"You know what would be great right now?" Neville asks after a few minutes. "Something cold and sweet."

"Oh? Is that all?" Harry muses and presses a tile that causes a mini fridge to pop up. The drinks were summoned from beyond the castle, though he's fairly sure that they won't be missed because that was the conditioned for them to be summoned. "What will it be?" He asks, causing the mini fridge to swivel to face Neville.

Neville slowly shakes his head but selects a root beer. He closes the mini fridge after selecting an Nestea. "You know, I am planning a Christmas festival." Harry says after drinking half of his drink.

"Is it going to be similar to your Halloween carnival?" Neville asks. "Not that I had a problem with it, but, well, gran wasn't thrilled at how much I spent on tokens for those games." The usually clumsy preteen adds.

"It's going to have a different style then Halloween. For one thing, no rides or as much theme styles either. Most of the buildings will be made from ice and snow, although there will be wooden posts that will be enchanted to hold it together. Might create overhead tunnels so nobody has to go out into the cold unless they want to." He then goes on to describe the various contests and activities that he has arranged, although he did admit that there will be more stores and likely actual restaurants instead of simple food booths.

Neville helps by evaluating those ideas and even helps tailor them a bit. Neville remarks about indoor gardens and he kind of likes that idea. "Hey Nev, how would you like to be in charge of this green touch project for my Christmas Celebration? I'm offering ten gold a week and an unlimited budge to take your designs and make them real." He says to Neville and his friend just stares at him with a touch of fear and awe.

"You can even keep the plants too, just remember that non-magical types work just as well as magical." He adds, sure he doesn't know if Neville's up for the responsibility to do something like this but he's more then willing to lend resources and golems to see if Neville has it in him to do so. "I can get you books on the subject and arrange for you to speak with those in this particular business too."

"All that just because I made that suggestion? That's a lot of responsibility, Harry, I'm not sure I'm capable of doing it." Neville says humbly.

"Ah, come on, Nev, you're being groomed to take over as the head of your family. You should be more then qualified to direct hire help to place a bunch of plants about a small and medium size courtyard." He says in encouragement. "You have until the second week of December before construction begins on creating the buildings."

Neville didn't seems to be able to form words after that and he's mentally making a list of things to send Neville's way.

T (+

Considering the 'lashing' Harry received from the Halloween Carnival set up on school grounds, he came up with a different way to host the Winter Festival. Though it took a lot of spell work to float those base plates. It proved to be a great test of his sunlight to magic conversion spell, pressure resistance spells, and for wind sphere. As the plates had been rather rushed, he didn't have many of them, which means that there's only one tower to act like a motel, a tower for the contests, and the third acting like the ultimate mall sporting not only restaurants and shops but also museums, movie & live theaters, a water park, and a zoo with mostly magical animals.

The third plate floats the lowest out of three, but that might likely have to do with the number of expansion charms upon the tower. The competition tower floats the highest out of the three, leaving the hotel tower to float between them. The three towers are connected viva charmed ramps that also sport smaller plates that sporting a few of the gardens Neville designed, which also sport those shielding spells to protect the wind and from being so high up in the air. The smaller ones could be found within the hotel and mall tower while larger ones could be found within the competition tower.

All of the towers float over the previous fair grounds, which is why Harry has warded to keep the Hogwarts teachers from coming up. Actually, he had wards about to prevent marked followers of any 'dark' group from visiting the towers. It's a good thing I got Dumbledore to sign that document agreeing that as long as none of my holiday celebrations happen on school grounds, he won't complain about the parties.

"Isn't that breaching that contract you signed with the headmaster?" Dean asks and he replies, "Not really as Hogwarts can't own the space over the ground, just the ground itself and as you can see, they're floating over the ground, there's no touching of school property."

"How are they staying up there, though? It must take a lot of magic to power whatever enchantments that allow them to hover there." Seamus adds while they wait to be taken to the train station, not that he needs to visit London, nay, it's just that once he's at the train station, either of them, he's officially not the responsibility of the school and he can use that port key to appear at one of the port key booths of the tower.

"The anonymous spellcrafter continues to wish to stay anonymous." He answers and knows that all of the other students with them are listening in. He could only guess how ready to burst Hermione.

With the extra security, aka wards keeping marked followers from visiting, Neville's grandmother relented in allowing her grandson to spend the majority of the winter holidays with him. Neville has the room to the right of his room and he only hopes that his best friend will enjoy his experience away from his grandmother's thumb. Though, Neville will be spending Christmas day with his family.

Soon the Thestral drawn carriages come to take them away. Being so close to Neville, he hears his friend take a sharp intake of breath at the sight of the Thestrals. Only a select few of the first years pause before moving to climb into a carriage. They weren't that unexpected as their history hasn't changed much unlike his own as he tries to vary his routine from loop to loop.

The carriage ride is rather uneventful and upon arriving at the train station, Harry pulls Neville to the back of the horde of students. Once they're out of sight, they take out their port-keys and within seconds, they arrive at one of the port-key booths. It takes them a few seconds to get their trunks onto one of the levitating carts before they follow their guide to their rooms.

Once within his rooms, he walks over to the bed and just lies upon it after kicking his shoes out and taking off his winter jacket, muggle made at that but then, muggle cloths were just cheaper and typically warmer even without some kind of temperature spell upon them. Now if I can just prefect that automatic transfiguration enchantment, I won't have to worry about buying wizarding robes of any sort. Never again will I have to worry about switching between muggle cloths and wizarding robes.

Hmmm, it's rather funny how much I've come to resent the magical community as a whole. I get that they like their tradition but they just seem to be totally disconnected from just what magic is capable of. It's like they're neutering themselves without realizing it... Muggles would make better use of magic then they do, it's because their imagination isn't imparted. He muses before wondering if any other magical community is like the UK or Europe.

You know, it would do me some good to explore other countries. I mean there are other countries out there that have been around for as long as Rome had fallen, so they must have their own traditions and magical practices. I mean, not all of the various communities invented wands to preform spells and to focus their magic. Harry muses to himself as he gets up to answer the door.

Neville is standing on the other side, holding a token bag in his left. "You want to come to the arcade with me?" His friend asks and he agrees, he heads to pick up his own bag of tokens before putting on his shoes and jacket once more.

T (+

Maybe I should have given flying mounts a try... Might have made travel between the three towers a bit simpler. Aw well, I'll just do set it up for the next holiday. Harry thinks to himself while looking over the report of profit he accumulated through this holiday.

"Might want to use golems instead of living ones... Shouldn't be hard to engrave the necessary rune schemes to hold the illusions to make them seem alive." He muses in the Chamber of Secrets, reclining upon the couch in the renovated chamber.

Ever since he's learnt to grant golems a limited AI. He's also learnt how to rope a golem into monitoring wards, which helps when he's trying to grow highly dangerous magical plants. Mixing metal, stone, and wood in golems allow for them to endure various kinds of secretion from said plants then if he just one of the three, at least back before he created that magical skin for protection.

Groaning softly, Harry once more turns his thoughts away from various feats he's managed to preform using magic. He focuses back to his plans for the next holiday, which is St. Valentine's Day. The various plates continue to float in the air but the building material has been taken away after the decorations, in particular the plants. He's currently working on plans on creating a castle using those plates already up in the air, he'll wait until spring to add more large ones.

Various clippings and sheets sporting various designs for floating castles litter the desk before Harry. Many of the sheets sport his drawings from various movies that have not been made and other from his own mind. As he pushes the images off to the side, he is sure to put the report into a drawer before grabbing a few pencils and a fresh sheet. Upon this, he began by drawing the plates that are up in the air with the large three making a triangle.

It takes close to thirteen tries but finally, Harry has the basic plans for creating a castle, including a love tunnel ride, although the boats will be flying through the tunnel instead of floating upon a river or some other water way. The only trouble Harry foresees is the creation of the material he plans to use to create the castle. He plans to try and make the castle seem to be constructed out of clouds, which will need to be soft and yet solid enough to keep people and objects from going into the floor or into a wall.

He's still getting the rune machine constructed in order to begin creating that material. He got the idea of rune machinery from the few times he visited a machine shop during the few times he's determined to learn how to sabotage his uncle's car. He would go on to purchase more books upon the subject and would move onto engineering text books, even taking a few university classes.

His previous rune machines work not unlike a computer program oddly enough as the runes in each part take raw material, typically water, sand, or random garbage really, and turning into something surprisingly permanent. Harry's working to funnel carbon from the air into the machine as raw resources as it would serve to clean up the environment by taking out a portion of green house gases.

With a snort, Harry leans back in his chair and glances over at a holo-picture, mostly just a simple ward connected to his memory to display a picture of Hermione, Ron, and himself using illusions. His emerald gaze studies Hermione's face, bring old memories to the forefront. Closing his eyes, he breaths out before looking up at the ceiling as a frown graces his face as he muses upon how often Hermione ignores her muggle roots for magic, something that someone might think he's done too, but the difference is, Hermione at least could intermingle with her classmates and achieve good grades without worrying about getting locked away by getting a better grade then a cousin of hers or being singled out by wearing that same cousin's discards. As such, Hermione and his experiences before Hogwarts were very different as Harry's never had the chance to experience life beyond chores under his aunt's watchful eye.

"You'd think she'd be disappointed after a year at Hogwarts... It's not like those fantasy books or comics, which is a pity really. Those works are very inspiring." He muses to himself out loud. "You'd think all muggleborns would try and aspire to the marvels that crop up in muggle fictional works."

In the end, Harry shakes his head, he'll follow that thought through at a different time, for now, he needs to snack on something before working on what kind of decor to use for the outside of the castle and how corny they will be as well.

T (+

Feburary first, noon is signaled by the port-key booths flaring to life. Harry knows this by the face that his collection of leather bracelets on either wrist seem to vibrate just before they seem to shrink tightly at his arm. Because of his reserves, he doesn't feed the drain that the bracelets have started in earnest.

When he gets the chance, he walks out of the castle and looks up at the castle he created. He'll visit the castle later tonight to check on the wards to be sure that nobody is trying to tamper with them or add anything to them. He knows that many of his fellow students are looking up at the castle, although unlike him, they're faces likely sport longing and awe.

Dumbledore had tried to put his foot down upon students visiting that castle but in the end, he pointed to a clause in their contract and that ended Albus' latest argument concerning how he likes to celebrate his holidays. He's sure that if Dumbledore could, the man would try to overturn last summer's decrees that he's slipped pass the bunch of moronic men. He would call them old but save for the fact that he has lived through thousands upon thousands of years, which means that he's older where it counts, within his mind.

"I can't believe you're still getting away with this, Potter!" Shouts a certain first year blond. "Guess we all know who's the favorite of the school is." Pipes in Draco and Harry merely gives the three a look before moving off to his next class, not feeling the need to respond to the coward and the two bookends.

A clucking echos after him, it seems as though the three thought to try and send spells at him once more. It's one thing to transfigure somebody into animal, it's another to cause minor transfiguration while having the subject keeping their human appearance. Harry muses, it's not as though Draco and the two are the only ones he cursed with that bit of spell work, there's plenty of annoying habits and attitudes that he's come to be rather intolerant of over the course of the loops.

After all, nobody or anything will change unless he does something to change it. Trying to reason with the lot just isn't worth the breath anymore nor trying to argue with and threaten them. One of these loops, I'll have to be sure to stop erasing Albus' experience and entrap him in a magical contract so he can show me where all his back up sites are and ID his programed minions. Then show me his various traps too, although, all of that will likely take more then a single loop and a great deal of patience, not that I possess much of the later at this point. Harry thinks to himself as he walks down the halls of Hogwarts, his own personal hell.

T (+

You would think the ministry would have something better to do then to confiscate those plates to destroy them. Harry muses, very much aware that Albus had pulled majority of his favors for this particular operation. Not that it matters to him, not when he's just finish taking the last of the N.E.W.T. examines as with Dumbledore's attention else where, he's managed to slip into the various examine.

He's hoping that the fact that he took those examines, he won't be expected back next year. He's currently on his way up to the book to see if his name has moved from the category of student to graduate. Harry's tried to take his N.E.W.T.s plenty of times in the past but Albus always pulls a bunch of strings so that they get missed placed or destroyed.

I highly doubt that group will be appearing until autumn arrives. He thinks to himself. Considering magical stasis spells exist, it hadn't been that hard to set up a trap where a whole room would act like a time limited freezer or fridge, keeping the group alive but mentally knocked out until the timer on the 'freezer' beeps, signaling the stopping of the spell.

If this course of action allows me to graduate from Hogwarts, so much the better. Harry mentally adds while taking a moment to click his heels, activating a bunch of enchantments upon his shoes and cloths, he walks up the side of a wall before walking over the gargoyle without giving it a password. Soon enough, he's in the headmaster's office, all of the paintings didn't even look at him or acknowledge him in anyway, but then, that's likely due to an enchanted plastic that he talked a few old Potter house elves to place over all of the magical paintings in Hogwarts to help preserve the paint. The magic upon the plastic and the various enchantments upon his cloths render him invisible to all of the paintings covered with the plastic.

Once he got the information he came for, Harry left, his mind going over what he plans to do in the coming, Hogwarts-free years. He's got almost a good three decades before time restarts and he plans to make the most of them.

The Ghost and the Fox Ch 3: DP

I don't own Danny Phantom or Naruto.

"There isn't anything to report concerning Mizu. The kid displays that he's had been through an advanced class training but nothing concerning physical or chakra training." Jiraiya reports before they get around to why he was summoned. "The kid is relatively harmless, although he hasn't gone out of his way to befriend any kids his own age. Basically, Mizu's only reason to stay in Hidden Leaf is because Naruto's here. There's the typical friction you'd expect from kids learning their boundaries but in the end, Mizu does seem to look up to Naruto as a parental figure, as unbelievable as it sounds for a six year old to see an eleven year old in that particular fashion."

His old teacher nods while leaning forward upon the desk. "There are a few clans within the village trying to get me to dissolve the adoption. Many prominent clans wish to take the child in." The Third Hokage informs Jiraiya and he merely sighs, not really surprised that the clans were trying to 'step in' and 'save' the kid from the 'Kyuubi'.

"I doubt taking Mizu away from Naruto is any way to gain the boy's trust. He is very much capable of taking off and depending on a few things happening, I think Naruto will join him." Jiraiya goes again, just rewording a few things while adding the bit about Naruto leaving to follow after Mizu. "Mizu is rather mature and it's not as though the kid really needs a lot of parental involvement either. After all, for little over a year, Mizu was content to spend his days alone in the motel room playing video games and watching those movies Naruto scavenged from the summon discard pile."

His teacher sighs and he watches as the Hokage rubs his temple with one of his hands. That alone gives him an insight to what kind of pressure the various elements within the village were weighing themselves upon his former teacher. "Mizu can become a security risk and trying to use Naruto to control him..." He adds, shaking his head, while not particularly liking that image knew that there's a really good chance that it'll happen in the near future.

Jiraiya just watches as the Third Hokage looks his years. It isn't very heartening to think that within the coming months, it's likely that his godson and Mizu will likely be on the road away from Hidden Leaf, likely pursued by Hunter Nin.

T (=] - N

Naruto can't help but shake his head as Sasuke and Mizu face off. Ever since Mizu began to take classes with their grade, the Uchiha seemed even more moody then before and had oddly gone out of his way to snipe at his adopted son. Just what is his problem? It's like he's jealous of Mizu, but why would the 'Mighty' Uchiha feel that way towards a six year old kid?

The girls in their class seem divided concerning this fight, many of them had found Mizu to be adorable and in need of being protected which is now coming into conflict with their 'love' for Sasuke Uchiha. Most the boys take Mizu's side more because they don't resent the six year old as much as they do Sasuke. Yea, like it's really hard to see Sasuke as a bully after the last month of watching the Ice Prince go out of his way to knock Mizu over or verbally put him down. The blond eleven year old thinks to himself, he would love to step in but for the fact that his son's eyes are sporting that glowing green color, meaning that if he stepped in, it could only enrage Mizu even more then he already is.

Besides, it's not like Sasuke can hurt Mizu even without my son transforming. He's got enough control over his abilities that he can phase through, fire energy, and turn invisible while still sporting black hair. Just means it drains him a little more then it would have if he sports white hair. He thinks, wondering just how Mizu will end this as Naruto knows that this fight is very one-sided, even if few of those here knew it.

"Hello Naruto. How are you today?" Hanabi asks and he glances to his right to find Hinata's little sister standing there. Hanabi and Mizu do get along, he just won't say that they're friends though. During the time Hanabi and Hinata's father took to checking in on them, the man decided they needed to be instructed in manners and had them attend lessons three times a week until Jiraiya arrived to take over.

"Rather ticked at a certain Uchiha for starting this." Naruto answers politely. "How have you been today? Learn any new moves from your father?" He asks while noticing Neji and Hinata coming out of the building with Iruka's teaching aid, a gray haired chuunin named Mizuki.

"I have been fine and I've almost mastered Water Walking." Hanabi answers while Mizuki doesn't stop the fight but decides to referee it, much to his chagrin. "Shouldn't he be stopping this?" The six year old girl asks him.

"You would think, won't you? After all, the fight isn't going to do wonders to a certain somebody's ego." The blond boy retorts. It'll only cause Uchiha to get more pissy and broody. God, for somebody who's supposedly not interested in the people around him, Sasuke sure expects to remain center of attention. Naruto muses while neither Hinata or Neji come to join Hanabi and himself.

Silence hangs between them when Sasuke moves to strike Mizu, it seems that whatever rules of the fight have been explained. "Its sad when the heir of a founding clan stoops so low as to attack a kid half his age to make himself feel superior." Hanabi states calmly while Sasuke's attacks go right through his adopted son's body.

"You'd think he's trying to prove something to someone by arranging this fight." Murmurs the blond, trying to ignoring the murmuring threats from those girls within ear shot. Naruto is rather tired of getting beat on simply by speaking his mind. Don't I have a right to free speech? He wonders while frowning as he studies the horde of girls, they vary in ages and yet they're all crazy about the prick of a heir.

Actually, it's just tiring to be the center of so much grief at all, from either the girls and the villagers. The blond mentally admits while the 'fight' begins as it seems Mizuki has finished speaking. As the hand is lowered the volume of the horde of females only increases as they, as a horde, decide to take Sasuke's side, likely having convinced themselves that Mizu desires getting beaten up by a kid twice his age.

I doubt I'll ever get the mind of a girl. Naruto thinks, nodding wisely to himself while the cheers turn into outrage. Not that the blond particularly feels sympathy for their plight, as it is.

The blond notes how Sasuke grows more and more frustrated as nothing the older boy could do seems to connect. After a minute of this, Mizu vanishes just as Sasuke's hands begin to form hand signs and being startled, the Uchiha stops to look around but is blasted a few feet backwards by Mizu, who appears in the spot he had occupied since the beginning of the match.

"How dare he!" "I know!" "Sasuke!" "He cheated!" And so on, each of the witnesses couldn't believe what had just happened before their very eyes. Naruto merely sighs while out of the corner of his eye, the blond notes the look of disdain upon Hanabi's face. It wasn't long before Mizu has made his way towards them, Hinata and Neji arrive before the amnesic boy though.

Mizu looks rather peeved and one green flash later, the six year old addresses those girls. "Shut up your yaps, you harpies! I am younger then the guy you were cheering for! He's a bully and he had it coming! He's had it out for me since I joined your class and if you can't see it, then you're all better off never graduating because that just shows me and everyone that counts that you lot are all mentally defective and therefore MIAs waiting to happen!"

Then Mizu turns to regard Sasuke, "And if you try anything funny against me, be it a tip or a verbal remark, I'll find a way to stick you in the hospital, one way or another." Then as if remembering something, his son adds, "And that goes for Hinata Hyuuga and my dad, Naruto Uzumaki."

With that said, the black haired kid phases through the stunned crowd of girls to join the collection of three Hyuuga and Naruto. Without needing Mizu to say anything, the blond places a comforting hand upon his charge's shoulder while leading the way. The three Hyuuga encircle them, making it clear that the horde of upset fan girls would need to go through them to get to either Uzumaki.

T (=] - N

Well, here goes nothing... Naruto thinks while checking and rechecking his pack which is packed with various storage scrolls. He sighs, but there wasn't much to it, after all, he failed his third try to make it as a ninja. "I'm going to miss this place."

"I still can't believe they let that prick graduate but not you." Mizu murmurs angrily, sandal sole rubbing upon the floor. "You filled the class with those clones too! Sure, they were warped but they were clones."

The twelve year old merely sighs while moving the already sagging knapsack up. While things had been looking up since the day the Old Man Hokage learnt about Mizu, it also started some count down too. It had shocked him at the beginning of the school year to learn that once word had gotten around about his adopted son's bloodline limit, every clan within Hidden Leaf had been aiming to bring Mizu into their clan, through marriage or adoption.

He should have said something before that, about the deal. Naruto thinks to himself. They had their chance to cancel the adoption six mouths after the paperwork, after that, the ability to cancel the adoption should never come up! The blond thinks while moving to place a hand onto Mizu's shoulder.

Without a word, Mizu causes them both to become invisible and with that, they phase through the door. Naruto lets go of Mizu's shoulder and within seconds, an owl is standing where the blond had been. Spreading his wings, Naruto takes to the air, it had taken close to three months to get to the point where flapping while being this short has become second nature to him. It helps that it's an actually, physical transformation instead of an illusionary one.

He's never been more grateful for the lack of attention people had in his capabilities or else they would have realized what's off with his Henge jutsu. The big hint should be the fact that genjutsu seems to be something he'd never get since he lacks the control to gently weave illusions upon the mind of others without anyone getting suspicious. Since his henge doesn't cost him energy to keep it up, none are tipped off about him not being who he looks like. Which is how I managed to sneak into those ANBU classes about seals.

As Naruto silently flies over the village, the blond notes the number of patrols seem to be increased. Bitterly, he realizes that the council had expected them to make a run of it, particularly since he knew that his only family member was going to be taken from him. Likely in the name of helping Mizu achieve his 'greatness' and it would help the image of various clans if Mizu sports their clan name instead the clan name of a known prankster and local parish.

Mizu had reported a number of genjutsu trying to capture him not long after the Third told them about the council's 'deal'. Mizu did go along with the various suggestions of the genjutsus, mostly to keep them from trying to find another way to control Mizu. You would think they'd figure he's immune to genjutsu if those mind viewing ones wouldn't work on him. Aw well, just means they put their eggs in a single basket is all.

] - N

Danny would glance over his shoulder now and again to make sure that his adopted father is still following. The amnesic Fenton is just glad that the charade they've been maintaining is over and done with, not that is stops him from feeling dirty and used. He hated acting like those genjutsus influenced him, Danny shivers at the training he had gone through with Root during the last two months. It had taken every ounce of his will to keep from blasting that loony, mentally fked Danzo into a wall.

While Danny doubts that the Third Hokage had approved Danzo hi-jacking him, he couldn't see how the elderly man could think that somebody like that bastard wouldn't take advantage of the situation as it was. It had given the seven year old a headache trying to sort through the various layers of genjutsu to find the ones he needed to fake. The halfa is particularly glad that none had ever made a large fuss about his pauses, they likely figuring it to the fact that the mass of genjutsu was 'warring' with him.

But now, if I ever see that creep again, I won't haste to blast him. That man is a cancer, it won't matter what kind of situation we encounter him under again, he'll be lucky if his back remains in one piece. Danny thinks darkly.

He learnt one important lesson from his encounters with that man and it's showing mercy to those without compassion is worthless as they'll find ways to make you regret it. Second chances were all well and good but there should be a limit to it as well. Some people just won't be redeemed, who think they know best. Danzo is just an example of that.

As noon arrives, they finally decide to find a place to rest. It takes a bit before either of them is ready to move on. Naruto seals the garbage upon a fallen branch before transforming into an eagle. He only takes to the air once he's invisible, knowing that his dad will continue on their westward direction, although at some point they'll begin to go a bit south as they were aiming for the famed sea ports of Wind Country.

They needed to get away from the continent for a while and that's as good a place as any to find a ship or buy a ship to take them away from these lands. There's got to be another continent out there just waiting to be explored. The boy going by Mizu thinks to himself while the terran below slowly changes while he's flying above it.

T (=] - N

Well old man, saying 'I told you so' just doesn't seem to cut it. Jiraiya thinks after reading the letter a third time. They should have been tipped off when Mizu seemed affected by all those genjutsus. Honestly, if the kid's unaffected by Yamanaka family jutsus, what hope would genjutsu have? The toad hermit mentally shakes his head at that, wondering about the time frame of getting appointed the head of a clan suddenly means the person stops using their brain.

Maybe it happens when they're admitted onto the council, after all, Naruto is an official a clan head, what with having a son, and yet, he's bright enough to plan an escape no matter how increased the security had become since the time of the graduation exam to the eve after it. He reflects. And I doubt using Mizu's bloodline limit played a large part in the escape too.

"Only wait to find that out is to find them." Murmurs the author of a certain series of books. "Well, they certainly couldn't have gotten that far, still likely in Fire Country." Jiraiya muses, tipping his head up to look up at the sky.

The toad summoner does note the eagle soaring over the road side stand but since it doesn't move to land, dismisses it out of his mind as the bird likely on its way elsewhere and is circling to get its bearings. With a sigh, Jiraiya looks back down at the letter before folding it up and pocketing it, he's got a bunch of spies to speak with about locating his godson and his great-godson.

Soon enough, Jiraiya is on his way after paying his bill and the eagle long since gone.

To Be Continued . . .

Undoing Time: InuYasha

I don't own InuYasha.

The night of the New Moon has passed and Inuyasha's demonic blood once more takes hold, transforming him back to his regular appearance. Black hair pales and begins to shorten while the rest of his body begins to become covered in silvery fur that stopped growing after a few centimeters. His skull stretches and narrows until his head once more is that of a canine's own, complete with upright, pointed ears upon his head.

The soles of Inuyasha's feet thicken into paw pads while his legs alter so he's walking upon the tips of his toes with blunt claws upon each toe. The palms of the half-demon's hands darken but remain predominately human with sharp, almost claw like nails tipped upon each finger and thumb. Shoulders widen but also narrow a bit, allowing Inuyasha the option of running upon all fours which is made easier with longer arms.

With a sigh, Inuyasha looks away from the stream and his own animalistic reflection. Once the sling containing food, a water skin, and his father's demon rat furred kimono along with a few other articles of clothing that he wears during the nights he's human as cloths tend to rub against his fur, causing him irritation.

That's not to say he goes about naked while in beyond the nights of the New Moon, only that Inuyasha wears a bulky shorts that stop before his knee. While it does cause irritation, Inuyasha had learnt to ignore it as its only in one spot on his body. He just knew that his mother would be disappointed in him concerning his lack of concern with wearing cloths to try and come across as a civilized person but Inuyasha just didn't think it worth while with his features on display for the whole world to see. He had even tried to wear a cape and a deep hood, only for people to think him a magic user or a infamous bandit.

It had been fifty years since that jewel had been seen and now it is scattered about the land. Inuyasha had once entertained the notion of stealing it from that priestess but thought better of it. It was clear that the priestess named Kikyo, wouldn't haste to kill those that come for the jewel, perhaps if he had been born 'prettier' lookin' he would have given it a go and seduced her but he isn't and as he is rather fond of life, he didn't give it a go. I doubt she'd have bought my tale of being cursed by a dark priestess because I spurred her affections...

I'm getting old... falling pray to the desire of getting acceptance from short, lived beings. Inuyasha thinks, ears moving backward and down upon his skull. Next thing I know, I'm going to look forward to finding the 'one' to settle down with... The half-demon thinks to himself, snorting softly as he heads for the mountains where a wolf demon is said to possess up to two shards of the Jewel of Four Souls, that they increase the demon's speed.

Inuyasha can only hope he'll get there before somebody shows up to retrieve the shards from the young and hopefully inexperienced, wolf demon.

"What do ya mean he's gone? You're wolf demons and this is your territory! So where else does this guy have to be?" Inuyasha snarls at one of the remaining members of Koga's pack, towering over the very human looking wolf demons.

"Having us repeat it won't make him suddenly appear!" Shouts one of the wolf demons and with a growl, Inuyasha lets go of one of the wolf demons' vest and turns about face, marching off. The half-demon didn't know how to put into words his anger over this development, particularly the knowledge that at least two powerful person/s are struggling over the shards.

Should I continue trying to get one of these shards? Or should I just give it up as a thankless and highly dangerous endeavor? Clearly the sides of this 'war' over the shards is already further along then I thought and both sides seem to possess resources that I lack... Inuyasha thinks to himself.

Growing tired of thinking, the half dog demon moves the sling so that the contains of the sling is resting by his chest and belly before planting the palms of his hands upon the ground. With a flicker of an ear, Inuyasha takes off on all fours, heading southward. The frustration within him ease, the act of doing something helps Inuyasha to relax and to simply enjoy the action of running and leaping about the mountain trails.

The thrill of the wind rushing through his fur, over his body, and when he's in midleap gives the half-demon the impression of flight.

A scent causes Inuyasha to stiffen and to scan about the tavern. With a frown, his elder brother approaches his table. "Inuyasha." Sesshomaru states upon sitting down at the table.

"Sesshomaru." Inuyasha replies with a slight frown. "What brings you here?" He asks, noticing that Sesshomaru is wearing armor, which is rather odd as Sesshomaru is more of a scholar then a fighter. "Since when do you wear armor?"

"Have you been having any strange dreams?" The full blooded dog demon asks Inuyasha after somebody brings a cup and a fresh bottle of sake to the table. The half-demon frowns as he pours his elder brother a cup.

"Nothing but fantasy." Inuyasha replies. "Or wishful thinking." He thinks to add before taking a sip out of his own cup. "You came all this way to discuss dreams? That's rather odd, particularly for you, Sesshomaru."

"Perhaps... perhaps not. Those dreams might be a sign that somebody has altered time, changing things." Sesshomaru says and Inuyasha frowns. "There are ways to do so and each have their instabilities that can allow those most changed by the act to collapse the new time line." His half-brother states before taking a sip of the sake.

An image of a more human appearing half-demon who's demonic features seem to be amber eyes, silver hair, and floppy ears upon their head. "If what you said about my recent dreams is true, then why would it be in our best interest to end this particular time line? What bits I have dreamed of our relationship suggests we are more often at each others' throat over something rather trivial, like a sword or over my mother." Inuyasha informs his half-brother.

Sesshomaru's eyes go to the cup of sake, which means that Sesshomaru seems to be aware of that. "There isn't much to be gained, restoring the time line. I rather not sport a collar and be under the whim of a emotional female." He adds before popping some shrimp into his mouth.

I would be happier if someone else approached me about this. If it had been anyone but Sesshomaru, I would have called them crazy and that would be the end of it. Inuyasha thinks to himself while eating more from his three dishes while Sesshomaru seems to be happy remaining silent.

"You plan to follow this path, do you not? To restore events to their original course?" Inuyasha finally asks as he finishes his cup of sake. "If you mean to do so, then I might as well aid you if only to keep you from getting beaten up. You're true self might be a fighter but as you are now, you'll fall before a holy man or woman as you lack experience to handle yourself in a fight." He says and his elder half-brother seems to relax slightly while a ghost of a smile appears upon his face.

Just what have I gotten myself into I wonder? He wonders when his elder brother begins to outline the plan upon how they'll seek out to test the items to determine which of them are active and how they'll use them in order to correct the time line. Inuyasha merely smiles as his book worm of a elder brother details not just details of each items but also some of the myths that surround them.

The Ghost and the Fox Ch 4: DP

I don't own Danny Phantom or Naruto.

Interesting society we're getting ourselves into. Naruto muses while glancing around the underground streets. Mizu and him wander about the animal underground city, Mizu in the form of a brown and white rabbit and Naruto himself in the form of a dull yellow/red fox complete with proper color details.

A rabbit? Seriously? I would have thought a cat or maybe some other kind of pet of the meat eating variety. The eldest of the two muses while stopping to glance into the window of a bakery.

The window display of the bakery is that of a manor house surrounded by forests and a river with some ducks. It baffles his mind about why a bakery would sport such a thing. "Huh, can you believe that's edible?" Mizu says and Naruto glances over at the current rabbit in startlement but nods his head as it makes an odd kind of sense considering the shop.

"I'm kind of curious about the seal that encircles the cake." The blond adds as an after thought, already heading into the bakery. The bell over the door tinkles merrily but none come to greet them, which could mean that the owners want to give them a chance to look around.

Mizu moves to browse the counter of glass that displays more sweets while Naruto tires to get a closer look at the seal ring that circles the cake. Though unable to move the display around to see the rest of the seal ring, he could guess how the rest goes. With a flicker of his tail and ear, Naruto moves to study the rest of the displays and finds yet again, more of those seal rings.

"May I help you two fine beasts?" Asks a female tanuki coming to the front. He could only guess what a sight they make or perhaps a more common sight in this society.

"Your seals seem to be rather uniform in nature. The seal master that did this must have a very steady hand." The current fox states and the tanuki hums.

"Yea, usage of stamps in the art of sealing is not a popular way most beasts like to create them, but for a business beast such as myself, it's the only way to be sure there isn't a mistake in making them when we use them as much as we do to preserve our creations for display and for transport." The bakery owner states. Mizu glances at him but Naruto just motions for his adopted son to give the tanuki his order.

When they leave, he began to look for book shops or a library as its clear that this society of talking beasts know how to use chakra and have been making head way into the art of seals. "We're going to be sticking around here for a while, aren't we?" Mizu asks upon their fifth visit to a book shop to browse their inventory.

"I guess the confinement of this place is getting to you?" He asks the rabbit. Or should I say that you're feeling ready to explode out of that form? The current fox mentally corrects but doesn't say it simply because there are just too many sharp ears about to overhear such a private conversation.

"You're the one use to this kind of thing. Me? I like having the wide open sky above my head." Mizu states while kicking a tiny pebble with his altered feet.

"Would it trouble you if we do spend some time in this place? Or should we leave, giving you time to grow use to it until we come upon the next city?" Naruto asks as he realizes that if Mizu doesn't want to remain down here in this particular form, then perhaps they should move on when they wake. "I won't force you to tolerate something that makes you uncomfortable just so I can study."

Mizu sighs and just shakes his head. "No, we can stay, it's just that I'll be spending more time on the surface then down here." His adopted son states. "This place... It just touching some deep part of me which makes me uncomfortable."

Naruto disguised as a fox feels his ears move backwards while his tail whips back and forth. So those old memories of his take in things but doesn't give out information. He thinks while frustrated on Mizu's behalf and wishing he had the skills needed to aid Mizu in breaking through those blocks.

"Just be careful leave and returning to this underground city, will you? I rather not find out you've been made a meal of by some human." He says to Mizu, hoping that it reminds the younger to remember to change back into his current disguise upon returning to his side.

Mizu nods and he feels his body relaxing, his ears move up from their flatten position upon his skull. "Come on, let's head back to our room in the visiting quarters so we can eat some of treats we bought from the bakery." He says, moving to place a pawed hand upon Mizu's cloth covered shoulder. He tries to smile while sporting the features of a fox.

Mizu nods and take the lead, it would take them a while before they get to the room. Along the way, they found more and more beasts going about their business. Must be because they're nocturnal types.

] - N

The halfa didn't know how to spend his time as Danny didn't want to assume a Henge to wander around the city upon the surface. He's currently floating about in his ghost form, mimicking one of Naruto's age group typically does, staring up at the sky to do some cloud watching. I miss playing video games. Watching movies too, though I really miss the games.

Floating above the city, the teen turn child halfa hums a tune under his breath while tapping one of his feet. Arms crossed behind his head, Danny just lets his mind wander without thinking about remaining invisible. He's not really thinking about anything in particular and other then finding himself occasionally falling asleep from being bored out of his mind.

Maybe I should grab a scroll or something to read, if only to occupy myself. Danny muses and with a sigh, he rolls onto his stomach. He could use a snack and it wouldn't be hard to find some small time crook to possess in order to get a snack. He would love to rob them or make them appear more foolish then they are but they were trying to keep a low profile so he had to settle for small things like a meal or snack.

And so, the amnesic Danny Phantom slowly moves down to the ground to float above the heads of the population. It's slow going but finally, Danny settles on this guy sporting twin dragon tattoos, one on his back and the second on his left arm. He observes this thug for a bit and manages to spot at least four hidden throwing daggers beyond the katana resting upon the guy's right hip.

He waits until the guy is about to enter into a shop before taking possession of the guy. Smirking, Danny slowly wanders up to the counter, he stops occasionally to grab something seemingly randomly before reaching the counter. "Ring it up." He orders, being sure to throw in a sneer.

Soon enough, he exits out of the guy's body and takes off with the snack, leaving the tattoo guy slightly disoriented. He didn't go far in order to begin eating his snack. Once he's consumed everything, he tosses the garbage into the garbage bin before finding a hidden spot in order to Henge into the form of a rabbit before heading for an entrance to the underground city that chakra using beasts crafted far below the sewers of the human city.

Danny wanders about the underground city, observing the other beasts that are walking about the streets. The sight of mice, squirrels, rats, weasels, and other such critters walking about, it kind of makes him want to turn to say something to someone but there's nobody there. It's not the first time he's had that urge and Danny doubts it'll be the last time he'll have that urge. One of these days, a name will come to me.

It doesn't take long to find Naruto as his adopted dad is in the library a block from the visiting quarters. "It's like you've created a book fortress." Is the first thing that comes out of his mouth at the sight of the two book towers on either side of Naruto the fox.

"Humm? Oh, no, a group were sitting at this table along with me. Most of those books belong to them." His currently disguise twelve year old father informs him. "These three books are what I've been using since I got here." The disguised Naruto explains while returning to writing something down in a note book from one of the two open books about Naruto.

"I think there's some manga here, if you're looking for something to entertain yourself." His adopted dad adds thoughtfully. He smiles before heading off in search for said manga section within the library.

] - N

"There just doesn't seem to be any sign of the brats anywhere around Hidden Leaf." Reports just one of the many squad leaders sent to search the surrounding area of Hidden Leaf. Lord Hokage sighs upon dismissing the ANBU.

Not even the famous nose of the Inuzuka clan have picked up the scent of Naruto and Mizu. The forests within a week's travel of Hidden Leaf haven't provided any trace of the pair. Mizu had only so much stamina and while it seems as though Naruto had broken through the various genjutsus woven upon Mizu, they shouldn't have gotten far with Mizu carrying Naruto.

It's clear that the dual had prepared their departure as little remains within the apartment. Naruto shouldn't have the skills needed to vanish so completely on his own. The Third Hokage muses, which means that perhaps he should take a look at Danzo and his operation.

T (=] - N

Ready to continue on to the city ports of Wind Country, Naruto checks over each of the storage scrolls, making sure that each are secure as well as color coded, he closes the pack before slinging it over his head and putting his arms through the straps. "Is your pack secure?" The blond asks the younger white haired boy sporting green eyes.

"I don't see it getting any more secure." Mizu says dry, crossing his arms across his chest. The blond hums and within seconds, there is now an eagle. Mizu turns invisible before taking to the air while Naruto himself leaps into the air. With a screech, the eagle that is Naruto raises up into the sky while flapping his wings, his legs moving to stay by his tail feathers.

The sun fully raises from the horizon as they put close to a kilometer between themselves and the city they spent three months in. Well, at least we know which cities sport other such dual residences if we wish to vanish from human view if we ever run across a search party. Naruto thinks to himself while flapping his wings a few times before stilling them from flapping, keeping them stretched wide and then after a few hundred beats of his heart, he would then flap his wings again for a short period, raising back up into the air before just keeping them out.

Though Naruto can't see his son, the blond trusts that Mizu is flying some where up front of him as unlike himself, Mizu's abilities at flying isn't a physical thing. I wonder how far the hunting squads were spread? Do I have an entry in the Bingo book? If I do, it likely has something about me being a kidnapper...

When Mizu appears for a few seconds before him and then vanish, the signal that it's lunch time. Naruto adjusts his course and heads for the ground. Once his talons are on the ground for about thirty seconds does the blond retake his original form, complete with the knapsack containing storage scrolls.

Mizu is already taking out some of the dry goods stored within that pack. He stretches and wiggle his slightly stiff body, after all, it's been three months since he's worn that shape and flown in the air. Naruto is glade to pig out on what's before him as he finds he is rather hungry, he hadn't been aware of how hungry he had been until Mizu did the signal for a break.

"You know, if you keep to a small form, I could fly us to the coast faster then what we're doing." His adopted son says and he blinks between bites, he considers the pros and cons of that action. We could have done that from the beginning. But then, we wouldn't know about the chakra beast society or learn so many interesting jutsus they collect from watch human ninja battles.

"It has been a while since I've flown as a bird. I'm kind of out of shape..." Naruto admits and Mizu smiles a bit at his admission. "Although, I am kind of thankful that we hadn't thought this up or we would have missed out on the resource that the beast society can provide us." The blond adds while opening up a wooden thermos, the seals about it keeps the tea within warm while also allowing the bottle to contain more then its size would allow.

"It's not like ninja will seek us out while we're among those underground cities and out posts." Mizu muses. "But then, their Henge is just an illusion."

"It's good to know that you're as capable of physical transformations as I am, well, while you're sporting white hair at least." He says, smiling fondly over at his adopted son. "So, you have any more ideas you'd like to share?"

"Well, for one, we could always spend time on a forested mountain, cutting down wood, seal the logs away in scrolls, and then use them to build our own ship when we reach the coast. After all, you have that Shadow Clone Jutsu pretty much mastered, so it wouldn't take long to get the wood we need. We could also sell what we don't use for money." Mizu says and Naruto nods slowly, he hadn't thought about using those physical clones that way but it would save on a lot of things.

"It would give you time to make those plans for that engine you thought up to use instead of relying on sails or steam powered paddle." He says and Mizu nods, the now eight year old had been the only one to make sense of those books that were written in an alien language and set up to read from the left to the right instead of right to left.

"It shouldn't be hard to come up with something that can be powered solely on chakra. Specially since seals seem like a computer program of the universe." His adopted son, Mizu Uzumaki muses and he nods, he could see how that would be to their benefit.

As they finish up and seal the garbage into a fallen log, Naruto turns to Mizu and asks, "So... What kind of animal did you want to carry around?"

"How about you just do a sparrow? It's small and it would allow you to land on the ground." Mizu says before asking, "We'll stop at the nearest town or village to inquire about local mountains?"

Naruto answers, "Sounds good, although I'll leave the asking to you. It would do you some good trying to appear older then you are, especially as Hidden Leaf are looking for a pair of boys, not a pair of adults." With that said, the blond Henges into a sparrow, with a chirp, Naruto rapidly flaps his tiny wings to land on Mizu's shoulder.

Soon they're flying through the air, with both of them being invisible.

To Be Continued . . .

Halloween Episode, My Style Part 7

There's nothing left within the discount bin that Xander could really use for his Soldier costume. No guns of any shape or gun parts could the teen find. I knew I should have come when Wills and Buff wanted to come. There would have been more of a selection. The supposedly too human member of the Scooby gang thinks while finding a collection of various plastic discards while he's searching for something to be used as a knife, broken stuff that should be toss into the garbage instead of put on sale.

Shaking his head, Xander notices the clock and with a scowl, he just grabs a few things roughly the same shape and size, he walks up to the counter. The plastic bits cost him a buck total but as Alexander Harris leaves the store, he slowly smiles as a rather interesting thought crosses his mind. A little bit of superglue, paint, and it should work out.

Oct 31st

Professor Harris blinks as not only does he find himself out of the lab but also within sight of rampaging creatures. It wasn't long before Alexander pats himself down looking for a cell phone only to find a prototype of the Escafil device resting in a lab coat pocket. "Oh, well, it's so good to know that I manage to have this on me but not a cell phone. I just know this is going to get me blackballed..."

The Escafil device pulses in his hand before glowing for about ten seconds and the light goes out. Shaking his head, Professor Harris of Alien Modification Division of Earth just pockets the cube before checking to see if he's got morph helpers on his cloths. Then, when he tries to morph into his crow, nothing happens.

"Damn it!" Cries Professor Harris and this causes another set of problem as the various rampaging monsters notice him. Much faster then he expects, Alexander manages to stay ahead of the incoming pack of odd beings. He focuses on his running and not what's going on around him until, finally, he just can't run any more.

Upon stopping and glancing around, Professor Harris finds that somewhere along the line, the little beasts' attention had strayed from chasing after him to finding something new to destroy. As Alexander catches his breath, it dawns on him that he's not as tall as he should be nor, as he moves a hand about his face, does he sport any facial hair as he had forgotten to shave over the last few days.

"Xander! Oh no, don't tell me..." Alexander blinks and glances up to find a rather young looking Doctor Rosenberge standing a few feet away. He's shocked at the red haired teen's outfit.

"Dr Rosenberge? What is going on here?" Professor Harris asks, although he doubts that this is the Rosenberge he's familiar with.

"Doctor? Really? Oh wait, ok, everybody's become their costume and we have to find Buffy! Also, could you pick up my body? I kind of left it on a porch..." Willow Rosenberge soon leads him to said body while he's trying to figure out what the red head means by people becoming their costume.

This would be so fascinating if it weren't happening to me right now. Professor Harris think while following the spiritual avatar of the teenager he is carrying. Although that would explain why I can't morph into either of my morphs... Alexander thinks, he had tried to morph into his hyena morph but, like his crow, it was a no go. (Guess why his two morphs are a crow and a hyena to get a digital cookie!)

Alexander slowly shakes his head as he studies the various pictures within the Summer's house. The 'princess' seems to be rather pissy about not getting her way. The scientist finds that the spoiled, air-head is trying his patience as the woman clearly doesn't understand that they're safe out of view of the magical being rampaging about the town then trying to find a 'way' to return her home.

Professor Harris wonders if the teen's brain would be overly damaged if he just knocked her out to keep her from getting on his nerves. "Buffy." He jerks his head and quickly turns to face the man, for some strange reason, he is not happy to see the man. "I'm glad you're safe."

"Somehow, I doubt we're safe now that you're here. Did you remember to close the door when you entered?" He asks the guy in black. With a roll of his eyes, he walks pass the man to find that yes, the door is open.

Once the door is closed and a few seconds after some debate, he jams a door with a chair, he returns to the living room to find, unsurprisingly, the air-head fawning over the guy. As long as she stops pacing. He thinks as Ms Chase finally comes down from the second floor.

"Angel! Thank god you're here!" The spandex wearing teen cries and embraces the guy, which seems to annoy Buffy. "Everyone seems to be insane!"

He merely rolls his eyes and a soft thud comes from the kitchen, which causes him to smile slightly, glad that he ended one kind of situation before it arrived. Hopefully, I'll come out of this with my sanity intact. Professor Harris thinks as he finally opens a blank note book that he found and began to write in it, mostly mathematical jokes.

Then, Xander Harris takes the place of Professor Harris and he's not the only one as Buffy finally began to sound like herself. "Guess Willow and G-man ended the spell." He says before heading upstairs to check on Willow's body.

Two Weeks Later

Xander blinks as he pulls out the blue cube from the borrowed lab coat. Noting the weight, it puzzles him and then he notices the heat that its generating. Wordlessly, he takes off the uniform clips and using a pin knife, manages to pop a covering to find a bunch of electronic stuff within.

Shaking his head, he sits down upon his bed as it dawns on him just what this could mean for him. Recovering, Xander puts the cover back on before clipping it to his shirt. It takes a few seconds but once each baggy article of clothing has a clip on it, he opens his window and within seconds, a gray tom who's name is Carl enters and meows at him.

It wasn't long before Carl allows him to pet him, the tom has been clipped and while the cat is purring, Xander focuses on Carl's fur and the muscles under it. As Carl recovers, the feline leaves viva the window and once the cat is out of his room, he closes the window and his door.

Taking a few calming breaths to help calm his excitement, Xander closes his eyes and focuses upon willing himself into the form of a gray tabby. Bones pop as Xander begins to shrink, he ignores the urge to look into a mirror, he didn't need to see his reflection to guess what changes his body is going through. The appearance of the cat's 'mind' means that his morphing is complete.

Meowing, Xander moves about the floor of his room before leaping onto his bed. A few tests later does prove that Carl is likely responsible for knocking down stuff about his room since if he in this form can reach those spots, then so could the tabby. Perched on a shelf, he studies the view with his tail lashing about as the feline in him doesn't like the scent of Carl, its similar to the feline's own only it lacks a certain something.

Shaking his head, Xander leaps from his position and once on the ground, focuses on becoming human. Upon returning to normal, he glances at the alien cube, he's summoning Professor Harris' memories and reviews them as he comes up with pros and cons about this ability.

In the end, he heads out of the house, being sure to add clips to his shoes, he has a general idea of where to go to acquire more animals without visiting the local zoo. His mind recalling the memories of flight that Professor Alexander Harris processed when it came to his crow morph.

I just might acquire a Harris Hawk... After all, I am a Harris. Xander thinks while heading for the local animal shelter in hopes that they're still open.

The Ghost and the Fox Ch 5: DP

I don't own Danny Phantom or Naruto.

" I-wish-that-Tucker-and-I-to-be-sent-to-where-sixteen-year-old-Danny-is-as-well-as-a-way-to-come-back-to-our-world-with-Danny-in-toe! "

"So you have wished it, so shall it be! Wait a minute, what was... Just what wish did I grant?"

"Just what kind of wish was that, Sam?" One techno-geek (proud of it) asks upon materializing within a field not far from a road. Tucker glances around the field and sneezes before adding, "And I don't see Danny anywhere near here either!"

Sam sighs while glancing about, at the sight of a village or town, she begins to head for the road. "Well, he might be in that village over there, so let's get moving, the sooner we find Danny the sooner things can return to normal." She says and a few seconds later, she hears the sounds of foot falls behind her.

It takes them about twenty minutes to get to the village and when they do, they find the villagers wearing out dated cloths, which causes those natives to simply stop and stare at both Tucker and herself. They had slowed to take in not just the people that live here but also the buildings. "Did we go back in time or what?" Tucker wonders and she didn't know what to think of the cloths the villagers are wearing either.

Sam just presses her lips in a line while continuing forward in hopes of locating Danny as their friend should be somewhere close by or else they wouldn't have landed where they did. While they were both conscious of the villagers stares, neither Tucker or herself pay them much mind as long as they weren't going to confront them or run them out of the village. Well, we could always shout out his name...

They come across a rather large building that towers over the rest of the buildings. The sign seems to be in one of those Asian looking writings, not that Sam knows which country it appears to be. "Finally, some place that's got technology!" Tucker declares before heading inside, not that she could blame him as the window does show suck things as clocks and what appears to be parts to things.

A minute or two after Sam enters the shop herself, a twenty year old blond enters and greets them in what appears to be something like Japanese but it's not. "Well, that goes along with the sign, doesn't it? We're clearly someplace like Asia." Sam muses and this causes the, rather handsome man to look puzzled before shouting, "Mizu!"

An answering cry comes from somewhere in the back and the blond shouts something, there's an answering shout. It took a few minutes but somebody stands at the door, somebody that they hoped to see. "Danny!" Both Tucker and Sam cry out, if it weren't for the counter between them, they would have rushed forward to embrace their friend.

] - N

"Danny!" The amnesic teen who goes by Mizu these days just frowns at the name the two teens cried upon seeing him. He glances over at his father to find that Naruto just raises an eyebrow at him, which Danny answers with a shrug.

"Do I know you two?" The halfa asks curiously, after all, he had long since given up on remembering his life before Naruto found him in that forest little over ten years ago. And now it seems, that past has finally arrived for a visit.

"How can you not remember your best/girl-friend/s?" The two shout, the girl in black saying best friends while the guy with the strange hat says girlfriend. That just causes him to become bewildered as he couldn't have had a girlfriend, they would have been, like four when they knew each other.

"I'm missing something, aren't I? I mean, how could I have had a girlfriend? We would have been, like, four years old when we parted." Danny states while his dad glances between him and the two other teens. "They say they know me." He says and Naruto's eyes light up.

"Ah, well, why don't I just go into the back to give you three some privacy?" While the other two seem to be whispering to each other, he could make out what they're saying if he wanted too, his adopted parent and him switch places. "Be sure to flip the sign to close if you three decide to leave the shop." The blond adds, to which he just nods.

] - N

"This isn't going to be easy." Sam states grimly, she does remembers the last time Danny forgot about her, that had been corrected easily with a wish but at this particular moment, Desiree isn't around so they can wish to correct this memory problem. "Remember how you two forgot about me that one time?" She adds and Tucker seems to wince as he recalls that situation.

"Man, this is so messed up. First, we couldn't wish him to come back, or when we did, we kept getting some other guy name Danny..." Tucker grumbles while Sam tries to resist the urge to bang her head against a wall or upon a counter top. "Just what is it you two wished for anyway?" Tucker asks her and she, honestly, couldn't recall it in perfect detail.

"Danny was complaining about the difficulties he keeps running into and I got tired of hearing about it. We made wishes, Danny wishing to be some place where his powers weren't too abnormal and I think I said something about him being a child or wanting to be a child..." She trails off before the black haired teenage girl turns to regard their friend and notices that Danny seems to have gone through some changes, just some minor ones like longer hair, a darker complexion, and doesn't seem to be as scrawny as he use to be.

Wait a minute, what did Danny mean by us knowing each other when we were four? She thinks as she reviews what little their friend had said to them. She moves to face Danny, Sam notices that the blond has left but focuses on Danny. "What do you mean that we would have been four when we knew each other?"

Danny answers, "Well, I was five when Naruto found me naked in the forest. If what you say about us being friends is true, then we would have been four years old."

"You've been here for eleven years?" "You got turned into a five year old?" They cry out in disbelief but it does explain the minor physical changes Danny sports as he would have gone through puberty while eating another diet and likely experiencing a different life style. As this world doesn't seem to sport much in the way of technology, which means not a lot in the way of pollution and more walking around. Sam thinks while wondering just how firm those muscles were now...

"How can somebody change their age? I mean most of those who preform Henge jutsu just cast an illusion around them to hide their actual appearance. Even if you seemingly physically change your form, it doesn't really make you younger, it's just that you trick the world around you to make it seem that you're younger then you actually are." Danny says.

"Jutsu?" Tucker asks and Sam is reminded about Danny's wish, which would mean that there are people capable of using ecto-plasma as well. "What's a jutsu?"

"You didn't go through any Shinobi training, have you?" Danny asks, she watches as he crosses his arms over his chest. "What do you call those that manipulate energy and seem to summon the elements?" Her amnesic boyfriend asks.

"Typically, we would call those that use magic to be wizards and witches, but you use ecto-plasma as you're half ghost." Tucker says, coming through with the technical details. "It's why that energy you toss around is neon green in color."

"Half ghost? Does that mean I'm half dead? Everybody just assumed my abilities were just a Bloodline Limit..." Danny muses with a slight frown.

Then, Danny shakes his head and regards them for a second. "We didn't exchange names... The name my adopted father gave me and who I consider myself to be is Mizu Uzumaki." And Sam sighs but admits, that makes sense that if Danny didn't remember them, what were the chances he would remember his own name?

"You got adopted?" Tucker asks rather surprised by that, although she's just glad he didn't end up as a street rat. Who knows what kind of diseases exist in this world that he could have picked up from living that kind of life?

"Yea, Naruto adopted me and the leader of the village approved it, although they did try and dissolve it, we left before it could be official. I rather not wind up some mentally cripple who's considered a living weapon and being used as a breeding stud to improve various bloodlines or families." Danny states, his eyes flashing green and a scowl, though it's clearly not meant for them.

Ok... Was all she could think of upon hearing that little rant, Sam gets the feeling she'll be outrage at a later date for somebody thinking of using her best friend and boyfriend in such a way. Recalling where that little rant comes from, she introduces herself and Tucker. "Well, I'm Sam Manson and this is Tucker Foley."

"Yo, dude!" Tucker says upon her introducing them. "And just remember, you're actual name is Danny." The techno-geek decides to add and their friend merely frowns, likely not feeling much attachment to the name Danny.

"Why don't we go up stairs and you can tell me about what's behind my memory block? Just let me switch the sign." Danny phases through the counter while still human and switches the sign.

Shaking her head, Sam wonders where to begin as well as wondering who the blond was. "What about the blond? Shouldn't you let him know about closing up shop?" She asks and Danny pauses.

"Oh, you mean Naruto? That wasn't him, that was just a clone. He's been gone since last night to go check the mineral wells. There's a small army of clones down in the basement, working on creating a expanding buildings using seals." Danny says.

"Wait, didn't you say Naruto adopted you?" Tucker asks and Danny nods. "But he's like, twenty years old..." Sam says.

"Yea, Naruto adopted me when he was ten, he's only five years older then I am... Well, at least I thought I was younger then him..." Danny admits and Sam can't help but wonder what kind of village would allow a ten year old to adopt a five year old...

] - N

I wonder what Mizu will do now? I mean, this is the chance to find his actual parents... Naruto thinks, his clone had made a few connections about the two teens that appeared at the shop, particularly the dishearted they were upon Mizu saying something to them.

Also, how did they know they could find us here? Do they know some kind of tracking jutsu that the shop seals can't throw off? The blond wonders while standing before one of the mineral wells, this one is slowly taking local elements within the ground and fusing them into really good iron ore that will become excellent steel for weapons for future commissions.

Breathing through his nose and exhaling out of his mouth, Naruto's mind begins to wander down the twisting paths of years past, recalling the ship they built after harvesting wood from a forested mountain. His shadow clones helped and when Mizu finally got around to creating more then four clones, work on that engine went faster since Mizu's clones knew what they wanted to do and thus didn't need instructions like his did. I'm still amazed that none at that port ever wondered where our workers came from or retired to each and everyday.

It took a good four months for them to construct the ship but they did it. Once they had enough food sealed into storage scrolls, they set sail to the east and south. They would encounter islands that were inhabited by exiles from Wind Country or the children of exiles. They didn't stay for long on those islands, mostly because they didn't like the idea of having their throats sliced open or having their ship stolen.

When they grew tired of unsealing food, they would catch fish from the deck. In time, they would get to see a different set of stars. They didn't encounter much beyond thick coral reefs but by then, they applied seals to life the ship out of the water just enough for them to pass over them. They would soon learn that the reef bed they crossed had been purposeful created to keep raiding parties from where they originate from from reaching this nation.

Their ship was confiscated and they imprisoned, not that they stayed in the cell, within seconds of being left alone, Mizu phased them out of the old yet secure, sealed cell. They flew off after retrieving the scrolls and sealing the ship into one of them. They used Henges to move about that nation for a few years before they heard tales of a war torn land far to the east, beyond the lands they came from.

And so, with thoughts of settling down as they have grown tired of being hunted and wearing false faces, they journeyed in that direction, first viva flight and then using the ship. It wasn't long to find a village close to the kind of region we were looking to settle. One with a panned out mine. The blond thinks as he starts up at the next plateau where the next well is located.

With a flash, Naruto has been transported to the next well, this one fuses elements to create crystals, the crystal wells are new and are still experimental as they're mostly combining random elements to try and learn how to create the various gemstones. And once we know how what that, we can begin trying to experimenting with seals in a whole new way. He thinks smiling as he approaches the center of the well to take out the sampler in order to see the latest generation of crystals that this well has created.

T (=

"I'm home!" He calls out in a sing song tone as he exits out of the room reserved for teleportation and summoning. It's been bit since he left to check on the wells. Naruto had also taken time out to do some fishing at one of the ponds that can be found about the mountain.

"You stopped to do some fishing, didn't you?" Mizu asks while phasing up out of the floor. Then a look of uncertainty flickers across his adopted son's face. "I think we kind of need to talk."

Naruto become rather sober upon hear Mizu's tone. "You want to go with them to see your parents." He says and Mizu smiles ever so slightly.

"It's a bit more complex then that, honor father." Mizu says and he just blinks at the currently white hair teen, wondering why Mizu decided to be so formal now. Within seconds, the white hair gives way to black and the glowing green eyes to simple blue ones.

Wordlessly, he gestures for them to use the office. Once they're in, he's sure to put up the security seals. Mizu begins to pace about the office while he walks over to sit down on the couch to watch his adopted son pace for a bit.

"You ever wonder where I got all of my knowledge from? I mean, I knew advance forms of math..." The younger of them says, trailing off. "Well, it seems I know why I have that block on my memory. I think either Sam or I wished for it."

"And Sam is?" He asks while puzzling out why anyone would want to block their own memory. "And what granted this wish anyway? A goblin or a kitsune?" Naruto thinks to add, trying to get Mizu out of this funk.

"Sam is the girl dressed in black, she's also my girlfriend before I woke here as a five year old and with that memory block. The one with the cap is Tucker, he's my other best friend and he wasn't the one to contribute to the wish that brought me here." Mizu explains and he blinks, mentally musing, So Sam was in on the wish that brought you here?

"Well, I'm from a different dimension and my powers weren't something that come down from my family. I am the first in my family to possess them, although an old buddy of my parents' was the first first." Mizu goes on to say in a bit of a rush. "And I have a way to head back to my home dimension, which will more then likely cure my memory block too."

"Oh and my actually name is Danny Fenton or Danny Phantom depending on my appearance." His adopted son says and he blinks. "But I don't mind if you continue to call me Mizu, I mean, it's not as though we'll see each other once I return home."

"Ok... Well, first off, I'd like to point out that you should know enough about seals to create the teleportation seal scheme. It shouldn't be that hard for us to keep in contact even if we won't be able to met face to fact. Second, if you can get sent here viva a wish, what's to stop you from coming back here viva a wish?" He asks Mizu.

"Well, from what I've learnt of Desiree, the seal option would be the safer then relying upon Desiree to cooperate so I can visit. Although, I'm not sure if chakra will work in my home dimension but I guess as long as it mirrors one here, we shouldn't have a problem." His adopted son admits.

Silence hangs between them for a few minutes. "You're always welcome to use the Uzumaki name. You'll always be family." He says to Mizu and the seemingly younger of them nods.

"That means a lot. It really does." The black haired teen says and he gets up to give Mizu a hug along with a pat on the back. "I doubt I'll ever forget about what you've done for me." The teen adds softly and he smiles.

"I can't imagine my life turning out to be as perfect as it is now without finding you that night. Who knows, I might have ended up a genin of Hidden Leaf and MIA shortly after." Naruto muses and Mizu snorts softly.

"Somehow, I keep imagining a cat landing on its feet whenever I picture you running into trouble." Mizu states in a dry tone and a few seconds later, they both leave the office.

"By the way, where are those two?" He asks curiously and Mizu replies, "They decided to see the sights and I think purchase some souvenirs. We'll probably leave tonight."

Naruto nods his head and they finally part ways, Mizu likely went off to check to see if he packed everything that he wanted. The blond can only hope that seals do function for Mizu no matter which dimension he's in as he really doesn't want to say goodbye forever to his only family he has at this point.

] - N

"Ok, that was worst then getting transported to that world..." Tucker says while looking rather green, Sam clearly felt the same way as she just nods. Not that it really affected him, not after the memories he has of using his clones to experiment with those various version of the teleporation seal scheme.

"So, your back." A voice rings out, one that belongs to a woman and Danny glances up to find the infamous wish granting ghost known as Desiree. "As you can see, I've been fairly busy since you and your friends have been away." The ghost says with a smirk, gesturing to the various things that circle about their position.

"You know, I really got to thank you for granting that wish, Desiree. Not only did I get a vacation but I also got some training out of it, which I'm rather eager to test out here at home." He says, it kind of sounded like the kind of thing his previous self would say and from the flicker of uncertainty, Desiree didn't seem that confident about whether or not he remembers.

And so, while Sam and Tucker recover, he moves goes about testing to see if he's capable of jutsus here in this world and if he is, then he'll get to see Naruto again. After all, if worst comes to worst, I could just wish all these ghostly things away, particularly when I wish to have my memory restored. He thinks to himself as he divides into ten, three of which will remain behind to watch over the pair of teens while the rest move forward to attack.

The End

To Readers:

I decided to end on a high note and before I ruin what I've already written. A lot of people seem to find this story, a cross-over between Danny Phantom and Naruto to be one of the best, I think that's what those of you who review are trying to tell me at least, and I would like to thank you for those reviews and hope you are not disappointed that I'm ending it here, like this. Hope to hear more from you, the readers, in the future!

The Fog: Harry Potter

I don't own Harry Potter.

That's not good. Harry thinks while staring out side, taking note of a few stray animals that seem to be totally out of it. A few of the sparrows seem to have become rather large and beginning to sprout... horns?

He does a double take but the young wizard just stares unblinkingly as a squirrel's fur turns blue and the single bushy tail suddenly splits into two, though neither as fluffy as the original one. "I'm beginning to be thankful for the bars upon my window and the face you're unable to fit through them, Hedwig. I wouldn't know what to do if you began to mutant like those poor critters." Harry says while the snowy owl perches upon this wooden perch he placed before the window.

Hedwig clicks her beck and fluffs her feathers, Harry takes that as an agreement. "First it was that crazy house elf and now it's a mutating fog. What's next? Flying plants?" The preteen wizard wonders.

The snowy owls barks a bit but Harry's a little too busy watching as the few sparrows that he can see take on new colors while the feet alter while a second set of limbs come out of their chest. The birds' continue to grow larger, the becks altering so much that sharp looking teeth can be seen while the becks give way to a leather like hide.

Harry finally glances over to the squirrel to see what's going on with it. "Does that squirrel just spat out something green?" The young wizard wonders and Hedwig seems to make a kind of choking sound. "It's now the size of an ape... I sure hope I'm not going to be blamed for this..." The preteen sighs before glancing over at the repaired clock.

They should be waking up in, like, three hours. He muses as he finally moves to rest upon the bed, no longer in the mood to continue watching the mutative effects of the fog outside. Harry studies the shelf sporting the books his cousin have been gifted in the past, he couldn't fall back to sleep even if he wanted to and so, Harry spends the next few hours with his nose buried in a sci-fi book that's a collection of short stories.

"BOY WHAT DID YOU DO?" Vernon bellows after the front door bangs closed. I wonder what a few breathful of the fog will do to him? Harry thinks while looking up from the book in his hands, his eyes going straight for the locked door as his overweight uncle comes thundering up the stairs while Dudley begins to whine about it being too loud for him to get any rest.

The various locks seem to only cause Vernon to become even more angry, which is rather ironic as his relatives who feel that there can never be enough secure locks to keep them from having to deal with him. They can't blame me, they locked up my school trunk which has all my potion stuff in it as well as my school books. And I've only had the one year of schooling too, so I don't have any knowledge of how to produce this fog. Harry grumbles to himself.

"Vernon! You're... you're..." He hears his aunt stutter but he tunes it out until she finally fainted with his uncle bellowing out his mother's sister's name. Harry spent the next bit imagining what kind of changes his uncle had receive, he comes out of it when he hears the tv blaring about news reports about a strange fog not just hanging around the house but throughout the town.

Hedwig barks something in alarm and the preteen moves to stand behind his owl to see what's wrong, only for his eyes to widen at the sight of the mutated creatures finally waking and bellowing. "Holy sht! You can't even tell what they were before..." Harry murmurs as this four foot, twin tailed, blue furred, three eyed thing seems to be fending off the advances of a pack of mutated sparrows.

The sparrows weren't as large as the ex-squirrel is, they stand about two feet tall and am little over three feet in length. They kind of reminded him of pictures of dinosaurs actually, only they still sport wings on their backs and are covered in feathers. Spiral horns grace their head, just after the eye ridge with what leather hide can be seen is a vibrant yellow.

The ex-squirrel then spats at the circling pack of ex-sparrows and he watches as the spot where the spit landed hisses and smokes. The pack chirps and hisses at the larger monster but it's the arrival of what likely had been a cat or maybe a hedgehog that ends the fight, for the new comer is not only covered in spines but managed to kill one of the ex-sparrows before the newly altered creatures knew what was happening.

He watches as the five foot tall, white and green marked thing makes short work of the ex-sparrow. Harry is rooted to the spot as he watches as the monster heads off, leaving discarded feathers and a few other things behind. There are screams as the neighborhood finally wakes up. It's not long before those human screams are followed by other sounds, like glass shattering or car alarms going off.

It's a bit before Harry realizes that he really needs a change of cloths as he finally becomes aware of something. I guess I'm not use to this or numb. The preteen wizard think and is more then glad to find that the locks upon his door were all unlocked so he can go to the bathroom to clean up.

A quick look down stairs confirms that none of his relatives were aware of what's going on around them. Harry also catches a glimpse of Vernon's now balded head. I wonder if this is magically created or something else all together? He wonders as he walks into the bathroom with a change of cloths.

The Day Before . . .

Dudley found some package upon the ground that sported his freak of a cousin's name upon it. Quickly glancing around to be sure that nobody saw him, especially his parents, he picked it up and hurried to the side of the house to open it. What he found seems to be a Frisbee like metal plate, the center was thicker then the edges.

After a few minutes of trying to get one of the gems off of the metal and opening it, the 'big-boned' preteen just tosses it away, not carrying where it landed as he heads for one of the doors leading into the house. As he just hopes something is good on tv to stop him from being bored.

Upon landing, that metal disk's flat metal center soon begins a count down to midnight. The unseen note at the bottom of the box sports a picture of a very drunken group of thirty something year olds that include Susan, the 'Golden' Trio, and others who survived the Second Coming of Tom Riddle and a note that says, 'Toss into Death Eater Army and run like hell.'

As the magic upon the disk didn't detect any Dark Marks, it goes to its fall back activation to release a potion in the form of a mist.

Alternate Reality's Future . . .

"Merlin... what did we do last night?" Ron grumbles, not noticing that he had been resting his head upon Luna's belly or that he's got a few heads resting upon his own body. Various bottles of both muggle and wizarding drinks are scattered about while this strange floating stone slab hovers a good ten feet above their heads.

Flying brooms could be found leaning upon the various walls or upon the normal, wooden tables. A bunch of potion ingredients rest next to a cauldron that still has a few centimeters left within it. Various books are scattered about the room along with crumpled up notes and diagrams of various anchor spells which include wards of detection and sensory types for certain magics.

"Kreacher!" Croaks Harry upon his head hitting the floor and soon enough, the ancient appearing house elf appears with a rather large tray that sports hang over potions in each of the cups, enough for them all.

"Thank you, Kreacher." Hermione mutters when the house elf hands her a cup. The house elf served his master and his wife before the others.

"Merlin, what's that stench?" Neville wonders after downing the potion. "Did... did we brew a potion?" The master of the Longbottom family wonders upon noticing the cauldron resting upon the table that's to his left.

"Not sure... There's rune schematics over here." Susan says. Everyone within the room is up on their feet and after a few cleaning spells upon their cloths, they begin to take interest in their surroundings.

"Holy crap, it's pass noon!" Katie shouts and though everyone had drank that potion, they all shush the elder witch. Not that she cares as she just straightens her cloths before Appariting out of the room. Katie is soon followed by others, soon leaving Hermione, Harry, and George in the room.

"Huh, that's strange... Why would we create a mirror at the bottom of that stone slab?" George muses upon looking up.

Harry looks up and for a moment snorts at the sight of some monster moving towards this house. It's not until he sees the house does he curse but pauses. "That can't be right..." Harry murmurs as he really studies the house, the often setting of his nightmares. "Shouldn't there be... I mean, Uncle Vernon traded that car in..."

"That's Privet Drive?" Hermione asks Harry and the grown wizard just cocks his head to the side, rather confused about what he's seeing in the mirror.

"I would almost say that it is... Only... It's not how I remember seeing it last." Harry states and after a few minutes, the view moves to a hallway and he watches as a younger version of himself walks out of the locked room, he can see Hedwig perched upon a wooden perch but it's the sight of a very young version of himself that causes his jaws to open wide.

"That's you when you were twelve..." George notes while the 'camera' follows preteen Harry about the house. He gets a rather good view of a changed Vernon as not only is the uncle in the mirror now balded but also possessing fleshy tentacles instead of a bread or mustache. The other two members of the Dursley house hold look fine while a news report shows the town covered in a dense fog, the same they seen when the mirror had been showing them the outside of the house.

"That's the past..." Harry mutters but Hermione sighs.

"No, that's not the past, or to be truthful, not our past. I think we might have caused a split. Whatever we did last night, we made a large change that likely created an alternate reality that diverts from the time that fog showed up to what we're seeing now." Hermione says in awe and the two wizards turn to look at the adult witch, noticing That Look upon her face and just knew that they were in for a long lecture about something they don't really care about.

Although, I'm rather curious as to how this will effect that world's Dumbledore's plans... Harry wonders thoughtfully while Hermione begins to inform them about theories concerning parallel dimensions and alternate realities.

Enjoy

To Readers:

I want to thank all of you who reviewed my previous story and I noticed a number weren't happy about the way it ended. One person noted that I developed the three young Hyuuga clan members but didn't follow through with more. I'll work on doing an epilogue of sorts for that one, featuring the Hidden Leaf side of things, hopefully I'll get it done sometime next week.

Life Gift: How To Train Your Dragon

I don't own How To Train Your Dragon.

"Legend tell of Berk once being held a stronghold of a dragon cult. For close to a century, this cult lived upon Berk preforming strange rituals and cultivating favors with the Gods in hopes of achieving what... nobody can say as no records remains nor were their any survivors to tell the summer traders what became of the cult."

"The settlement that the members of the cult had built decayed over the season and none attempted to settle the island until seventy years had passed after the destruction of the cult. The brave Viking who was leader of the expedition was Hiccup Horrendous Haddock I. Through the efforts of the scouts, they manage to drive the dragons that populated Berk away, the dragon colony had originally been started by the Dragon Cult that had settled upon Berk so many years before and the Chieftain of the time wanted them gone from the island before construction could begin upon the village."

"It is unclear if there had been a dragon nest upon Berk or if the dragons settled upon Berk during the seasons when they're not rising their young in the mist cover island home that no Viking has managed to visit. All that is known is that the dragons proved to be stubborn and continue to return again and again to Berk, raiding the new settlement which has caused the Vikings to take to capturing live dragons to use as in teaching the next generation how to defend themselves from the fire-breathing, winged reptiles."

The six year old sighs softly but there's nothing more written about this Dragon Cult that first inhabited his tribe's island home. Hiccup's right index finger traces the runes on the cover of the book, feeling despair at the fact that he came to a dead end so quickly. His mom is suffering greatly this winter and the young boy just couldn't do anything to change it. With unfocused eyes, the child wonders if magic even exists since if such a mighty cult could vanish so easily, especially if they have been gathering the favor of the Gods for such a long time...

As the candle dies, the child gets up from the bench of the library, being sure to grab his cloak and to put the burnt out candle upon the fire place. The book he leaves upon the table and tightening the hood of the cloak, Hiccup opens the door, walking out into the freezing cold of the afternoon. The wind tries to push back his hood or open up the cloak, not that it works but the wind sure gave it its best try as the six year old fights to close the door behind him before heading out of the village to think about what it would be like to live without his mom around.

Slowly, the six year old son of the Chieftain, Stoick the Vast becomes more lost in his thoughts that he isn't aware of what's going on around him. Hiccup can't help but notice how hot he's becoming and with a few blinks, the child finds himself in a large cave with a pit of lava lightening up the chamber. "How did I get here? I don't remember falling down a hole..."

"There is much about magic people have forgotten about, child. It's as though with each passing generation, they continue to turn their backs upon it and walk away from it." A neutral voice says and the boy glances around the chamber but only finds a pair of glowing eyes standing down at him from a great height.

"Oh..." He murmurs not knowing what else to say. A huge dragon head comes down and the child notices how different this dragon's head is compared to the few that he's seen as not only is the head large enough to gulp him down whole, but likely a whole dozen villagers too in a single swallow.

The lava's light causes the scales to glow as the scales were prove to be pure white with light, pale yellow stripes along the jaw line. No teeth can be seen upon the muzzle, only snout spines in a neat row upon the top center of the muzzle. This dragon sports a number of pale brown horns that are long and spiral like that grow along the temple, each set getting longer more away from the eye ridge and more to the side of the head.

"What kind of dragon are you?" Hiccup asks with a touch of awe. While a little voice that sounds a little like his dad telling to back away and leave as quickly as he could.

"My species doesn't matter, child. What does is why you brought yourself here." The unnamed dragon says and Hiccup still can't tell if this dragon is male or female. "What is it that you desire, child?"

The six year old bites down upon his bottom lip, not sure if he should voice his concern about his mom dying before winter is over. He's scared of what his life would be like without his mom being around. Hiccup kind of knows that there's something is wrong about thinking such a thought, that he should just be concerned about what she's going through, but being just a child, Hiccup just...

"My mom... she's sick and it's so early in the season but..." Hiccup swallows slightly before adding, "A lot of people seem to think she won't make it through the winter." He feels his eyes well up with tears and he sniffles a bit while looking down at the ground, feeling ashamed for crying before a stranger.

"Yes, I can see how that would upset you. Losing a parent is never easy for one as young as yourself." The dragon says after a few minutes of silence in which Hiccup as used the cloak to wipe away the few tears that escaped and his slightly running nose.

"I don't want her to die but they're so certain..." He says and then finally adds in a small voice, "I know it's wrong but... I don't want her to die 'cause I'd miss her. I feel horrible about it..."

"Ah yes, you feel guilty to think about how your mother's death will affect only you and not anyone else. It's to be expected as you are only a six year old boy." The dragon says gently and he looks up into the blue eyes of the dragon, sniffling a bit as the mostly white scaled beast continues, "But to save a life, one life must end in turn."

"You mean that somebody has to die in my mom's stead?" Hiccup asks after thinking about it for a while and suddenly felt very ill at the very idea. "But... but I can't do that! I can't play God cause I'm not a God!" The boy just pales, suddenly not liking where this is going and if it's worth it.

"Oh, child, there are many different kinds of death, but you do have a point about you're not a God. This kind of thing is typically random, if your mother is to be spared from death then somebody has to lose something just as valuable as her life." The dragon informs him.

Hiccup's mouth moves but nothing comes out, his mind kind of gone blank. The dragon patiently waits for the six year old to recover. Hiccup bites his lower lip once more and something began to come to his mind. Deciding he has to know, he asks, "What if...what if somebody volunteers to have something valuable taken from them?"

"As it is given willingly, the price is not as... steep as it usually is but you must understand, few people are that generous of heart. Many prefer for others to pay in their stead." The dragon informs the boy. "It is in ones nature to want something without putting much effort into getting it."

He swallows as he looks above the dragon's eyes, kind of understanding what the dragon is telling him and knows that he is just like that. Do I really want my mom to live? Should it really be somebody else to pay for her to live? Those kind of thoughts whirl about his head and the six year old begins to cry at the weight that seems to suddenly be upon his shoulders.

"I want my mom to live but I don't want anyone else to pay for it. Do you think that, maybe, I can be the one to die? It's not as though they can't have more kids if they're both alive..." Hiccup asks after he's done crying. "I always wanted a younger sibling..." He adds with a sniffle, his eyes are red and puffy from crying so much.

"If you are certain then walk over to that lava pool." The dragon says finally after staring seemingly into the very soul of the six year old and once Hiccup is standing close to the pool. The lava begins to move out of the pool and encircles him, much to his dismay but Hiccup stands his ground.

Slowly the lava begins to flow up from the base circle and once he's engulf in a sphere, his body seems to burn up. Within minutes, the burning overwhelms him and he blacks out to the smell of his cloths on fire.

The End? Or the Beginning?

Life Gift 2: How To Train Your Dragon

I don't own How To Train Your Dragon.

A Few Thousand Kilometers South of the Barbaric Archipelago

Ten Years Later

Hiccup

Yawning, a grown gray scaled dragon's tongue curls up to touch the roof of the mouth, the dream that disturbed him fading away. The glow of dawn not yet bright enough to help in displaying the row of sharp teeth before the jaws close and the lips are pressed upon each other. As the dragon moves to get up to stretch out his tail along with his wings, the other three dragons begin to wake.

"Morning, Stone." The brightly colored dragoness purrs out while her head spines rattle as she shakes her head and neck. The she-dragon is just a few feet larger in the tail then Stone himself and comes from lands far to the southwest, a place of huge trees and rain. Along Flower's neck and back, special glads could be found, they often give off scents but when Flower is riled up, the glands can ooze a coat of poison. It's why Flower often eats foul plants. (Originates from South America and think poison tree frog for colors.)

"Flower." Stone states before turning to greet the other to the mated pair of White Dragons, who were on their way northwest the previous day. Both Flower and himself dwarf the pair, which likely is why neither made any hunger filled looks their way. The gray dragon couldn't see any difference between the two other then one is male and the other is female. He had only just met the two upon landing upon this stone island with Flower in tow and none of the four felt the need to find other sleeping arrangements, each of them are rather tired from their respective journeys.

Soon enough, the mated pair left while Flower and himself began to discus their travels since they left ran into each other, it has been two years since they have seen each other after all. Flower flirts a bit with him during their conversation, much to his chagrin but that soon passes as their conversation winds down, at which point Flower becomes rather sober.

"Well, see you around, just as long as you stick away from the Barbaric Archipelago. Those humans are getting worse and from what I've heard, there's some kind of 'queen' commanding the local breeds into raiding humans for their raised animals." The dragoness says to the gray.

That causes Stone to blink and to lower his back a bit while his tail raises up before thumping upon the ground. "Really?" The gray dragon asks, there's something very familiar about that region but he just doesn't recall where he's heard about it before. "Why don't they just leave the region? Why stick around taking orders from a bossy draco?"

"Beats me but I would be careful if you keep going off in that direction. There's something wrong with those dracos." Flower states. "Well handsome, I'm heading home to see if anything has changed in the last decade. Take care, I wouldn't what such a strapping male such as yourself dying at the hands of a human." The brightly color dragoness purrs, touching her nose with his before taking flight.

Stone watches as Flower heads directly west, likely going to turn straight south at a later date, likely when she reaches the eastern coast of that land. He's visit a lot of places and the lands lacking cities is among his favorite places to visit. Although, Stone didn't try to visit the rain-forests of Flower's home for he rather not find out if other females of Flower's species would consider him 'handsome', he has enough trouble coming from just one member of that breed.

I wonder if Berk has changed much since I lived there... Then the dragon typically called Stone blinks as he wonders where that thought came from. After all, he originates from some place the humans call Spain, he's never visited this Barbaric Archipelago in the seven years he's been nomadic.

Shaking his head, Stone shoves that aside to begin looking for breakfast as he is beginning to feel the pangs of hunger. Stretching out his wings, the now lone dragon takes to the air in search of a school of fish. Although, something within him has already decided to head for this Archipelago regardless of what the dragoness he calls Flower has told him.

Berk

Month Later

Stoick

Watching young Ripple, his six year old daughter run up to Rotpelt and begins chatting up a storm with her friend, just hearing the two giggling causes Stoick to smile at the action. With a slight shake of his head, the chieftain continues on his way after kissing his wife upon the cheek. The sun still rising, lighting up the Viking settlement that had recently been attacked just hours before by dragons.

Shouldering his pack, Stoick heads for the docks to set sail once more for the dragon's nest. Other men and women were also setting out for the docks, each carrying their own packs upon saying goodbye to their loved ones. In his brother's company is his nephew, Snotlout, age sixteen. It is Snotlout's first voyage in search of the dragon's next although Snotlout had gotten through dragon training close to two years ago at age fourteen.

The sight reminds him of his first born, Hiccup who disappeared during his sixth winter. That winter had been hard on Stoick's family as they had thought they'd lose Valhallarama to winter sickness early in the season but instead of losing his wife, he lost a son. There wasn't even a body for them to confirm what happened to Hiccup, only tracks vanishing abruptly at some point out of the village. It's the not knowing what happened that hurts them the most as it still gives them hope that Hiccup could still be out there somewhere.

"Alright men! Let's keep this moving. The sooner we shove off, the sooner we return!" He says at the group holding things up by the ramps that lead down to the fleet of ships waiting for the final people to board. The warriors finally turn away from shore and walk down the ramp, not without the group shoving each other, clearly in good spirits, which is a good sign in his opinion.

Hiccup

Clinging to the cliffs under the dock, the gray dragon listen to the cries of the village as the ships depart. Cocking his head to the side, the unseen dragon moves slowly from his upside down position to the top of the cliff. He couldn't help but feel bewildered at the actions of the Vikings, he didn't question how he understood their language so quickly though.

Why would their warriors leave? There was just a raid last night, shouldn't they remain to guard their village? What's more important then the safety of their home? Or their territory? Stone thinks to himself as he settles down on the ledge, resting his head down upon the ground while stretching out his forelimbs and unfolding his wings slightly.

Just letting go of his emotions, Stone's mind goes over his travels around the world. With a final closing of his eyes, it wasn't long before Stone's hide begins to display colors beyond just his typical dull gray. Allowing his heart to slow, the dragon falls asleep as he has nothing better to do until night falls which will allow him to fly away.

Week Later

Ripple

Giggling, she scampers upon the back of the rocks while her current minders, Astrid and Ruffnut, the two young women seem to be cloud watching with their weapons resting over by the fallen, burnt log. Ripple jabs the stone with a stick while facing the group of her peers. "I, Princess Ripple, here by claim this mountain in my father's name!"

She goes on to add, "And I name this after my elder brother, Hiccup Horrendous Haddock III! From hence forth, this mountain shall be called Mountain Cup!"

"Oh, come on, everyone knows your brother is dead!" Bilewedge snaps and many of the group agree, only Loomworm and Rotpelt remain silent.

"He's not dead! He's just on a world tour and he's suppose to be returning home soon." Ripple snaps. "He's also going to marry Astrid cause I know her and like her." The six year old daughter of the village leader adds.

"There she goes, engaging you to her brother. Sounds like you're in luck, a rich husband and the next leader of the village." Ruffnut muses out loud while Bilewedge and her get into a shouting match.

"She's young, she's allowed to pretend." The blond girl replies.

Hiccup

It's the shouting of human hatchlings that just causes him to sigh. Stone had been so close of sneaking off with one of the human books when he heard this group coming out of the village. The gray dragon panicked and leaned upon the few rocks that laying about, curling around them just in time for his hide to begin to take a rocky look to it. The poke from the end of the stick didn't help either.

Whatever possessed me to make that deal with that Night Fury? Sure, it sounded so easy to steal one of their books in broad daylight. Sure, their fighters are gone, but that doesn't make them any less dangerous. The gray dragon wonders, it's not often that he meets somebody who irritates him and is male to boot.

Oh great, another grown one. The current dragon pretending to be a rock thinks as he hears heavy foot falls. "Heya Fish! Come to join us in watching the rugrats?" One of the grown Vikings hollers, which causes the hatchlings to pause in their pointless argument.

"Sorry but no. I don't suppose any of you guys have seen my journal?" The newly arrived Viking asks and Stone feels his heart begin to race as he gets this notion that he knows where this 'journal' is.

"Nope, haven't seen it about, right guys?" And the hatchlings murmur their agreement. He pulls the book close to his chest while trying not to allow his tail to lash out.

A few seconds pass and the hatchlings begin to climb up onto him. They shoved each other, each trying to claim him. While the hatchlings do that, Fish finally speaks up, "Ah guys? Don't you think that rock pile is a bit strange?"

Oh deer scat! I was hoping they won't notice. He thinks, opening up the eye facing that direction slightly. "What you talking about? It's just a pile rocks that somebody dumped over here."

He is relieved that their weapons weren't within reach as gives him a chance to get away before they get them in their hands. The hatchlings would run before his slightly opened eye, obscuring his view of the grown ups. Stone could hear the change in pitch as Fish says, "Oh no... oh no, oh no no no! Get down form there now!"

The two laying on their backs sit up and glance to where Fish it looking. It seems that his tail swept one of his tracks a little too heavily. Seeing that the jig is up, he shakes his whole body, sending most of the hatchling off of him. He bellows, "Oh scat! Get out of my way!"

All but one get off and he's already bouncing off into the forest with the single hatchling clinging to his back, their hands gripping his wings. "Weee! This is fun!" The hatchling cries, he trys to throw her off by spreading his wings.

"Ripple!" The Vikings cry out and hearing them each up, Stone finally leaps high into the air. "Get back here, you devil so I can chop your head off!"

"Oh yea, I'll get right on doing that, right after I get my mind fried by the so called Queen." The gray grumbles to himself while that hatchling clings to his back viva his wing joint. "Humans..." He grunts while still holding onto the book, heading for the other side of Berk to see that Night Fury to get some answers concerning this area.

Then, his unwanted passanger's grip loosens and the hatchling begins to scream. With a groan, Stone quickly flips about to catch the human with his free forelimb. With that done, continues to raise high into the air while circling above the island, soon, he heads for the spot farthest away from the settlement, where the Night Fury should be waiting for him.

"Wow... so that's what Berk looks like from way up here..." The hatchling says, reminding the gray, hornless dragon of its presence once more. He merely sighs at the reminder, although he would rather have had the hatchling bucked off before he took flight as he didn't want to deal with humans, no matter their size.

Stone lands, being sure to cushion his landing viva his back legs then his front ones. As he puts the hatchling down as gently as the dragon could, the hatchling sways and lands upon the ground as the legs gave way. "Oh... My head is spiny." The hatchling murmurs.

"You kidnapped a hatchling?" The lounging black dragon says in disbelief and Stone growls softly at the much smaller hornless dragon while stepping over the fallen hatchling. Stone tosses the book upon the ground before the Night Fury.

"It was clinging to my wing! What was I suppose to do? Wait for it to get off to take off? I don't know about you but I like my head where it is!" Stone snaps at the Night Fury.

"Well, what good is having the hatchling? And what do you plan to do with it?" The Night Fury asks and the larger gray hunches over with his wings raising slightly off his back while remaining folded.

"Hiccup!" The hatchling cries upon wrapping its arms about his tail. Before Stone or the Night Fury could react, the larger gray is engulf in light and when it fades, a lean, muscular sixteen year old with wild red highlighted brunet hair reaching to his lower back, who's also very naked.

" What just happened? " Hiccup and the Night Fury wonder out loud at the same time. Hiccup speaking the Viking language as he can no longer possess a dragon's vocal cords and thus can't speak in his typical manner as Stone.

To Be Continued . . .

The Ghost and the Fox Ch 6: DP

I don't own Danny Phantom or Naruto.

Epilogue

Hard to believe that just yesterday, Naruto and Mizu where here and then, poof, they're gone. Hinata muses as she tours the apartment where they had once lived. There's nothing remaining in the place, not even the tub.

Relations between the three young Hyuuga members and the two Uzumaki had become strained. Mizu especially had acted differently from the beginning of the school year. Not that either of the three had a chance to look into why they were acting different, not when they were occupied by what's going on in their own lives. The eldest daughter of the Hyuuga family head stops by the entrance to the apartment, various teams have examined the apartment throughout the day and now, evening is falling upon the village.

As she walks down the steps, a small explosion happens on the step before her and when the smoke vanishes, it reveals a box with her name on it. Glancing around, she picks it up and hurries on to a seclude spot to open it. Ducking into an alleyway a few blocks from the Uzumaki apartment building, she using a bit of chakra to slice open one of the ends.

Inside of the package is a bunch of thick file folders, one of them is entitled Root Division. It wasn't long before Hinata's eye widen within reading the first few pages and looking at some of the pictures that go along with them. She puts them back into the folder and moves onto the next, this one with Naruto's name on it.

And on it goes, each folder containing secrets that would likely see her executed if she ever breathed a word of just a hint of any of it.

Hinata turns to gaze up at the fourth head, her mind a whirl concerning her crush's family tree, or perhaps to be more clear, the Uzumaki family tree. Why reveal the existence of the Kyuubi in its third host?

Grim faced, Hinata does what this little note tells her to do concern how to hide the files. It isn't easy drawing on her arm as it's got curves to it but the ink that she unsealed worked well as it's rather thick and lumpy so it clings to her skin. A bit of chakra later and it seemingly transforms into a tattoo. Holding the file folders over the site, shy heiress activates the seal and the files vanish.

Once that is done, she puts her arm back into her jacket and heads home, her mind occupied by what little she's read. At least they have valid reasons for leaving. I don't think I'll ever look at the village the same way, let alone Lord... The Hokage. The girl with pearly eyes thinks, she can think of only two people she can trust and she hopes they'll have an open mind but then, Mizu's abilities pretty much ensures that what files she has are real and they'll believe so as well.

T (=] - N

Three months, three whole months, over sixty days and still nothing! Bumpkiss! Jiraiya thinks while sitting at a bar, nursing his fourth bottle of chilled sake. Normally, he would have preferred to leave the drinking away woes to Tsunade but the man just couldn't think of a more fitting setting to ponder how to find the pair of wayward Uzumaki boys.

It's clear to him that the two had managed to gain access to various forbidden parts of the village, how could they not when one of them can not only turn invisible but phase through solid objects? That there should have been enough for his ex-teacher to consider how strongly a bad idea it would be to make the pair feel threaten in any slight way by the village. Who knows what kind of documents they left with!

I'd almost wish they would have tried to blackmail the village into leaving them be, at least there would be word that they're around. I could even backtrack where the letter came from. The pervert novel writer thinks while staring down the neck of the sake bottle. It would almost mean that they're looking for a place to settle, preferably in a city, be it in another country doing mercenary work like typical missing nin...

Most normal rogue ninja on the run from their old villages try their hardest to make a living using the only skills they got, ninja ones. Depending upon their ranking, some are not as actively pursued as other as those of low standing typically don't know a lot of their chosen profession or have the connections an older ninja could make to get access to or outright steal higher class of intel. Not only were the two boys barely ninja but they likely learnt a lot of the skeletons within the village's closet.

That causes him to frown as he pauses to consider that thought. Perhaps... just perhaps, that's why they've decided not to send any kind of message at all. They know what kind of lengths the village goes to keep those secrets. They likely had free access to any part of the village, why not the mission library? That thought chilled Jiraiya as it would mean that if it were true, they would have had time to plan for the typical tactics Hunters use as well as the unusual ones as well.

They distanced themselves from those three Hyuuga within days of that meeting with the old man... Likely to protect the three as well as freeing up time to pursue the gathering of intelligence and perhaps, begin learning jutsus sealed or squirreled away. The more he began to look at it not as a spur of the moment fleeing but the end result of months of planning slowly causes him to despair at the fact they may never catch the pair while also giving him peace, as it would mean that they're beyond the reach of the village.

He raises his bottle of sake in silent toast of the pair's good health and long life before gulping down the remainder of the bottle.

T (=] - N

The destruction of the village didn't come as much of a surprise to either of the trio of Hyuuga. For the pass six months, they had been waging a silent war with various fractions within the village. They had gathered allies and created enemies as well but then, they had a good two years to plot their course from not just the files left behind by the two Uzumaki and verifying the information within viva locating and spying upon those hidden divisions of their home, but through interrogation of various spies and double agents.

What happened during that Chuunin Exam just shoved the fact that their village is on the decline and not by outside forces but viva internal threats, namely Root. They had fed the Intel of the invasion to Root agents but that group had done nothing to protect the village. The seals they had managed to put up in their bunkers alerted them to when they were in use and how long. They had been in use minutes before the invasion began and stopped being in use when night fell.

Of course, father didn't seem to care about how Danzo functioned, only that the man had enough people backing him politically. Hinata thinks, her hand going to the thin scar that could be found just under her jaw. A gift from her father before they put him down and put those various seals upon him, turning the man into their puppet. Of course the elders couldn't live forever. And such a tragedy they died before the village rebuilt itself.

"We did pretty good work on those dummies. Pein didn't even noticed the illusions upon them." Hanabi remarks and she turns to look at her younger sibling.

"The Yamanaka's jutsus work surprisingly well when paired with the 'art' of puppetry." Neji agrees. "It's surprising that Sand ninja haven't advanced their art much in that particular direction."

"At least the final rot of the village is out of the way. The problem will be rebuilding, particularly consider the kind of attack that caused that kind of damage." Hanabi remarks as she waves her hand over to the rather large gaping hole at the center of the walled village.

Hinata listens to the conversation between Neji and Hanabi with half an ear. While Neji and Hanabi had focused upon genjutsu and ninjutsu, she had focused upon the fuinjutsu. It had been rather difficult to get her hands upon the various scrolls and books that detail this particular branch of chakra art but it had paid off as she had not only figured out a way to take an enclosed space and enlarge it. She's gotten rather good at this and has plans to see if she can't alter how time flows within such a space as well, but for now, she is just listing various seals that they should use upon all future buildings of Hidden Leaf.

For truly, the time has come for them to make use of new innovations, particularly as neither Uzumaki showed up to defend the village. Not all that surprising, really. They're not even living upon the continent any more or else my network of sentry seals would have picked them up. Hinata thinks, although mentally admitting that there are some places none the them had visited and thus there weren't any sentry seals totally all over this land of warring countries.

I wonder if we should wake Jiraiya? Sure, his body is destroyed but we that seal we slipped on him did store his soul. It wouldn't be that hard to insert it into one of our more durable puppets. He is a seal master and it would be nice to have somebody to act as a sounding board for my future projects... One of the leaders of the Hyuuga clan muse while the wind plays with her bangs.

For the first time, the fear that has weighted her down since finding those files seems to have vanished as had the wondering about whether or not Naruto and Mizu had acted correctly by fleeing the village, the continent.

Perhaps one day I'll take some time to search for them and learn what kind of life they have lead since they left? Not right now, but six or twelve years? Sure. She thinks with a slight smile as she turns to gaze at the head of the Fourth Hokage, the father of Naruto Uzumaki and Grandfather of Mizu Uzuamki.

There's still trials ahead of them but at least they'll be able to focus on them instead of waiting in the shadows, afraid to act under the light of the sun.

So Ends the Epilogue

To Readers:

As promise and I hope this clear up Hidden Leaf's ends as well as provide more character development of the trio of Hyuuga.

Portal Maddness 4: Naruto

I don't own Fullmetal Alchemist, How To Train Your Dragon, Inuyasha, or Naruto!

Rubbing the bridge of her nose, a twenty-something year old woman allows the book in her hand to drop to the table while the overhead lights of the library continue to hum dimly to Sakura's enhance ears. She's managed to pass off her floppy ears off as earmuffs, which isn't that unusual considering the season. She's just glad that there weren't many people within the library as then her headache would be so much worst as not only would she be listening to them but also smelling them.

If only I hadn't ended up in that program, I might have returned home within days. Sakura thinks sourly while finally moving her hand from her nose bridge, a bit of make up covers the gloves' fingers. Slitted eyes regarded the make up upon the index and thumb before wiping it upon her jacket, she re-frames from taking out a pocket mirror to see if her make up got smeared in anyway.

Upon escaping from the lab, Sakura had been horrified to find the scaly humanoid staring back at her within the mirror to be herself, she nearly took a knife to her throat or wrist. The scales were pale brown with darker patches of brown markings about her cheeks and forehead. Her pink hair had remained upon her head but had grown down along her spine, ending midway down her back in a point, which cause her irritation when she wears cloths.

It had come as a dull surprise that what had once passed as her breasts were pretty much gone, it's why so many people pin her as a man instead of a woman. Not that her temperament helps clear the matter up or her altered vocal cords, giving her a more neutral pitch to her voice as well. Nor did it help that her pelvis is narrow like a man's either...

Sakura knows that a reptile had been used on her but how she managed to keep her hair or sport those floppy ears mean that some mammal was used as well, although that doesn't really explain the overall maleness that she sports through no fault of her own.

With a groan, she pushes the book away, she's been researching in this library for over a month and still, there's no information concerning building a machine that acts like a conduit between the Alchemical forces of this world and a normal human. She's been searching for some hint about this machine once she managed to get things to hide her alterations.

Pressing her lips together, Sakura gets up and leaves the building to head to a secure location in which she can meditate through that information download that the Gate gave her. If I can't find it in books, then perhaps I can find what I need in that internal collection. She thinks, as she's not human enough to preform Alchemy that doesn't mean she can't find somebody to preform it on her behalf, the trick would be keeping that somebody from learning her status as a chimera and, sigh, a woman.

With a yawn, Naruto leans back on the branch upon which he is resting. Below him and pinned to the tree is the most unusual looking person sporting long silvery white hair, tiny floppy ears upon the top of the head, and sporting pronounced fangs and nails that seem like claws. The guy's cloths didn't seem to be in bad shape, all things consider as a good five years had passed since the displaced demon container had witnessed the strange event between the local priestess and his adopted son, Inuyasha.

"The question is, should I destroy the arrow or should I leave things to take their course?" He wonders out loud, not caring who or what hears him. Naruto looks up at the sky, remembering the woman who granted him a home upon him finally managing to return to his human frame of mind and recalling the trouble she went through because of her young boy who's father died the night of Inuyasha's birth.

Back then, he still sported certain animalistic features even in human form. Within days, the village already considered that they had become lovers but they never were, although within two years of knowing the pair, he proposed marriage to Izayoi and talked her into it for Inuyasha's sake if not her own as he had come to consider the brat something like a nephew/son by then. It took two seasons but Izayoi did agree to the marriage and thus he became moved from unofficial guardian position to that of Inuyasha's official guardian.

"The question becomes should I do so? Clearly this is a learning experience but on the other hand, any demon or human could slice his throat..." Naruto mutters softly. It's a toss up, he's an adult and thus doesn't need me always hauling his ass out of these kind of things but he's in danger as long as he remains sealed...

He could keep guard of his son while waiting for the spell to wear off, another option is to end the spell now and give his son a lecture about pursuing power, or he could cut the bark about Inuyasha and take the two away to a safer area where the spell can wear off without his son being totally defenseless. It never crosses Naruto's mind to just take off and leave things to fate.

"I wonder how deep the arrow head is in the tree?" The demonic chimera of an owl, weasel, and tiger muses before using his spiritual energy to 'feel' the arrowhead out without moving from his seat upon the branch.

The scaly beast that the locals call drage , not that Sasuke knows the translation of it would be in his own language. Mostly, he just associates the word with a creature that is large, covered in scales, flies, and, oddly enough, breaths fire. Sure, different varieties of these drage exist and have their own breed name but he never bothered to learn them as drage is good enough for him as he doesn't care much for the details, only that for every one he kills, the more the locals respect him and don't treat him as some-kind of servant.

What he lacks in brute strength, he makes up for in agility and successful battle strategies. Sure, these locals are tall, broad of frame, and rather fearless but some of their tactics always leaves the impressions that they want to die in battle instead of killing their foes, which seems rather Narutoish to his mind and often causes his mind to drift onto the subject of his blond team-mate, much to his annoyance. Kill now, think later.

Shoving those thoughts out of his head, he goes for one of those that send tail spines flying as they struggle to get into the barn viva one of the side walls. The eighteen year old dimly is aware of the leader's scrawny, eleven year old son heading for the only blacksmith in town. Sasuke is kind of fond of the boy that they call ælfsogoþa or Hiccup, the reason might have to do with the fact that the boy is the one who typically forges his kunai but mostly, it's because the boy reminds him of himself.

And there goes one of those self-burners. Sasuke thinks while he 'dances' with the closest spine throwers. He's just glad that they lack eyes at the front of their heads as it makes it easy for him to keep out of the beast's line of sight, even if it puts him before the part the spews fire.

All in all, Sasuke couldn't find a better way to keep his fighting skills nicely homed as he believes that it's only a matter of time before somebody summons him back to Hidden Leaf. After all, that's what Seal Masters do most of the time, summon something from another world to the village.

Wishbringer Omake: Ranma

I don't own Ranma 1/2.

Omake: Episode 82

Finally, Ranma managed to get Kuno to order the sword known as Wishbringer to grant her wish. Holding the sword before her, the current female Ranma is just trying to think of a way to word her wish before it dawns on her that not only could she cure herself but make it so Ryoga never sleeps in Akane's bed again or for Shampoo to transform into a c-c-feline either! Laughing, she heads for a private place in which to make the wish.

"I wish that all those suffering from Jusenkyo curses to be cured of them tonight, returning them to their original birth forms and further more, for all future people or animals who get touched by the waters of Jusenkyo various springs to only suffer their curses for a month." Ranma declares, feeling rather proud of his farsightedness along with doing a good to all those suffering from embarrassing water curses.

"So be it!" Wishbringer declares and the blade flashes a bright white before returning to normal. Then, suddenly, somebody hits him on the head.

"You used it already? What a disappointment my son is, not even giving any thought to your beloved father!" Genma declares, it seems that her father only arrived to see the sword flash brilliantly.

"Oh can it Pops! If you heard what my wish was then you would be singing a different tune!" Ranma snaps while pointing the sword at her father. "Not only did I wish our troubles away but I made it so we won't have ta worry about getting hit by Jusenkyo later either! So enjoy the last afternoon of being able to turn into a panda cause tonight, they go bye-bye!" She states smugly, holding the sword so it's none sharp edge is resting upon her shoulder while sporting a very smug look upon her face.

Slowly walking to the edge of the roof, Ranma notes that there's still a few hours left before she'll never turn into her current form ever again. Not that Ranma gets to leave the roof as Akane chose that time to throw a rock at her head while shouting, "You idiot!"

As Akane walks up, she's pretty much yelling about having dis-basing himself just to get that wish. It seems that the youngest Tendo wasn't pulling her punches and upon Ranma getting up, she began to list Akane's ugly traits as the young Saotome's mind forgets that she not only succeeded in getting Kuno to give her the final wish but also in making it. It seems that her grip upon the sword had slipped and it didn't land next to Ranma.

In the end, the fight ends as Akane summons a mallet and causes Ranma to fly through the air. Upon landing, Ranma decides to stir clear of the Tendo home for the rest of the night. It didn't take long for Ranma to find some hot water and then he headed off in search for something to take his mind off of the fight with Akane.

Midnight approached and Ranma finally headed to the Tendo's to sleep in their guest room, the one he shares with his father. As Ranma lies down to rest, Akane storms in and tosses a bucket of water at him. "What was that for?" He demands while glaring at the youngest Tendo.

"You didn't transform..." Akane finally says and Ranma blinks in one part confusion and one part anger. The memory of his wish then causes him smirk.

"Well, of course I didn't, Kuno did give me his third wish after all. Heck, even Pops here won't transform into a panda ever again." He thinks to answer. "Now, if you excuse me, I need to go change my cloths and my sheets." Ranma states while gathering up said sheets and pushing pass Akane.

No more P-Chan either! He mentally includes.

Noon

Since he had woke, Ranma had been hit with cold water four times since waking and just before the starting bell rung. During school, he had been hit three times while in the locker room, none of the boys had believed that he had been cured the first time he had been hit with cold water and so they had to test it at least twice more. A minor threat kept there being another attempt.

"So, word around school says you're cured of that curse of yours." Ukyo says as she sits down to join him for lunch, Akane has been shying away from Ranma's company since the left for school.

"I not only cured Pops and myself but everyone who's touched Jusenkyo's waters." He informs his childhood friend, few had actually asked what his wish was, word for word. "Not that anyone seems to be thrilled with my getting cured..." He adds with a frown while glance over to the funeral that a bunch of boys seem to be holding over the loss of his female curse.

"Really? So you did go on a date with Kuno just to get cured?" Ukyo asks with a hint of steel and Ranma stills for a second before he tells Ukyo the wording of his wish.

That seems to cause Ukyo to pause before smiling. "So not only did you do something to cure everyone currently affected, you also used your wish to help those future victims as well. That's so thoughtful of you, Ran-chan."

Ranma can't help but feel as though he dodged a bullet there as he watches as Ukyo seemingly summons a grill and begins cooking okonomiyaki. He finishes his lunch bento and is soon eating one of the okonomiyaki that Ukyo has grilled up on her stove. A few show up and pay for okonomiyaki that Ukyo has made and he hadn't consumed.

Soon enough, lunch ends and the students head for class, although not before Shampoo and Mousse decide to show up to check to see if he can still turn into a girl viva cold water. Which causes him to explain what happened yesterday and the now changed nature of Jusenkyo.

Shampoo wants to go on a date to celebrate the curing of their curse while Mousse decides to attack him in gratitude.

A Court for Every Season: Changeling TL

I don't own Danny Phantom, Naruto, Bleach, Oh My Goddess, Harry Potter, Neon Genesis Evangelion, Ranma 1/2, and World of Darkness: Changeling The Lost.

Harry

"Ok... Does anyone know why I sport feathered wings but legs and tail of a lion?" The slightly altered time looping Naruto Uzumaki wonders while holding onto his tail. Out of the seven of them, Naruto's appearance is rather tame as he returns his gaze upon Ranma although he does glance at the new guy who's yet to introduce themselves.

Ranma stands seven feet tall and sports a very large frame that sports a mass of muscles. Saotome's skin is bright red while pale scars could be found about the arms, face, chest, and legs. The leather shorts seem stained with dry blood. Ranma's face is like that of a classic Japanese Oni sporting a thick eye ridge that has those fleshy horns growing out right after the eye ridges. The mass of white hair is like a lion's mane.

Somehow, I doubt he's going to move as lightly as he usual does. Harry thinks, kind of aware that it seems as though he's the shortest one present, which only makes Ranma seem even taller. His gaze turns when he hears a twig snap to find that the still nameless member of the seven trying to sneak away.

"Where do you think you're going?" Ranma asks, his voice sounding like rocks falling down the side of a mountain. The closest member of the group, Keiichi, reaches out and touches the new guy's shoulder, which kind of surprises him as he thought the hand would go through the guy.

"Err... Just who are you people?" The new guy asks and he takes note of the fact that the guy possessing bat looking wings for arms, the wing spread between two of the fingers, leaving the thumb, index finger, and middle finger ready. There seems to exist this kind of haze about this one's form that suggests that he's just a shadow and yet, he's not as Keiichi's hand proves that under that haze there is a solid body there.

"I guess introductions are in order." Keiichi agrees but unsurprisingly, Naruto is the one who takes it from there considering out of the group, the blond is typically the most outgoing of the 'core' group.

"Name's Naruto Uzumaki! The big Oni is Ranma Saotome and normally, he's not that big or that musclar." Ranma simply snorts and crosses his arms while Harry just gives Saotome a bemused look. "The little elven guy over there is Harry Potter." Elven? Merlin, I hope I don't look like a house elf...

"The one that looks like he hasn't slept for, like, a few years is Ichigo Kurosaki." Harry glances over at the deadly pale, almost waxy appearance except for black marks under his eyes while certain facial features seemingly more pronounced. "The gear jointed one is Shinji Ikari." Shinji merely gives Naruto a dirty look while the blond goes on to introduce Keiichi, who had taken a few steps back and then bows after the demon container finishes that introduction.

"My name is Danny Fenton." Danny kind of stares at Ranma. "Are you really Ranma Saotome? As in Ranma Saotome from Ranma One Half?" The new guy asks, which causes Ranma to sigh.

"Yes I am." Ranma rumbles while the rest of them sigh. "Although, I am a looper like yourself, so I like to think I've grown from how I was when this started." Then Ranma adds, "We all like to believe we've grown since the time loops began at least." To which they all nod.

"So, everyone of you guy are 'loopers'? Then how do you know each other?" Danny asks, his rather large blue eyes glancing at each of them.

"You ever get 'wake' in a world that isn't yours? Or maybe you've noticed new people living around you? Strangers who seem to possess different skills?" Naruto asks, once more stepping in while they try to think how to best frame the question.

Danny nods a bit. "It doesn't happen a lot but yea, there have been new faces around Amity Park, not that I noticed anything special about them though." The winged arm teen admits.

"We call such crossovers Fusion loops or FUBAR loops. It's how we all know each other, most of us end up commonly end up in FUBAR loops together on a semi-regular basis now a days. The usual setting is typically in Harry's universe, which is usually a seven year loop at a magic school." The blond informs Danny.

"Although, to be honest, Keiichi rarely ends up in a fusion considering that he's living with a version of the Norns." Ranma admits, it's clear that Shinji and Ichigo's attention had shifted when Naruto began to explain about FUBAR loops, likely trying to access their space pocekt, not that he's been able to access his own...

"The Norns? As in the trio of women who control the fate of men? The Norse Norns?" Danny asks a bit alarmed.

"I wouldn't go around calling Urd a crone. She's rather proud of her looks." Keiichi explains with a hint of dryness.

"You might want to look more into the genre of Anime and Manga, if your world has Ranma One Half then you might be able to a hold of Oh My Goddess and Neon Genesis Evangelion. Not sure if you'll be able to get a hold of Bleach or Naruto though." Harry muses and Naruto nods in agreement.

"What about you? You're from an Anime?" Danny asks and he snorts softly.

"Nay, I am typically a book series or a series of movies... I think somebody mentioned once that in one universe I was a CGI cartoon series once, not sure who told me that one though..." He muses. I wonder if there's a comic book version of my life out there somewhere? Harry muses for a bit as he rubs his chin while picturing how he would like to be portrayed as a comic book.

By now, Shinji and Ichigo seem to be frowning while Ranma stretches his body. "Does anyone know where we are?" He decides to ask while Naruto seemingly floats in the air for a few second before whatever effect causes the blond's feet to return to the ground.

"Don't really know, although that thorn bushes seem to be shifting slightly every few minutes." Keiichi notes and Harry glances at the hedge to find that Keiichi is right. "I also thought I saw a pair of eyes looking out of it too..." The handsome eighteen year old muses.

"Hedge... hedge... that kind of rings a bell..." Shinji mutters and then snaps his metallic finger and wooden thumb. "Changeling the Lost! We're in another universe created by White Wolf Publishing! You remember when we were werewolves that time and combated those spirits? That's where we are only now we're playing as abducted mortals who've been changed into one of Seemings." Shinji explains.

"You guys were werewolves?" Danny wonders while he groans, just hearing the world Changeling kind of brought out the memories that were something a kin to his many childhood memories of doing house work, only the torture being very more painful and his Keeper being much more beautiful and bizarre. If I do look like a house elf, at least I know who to blame.

"I think we might want to leave now." Keiichi says to which Naruto asks, "Why?"

"Yea, I think that's a good idea." Ichigo adds in support of Keiichi's statement, which is why he along with most of the others turn to look at the Hedge once more. "I don't think we're ready to fight anyone just yet." Shinji agrees and they head away from the Hedge, soon enough they arrive in a backyard.

Danny

As they walk through the town, Danny is rather amazed at how nobody seems to be freaking out at the sight of them, well, Ranma did attract looks but then, the guy is tall and sporting a very broad shoulders. So different then the short, scrawny looking character he's seen while watching the show. He feels very uncomfortable concerning walking around in his current appearance.

The wing membrane of his arms are folded as best as he could make them, which feels rather weird as it means his hand only consists of two fingers and a thumb. The clothing covering his upper body is a poncho as he can't put his arms through sleeves of any shirts. As certain member of the group had lacked cloths, they had broken into the house and rummaged through the basement looking for cloths, which is where his poncho came from along with Naruto's tattered, modified jeans and baggy, modified long sleeve shirt, Ranma's heavily modified leather jacket, and Shinji's sweat pants and sweat shirt.

Harry, Ichigo, and Keiichi had been already wearing cloths when they all 'woke up'. Sure, Ranma and Danny had sported some kind of pants but that's about it while Naruto and Shinji had been butt naked. Not that there's any girls around to see them like that. He muses while glancing between Naruto and Harry, the two are the youngest members of the seven of them as they are both only thirteen, although Harry will be turning fourteen come two months.

During their rummaging through the basement, Shinji explained about the world they're now in and what they can expect in way of skills, problems, and power ups. Danny can't help but feel very much out of this depth, particularly as none of the others seem to be fazed by this set of circumstances. Not that I should be complaining, I've been getting stir crazy for a while now... Danny mentally admits and begins to wonder just how one causes FUBAR loops as if this is an example of one.

Maybe it's because he's been the only one experiencing them but he's been feeling cut off from everyone, including Sam and Tucker. Not even Clockwork seem to be aware, although it does mean that he doesn't have to worry about encountering his darker, futuristic self anymore as he'll never turn into that guy. Not that I haven't been tempted to give my hand at taking over the world... Danny bemuses before snapping out of his thoughts when Naruto says, "Is anyone else hungry?"

Blinking, Danny is just one voice in a chorus voicing yes. "So... anyone find a coin or something?" The other be-winged member of the group asks and Ranma holds up a bill.

"What do you plan to do with that? It's not nearly enough to buy us all a meal." He points out as Naruto takes the bill from the Ogre.

"Don't worry, with Naruto's luck in gambling we'll soon have more then enough for a meal." Shinji says and he just stares. "Just watch and see." The artificial looking member of the group finally adds with a sigh.

They enter into a restaurant with slot machines and sure enough, Naruto take the bill and gets four quarters. The blond picks a random machine and on the first try, Naruto hits the Jack Pot. Danny just stares in amazement at the younger boy, not sure what to make of that particular ability as they collect the winnings. With that, they head for a table so they may eat.

He sits next to Keiichi and Ichigo with Harry sitting across from him. "So... what's your dimension like?" Naruto asks as they wait for somebody to arrive to take their order.

"It's because I'm new, isn't it?" He asks with a sigh while leaning back on the bench. "Well, I'm typically a Halfa, half ghost half human, capable of switching between the two. I fight and capture ghost using my parents' ghost weapons." Danny explains.

"Sounds like you've got a lot in common with Ichigo then." Harry muses and he glances over at the orange haired teen to his right. "Ichigo's dad is a Shinigami and typically Ichigo himself sees the dead."

"Does that make him a demi-god?" Danny asks. First one of them is living with the Fates and now I learn that another is the son of a Asian Death God...

"Not really, Shinigami is just a group of empowered human spirits that herd whole spirits out of the land of the living while purifying hollow spirits who feed off of whole spirits and spiritual aware humans." Ranma explains and most of the others nod in agreement. "They've even created a city there, heck they even have an academy to train those with talent to become Shinigami."

"So... where does that leave Ichigo?" He asks curiously, rather interested to hear more. "And if his father is dead, how can his father be his father?"

"Well, when they want to interact with the living, Shinigami use fake bodies. They're very convincing ones at that." Ranma says and they all pause as a waiter arrives to take their drink order while leaving some menus for them to read through.

"How did we end up talking about Ichigo's life again?" Naruto asks curiously. "I mean, we haven't heard any of Danny's adventures or even about his group." The blond muses thoughtfully and he is rather uncomfortable as they all turn to regard him.

"Ah... How do you know that I have friends? For all you know, I could be a Gothic loner." He remarks and everybody but Keiichi snort at that. "Well, Tucker is into technology and is a strong believer in meat." Danny finally relents. "Sam is, well, strict Ultra-Recyclo Vegetarian and a Goth. We usually end up dating unless I run off to play Super-Hero in a big city."

And so began a kind of Q & A session as they would ask a question or for more detail about something he mentioned, which he would answer. As they wait for their meal to arrive and they've done digging for information about him, they told him more about themselves, their friends, and the various pranks they pull on each other.

He learnt that if either or both Sam and Tucker wake up, they'll likely be a bit unstable, typically diverging into porn and sleeping around. Something which he's kind of in the early stages of but which now that he's aware of how much of a slut it sounded to become a "ladies' man" he decides to not follow down that path. Another thing is, now that he's experienced a fusion loop, its more then likely he's 'waking' to the loop will now be varied. It also signaled that one of these loops, his friends will wake up and that he'll likely begin to see an increase in FUBAR loops.

Soon enough, Danny inquires about what universes they've lived in and is rather stunned to learn that there is a Star Wars universe out there as well as Star Trek. He even found it surprising to learn that Naruto, who's rather bold and care free, is a ninja, as in, stealthy, cloak and dagger ninja. "How can you be a ninja? You're, well..." He just waves, unable to find the words to tell of his disbelief about that.

"Loud? Excitable?" Shinji supplies before drinking from his soda. He merely nods in agreement while Naruto just rolls his eyes. "Well, ninja of his world have become rather... flashy." Shinji explains.

"Not unlike samurai, although if you're missing a pet, you can hire a genin team to seek it out or if you want a business rival done away with, you can hire a chuunin or a jonin, it depends on how hard they think it'll be to assassinate the guy. They're very versatile in what kind of missions they'll accept." Ranma says.

"Which is rather useful if you're a ninja and want to vacation, you can hire yourself to go guard, say, a famous pub in a town or city in the mists of a festival." Naruto remarks while using a spoon to fend off unwanted fingers or hands trying to take his fries. "Of course, not every country has a ninja village, which is why the Chuunin Exams are public. Trying to show which ninja village is the most powerful based off the performances of the genin."

Not knowing what else to say, he stays quiet as he munches on his fries, only to find that he's got like a dozen left. "So... what kind of Motley pledge are we going to abide by?" Shinji asks as he tries to think of a way to sneak fries off of another member's plate as it seems that it's acceptable to do so.

"How about... no stealing from another member of the group?" Danny suggests as he Keiichi donates his uneaten fries to him upon noticing the looks he's been giving Harry's fries.

Ranma hums while Naruto tosses out, "How about agreeing to avoid making pledges beyond those between us? From the sounds of things, this whole society seems to sport a lot of political pledges, even the courts seem to demand a pledge of loyalty just to make us of their resources."

"Or we agree to hold the pledges between us to be more powerful then those made to a court and leadership?" Ichigo states as he hums thoughtfully at that thought. That would offer more security considering we're not native to this world.

"So, we want to include in this pledge is to share our good fortune, give aid when bad fortune strikes, to not steal from each other, and to consider the Motley above all pledges make to one's court, if they decide to join a court, and a leader of a Freehold." Harry muses.

"That sharing fortune seems to conflict with the stealing clause." Ranma remarks. "Let's not forget that one persons' good fortune could be somebody's bad. We each seem to need different things, so I would settle on not stealing from one another."

"Are we going to agree to create a Hollow in the Hedge or not?" Ichigo wonders. "I mean, I rather not get too close to it, particularly if those True Fae can move through it like a fish through water."

This soon leads to a long debate concerning what could be found under which clause or if they should include it anyway. He's rather surprised to find Harry doing a very good job as a wordsmith until Keiichi informs him about that Harry's world sports magic and they can create magical contracts, which is why Harry's unusually skilled with words.

Breaks happened when the waiter shows up to take away their plates, bring drink refills, or whatever new food they order up. Finally, they decide to leave, although not before Naruto wins a few more times at the slot machines, giving them money to rent a hotel. They leave once the bill has been paid for.

They hang around a phone booth to review the various hotels within the city. The sun is going down and that kind of comforts him for some strange reason. They then leave to visit a list of hotels.

Keiichi

As his dancing companion moves off to visit with another, Keiichi sighs softly and heads for the snack table, having noticed Shinji trying to catch his eye. The dance is a Spring Court funded event, although few of the other courts have done more then send a token number of Changelings. "So, what's the mood with the Winter Courtiers?"

"Just a thought that the funds for this event could have been spent on aiding those member of the Freehold down on their luck." Shinji states with a roll of his eyes. "Of course, according to Naruto, the Autumn Courtiers wanted to use the money to purchase Tokens that humans find and auction off online."

"I'm still trying to wrap my head around the fact that Naruto wanted to become a member of the Autumn Court then the Summer. Gryphons are known for their military skills." Keiichi states, although the blond had been the last of them to pick a Court, for a good two months, Naruto had been the only one to remain Courtless while they were spending time integrating themselves in their chosen court.

"Personally? I think he just want's access to Fae magic more then caring about their agenda." Shinji replies. "Although, he's a good face for that court though, very friendly and out going enough that it frees up a number of individuals from feeling as though they have to be social."

"I guess as long as he displays some of that Season's Mantle, they won't care if he doesn't share the same persona type as is common and typical of that court." He muses and Shinji nods. "Still feel lonely as being the only member of the Winter Court out of the Motley?" Keiichi asks while Shinji rolls his eyes.

"I've gotten use to it. Although, you have to admit, the Summer Court is over representative in our group." Shinji says as he just nods at the Manikin's statement.

"Considering that both Danny and Ichigo are Darklings, you'd think they'd shy away from anything to do with fire." The pilot of Evangelion Number One remarks. "That reminds me, Ranma wants us all to hook up at Naruto's condo one of these days."

"Which day is good for him and the other two?" He asks, not that surprise as they've been in this world for a year now. They had spent a week crafting their Motley Pledge and they swore by it before they decided to seek out the local Freehold to engage in the typical life of a Changeling.

"Next week any time, Naruto says Harry willing to meet either next Wednesday or Thursday, which kind of leaves us to hear from you as I'm good for Wednesday." Shinji says.

"I think I can make it Wednesday night." He informs Shinji. They both kind of allow silence to hang between them. "So... how's been your classes at the university?" They both inquire about the same time before they blink and then chuckle slightly.

"I'm almost done with my engineering degree. You?" Keiichi asks, they were both are the only ones from their Motley to be part of their respective courts. He's still adjusting to the fact that as a member of the Spring Court, he's to indulge in his desires instead burying them. Naruto could have fit into this court like a fish in water, but then, he could have joined any of the three, only reason he never considered Winter Court is he's not one for hiding or running away. He thinks while picking out the Beast member of their Motley.

"My film classes are coming along nicely." Shinji says before adding, "I'm still waiting for Harry to get back to me about creating a token out of glass lenses that will see a Seeming without me being around to activate it."

"You didn't ask Naruto, did you?" He asks, half curiously half frightful. Keiichi still remember the kind of things Naruto managed to convince Harry and Ichigo to do when they were Uratha. Sure, a lot of what they created helped make protecting and monitoring their pack's territory but when the experiments blew up, they really BLEW UP. They had to help fund the rebuilding of the town's buildings, although they're all glad that they decided to stop experimenting at the manor house after that Pandora Box punishment.

"No, I asked him to try to find me a studio who'll rent out a set building for me to record that movie I've written up." Shinji remarks before adding, "Are you sure I can't talk you into taking the lead? You've got the looks needed for the role, after all."

Keiichi feels the familiar swelling within him at the compliment. "Sorry, but I rather not become a house hold name... I mean, in this world at least." He explains and Shinji nods.

"Yo, you two! So, is it going to be Wednesday or Thursday that we're hooking up?" Naruto asks upon seemingly sneaking up on them. He turns his head to regard the blond teen sporting feathered wings. The faint scent of wet, rotten leaves seems to hang about Naruto, much like how some frost seems to hang about Shinji's metal parts while the temperature seems to be a bit chilly.

"We're meeting Wednesday evening." Shinji says to the out going blond. "Your place too, so you might want to stock up on food." The current Manikin adds as a way of a reminder.

"Sure! I'll remember that. Now, if you excuse me, I've got a few ladies waiting for a drink." The blond says, grabbing a platter that's pretty much empty of food, a few adjustments later, and Naruto is walking away from the table with a few glasses of red and white wine.

"You'd think he'd just settle for courting a single lady considering that in mythology that gryphons mate for life." Shinji remarks as Naruto rejoins his group of pretty Changelings, most of them likely of the Spring Court from what he can see of their Season's Mantle, although one of them seems to be of the Summer Court.

"Well, he's still human enough to sleep around." Another Changeling a few feet away remarks upon overhearing Shinji's remark. He blushes slightly as he turns away from watching Naruto to look into his almost empty glass of wine.

Typically, he wouldn't think of cheating on Belldandy, he couldn't help but notice how attractive and desirable many of his fellow Fairest are. Which kind of causes him to be rather divided about what to do about all of this. "I'm having trouble concerning the trend of following my desires and not cheating on Belldandy." He confides to Shinji after trading his now empty cup with filled cup while they put some distance between them and the table.

"You can always pledge to have no other woman but Belldandy and vow it to the Wyrd." Shinji observes and he blinks, rather surprise by going so far as to remain faithful to Belldandy. "Of course, there's the little matter that there might be a True Fae representing her in this world."

He blinks and sighs. "So how to I follow my Court's creed while staying true to her? I doubt she'll forget about such a slight." Keiichi says.

"Well... You could always go out with guys instead of girls... You know, she might be more then a little turned on by that and you can at least say you didn't cheat on her with another woman..." Shinji admits. "I'm sure Naruto or even Ranma might know how it works... I'm they were drunk when they did something like it but then again... You can never tell with Nabiki and Sakura added into the factors."

Keiichi just stares at Shinji while admitting that those two girls likely had coerced the two at one point or another. Although with Nabiki, it likely had to do with her using that temporary Drown Man Spring to be the boy in that circumstance. It's a given that Sakura has set Naruto and Sasuke up on more then one occasion. There are some stories concerning Sakura that he often wonders if some of it were just exaggeration...

He's rather glad he never had to go through watching his friend 'wake' to the reality of the time loops, particularly watching them become obsess with sex and porn. There's always my sister though... But he ignores that thought as his sister doesn't visit enough to need to be woken up.

"Well, good luck trying to manage that problem then. Although, you might want to bring it up with Belldandy about what to do if you end up in this kind of situation in the future. After all, if she can't visit you in this world, there might be other worlds where she can't visit you either." Shinji observes before they part ways.

With a glance about, he decides that he should be able to leave as it's clear that the dance is winding down. He is sure to stop by the table to leave his empty wine glass before leaving the community center that his court rented for this dance. It shouldn't take him long to get to his apartment block from here, after all, that's where most of his fellow Court member rent apartments within the same block if not the same building.

Danny: Darkling - Lurk Glider, Court - Summer

Harry: Wizen - Drudge, Court - Autumn

Ichigo: Darkling - Gravewight, Court - Summer

Keiich: Fairest - Muse, Court - Spring

Naruto: Beast - Windwing, Court - Autumn

Ranma: Ogre - Bloodbrute, Court - Summer

Shinji: Elemental - Manikin, Court - Winter

Life Gift 3: How To Train Your Dragon

I don't own How To Train Your Dragon.

Berk

Hiccup

"Hiccup!" One flash later and Hiccup stands naked where there had been a gray scaled dragon. The shapeshifter sighs while the black scaled dragon merely huffs out in laughter.

"Would you quit doing that? I need to hunt or fish and I can't do that when I'm like this!" Hiccup snaps at Ripple as the afternoon is rather chilly. It's been a learning experience for him regarding why humans wear cloths along, he's a rather quick learner as it's only been a day since the little girl first caused him to become a human.

"Ah... take it easy on the hatchling... She doesn't know any better." The Night Fury remarks a tad too eagerly and Hiccup gives the dragon a dirty look, only to look over at Ripple when the child sniffles softly.

"But... it's so... sparkly!" Ripple exclaims cheerfully before she asks, "When can we go home? I miss mommy and I want oatmeal too! With some cut fruit too!" The young girl crosses her arms over her chest and looks at him expectantly.

"I would love to take you back to your village, the problem is that I now lack the wings to do so. As for the hunger, you should have eaten some of that fish, blackie here fried up for you last night." He reminds the strange little human who seems convinced that he's her elder brother. Not really sure why she's capable of causing me to become a human either...

"But I didn't want to eat fish for dinner last night. I wanted duck!" Ripple explains as if it's the most obvious thing in the world.

Hiccup exchanges looks with the Night Fury, as if hoping that the other male understood that reasoning. "I'm a dragon, I'm not suppose to understand humans." The black dragon states. "You know, it's kind of fun watching that light show where you turn into a human. Then watching the two of you is rather entertaining to boot!" The Night Fury remarks with a dragon style grin.

"I'm hungry!" Ripple whines and Hiccup just sighs while looking back at the little human hatchling. "I miss my friends and Pot-Belly-Sir-Gruff-Oink!" Do I really want to know what a Pot-Belly-Sir-Gruff-Oink is? He wonders while just staring blankly down at Ripple.

Finally, he turns to the Night Fury and asks, "That reminds me, why are you sticking around? Shouldn't you gone to join your raiding buddies and enjoy human raise beasts they grabbed from the local village?" He kind of hears Ripple huff at being ignored.

"Who says they're my friends? Or that I partake in what they grab?" Snarls the Night Fury, causing Ripple to yelp and hide behind him after a high pitched yelp. "Sure, I might destroy a few of those posts but that's only to try and cut down how many dragons these Vikings kill! And from what I've seen of those dracos, I'm likely better off staying away from their homes!" The black scaled dragon snaps and then the other snaps his head to the right while walking off into the forest with his nose stuck up in the air.

In the end, Hiccup turns to regard the human hatchling and sighs. "Look, we wait for me to turn back to normal and then I'll take you back to your parents, ok? Which means that no more doing that thing that you do that causes me to become like this, alright?" He tries to reason with Ripple, not really sure if she'll listen to him, it's been little over seven years since Hiccup had anything to do with young dragons.

"Ah... but it's so sparkly to see it happen! Besides, why can't we walk to the village?" The human child asks Hiccup.

"For one, my feet are very sore and for another, I don't know how to navigate while on the ground. I also get this odd feeling that you will expect me to carry you once you're own feet get sore or you just get tired." He gives as an answer while rubbing a spot behind his neck where he think a bug has bitten him.

"Oh... I can make myself a flower crown!" Ripple chimes in, her eyes were looking towards the small grassy clearing a bit pass him. Within seconds, the young human seems content gathering flowers as he just stares at the little human.

That's it, I'm so getting that Night Fury to take her. Her magic likely doesn't work on him, at least, not that we know of... Hiccup thinks just seconds before he heads off to where the black scale dragon took off to in order to convince the other to take the human hatchling back to the village.

Astrid

They all stare at the headstone that had been hastily set up to mark Ripple's passing. She feels especially guilty about what happened yesterday and blames herself for being so complacent concerning watching over the group of children. If we should have been more aware of our surroundings, it was Fishlegs who noticed something wrong and if it weren't for his journal being stolen, then we all could have been killed by that beast when it judged we were too complacent to be on our guard...

Then as she leaves the site, a slightly familiar cry rings out. "Hiccup!" Then something bright flashes and a young man's voice curses. Astrid just stares for a few seconds, not sure if she should be allowing her hopes to get up but soon enough, she recovers to race into the woods to find a naked young man glaring down at the daughter of Valhallarama and the chief of their tribe.

"Ripple!" She cries out, doing her best to ignore the naked member of the opposite sex. Astrid has her dagger out while Ripple runs up to her and begin tugging on her hand.

"Astrid!" The young girl with a crown of flower cries while pulling her after the naked man. "You remember my brother, Hiccup! Hiccup! Where are you going?"

Oh yes, let's go after the one not wearing any cloths. I'm so sure that we won't be able to catch him later, it's not as though he can be hard to spot. Astrid think dryly while Ripple lets go to run after this so called 'Hiccup'. "Ripple! Your mother has been worried! We should get you home, I'm sure we can organize a search party to capture this guy." She manages to say while chasing after the pair, not at all wanting to tackle a naked man.

"But if we don't bring him along, then he'll leave again!" Ripple whines while she highly doubts the probability of this guy managing to leave the island stealthily. It wouldn't take long to organize a search party, particularly since Ripple's mother will likely head it.

They did catch up to the guy as he seems to be wheezing heavily from running away. "I am really beginning to hate you." The guy states while glaring at Ripple before trying to run once more. "And now is a good time to help out, you lazy scaly lizard of a dragon!" The naked young man snaps which causes her to freeze to glance around.

Suddenly a large shadow moves overhead and just as 'Hiccup' gets grabbed by said shadow, Ripple manages to hug the guy's legs. "Oh come on! You're home now, so, go home!" The guy says while she tries to wrap her head around the idea of a human working with a dragon, particularly one who's scales seem to shine blue under the light of the sun.

Well, that could explain how he got here and plans to leave. A part of her reasons while she feels rather flat footed in regards to what's going on before her. Finally shaking her head, she throws what she can at the fleeing dragon, which happens to be her dagger.

With a pained bellow, the dragon lets go of the naked young man while quickly raises up into the air, her dagger still in the back leg of the beast. Astrid quickly manages to grab the naked guy's arm and keeps him face down in the ground, ignoring the rather long brunet hair sporting red highlights. "Now, who are you and where is that dragon going?"

"Deer scat! What's your problem? I returned her! Why couldn't you grab her and take her to her parents?" Her captive asks and she gives the arm a bit of a twist, which causes 'Hiccup' to gasp in pain. "Name? They call me Stone! And for all I know, that dragon has left this island! It's not like he and I are allies or anything. We only met!"

Astrid closes her eyes, she can't tell if he's telling the truth or not. "Then why did that dragon help you?" She asks, keeping her boot firmly placed upon the upper portion of this guy's back. "And what's your real name?"

"Oh come on! I answered your questions, why don't you just let me leave? It's not like you'd believe me if I told you anything about me! I don't believe what happened to me and it happened to me!" Counters Stone but this time, giving his arm a twist doesn't cause him to answer either of those questions.

With a sigh, Astrid takes some rope from her pouch, usually she uses it for traps but it's all she has on her. Manages to grab the other arm, she ties the two behind his back as securely as she can. As she causes the naked guy to get up off the ground, it's then that Astrid notices that Ripple isn't around.

"I really protest this kind of treatment! I haven't done anything wrong!" Stone protests but she just ignores that, after all, he could easily be scouting around the island a raiding party.

Astrid and her captive find Ripple humming to herself while drawing in the dirt. "Ripple! Why did you leave?" She asks and the young girl glances up.

"Well, I wanted to give you two a chance to know each other." Ripple explains as though it was obvious. "So... when is the wedding?" The little girl asks curiously, which only causes the blond to sigh.

"He says his name is Stone, so he's not your missing brother." She decides to try and shake Ripple of this, likely, harmful delusion. "Your brother has been gone for ten years, Ripple. He's not coming back."

Ripple stares at Astrid with wide, almost teary eyes. "But... but... he is..." Ripple murmurs and she can't help but feel like the bad guy.

"Come on, let's get you home." The blond young woman says, pulling Stone with her as he was trying to inch away from her. Ripple sniffles and nods, much to the grumbling of the captive Stone.

It takes a bit but Astrid finally manages to get Ripple and Stone into the village proper. More then a few stopped what they're doing rather abruptly to stare at her naked captive. Although a few would then look at Ripple and then look between the two. The attention only causes her cheeks to redden more then a bit, already imagining the teasing that she'll get from various member of the village.

"Ripple! We thought you were eaten by that dragon! How did you survive?" Rotpelt asks upon approaching them as they head for the Mead Hall.

"Well, why would I be eaten?" Ripple asks curiously, which reminds Astrid that the gray beast is the one who carried Ripple off, not that strange black one. What happened to that one?

The blond feels uneasy at the thought that the gray dragon is still out there, somewhere without being punished for kidnapping the chieftain's only daughter. She just keeps marching until they are before the doors of the Mead Hall. Rotpelt had joined Ripple, although it wasn't long before Ripple's mother comes up the steps.

"Mommy!" Ripple cries out, running down to meet Valhallarama.

Hiccup

He hadn't liked being marched through the Viking village or having his hands tied behind his back. Hiccup hadn't cared about the humans gawking at him, no, what worries him is whether he'll be able to escape before that little girl manages to do that thing that keeps him from transforming into a dragon or just touching him period.

Then, Ripple cries out 'Mommy' and it snaps him out of his thoughts. Hiccup stops breathing at the sight of the adult coming up the stairs. That woman... He feels something stir within him and his eyes seem to burn, though why, he didn't know.

A strange mixture of relief and sorrow overwhelms him, he really wants to hide from her. "Ripple! Oh, my little girl! You're alright!" It really hurts hearing that come out of this woman's mouth.

And then, the woman looks up and looks at him, a memory of tired eyes seem to flare up within his mind. He wanted to move but his body seems to rooted to the spot. He finally begins breathing again when the woman turns to address the one who tied up his arms.

"Astrid, you didn't happen to take this one's cloths, did ya?" The woman asks in a playful tone, although there's this underline tone to that. Hiccup feels his captor stiffen and then stutter a bunch of non-sense.

The woman approaches them while Ripple holds onto the woman's hand. Hiccup notices the look of happiness upon the young hatchling's face, although how long it'll last is the question as Ripple hadn't eaten any of that rabbit that the Night Fury supplied them, including the fire the other had started to cook it as they know that humans don't eat meat raw.

"And just who might you be?" The woman asks and it takes him a few seconds to realize that she's talking to him. He found words escape him.

"He claims to be called Stone." Astrid states. "He some how managed to convince a dragon to try and help him in escaping from me too." The human adds. "He says he's not friends with the beast, but it took a dagger in its back legs to get it to drop him."

"Mommy, isn't it great? Hiccup's back home!" Ripple says while the woman studies him with a great deal of confusion.

"He's not your brother!" His captor reminds the hatchling while the other hatchling who's name he doesn't know move to stand next to Ripple. The woman's free hand take hold of his jaw and twists his head this way and that, not that he gets why she does so.

The woman lets go and he watches as her gaze goes to something on his chest. "What the..." He hears Astrid mutter and within seconds, he stands before the village as a dragon. The village gasps while the woman before him eyes leak.

"Hiccup... my little boy..." The woman says softly and he moves his body down so his forelimbs read upon the ground. He bows his head while Ripple moves to stand to his right.

"Told you he's Hiccup!" And then, Ripple touches his neck, light flashes and yet again, Hiccup is human. The woman reaches out to touch him but then pulls the hand away.

He looks down at his chest to find something now being featured upon his chest, the rune of Sacrifice in bold black. "My son has returned to us! Praise Odin! So somebody, give him something to cover himself with." The woman... his mother declares and this spurs the others into action.

It wasn't long before he's got a blanket wrapped about his waist. It wasn't long before, yet again, Hiccup is walking through the village, following his mother and younger sister as he can't bring himself to deny relations with this woman.

Astrid

The blond just watches as the member of the Haddock family walk down the Mead Hall, leaving her rather freaked out by not only witnessing a human transform into the very dragon who took Ripple by the simple touch by Valhallarama and then turned back into a human because of Ripple touching him, only the difference is that the rune of Sacrifice upon his chest, where it had glowed when Valhallarama touched Hiccup's jaw.

"That does explain how he got Ripple 'away' from that dragon, doesn't it?" Ruffnut says, it seems that her friend did ascend up the steps when the chieftain's wife had called for somebody to give Hiccup something to cover up with. "Kind of explains why that other dragon was willing to work with him too."

"Yea, I guess so..." She admits, not really sure what to make this this development. "But he said they called him Stone..." Astrid adds, not sure if the guy had lied or something more is going with him.

"Considering that gray hide of his, I guess we all know why they called him Stone." Ruffnut says before punching her gently in the shoulder. "But damn did you see how hung he is? I wonder how it translates to his dragon form or if it's because he's able to be a dragon?"

Her mouth opens but nothing comes out while she shakes her head. Then Astrid tosses her hands up and begins to walk away from Ruffnut. Her thoughts rather muddled about all of this, it didn't help that she did agree with Ruffnut about his... manhood.

To Be Continued . . .

Leopard Claws: Naruto

I don't own Naruto or the concept for wereleopards from Disney's Gargoyles.

Naruto

Naruto stares once more at the four scratch marks that continue to remain upon his left upper arm. The blond fourteen year old had kept this black leopard from mauling the client that Jiraiya had accepted as a mission for him while the pervert enjoys the sights of the island various bath houses. With a sigh, Naruto just looks away from his arm to look up at the statue of some beast done in an ancient style.

"Is something wrong?" Jun, his client, asks while continuing to brush away at the dirt upon this skeleton, it seems to be a horse judging by the hoof that's uncovered. Jun's the lead archaeologist of a team that's trying to find grains of truth within the island's mythology.

Not wanting to admit that he's a bit concern about the fact that even after a whole day, the scratch remains, the blond teenage genin and student of Jiraiya replies, "I'm just hoping that the leopard wasn't sick. If it is, then we might want to use the buddy system to make sure that the cat doesn't try to pick off one of the team."

"You have a good point there. Healthy predators don't attack people unless trained too." Jun agrees while taking a moment to sit up straight before drinking from a water bottle. "Perhaps you should go patrol the area." His client adds and Naruto gives Jun a blank look, they both know that her father is the one who wanted Jun to hire a ninja for this trip.

A member of the team, a slightly creepy guy name Ryuugo, a specialist in mythical occult, seems to be giving Jun doe eyes. The blond had noted how the creep would hang around Jun's tent during the evening, when everyone is turning in. Often times, Ryuugo would get chased off by him simply giving the man a flat look while spinning a kunai about his index finger. Naruto's fairly sure that Jun's father knew about this guy's 'affection' towards his princess but couldn't stop Jun from taking Ryuugo out into the jungle as the man is renown in his chosen field.

Although, where Ryuugo was when we were setting up camp, even I don't know. Naruto admits to himself while crossing his arms over his chest that's covered in an orange tank top. Unsurprisingly, Jun is the first to look away but it's just too hot out for him to do more then smile upon this victory.

The Land of Rainforest is large land mass that's half the size of the main continent that sports Hidden Villages. Because of its location, it houses dense tropical forests that are among the oldest in the known world. The Land of Rainforest is more known for their rich culture then their local resources as they have little in the way of ore and the various forests growing upon across the land mass are protected, not that it had always been the case as they did have their own empire at one point that worshiped some kind of feline deity.

The empire fell into decline when the deity had been offended by something its worshipers had done or not done. Naruto's heard it repeated again and again with each storyteller making minor or major edits as to what the ancients' crime had been that caused them to fall into disfavor of this deity. Privately, the blond figures that the feline just got bored and went off to find something better to do then listen to people wishing for stuff or complaining about how their life sucks.

Stifling a yawn, Naruto turns to stare at Ryuugo, unsurprised to find the occultist staring away from the wall covered in writing to stare longingly at Jun. Upon noticing him looking at him, Ryuugo pales slightly and quickly turns away, although Ryuugo does clinch a hand into a fist. Suddenly, Ryuugo bolts away, turning a corner of the wall.

"Must have been something he ate." The soon to be fifteen year old hears one of the grad students murmur dryly, this is followed by some chuckling. Naruto sighs, if he had learnt anything from his time at the academy, people don't like being stalked, although for some odd reason, Jun seems to be rather blind in the fact that Ryuugo is stalking her.

Ryuugo

It's not fair! That... that... brat just had to go and ruin it, didn't he? My one chance to bond with my beloved and that idiot teen just had to interfere! Now what am I suppose to do? Kami, I could only mark one other person, just one and it hadn't been Jun... Anger keeps Ryuugo in the form of a black leopard while he prowls some unused portion of the ancient city with growls, snarls, and hisses ringing out from the human turned leopard's throat.

Ryuugo's anger did get spent and the black leopard moves to rest out of the sun, not calm enough to transform back to his human form nor really caring what form he's in at the moment, he begins to consider going to Her and explain how it happened. The occultist is fairly certain that She would know how to correct this so that he can mark his beloved. Ryuugo shutters a bit as he realizes that if he does do so, he'll need something to offer in exchange for information upon how to solve this so that he can finally be with his beloved.

Finally, Ryuugo's nerves relax and within minutes, he is once more a man. Getting up off the ground, the occultist then pauses as he realizes that he doesn't know where he is in relation to where the dig site is or, for that matter, where the camp is. It takes him about a half hour to realize that all he has to do is follow his leopard track to return to the dig site.

Naruto

"It's still there..." Naruto mutters softly, it's been two weeks since that black leopard had tried to maul Jun and he had been scratched by the beast. Typically, the scratch would be gone in less then a day and yet, it's still there. Which is rather worrying as the blond is fairly sure that the fox is still within its cell within his body and thus, he still heals at an abnormal rate.

With a sigh, the fourteen year old grabs a spare note pad and writes a short note informing his current teacher about the leopard scratch upon his arm. Once that's done, he bites his thumb before summoning a toad to take the note to Jiraiya. With a sigh, he watches as the toad vanishes into the surrounding forest before looking up at the hint of the approaching dawn.

Then, without much warning then a cloth moving does he find himself under attack by a black leopard. He manages to grab the front of the muzzle and force the head to go up, using only a little chakra to aid in doing so. Wrestling with the feline, the blond ninja does his best to throw the wiggling feline over his head.

Once free of having such a heavy and angry feline pinning him to the ground, the blond ninja quickly creates a group of clones, which causes the recovered leopard to pause. When one of his clones moves to enter the tent to get his kunai pouch, the cat leaps for the clone. It takes a bit but he does manage to get onto the large cat's back while putting the black furred leopard in a head lock. The beast sounds furious at this but Naruto refuses to let the feline go as it's clear that the beast could very well find somebody new to attack.

One of the clones finally finds something heavy and hits the leopard over the head, knocking the beast out. After a few seconds, much to the grad students and his own surprise, the leopard transforms into Ryuugo. While not totally recovered by seeing a leopard become a man, he does use wire to tie the bastard up as its clear that the guy will try to escape.

Why would Ryuugo want to attack me? It's not like I've done anything physical to him to scare him off... Naruto muses while Jun orders some of the grad students to ransack Ryuugo's tent to see if there's any evidence of how the occultist managed to find a way to transform into a leopard.

With his clones to watch over what's happening, he heads into the tent to get dressed or at least put on a shirt as he had slept in a pair of bangy pants just in case something happened at night. As it's rather warm in the Land of Rainforests, he just couldn't manage to wear any more clothing besides the pants. He didn't exit until his belt is secure only to find this... he just didn't know how to describe the feline other then huge, powerful, and female.

"Well, you aren't you interesting..." The feline entity muses while Ryuugo begs the deity to free him so that he may 'kill' the 'barbarian' unworthy of her 'blessing'. It's clear to Naruto that the entity doesn't care one wit about Ryuugo's groveling or attempt at flattery.

"Ah... you don't happen to know why this," Naruto points to the marks Ryuugo's claws made on his body, "do you? Typically, it should have faded in under a day about two weeks ago."

Ryuugo becomes silent while the feline entity seems to purr. "It's not that I'm complaining, it's just, well, usually it doesn't let such things remain on my body for long." The blond ninja thinks to add, becoming aware that this just might be that ancient cat deity that was once worshiped across this land.

"Yes, I can sense one of those in you. I must admit, the Shinigami's aid in sealing it within you is rather surprising." The deity muses. "I believe I like you, Naruto-kun. You are rather... divine and yet, it doesn't take away from you having your feet firmly planted upon the ground. After all, forgiveness is divine !"

Naruto blushes, not really sure how to take this deity's compliments. "I think a lot of people would argue with you about me being anything but a demon, ma'am." He finds himself stating in a slightly dry tone but colored with embarrassment.

"Yes, most humans are idiotic and often refuse to see what's right in front of them, sometimes no matter how many times they walk into it." The divine feline says with a soft sigh and Naruto sighs, knowing that he can fall into that category as well. "Take this one for example, he continues to try for her," the deity turns to stare at Jun, "not taking the hint that she's firmly disinterested in him. He continues to believe that just because she's nice to him that she returns his feelings."

Ryuugo reddens, pales, reddens, and then pales. "Yea, well, most of the girls in my class were aiming for Sasuke Uchiha as their boyfriend and that prick never gave them anything to cling too. Not that I'm one to talk as I pursued Sakura in much the same fashion. Not that I know much about relationships as I never really interacted with people... Not that I'll ever be able to, considering that my current teacher is a self declared super pervert." Naruto admits with a sigh and running a hand through his blond hair, he stops looking at Ryuugo mid way through that confession.

"At least you're aware of the fact. Although, you must have had a lot of fun giving all that questionable advice a try, huh?" The feline entity asks and he blushes.

"Well, yea. Sure, it didn't grant me a good reputation but I have so much leeway in the manner department because of it. The looks on their faces when I followed it were just so enjoyable..." Naruto admits with a grin. "Not that it helped so much with getting Kakashi to pass us though..." He admits, his smile gone.

"He was the worst teacher to assign to a team that sported a avid self styled loner and a social out-cast." Naruto admits before frowning and giving the deity a suspicious look. "Ok, what are you doing to me? I mean, it took years to get comfortable playing the fool and you just stripe it away like that." He snaps his fingers, slightly angered at the fact that he suddenly feels very exposed.

"Nothing more then giving you a much needed release of your internal pressure to stay in character. Not that I don't understand why you took the role of the fool, so few would see you as a serious threat but it means that they won't take you seriously in any real situation either." The deity responds and Naruto just looks a bit grim as he has been getting tired of nobody ever listening to him, be it what he leaves unspoken or what how he says things.

"I guess..." He admits and then sighs. "You're not going to answer my original question are you? Or is it because I should already know the answer to it?" He muses out loud and glances down at Ryuugo, studying the creepy stalker for a few minutes as he goes through what he knows about the guy. "He could only mark one person and he wanted to mark Jun, but I got between them and got your mark instead." Naruto says looking over at the female deity to know that he's right.

Ryuugo clearly wants to say something but is likely unaccustomed of ranting and raving before an audience. "You didn't even bother to ask her if she wanted to be marked, did you? Of course you didn't..." Mutters Naruto, shaking his head, knowing that it's useless to talk with Ryuugo, not if the man is willing to make a bargain with a higher power and force that power upon an unsuspecting person.

"Am I going to be wearing your mark for the rest of my life? I think a lot of people how know what I carry will become suspicious of me as it still upon my skin." The teenage ninja asks the deity.

"Would it be so bad wearing my mark?" The deity asks and after a few minutes of staring at each other, the feline sighs softly. "How about this, it'll only appear whenever you are in your leopard form? As you sent that note, why don't we tell your current master that Ryuugo here, found an old folk remedy for you that caused the mark to fad? That's rather believable, don't you think?"

Naruto breaths out of his nose, tension in his shoulders fading. He nods while filing the fact that he can now transform into a leopard. "I guess, although, does the Kyuubi affect this leopard form or not?" He decides to ask and for the next few minutes, he learns more about the ins and outs of this 'blessing' of the feline deity's.

"So... what will become of him?" Naruto finally asks after a period of silence. "I doubt you want your existence to be revealed like this or because of him." The blond states.

"Yes, what will I do with you? You already paid, or is that bribed, me with cat nip to get this modified blessing. There's always that unnamed favor you owe me... Looks like I'll be taking you up on it rather earlier then expected." The feline deity muses and then, without warning, the two fade while the rest of the group leave until he's alone outside of his tent. The signs of the fight erased.

Time begins and Naruto turns to regard that spot upon his arm to find it blank of the claw marks. He stretches a bit before heading for Ryuugo's tent to throw some random things together to make a convincing fake medicine to explain why the leopard claw marks are gone from his arm.

WizardBadger: Harry Potter

I don't own Harry Potter.

"I guess you've never heard of Therians, have ya Harry?" The gruff man asks, startling the young wizard. With a sigh, the built thirty something year old presses his lips. "I know that wizards and witches have something call Animagus, but that's a talent they train. With Therians though, we don't need training, at some point, something within us just snaps and we transform into our inner beast."

"One could say that the magi learnt to that particular path of transfiguration from studying natural occurring shape-shifters, often called therianthropy, Therians for short." Kevin tells him. "None really know why therianthropes occur but they do. Of course, not all Therians are capable of using magic, which is why we don't have much of a presence in magical communities around the world. Although, considering that in the past, typically one person born for every two hundred humans are born to be a Therian, although that percentage has been undergoing a series of changes since the beginning of nineteen hundreds."

Harry just stares at the man, feeling rather taken back by that. "How long lived are Therians?" The twenty year old asks, finally deciding that if he's going to be even more... 'special' he might as well get the facts. It's hard to dispute what Kevin is telling him, not when he had spent at least four days of living in the forest as a badger. I would have thought a feline or maybe take after my dad and be a stag...

"It depends on how you balance your time as a beast against your time as a human. If you split your time evenly between the two, a very long time as doing so some how causes time's 'touch' on you to be almost non-existent. Besides, it's more likely that you'll die through violent methods then by old age. I've yet to hear of a Therian doing so and I've tried to stay in contact with those from different countries." Kevin admits. "The average life expectancy is four decades once a Therian transforms for the first time."

"They're killed by humans in either form, huh?" Harry asks and Kevin sighs. "That's not really reassuring to know." He murmurs while looking down at his hands. I'd almost think that this is a result of some ancient family magics... He muses to himself while trying to keep from vomiting as he suddenly recalls just what kind of meals he had during those four days.

Harry finally takes the water and pills to settle his stomach. It takes a few minutes before the pills take effect. His tension in his upper body loosens. "How is it that the... common folk not know about Therians?" He asks as to how this group of people manage to slip through the media.

"Who says we hide? There's a subculture all about people calling themselves Furries or Therians. Why hide when there's million of people claiming to be what we are?" Kevin muses and it's then that Harry finally places the smell that's coming from his host.

"How many claim to be werewolves then?" Harry asks while trying to find some feature that goes with the animal he smells coming from Kevin. "Why would anyone want to admit to being unable to control themselves during a full moon?"

"Oh, but they edit it so that they don't suffer from such things." Kevin goes on to explain to him. "They typically turn werewolves into wolf Therians. You'd be amazed what they've done to vampires... Or maybe not."

Harry presses his lips together as he turns away from Kevin to stare at the wall opposite of him. "So... what happens now? What kind of expectations do you and the rest expect from me?" If it's one thing he's learnt, it's everyone expect something from you.

"Nothing beyond keeping yourself from the media's eye, but then, you being a wizard, you already do that. I also think you won't have to be convinced to keep what you are from your fellows either, after all, they do, at time, learn how to transform into animals." Kevin remarks and Harry nods his head in agreement.

Not that any of them would expect me to become a badger animagus... Harry muses to himself while sighing. It's not as though he's stayed close to Hermione or Ron since they began working at different jobs. Ron managed to get onto his favorite team as a reserve keeper and Hermione pursuing a career in law.

Harry himself has dived right into rebuilding his family's holdings and trying to figure out what to do with his godfather's holdings too. He's been buying up land in and around small villages in Scotland. What he plans to do with the land grants are pretty vague, it use to be a toss up between creating farms and all magical towns or creating a magical amusement park.

As soon as Harry feels steady on his feet and has had a good, warm meal, he leaves the boar Therian's rented cabin. Once a few feet away, he uses Apparition to appear at the 12 Grimmauld Place in London, hoping that the family's library might hold some information about Therianthropy. If only to confirm that such a condition is as old as Kevin alluded to.

After all, it's not as though Harry's lacking on forested lands to roam as a badger.

Time Loop: Space Age: Harry Potter

I don't own Harry Potter.

Harry sighs while looking down into his mug of cider, wondering what to do now. It's been over a few hundred loops since he began hosting holidays within sight of Hogwarts on those floating platforms. He's even gotten tired of creating the first magical amusement parks too or zoos.

About his wrist is a special magical item that helps prolong the Polyjuice Potion within his body. The other magical items upon his being is a thick collar that animates a fake, eleven year old version of himself while the twin rings upon his index fingers grants the puppet the ability to use magic. The various earrings upon his eyebrows and ears allow him to influence the faux boy.

There's even an enchantment in place that gives the faux boy his very own name, leaving him without one. Not that it matter much, it just means that those capable of using magic just don't pay him any mind, which is a pulse but also a negative as it means that he doesn't get refills of his drink or for his food to arrive more as an after thought.

Each magical item the anchor wears is something he himself created and enchanted within hours of Hagrid leaving him at the Leaky Cauldron. He's come to enjoy the time between his birthday to the day before Hogwarts begins as it's the time where none really take the time to spy upon him. And then, a thought crosses his mind.

I wonder how high in the air I can have those platforms hover at? He wonders, after using those platforms regularly since he began throwing those festivals. Although the problem will likely be about circulating air within the shield and keeping the air from escaping.

Might be a good idea to have a large garden in hopes of filtering the air.

After a few minutes of musing about it, he gulps down the remainder of the cider in his mug. With a slight grin, he's found something to do, after all, if he manages to pull this off, he could give space travel a try. Or underwater travel. He thinks to himself, dropping some coins upon the table before leaving.

Picking up his hat, he heads for the door. With a wicked grin plastered upon his face and the snow drifting into the tavern, he causally casts a warming charm upon his cloths. He just walks, not really in much of a hurry as he did set up his tent between two buildings. The entrance of the alley sports an illusion to keep others from noticing the tent while an enchanted set of planks keep the snow from piling up on them.

Upon entering into his tent and with a flick of his fingers, the dangling crystal strings light up. Taking off his hat and cloak, his boots seem to vanish just as he steps off the 'porch' but they appear again when Harry is a few feet away. He walks over to the table and sits down upon the couch. Picking up the remote and pushing the power button, the enchanted television comes on.

He channel surfs to find a movie and then puts the remote back onto the table. The anchor then picks up a sketch book along with a pencil, resting the pencil behind his ear, he flips through the sketch book until he finds a futuristic looking sketch. Taking the pencil from his ear, the seemingly grown wizard begins to add to the rough draft of the metallic appearing building.

He knows that the final product will be something totally different but at this stage, it's about putting everything you think you'll need on the building and then slowly taking or modifying it. He already has the necessary shields, they just need to be modified to be more air tight and to be strong enough to keep outside influences from getting through.

T (+

It had taken him four years to create the final product, each of the previous platforms had allowed him to test and modify each of the shields, particularly allowing him to find out how being that air tight will affect the structure along with the living things within. Not that I used actual animals... Those golems worked out rather well.

Not that it should surprise him, Harry's got a lot of experiences with creating golems be they based upon himself or using them as a work force. They didn't need to eat, sleep, or want to be paid, which almost means that they don't gossip or need to socialize at all. He use to give hiring unemployed witches and wizards a try, only for them to take their time with any tasks he's given them, take long breaks, and often take unscheduled time off among some of the things that ticked him off. And then Harry thought to give mundanes and Squibs a try but he ran into other troubles with that too.

Since using man power failed him, he began to puzzle out how to create his very own golems. The Black Library helped in that pursue and so did the Ministry's own collection of books. Then spending time going to mundane schools gave him ideas of how to make use of his materials so they don't need as much magic to be animated it. It took him a long time to figure out the trick of enchanting ropes string about the golem in mimicking muscle groups. Putting on a fake skin and the ropes ripple under the skin, giving the illusion that the golem is a living body.

He needs people to think they're alive as he does send them into the mundane society to purchase things. While he can put shades to cover unblinking eyes, it's harder to have people to ignore how the golem isn't breathing or if the person is touching the golem's arm, how their muscles don't flex. Sure, he could have just slapped a much of magic over them so nobody think of such details but he was trying to create a golem that can pass as a living being without using a lot of magic.

Well, considering nobody has yet to figure out that the Harry Potter at Hogwarts is anything but a real boy, I'd say that it works. Smart move to give it something that mimics a circulatory system and filled it with clone blood of myself. He thinks, although there are still a few details he'll have to work on or else go ahead and perform that cloning ritual. It shouldn't be that hard to animate a blank body...

Giving his head a minor shake, he focuses on the grid that he can see from his position upon the platform. A very light blue shimmers, the glow rippling throughout the shield surrounding the floating structure. Sometimes the ripples meet and a darker blue flares up for a few seconds. Glancing down, all Harry could see is clouds.

He smiles at the scenery of his new home, although he knows he's got a long way to go before he can set up a home on the Moon or even on Mars or even orbiting the Earth. Harry didn't know why but magic done by humans seem to fail after two years unless it under the Ozone layer of Earth. The anchor plans to learn just what kind of magic can survive off world but for now, he just wants to enjoy the moment.

It's nice not to be attending Hogwarts... It's not like the school has anything to offer me anyone either. Harry muses while moving away from the window to flop onto the couch while the large screen tv playing a Star War movie.

Harry studies a map of the UK upon the table sporting a bunch of pins. Each pin represents an area that he's searched. Not all of the pins came from this single loop, no, he's searched during previous loops too, but still, he's yet to find the ritual site that Dumbledore set up. He's even dug down to below sea level and still, nothing.

The anchor rubs his chin as he moves to stare at the model of Hogwarts which includes separate models of the school's different floors. Each model even sport tiny dolls that move about while sporting neon names over their heads. He downs his whiskey and moves to sit down in his chair.

"I'm missing something... I know it..." Harry mutters while using his right hand to run over his collection of earrings on his right ear. His left hand is touching his right elbow as his gaze moves between the various models of Hogwarts and the map on the table.

He watches as a ghost doll moves through a wall between two classrooms. "Dumbledore could influence the ghosts but without the ring, he couldn't have complete command of them." Harry says with a slow smile, nodding slowly. "Just because I removed Albus' memories doesn't mean I removed his set commands." The anchor admits with a sigh, which also means that commanding ghosts to search for this ritual site would be his best bet.

He glances over to one of the three golems and uses magic to order the faux person to go fetch the ring from the Gaunt's Shack, after all, the magic on the ring won't harm the golem at all. He then climbs to his feet and has the two remaining golem follow him as he'll need the Elder Wand to undo the enchantments on the ring. It's been a few thousand loops since he united the three Hallows.

Exiting out of the tent that he, once more, set up in Hogsmeade, in one of its alleyways. Harry turns and within seconds, the two golems are soon wrapped up in the illusion of two prominent members of the school board. It takes him a bit to do himself before they march off toward Hogwarts. With the Chamber of Secrets being open, it shouldn't be that surprising to be seeing member of the board popping up without appointments.

Once he's sent Filch to bring Dumbledore to the main gate, Harry takes a moment to check on his faux twelve year old to see if he's roaming about. Then he sends his body double to check on the Weasley twins, not wanting them to be using the map. By the time Albus arrives at the main gate, the anchor is secure that nobody is awake to witness him disarming Dumbledore and taking the wand Hallow for his own.

He'll use the Hallow to transfigure his current wand to appear as the Elder Wand. Harry wouldn't be surprise to learn that this would likely be the first time anyone had thought of such a deception but then, Wizards and Witches do flaunt their wealth and power. If they have a powerful artifact that can only be used by them, they'd wear it or be sure to casually use it in public.

"Ah, Minister Fudge, what a pleasant surprise." The headmaster says and he merely smiles before casually summoning the Deathstick from Albus' pocket. The fact that the wand comes doesn't really shock him that much, after all, he's welded this particular wand plenty of times and just before time restarts does he remain the master of this wand.

A simple stunning spell from the Elder Wand causes Albus to freeze and it doesn't take more then a second to modify the man's mind. With that done, he takes out the yew and dragon heartstring wand from his pocket, holding it in his left hand, he uses the wand in his right to transfigure the yew wood to alter until the wand is the Deathstick's double. Putting the faux Hallow into the headmaster's pocket, they part, the headmaster heading back into the school while he and his golems head for Hogsmeade.

When the golem sent to retrieve the Hallow Stone, he has the golem hold it and then with an over powered cancel spell, the magic protecting the ring and the soul bit vanish but so does the magic animating the golem holding the ring. Harry winces a bit at the but levitates the ring off the floor and takes it from where it's hovering. With pressed lips, he reanimates the fallen golem without using the wand as he doesn't want to accidentally transfigure the golem into a woman as that's the kind of cloths and look he had done when making that golem.

Harry takes the wooden 'car' that he crafted and enchanted to fly. He takes it out of the closest and flies it high over the Forbidden Forest. Once there, he calls forth all of the ghosts native to the UK. It takes only ten minutes for all of the ghosts to appear. Many look rather hasty but also curious too.

"By the Resurrection Stone, I have summoned you." Harry addresses the crowd of ghosts. "And thus, I have need of your serves. I seek a site of a temporal ritual, preferably one that Albus Dumbledore has visited and used. If any of you know what I speak of, please approach and tell what you know." He then waits to see if any of them will volunteer before he makes it an order.

T (+

Harry studies the jewelry box that took him four years to find. He had already visited the old site that Dumbledore had used previous but it hasn't been in use for decades. Then, Peeves had informed him of a jewelry box Albus had forbidden the poltergeist to ever touch after he had been placed with his aunt.

It helped that Albus is dead and thus most of the enchantments that surround the jewelry box have wasted away without being able to feed off of the man's magic. Even with the Elder Wand, the anchor had trouble finding the box previously years. Harry had even used Moody's magical eye in hopes of locating the box but even equipping the eye on a golem didn't yield much.

He could have order a ghost to be his eyes but he rather not involve such an unreliable element on top of the various paintings too. Harry didn't know how Fawkes fit into the security but then, Harry still doesn't get why the magical bird even found Albus to be worthy of his company. At least I know where to go to get phoenix tears, ashes, and feathers.

Harry then moves to his pensieve and reviews memories of memories that belong to Albus Dumbledore for a spell that would allow one to teleport into such a tiny space. Less then a few seconds have passed since he dived into his memories. Once he's ready, Harry teleports into the expanded space within the jewelry box, making a note to think of a way to make use of such an interesting bit of magic. He's pretty sure that there's a number of ways to use it in the future.

"Well, it's nice of you to finally arrive, Mr Potter." A woman's voice chimes in and he turns to find two beautiful women and a young preteen lounging about a ruined ritual space. "We have so much to discuss after all." The one sporting a darker skin tone then the others.

Harry just gulps and backs up a bit, not really sure what to make of the three lounging about. "Really? I would have thought you'd be expecting Albus Dumbledore..." The anchor trails off, not liking the fact he doesn't know a thing about the three or that he'll be able to overpower them if they decide to get violent.

He's not sure what it is about them but they just have this aura about them that made him feel as though he's outclassed and outgunned.

To Reader:

Like you can't guess who they are or why they want to speak with him.

A Tiny Accident: Harry Potter

As Harry sits upon the bed within the Hospital, the eleven year old tries to sort out the various details that lead him to his current situation and appearance. With the tip of his tail moving against his knee while his two hands rest upon his fur covered legs, the famous boy looks out of the nearest window. Unlike at Hogwarts, he's very much alone in the room as the nurse has been gone for close to five minutes now, grabbing him something warm to drink.

It started that day Malfoy tried to fling something into Neville's cauldron. Of course, being a simple minded prat, he didn't think twice about the consequences or of somebody getting between the item being thrown and Neville's cauldron. He admits, recalling how the explosion of Malfoy's potion had flung that potion about the room, some of it into other cauldrons and then they would explode.

Harry rubs his forehead before running a hand over the fur covering his head, it had only been their third potion lessen too. He makes a face, recalling the smells that assaulted him along with the overwhelming sense of being off kilter. It's amazing the House Elves managed to rid my robes of that stench in a single night. But then again, perhaps I shouldn't as they did manage to repair all of Dudder's old things too. Making them seem almost as good as new.

With a sign, he leans back, allowing his back to touch the wall not far behind him as he recalls the march to the Hospital Wing. Trust the Slytherins to stop walking just because they don't have the common sense to take off their footwear. Harry thinks dryly.

He recalls how the rest of the Gryffindors grouped upon the beds, waiting from an adult to arrive. Harry had been the only one to take out his wand to try and alter his glasses before moving onto his footwear. The glasses began to trouble him within minutes of them walking away from the Potion Classroom, likely due to the alteration done to head in general. He recalls how nobody even bothered to crack open a textbook to relieve the boredom, but then, some likely didn't grab their book bags when they left.

Oh yea, can't forget the bristling match that started when Snape left to retrieve Madam Pomfrey. Honestly, you'd think they'd know better then to start picking a fight. I swear, most of the guys just used the accident as an excuse to act out. He muses with a scowl. "Not that Malfoy was ever punished for his part in the accident. Heck, the only reason nobody was punished likely been because a member of the Slytherin House would have been given detention."

The defense of him not knowing any better fell short because Malfoy grew up in a magical home and likely taught by the 'best' tutors money could buy. They should demand their money back, the prat clearly didn't learn anything during those years. Harry thinks with a sigh. So glad I don't have to worry about that anymore.

Harry glances over to the door and to the nurse has returned. "Thanks." He says while taking the mug from the woman. The nurse smiles warmly before leaving the room, likely to attend to the needs of another patient.

It takes a bit before Harry recollects his thought concerning past event. Rubbing the front of his throat, he then rotate his neck about, causing minor sounds of popping and a small sound of something cracking. He then takes turn rotates his shoulders a bit, the mug switches hands and he kind of get an idea of what he had been musing about when the nurse arrived with his hot drink.

Oh yea, Professor McGonagall arrives at the end of the school day. She just marches right into the back, not even trying to reassure us. Heck, Snape showed more interest in us then she did. After an hour, she just marched right out, not even trying to comfort anyone. And she's the Deputy Headmistress! Harry thinks while drinking from his mug.

The least she could have done was speak with the rest of the house if not the school about treating us normally. He thinks to himself, recalling the jokes featuring bananas, monkeys, and picking bugs off each other. Although, to be fair, none of the other teachers seemed to have been motivated to interfere on our behalf, well, nobody did make such comments when Snape was around, but then, that's likely is because they don't want a months detention and loses points. Harry mentally adds.

He recalls the beginning of the next day and how they were given a potion to protect them from parasites from the outer variety like fleas and inner ones like tapeworms. The potion is one that is typically given to pets to protect them from said parasites, which didn't really help their situation when the rest of the school learnt that little fact. Even Snape had to take said potion.

If they have such a potion then everyone should be given it. It's not like humans don't have their own brand of parasites, what do they call lice? Harry thinks darkly. "Tapeworms live in anything's intestines too." He murmurs out loud.

As he finishes his drink, he reflects that this could be the best Christmas he's ever had, which is rather said considering he currently looks like a monkey and had just left his birth country, not really sure if his accounts will be transferred like he requested either. On the bright side, I finally began to take control of my life.

The doctor finally comes in. "Mr Potter, I have your results here to go over with you." Doctor Feasey says upon taking a seat upon one of the chairs. "The results of your famous scar tell us that it is actually a Horcrux, the soul piece is surprisingly small, which is rather worrying."

"Why is that worrying?" He asks. Harry's right index finger moves up and down.

"It means that whoever created it has made a bunch of them before they made you into one. Don't worry, we can deal with it without killing you or doing you any undo harm." Doctor Feasey explains and he sighs.

"We also want to begin you on potions that will, in time, correct your previous injuries you have suffered during your childhood." This causes him to tense as he hadn't expected his health report to be able to hint about it. "We won't press you to talk about it but we do have people for you to talk to when you're ready to do so." The man explains. "Also you might want to contact a lawyer to begin to legal proceedings."

"I see. Do any of them operate in both... societies?" Harry asks, not sure if it's an acceptable to call non-magicals Muggles.

"We typically use the terms Mundanes and Magi." Doctor Feasey explains. "Now then, as to your changed appearance, we believe we know why none of your school nurse's cures work. It seems that the potion altered the expression of your genes. The cures were trying to remove a continuous magical presence on you when there wasn't one to remove."

Harry finds that answer to be rather believable. "We believe that going through Animagus training will allow you to regain your previous appearances." His doctor informs him. "We would like you to give us a copy of the potion accident and any of updates you were given about your condition."

"Ah... I don't mind giving the copy of the incident but nobody ever gave us updates about our condition." Harry admits before asking, "And how do I give you a copy of the incident?"

Doctor Feasey frowns, it's clear that the man's opinion of the staff of Hogwarts is going down. "There are ways to extract copies of a person's memory and put them into an artifact called a pensieve." The man explains and Harry wonders if such things are used as evident in court.

"Ah. Do you need the memory now?" Harry asks curiously.

"No, but we would want to deal with your Horcux. We have everything prepared, so if you would follow me?" Doctor Feasey says while getting up off the chair.

He unfolds his legs and then moves off the exam table. He's sure to grab his jacket which holds his shrunken trunk, he didn't bring Hedwig's cage as he didn't feel like imprisoning the snowy owl. He's sure that Hedwig will be able to find him when he needs her.

To Be Continued . . .

The AA of PantherBoy 2: Harry Potter

I Don't Own Harry Potter

Well, well, well... Looks like they did keep the pieces of the staff, just destroyed the head. Realms muses before Harry could unroll the scroll that came with the fourteen cm bit of wood. The wereleopard just rolls his emerald eyes while unrolling the scroll.

"Any more interesting tidbits you want to pass along?" The eleven year old asks the sentience sword that feeds off of the blood of its welder. As the scroll unrolls, he can hear the snowy owl fluffs up her feathers with a soft click of her beak now that she's finished drinking from the bowl of water that Harry had provided upon her return.

Nope, not really. Realms remarks as he begins to scan the contents of the letter. Tomorrow is the day where he's to head for London to get aboard of some train that will take him along with the other 'muggle' raised students to Hogwarts, at which point they'll be given instructions upon how to harness their magic.

With pressed lips, Harry shakes his head at how flowery the explanation is about why they never destroyed the staff. Sure, they destroyed the top of the staff as none like that part of it as it bought up memories of punishment they suffered at the hands of the ex-Queen of Opar. Not that he really care much about what they did with the staff, unlike majority of his fellow 'brothers' in the Brotherhood of Leopard-Men, he only suffered at her hands for less then three months while some suffered for decades. At least it explains why I couldn't 'bond' with another wooden foci, if they had destroyed it all, then I could have... Maybe.

"Mind doing a little scalping, Realm?" Harry asks the sword leaning next to the bed while holding the staff sliver with his left hand. The wood seems to melt and within a few seconds, the eleven year old is holding something akin to the few wands he's seen during those following times that they had taken to visiting that magical shopping district in London.

He whistles at the finely 'carved' cat head at the handle of the wand. The grip of the handle sports leopard spots. Such personal touches illuminating to Harry's true nature. Looks like it'll pass inspection, although I could have done without the leopard head... Harry muses while putting the wand away.

With the wand in the trunk, the wereleopard transforms into his hybrid form before picking up Realm. The room expands as Harry rises the magical sword up in the air. Stepping away from the trunk and bed, he slowly began to go through his typical work out to keep himself in tip-top shape. Given his history of adventures whenever Harry was sent away, the wereleopard could only imagine what kind of danger they'll be getting into at a magical school.

Kids learning to use magic? That's only asking for trouble. He thinks to himself while Realm arcs in the space before him. Harry rather doubts the safety of the student populous and worries about what kind of things they teach their students.

o - T - o

September 1, 1991

Hogwarts Express

Harry grunts softly as the noise from the platform intrude upon his nap. The young wereleopard had arrived near dawn to find the train waiting and once it became apparent that nobody was going to greet him, the black furred leopard-boy climbs onto one of the carts before selecting one, giving his wand a try by preforming a few wards that he recalls Realm explaining to him once upon a time.

It had taken a lot of effort on his part but Harry believed the wards were set up. With them up and deciding not to invite Realm to begin criticizing his attempt, the eleven year old laid out on the floor of the compartment as the benches were too narrow and didn't possess much in the way of a cushion upon them. I never would have guessed magic could take so much effort... But then, none of my 'Brothers' have tried to preform magic either...

'Are my wards still up?' Harry asks, focusing his 'spoken' thoughts to Realm. Most of the time, he never bothered with this form of communication as he didn't care what people thought of him but he didn't want to alert anyone to the location of this compartment. It's why he had drawn the curtains across the window before setting up the wards.

They are shaky, but they're up. Not bad for a first timer but then, not the greatest either. The sword remarks and he just snorts softly while stretching his body a bit. Not even sure how any have missed them either, guess they haven't bothered to reason that some of the students might be advance enough to ward their compartment cars.

Harry opens up the bag he kept out of the trunk so he didn't have to lug it up and down from the overhang. Slowly, voices of students seep through the walls of the compartment, signaling that the train is filling up so that it can then leave the station. It takes a few minutes for him to find his walk-man and a travel version of Chinese Checkers.

Black. Realm says as he fits the headphones of the walk-man about the sword's hilt. The play button clicks as Harry sits on the opposite seat of Void of the Realm, being sure to put the black marbles on the board before choosing his color, this time he picks red.

Once the board sports the two colors, it raises up and takes to hovering between Realm and himself. Harry faintly hears the music that is playing from the walk-man. If the eleven year old wanted to, he could have shifted to the hybrid form to pick up the music more clearly. As the students say their fair-wells to their parents/guardians, Realm makes a move on the opposite side of the board.

He mostly just leans forward and after a few minutes of thought, moves on of his own marbles. The train begins to jerk and the fair-wells grow louder, not that either really bothers the Chinese Checkers board hovering between Realm and Harry. The train's whistle sounds out while the murmur from beyond the compartment quiets down.

A some point, during the second side of the walk-man's tape beginning to play does the door leading out into the hallway rattle. After a few curses, somebody orders somebody to open the door, only causing it to rattle. Next comes a command to give the door the shoulder and this causes Harry to turn his head just so, allowing him to see the door a bit better without taking his focus off of the game of Chinese Checkers, knowing that if he allows his focus to shift, Realm will alter his side of the board just enough that he wouldn't notice it until a few rounds later.

The door just holds fast, just. Harry lets out a soft hiss as somebody tries to ram the door inward. He shakes his head while squaring his shoulders while pulling away from leaning towards the board. The emerald eye leopard-boy doesn't bother to ask Realm to reinforce the door, if the sword didn't want their game interrupted then Realm will ensure that the door won't give and if the sword didn't care... Well, he rather not 'pay' for the service by forfeiting at least four of his turns just to see that the door stays close.

It's not as though we can't restart at a later date... Harry thinks to himself while wincing at the loud crack as the door and a rather husky built pre-teen enters into the room. Not even bothering to keep his eyes on the board, he turns to give flat, frank looks at the trio who wanted into the compartment.

"I wonder how much that'll cost your parents..." Harry wonders as he reaches out to grab the board. He feels it resting on his one hand then sees it as his full attention is upon the blond and his muscle.

"Your... your..." The blond stutters and Harry's lips twist up a bit. "I am rather famous, aren't I? Or it that infamous? Not that I'm prone to give people my real name during my summer vacations." The eleven year old sporting emerald eyes bemuses with a sly grin as he leans fully back.

"Your... Harry bloody Potter." The muscle who wasn't laying on the floor states and Harry chuckles at the god smacked look upon the blond's face, particularly as it's directed to said muscle. Likely didn't expect him to speak, at all.

"Well, other then 'bloody' actually being James, then right on the money." He answers. "And I don't do autographs, you never know what you could be signing when you do." Harry adds, although dealing with these three were already growing tiresome.

The blond finally gathers himself and introduces himself while stepping over the as of yet door bashing muscle, taking a seat next to Realm, although the blond clearly sports a flash of confusion concerning the sword. "I am Draco Malfoy, hire to house Malfoy."

Harry raises a slight eyebrow before realizing that Draco is what is commonly called a 'Pure-Blood'. "Oh? Huh. Why are you on the train if you don't need to be? I mean, why send you to the train station when they could have used other means to send you straight to the school's property?" The emerald eye leopard-boy asks, mostly wanting Draco to confirm his suspicion of why Draco's parents would want him riding on a 'muggle' enchanted train.

This causes each of the three to look rather baffled while the one who broke the door finally gets up off the floor and the door. "What are you on about? All Hogwarts students arrive viva the train." Draco answers.

Harry frowns just enough while replying, "But you're a Pure-Blood, aren't you? Why would your parents want you to ride on something clearly 'muggle' in origin? Why not send you to school in a carriage or through the Floo Network? I was lead to believe only those muggle-raised needed to take the train as they don't have the magical means to travel to the school."

This seems to cause Draco and the two un-named boys to look like they were going to... Well, it just seems that they weren't use to thinking deeply on. anything in the case of the two muscle. Draco's mouth would begin to move but it seems that he stumped the other boy in a rather spectacular fashion. Guess magic doesn't cure inbreeding.

"Yes, well, I... ah, I know people!" Draco exclaims in a fluster before paling and looking embarrassed about the out burst. "I mean, I can introduce you to the people." The blond hastily says in correction.

"That's nice..." Harry says in a droll way. "If that's all, could you please leave? We're rather busy with our game of Chinese Checkers." He says is a very dismissive way, following this up with a look that heavily suggests that they leave.

The trio retreat rather quickly, not even bothering to say a parting comment. You sure have a way with your peers. Realm says while the door is repaired and then the compartment glows briefly which means that Realm set up wards about the room.

Harry merely snorts softly while rearranging the board so that they may start all over again. It wasn't long before Realm requests that he changes the tape after they finished a game. It wasn't long before he becomes restless and he begins to look for something else to do that causes the eleven year old to remain seated.

Vampire the Masquera? When did I pack this? The wereleopard wonders but it seems that those D&D books he had packed hadn't made it to his pack but into his trunk. With a shrug, he opens the book and begins to read it.

Some time later, the train jerks and that causes the dozing eleven year old leopard-boy wakes. Harry stretches a bit and yawns, while noticing that there wasn't much in the way of sunlight on the curtains.

Putting something into the book as a bookmark, the emerald eye leopard-boy then proceeds to gather up a few loose ends and putting them back into the pack.

The echoing cry of Hagrid serves as a rallying point and once Realm is fastened onto his back along with the pack, they exit out of the compartment. Harry notes the robes that the other students are wearing and can only frown at them as school hasn't even started yet, so he saw no reason to wear the uniform unit class begins. As he walks through the crowd of students, he did notice a number of them stopping to stare at him.

"Don't ya know that you were suppose to change into your robes?" Somebody sneers and he snorts softly while moving closer to the spot where Hagrid is. A number of other murmur the same set of questions when he is with the rest of the new students.

"What's with the sword?" A girl who's face reminds him of a certain breed of dog inquires. "I doubt you'll be keeping it once we're at the castle." The girl adds.

"If the goblins couldn't take this sword from me when I visited their bank, what makes you think the staff will fair any better?" He asks, deciding to continue to ignore the questions about his cloths. "As Hagrid about it, he witnessed that particular event." He adds as an afterthought.

This causes a number of students to stare at Realm but with the older students gone, Hagrid then leads them through the woods a short way. "No more then four to a boat." Hagrid shouts and he merely stares at the boats they are to ride in, not really sure why the boats need to look so ratty.

"Bet magic is the only reason they're still sea worthy..." Harry murmurs softly under his breath while watching as the other First years climbing into the boats. Realm seems to mentally snort in his mind before he heads for one of the boats that lack four members.

They gaze in bewilderment at him but shift their looks else where, like towards the castle that the boats are now moving towards.

It takes him a moment to realize that none of them could see the castle, not until gasps of wonderment causes him to give them strange looks. "What are you gasping about? It's been there all along." Harry murmurs which causes a few of his boat-mates to send a dirty look or two at him. Must be some seasonal illusion that hides it from those on the lake. He concludes to himself as the boats enter into a minor dock within the castle.

They climb out of the boats and onto the docks. A few of the students seem to sway on their feet as Hagrid begins to lead them towards the stone stair case. It wasn't hard for him to take point compared to the rest of the students, it seems that few of them were in as good of shape as he is. Not even Hagrid seems to be quick up the stairs, which means that he's at the top of the stairs before everyone else.

'So... what kind of wards does this castle have?' He inquires to Realm while watching the group of students and their guide climb up the stone stairs. The lack of light doesn't hinder him at all, after all, he is part feline.

Most of the wards seem to be warped or disabled. The latest bunch of wards seem more to connect the paintings, statues, and ghosts to a kind of information network. Realm reports. The warping seems to be due to lack of maintenance which caused weaken warps to combine to access power. It's likely the warping that allows the castle to seem to feature 'quirks' that suggest that the castle is 'alive' or even sentient when it really isn't.

Harry thinks this over as the rest of the group finally arrives. Hagrid nods at him before knocking upon the doors about three times. They open to reveal a very stern looking woman, clearly old as her hair is gray. Unsurprisingly, the woman takes a look at him and her look morphs into a disapproving look.

Then she takes out her wand and tries a spell aimed in his direction. The spell hits but nothing happens other then his cloths glowing every so briefly. He raises his eyebrows slightly at the woman's rather stunned, god-smacked look before the woman tries again. What a waste of magic. Is his only thoughts as he casually looks about the hall with a bored look upon his face.

"Are you wearing enchanted cloths?" The woman demands and he turns his head. "Never bothered to have them enchanted. It's my natural immunity that is keeping you from trying to ruin my cloths." Is his reply, his gaze very disapproving.

"You were suppose to put on your school robes on the train." The woman states and he snorts. "School classes hasn't started yet, so I didn't see the point in changing into them." He states in a cold tone.

"You shouldn't have brought the sword." The woman says in a stern tone while sporting another, sever look of disapproval. It's suddenly very clear to him that this woman is use to being obeyed and doesn't like how she is being addressed by him.

"The sword stays and don't bother trying to take it, Hagrid can attest to what can happen." Harry states and the woman glances over to the half-giant while he glances at the moving paintings. He didn't care what kind of authority the woman has, he already is regretting coming to this school so being thrown out would be a blessing in his opinion.

Maybe he had read one too many fantasy novels or gotten use to dealing with magic in certain settings, but the eleven year old expected things to be less uniform. Diversity was something he had been expecting but this... it was just too dull. The castle isn't even hovering hundreds of miles in the air either... Harry thinks to himself, his expectations seemingly falling apart the longer he's standing within the castle.

The woman finishes her speech and then marches them through various halls. Hush whispers erupt at some points along the march, mostly fellow muggle-raised commenting on the suits of armor or the various moving pictures. The halls ceilings are high up and it seems that none of the paints or tapestries that high up. I can use that, although how, I'm not sure yet... He muses and wonders how wide the ledges were, if they were wide enough then he can walk about on them to escape the notice of the various moving pictures.

They arrive at yet another set of doors, which he merely rolls his eyes as the woman slips into said room. "You could have been more polite to the professor." A bushy haired girl says, figuratively rounding on him.

"She wasn't polite to me and I found her attempts to alter my cloths to be rather disrespectful, particularly her expectation of us needing to wear school robes when classes haven't even begun. They are a school uniform after all and I doubt classes begin tonight as well." Harry explains to the noisy girl, which also had the effect of answer the group's own unanswered questions regarding why he isn't wearing the robes.

A few minutes tick by and finally the stern, authoritative professor returns, this time opening the doors fully. The sight that greats them is four rows of student tables and a fifth table for the staff. He follows the rest of the group without much thought as he casts his gaze all over the hall. It doesn't really surprise him about their reactions to the ceiling, which is rather impressive but nothing that remarkable compared to what he's read in various novels, comics, watched in movies, TV shows, and, finally, real life experiences.

It's the singing that grabs his attention and pulls it to the stool sporting a hat that sings. Finally something that's got a lively personality to it in this castle. Harry thinks to himself, not really bothered that it's in the form of a singing hat.

Polite applauds come from the students when the song is done. The stern professor unrolls a scroll and reads a name from it. As the names are read, it's clear that it switches back and forth from using the first name to using the last name. He notices when the blond, Draco, is called and how the hat simply refused to touch this one's head. The hat didn't really sort him, it didn't even want to touch him... Which means that the hat is forced to honestly sort those that touch it.

As if testing this new observation, he paid attention to who the hat curls away from, shouting out a house name and those it doesn't, which takes at least a minute or two before supplying the house name. The hat connects those it touches to the wards, any who it doesn't touch aren't connected and thus, do not benefit from the protection of the wards. Realm supplies.

'I see but that doesn't explain why it refuses to touch them.' Harry thinks at his magical sword. With a shake of his head, he hears his name being called and walks up to the sentient hat and the stool is had been sitting on.

He feels the hat make contact with his head. 'Why are you not linking in every student into the wards?' The eleven year old asks the hat.

You noticed that, did you? I'm not the only presence in your mind am I? The hat muses and he gets this odd sensation that Realm is engaging into a private conversation with the sorting hat.

"Gryffindor!" Bellow the hat and is taken off while he continues to frown but does get up. Harry wanted an answer to that question but it seems that he won't get one unless the hat has told Realm the reason.

The loudness begins to cause a throbbing in his head, particularly as he draws closer to those sporting gold and crimson. He doesn't particularly care where he sat so when a free space opened up, he took it once he had taken his pack off while adjusting Realm just so. He leans slightly heavily on the wooden table and is rather glad when silence claimed the hall.

The last few names were called and then, as the woman takes the stool and hat away, the headmaster stands up to address them. The one next to the guy favoring black is possessed. Seems to be the same guy who left that soul bit in your forehead. Realm says and he turns his emerald gaze upon the pair.

He then blinks and turns away from the staff table and leans back. The color blind old man says some nonsense words, a signal to those preparing the food to send it up to the tables. He merely blinks for a moment, snorts at the meat heavy meal before him for a few seconds more and then begins to collect most of the meat within his range.

With the appearance of food, it seems to signal the start of table conversations. He listens with half an ear as various peers of his year brag about their linage and gives minor bits concerning their family history. He merely hums or grunts at the right times as he consumes every bit of free meat about him. He had gone without a hearty meal of lunch and so is very famished.

The bones quickly pile up on his plate, far faster then his neighbors but then, they were only eating halfheartedly, more concerned with visiting with their fellows. "Hey! I wanted some of those drum sticks!" Exclaims a crimson haired, scrawny like preteen.

Pausing ever so slightly to swallow before taking another bite, he replies, "Then you shouldn't be talking to your neighbors. You should either eat or talk, not do both at the same time."

Finally, his hunger is sated and once his plate is cleared up, he begins to pick up what passes as veggies and fruit at the table, he ignores the pumpkin juice for water. By then, his neighbors seem to have nothing more to say to each other but considering their sneaking glances at his direction, it's clear they want to know why he has a sword with him and likely what's up with the back pack. As he polishes off what's on his plate and doesn't add anything more for the next five minutes, a change happens and the remainder of the meal is switched out with desserts.

He is rather picky about what he takes from the offered selection as most of it was pastry in nature. When he doesn't take any more, he stretches his shoulders and glances at the wrist watch upon his wrist. Raising a slight eyebrow at the time, he exhales slowly and glances about the hall.

"Well? Aren't you going to explain about where you got the sword?" The crimson haired preteen asks in a rather demanding fashion.

He blinks and looks over at the kid. "It's private information and no, you can not touch it. If you do, I'm not liable for any thing that happens to you or to the surrounding area." Harry states flatly.

"It looks rather foreign, don' it?" Mutters one of his house-mates. It seems that they don't approve of foreign items.

"Hey! Your watch! It works!" One of the half-bloods exclaims in udder amazement and he just mentally sighs. His magical protection is like a second skin that covers his whole being. Sadly, the negative side to having this protection seems to be at the cost at his ability to use magic.

It had been something of a dream to him once he had gotten home from Africa to be able to place magical curses on his relatives but none of his attempts had worked, which left him believing that he's just a battery and not the live-wire. Then comes the next summer and he acquired Void of the Realms, suddenly he had access to magic, sure he wasn't the one weaving it but he could make requests and see them fulfilled. That had been more then enough for him, he could live with that but then Hagrid appeared and informed him that he should be able to weave magic, not unlike Realm, only to conclude now that because of his status as a leopard-boy, he'll always have trouble weaving spells.

The dessert plates and their personal plates vanish but before they're able to leave the hall, Albus Dumbledore once more addresses them. It's a request for them to sing the school song, which Harry meets with a look of disbelief. His headache starts up as the others begin singing it, each doing their own modifications and timing. He grinds his teeth while following after his house-mates once his pack is back on his back.

It takes a few minutes for them to arrive at this stair well possessing a bonanza of moving pictures. Then come before a certain one and upon giving the woman featured within the painting the password, the painting moves to reveal a room sporting the feeling of a living room. The primary colors used were the house colors.

With a soft grunt, he heads up the stairs, not really paying any mind to the older students. Once he locates the room possessing his trunk, he sets his pack down on the floor before going through the trunk. Upon finding that everything seems to be in order, he puts his pack into the trunk once he grabs his alarm. He discards most of his cloths, leaving on his underwear.

Realm sets wards about the bed and the trunk while he stretches a bit. "Add a silencing ward too, if you don't mind. I don't want to hear my room-mates or have them hear me." Harry says as he draws the curtains about the bed.

I'll even include one that keeps them from throwing the curtains open. Is Realm reply. He nods as the curtains glow for a few seconds. With that done and his room-mates finally filing into the room, he takes Realm and moves through the curtains.

Putting Realm next to the pillow and taking the undergarments off, Harry then shifts into his black leopard form. Circling about the center of the bed, Harry lies down, his tail curling about his head. It wasn't long before his mind quiets down enough for sleep to take him.

o - T - o

September 2, 1991

Hogwarts School

The black furred leopard sporting emerald green eyes yawns upon uncurling his body. Getting to his feet, the predatory feline glances about his surroundings, taking a few minutes to remember where it is he is. With a shake of his head, Harry shifts into his human form and upon collecting his underwear, puts them on before reaching for Realm.

Moving the curtains to the left, he climbs out of the bed. He glances out of the window while stoutly ignoring the snorts of his room-mates, more then a little glad that Realm had put up those silencing wards about the bed. It takes him a bit to pull out his watch, checking the time, he then collects a shirt before heading down to use the rest room, being sure to take Realm with him.

Harry's shower takes up to twenty minutes to be completed, particularly as he had to go back up to get his shampoo and conditioner as there weren't any down in the showers. "Going to have to make arrangements to purchase more when what's in the bottles run out." The eleven year old murmurs under his breath upon returning to the room.

As he finishes getting dress, various alarms go off and his room-mates struggle to wake up. With a shake of his head, the eleven year old leopard-boy then moves to empty out his pack and exchanging various items for school books plus things to take notes with. Harry leaves the tabletop role playing books in the back. As his room-mates sit up and rub the sleep from their eyes, he has Realm and the back on his back as he leaves the room.

A few members of his house are drifting towards the showers or the restrooms. Leaving the common room, it takes Harry a few minutes to return to the dinning hall. Harry notices that members of the Ravenclaw house sitting at one of the four tables and not wanting to sit alone, waiting for members of his house to come down, he walks over to the table.

"Mind if I join you?" He asks one of the older students. They seem rather startled.

"Your a Gryffindor, aren't you?" One of them asks in a dull tone. At which point he hums a positive as he sits on the right of the student he addressed. "You know that this is the Ravenclaw table, don't you?"

"Your telling me that you always sit at this table? Even when one of the other tables are free? That you never move to sit at one of the others?" Harry asks with a hint of disbelief while looking away from the sudden appearance a cup of juice.

Each of the Ravenclaws seem to nod and Harry leans back a bit as he regards them. "Why? What's so special about this table? I mean, there isn't a table cloth sporting your house colors or are their carved heads of your house's mascot on the corners of the table and the bench. I don't see any silverware here proclaiming it belonging to your house either. That banner is gone too, so, why do you keep sitting here?"

From the dumbfound looks as the members of Ravenclaw glance about their table, seemingly looking at it for the first time. Although, one recovers to sneer at him while replying, "This table is where all previous members of our house sat and it'll be where all future members of the house sit."

"Here's an odd thought, do you think that this is the same table you sat at last night? As in, how are you sure that the tables haven't been rotated about the room? For all you know, this very table was used as the Staff table or even Hufflepuff table." Harry asks after a few seconds of thinking about it. "Besides, you all must be rather bored of viewing the room from this particular spot." He adds, picking up the cup of water and drinking it before touching the juice cup.

Don't you know how to make friends... Realm muses to him and he snorts ever so softly while drinking more water. It seems that his thoughtful observation sparked a rather furious debate with those Ravenclaw students.

In the end, one of them uses a wand to carve an image of a rose onto the bench and the debate ends. 'Mind making that same mark on one of the other benches while repairing this one when breakfast ends?' Harry asks Realm and the sword merely chuckles, thus proving that Realm would cooperate on this little case of mischief.

The topic changes, particularly, they ask him about last night and why he is lugging about Realm. He finishes the juice before giving any answers, "I carry Void of the Realm about because I'm the only who's capable of safely using it."

It's more of an answer then he gave his house-mates but then, he just didn't feel like socializing and this morning he did. "It's not a magic sword... is it?" One of the Ravenclaws ask.

He smirks slightly as he replies, "What do you think? Besides, it's as much a souvenir as a weapon. I got it during a summer trip to the Far East."

"Must have been an exciting trip." One of the students says in a neutral way. His only reply as he picks up the refilled cup of water is, "It was."

"So... what do you think of Hogwarts so far, Harry?" Another asks, the topic being changed. Each member at the table seem eager to hear his thought concerning Hogwarts.

Harry sighs and it takes him a few minutes to arrange an answer, trying to cushion his reply. "Well... to be honest, I've never visited a magical school before or seen moving pictures before." The eleven year old says in a slow, deliberate manner. "I came here with little in the way of expectations and so far, I get the feeling that I should wait a week before forming any lasting impression of Hogwarts." He states, although he can't help but feel that the week will more then likely finalize how bad of an experience it'll be to remain here for the full year.

Most of those Ravenclaws at the table seem to think he's impressed while a minority seems to be frowning, likely thinking deeply about his answer. But before one of those minority could press to get a clearer reply from him, members of the other houses finally begin to show up. A few seem to just stop moving just as they move to pass the table as if they just catch his house-badge upon his robes.

One of those newly arrived Ravenclaws demands, loudly, "What is HE doing here? Why is he sitting at our table?"

Silence falls all about the various groups as they all turn to watch the fall out of this. Harry just raises an eyebrow at the speaker while more then those earlier comers frown at the speaker. "He's a Gryffindor!" That same person explodes, pointing right at the eleven year old.

"Why yes, I did get sorted into that house. I wonder what gave it away? Was it the fact you can see this badge? Or was it because you witnessed my sorting last night?" He asks said rude Ravenclaw, which causes a few to snicker.

The teen's look of outrage merely causes him to chuckle. "So... when do we get our class schedules?" He asks, turning to regard to one sitting to his left. "I didn't receive one since I picked up my supplies." He adds.

"They get handed out today. Your house dictates which classes you take at what time." Said Ravenclaw answers while the rest of the new students go back to heading to their chosen table. He remains seated and even reaches for his water.

"Why aren't you leaving? Members of your house are over there!" Said explosive Ravenclaw bellows.

"You are rather high strung, aren't you? If you don't want to join us at the table, you could go sit with your friends in another house." Harry replies in a dismissive way before returning to the topic concerning his schedule. "Why by house? Shouldn't they review our previous school records to decide our schedule? Some of us are more studious then others and would absorb the school work at a quicker rate. Why drag those capable to advancing at a quicker pace to the pace of the slowest in the class?"

"Well, for one, few of the Pure-Blood students ever attend school before Hogwarts." Answers the older student sitting across from him. "It's rather frustrating, to be sure, but it's just how the school is. You'll find the teachers all teach the one subject to every year."

"Your the one sitting at the WRONG table !" Bellows that teen once more. Once more, silence descends but unlike previously, a teacher approaches.

"What's going on here? What are you yelling about?" The slightly plump teacher asks.

"He's a Gryffindor! He should be sitting over there! With his own kind!" Said complainer whines, being sure to point and gesture at him and then at the rest of his house.

The woman blinks and glances first at him before looking at the rest of the table. "I would say that you are the only one who shares that particular opinion. So either sit down and stop with the disturbances or find another place to sit at one of the other tables." The teacher states before walking away, Harry gives the woman a thoughtful look before trying to recover his train of thought.

"He should even be here!" The teen whines. "Oh shut it! Do you even know who he is? He's Harry Bloody Potter! If he wants to sit with us instead of with his house, let him! He was here long before any of you and he didn't want to be the only one at his table." One of the original early 'birds' snaps at said teen, a teen who decided to finally sit down at the table.

A few seem to relax upon hearing that, as it does explain why he was here at their table to begin with. a very reasonable answer at that. "Ok... If the only one teacher has always taught their class, then that would mean to save on writing up new tests or thinking up new projects that they recycle them. If that's so, then you pretty much know everything that there is to know when it comes to the classes."

"That... that might be true..." One of the Ravenclaws admits as the food finally arrives. "It shouldn't be that hard to disprove or prove. Could contact previous graduates to see if they still have their notes and homework assignments." Another says.

It wasn't long before the Ravenclaw students add their two cents in while Harry slowly fills his plate up. It wasn't long before all of those between second year through to seventh year begin to drudge up almost forgotten homework topics for this class or this test for such and such class had this question while owls enter and wheel overhead carrying mail.

It's close to the end of the breakfast that schedules are handed out by the heads of the various houses. Harry merely feels the beginning of a headache upon learning that the heads of houses being teachers at the school. He just knows that somebody at some point of time had abused their power as both a teacher and a head of house.

It didn't help matters for him to learn that said stiff teacher from last night is his current head of house either. Oh lovely... The eleven year old thinks while he browses his schedule a look and then frowns at the fact that one of the classes takes place at night.

This place is positively medieval... I'm fairly sure that they possessed star charts back then too... Harry thinks with a scowl as he gets to his feet. 'Mind giving me directions to my first class, buddy?' The black furred leopard-boy asks Realm.

Just follow the arrows. Is Realm's reply and suddenly, directing arrows appear upon the floor. As none of the others gasped at the sudden appearance, he concludes, is only meant for him.

He wonders just how many of the older students gave out correct instructions. Not that it's his problem as it seems that none of the staff plans to give the new residence of the school a tour so that they could find their classes. No maps were handed out along with the schedule either.

Realm's arrows take him into a dungeon level of the school. Entering into the classroom, he glances around the room and begins to curse. Harry can feel Realm chuckling and closes his eyes for a few seconds, taking deep calming breath before picking a table. He did wonder why he had to purchase a cauldron when one is already provided for him... Unless they stole it out of my trunk... He thinks darkly as the first year students from the Slytherin house arrive with much 'fanfare'.

The small number of Slytherins seem to eye him while fingering their wands within their pockets. Harry smirks in a very predatory manner, being sure to make it a toothy one as well. That outraged a few of them but the arrival of other Gryffindors break up the mood of tension, for now at least, much to his private disappointment. If those students had chosen to throw caution to the wind, then it wouldn't be on his head if he defenses himself. If would have been one verses nine, clearly in favor of the nine, particularly if they received some training before coming to the castle.

"Mind if I sit here?" A rather round boy, one of his room-mates if he recalls, asks. Harry shrugs while looking towards the cabinet. "I'm Neville, Neville Longbottom." The other eleven year old pipes in and the leopard-boy glances over at Neville.

"Good to know." Is his reply before asking, "Any idea who teaches this class?"

"You don't know? It's Professor Snape." Neville says and it takes a moment before Harry also recalls something he learnt about during a previous chat.

"The Death Eater, eh?" Harry muses in a bemused tone. "I take it he's a git but no amount of complains have managed to dislodge him from this job either..." The eleven year old emerald eyed leopard-boy muses with a sly smile as he already has a slightly formulated plan concerning how to get this man removed from his position.

There isn't any doubt in his mind that this... 'Professor' Snape needs to be removed, the very fact that he has killed innocent people mean that the man was a criminal. The question become though, how long would it for me to enact this dismissal? Harry wonders to himself but his thoughts are interrupted by the entrance of said man.

"There will be no foolish wand waving or silly incantations in this class." The man turns around while still addressing them, "As such, I don't think many of you will appreciate the subtle science, exact art that is potion making."

The man's eyes sweeps over them while continuing this vein, eyes focusing on those members of the Slytherin house upon the positive parts and upon the Gryffindor house upon the negative ones. "However, for those select few who possess the predisposition," The man comes to the very edge while saying, "I can teach you how to bewitched the mind, ensnare the senses. I can tell you how to bottle fame, brew glory, and even put a stopper in death."

Snape suddenly turns on him and verbally rounds on Harry, "Maybe some of you have come to Hogwarts already possessing abilities so formidable that they feel the need to flaunt their possessions." For a few seconds, it feels as though something is trying to crawl into his body viva his eyes but a blink forces that sensation to be forced out. This seems to startle the man ever so briefly.

"Why did you bring a sword to my class?" The Death Eater demands but doesn't even allow him to get a word in before adding, "It seems that you believe that being famous would entitle you to do as you will. Be rid of that thing, put it on the desk."

Harry snorts and gives the man a look of contentment. "If you want Void of the Realm then come and take it from me, otherwise, it goes where I go." Then with a smirk, "Now, will you come and take it from me, Death Eater or will you continue on with this class?"

A sharp gasp erupts from the students while the man still with outrage, hate, and a dash of fear radiates from the man's eyes. "That will be fifty points from Gryffindor for your disrespect." Is the man's reply. "A weeks worth of detention as well."

Harry chuckles before saying before the udder amazement of the students goes on to say, "Is that all? You think I would respect a murder and rapist? You think just because you were given the rank of Professor, I should respect you? Ha! It's the opposite effect! Having you on staff only makes all those sharing in your rank to be just as dirty as you! If they had possessed a smidgen of self-respect, they wouldn't remain at their post until you've been fired!"

"Heck, I think that Albus Dumbledore should be mentally examined for keeping you on staff! You can take all the points you want and give me all the detention you can toss in my direction, I don't fking care! I won't serve the detentions and I don't have any emotional attachments to this system of points either." Harry is rather glad at how liveried the man became, the Death Eater is shaking in fury and outrage.

Within a blink of an eye, a green color spell comes flying at him. It hits but doesn't affect him at all. Harry just laughs while the man pales for a few seconds while disbelief very much evident in the man's black eyes. Before any even blink, Harry had gone from laughing in his seat to standing behind the Death Eater, the wand upon the ground while forcing the man's face upon the stones, keeping a firm grip upon the guy's arms.

"You really can't control yourself very well, can you? I wonder if Albus will be able to clear you of attacking a student? I may not be well verse in this communities' laws but I'm fairly sure that you're looking at prison time." He muses while keeping his foot resting on the back of the man's head.

"Neville, could you please use the fireplace to contact the local law enforcement? I believe they'll know what to do with him." The emerald eye eleven year old states and Neville nods slowly.

"We got to inform the headmaster of this! He'd know what to do." The girl possessing bushy brown hair says.

"Oh please, as if the man isn't already on his way. As headmaster, he's tied to the wards of this school." He replies, then notes the strange looks he's getting from the Slytherin portion of the students.

Most of the girls seem to be... well, looking fondly on him. Most of the guys mostly look very pale and look ready to faint. The remainder of the guys, like two of them really, seem to be looking rather thoughtful.

Neville returns with four older wizards and a single elderly witch, one of whom seems to smile ever so slightly at him holding down the Death Eater. He steps off of the man while Realm lifts the wand up off the ground, it is hovering before the woman for a second before the woman takes it from its hovering point. A single spell is casted upon the wand and the first result is a silvery, misty version of the green spell, this causes the five to stiffen.

"Using an Unforgivable on a student? Upon Harry Potter no less? I doubt even Dumbledore will be able to wiggle you out of this one, Snape." The woman says. "Copper, take the man back to headquarters. The rest of you, begin taking witness accounts from the students, I'll be accompanying young Potter here to the hospital for examination."

As they are about to head into the back, Harry had to head back to his seat to get his pack off the floor, Albus Dumbledore finally appears, looking slightly worst for wear. "There's... no... need... for that, Madam... Bones. I'm... sure... that... Madam... Madam Pomfrey... can examine... Harry."

"We better hurry up and head for the hospital then." Harry asks after looking at Albus Dumbledore for a few seconds and is looking at Madam Bones. Out of the corner of his eye, Albus seems to pull himself up while the leader of the magical police looks rather bemused, barely holding back a chuckle.

"Well then, we'll be speaking with you at a later, Headmaster. Come along Mr Potter, we don't know what ill effects you possess from surviving your second brush with the Killing Curse." Madam Bones says, the effect of that announcement causes Albus to pale a great deal more.

As they use the Floo Network to arrive at the hospital, the woman remarks, "One would wonder what the Headmaster has done to cause such a response of mistrust. It's rather rare to find someone your age that is so disenchanted with him."

"Let's say that upon hearing that it was him who thought my relatives were... proper guardians for me causes me to wonder if the man is of proper mind as its clear the man isn't in the prime of his life." Is his reply as they make it to the desk. He stays silent as Madam Bones requests, rather strongly, for a certain healer to attend them.

With that, Madam Bones directs them down a hall, likely to a room for an examination. During this walk, Harry is conversing with Realm about having Realm 'fudge' the examination spells to make it seems as though he's a healthy young eleven year old.

To Be Continued . . .

Alien Girls & Werewolf Principal:Digimon

Angel of the Hazard

I don't own Digimon.

Note: I know updates for Angel of the Hazard are slow, sluggish even. Here's a little something from me, just me. Just a lonely one-shot.

Age Ten

Takato sighs, once more he feels so... clumsy. The class laugh as he remains sitting in the water, his face crimson from embarrassment and red hazel eyes staring directly downwards. As he finally feels strength return, he stands up in the pool and with some help from a teacher, gets out of the mud of the pool and bank. 'Would I still be this clumsy if I had remained a girl?'

As a towel is draped about his shoulders, Takato is lead somewhere to sit down. Inquires about if he's hurt are directed at him but the ten year old boy murmurs that he's fine. It takes a bit but he's mostly towel dried, although his socks are put into a bag before being put into his bag.

"Did ya have a good trip?" Kazu asks and he smiles rather nervously. "No big, you just got to work on looking where you're stepping, ya know?"

Kenta joins in upon going step by step through what they saw happen and the likely reason for why he didn't pay that much mind to his surroundings. Not that Takato felt it right blaming Jeri's sock puppet for him tripping and falling into the pond, but it did kind of play a small part of it. The color and the setting reminded him of his brother, when Tai had entertained her using sock puppets during a camping trip once, the memory just sort of caught him off guard.

'At least nobody seems to think I'm a... girl liker. Funny, really, at one point in my life it was a disgrace to be a boy liker. ' Now though, he'd be hard press to know what's going on with his birth gender. Adapting to being a boy had been kind of trying as she hadn't been one of those tom boy types before the hold gender shift happened. He had such a hard time to remember which washrooms to use let alone learning to go while there were others in the washroom with him.

'Still... I wonder what I would be like if I hadn't become a boy...' Takato muses and then snaps out of his thoughts with the mention of why girls are so weird. "You can't think every girl is an alien, Kazu... Remember when you became obsessed with proving that the principal was a werewolf? It'll only get you in trouble if you pursue it, you know."

"Oh come on! Why else would Jeri still be playing with a sock puppet? It's likely some kind of advance alien gizmo! I bet the mother ship is taking scans of us right now!" Kazu says in a slightly harsh tone. "After all, how else would you explain what happened when we were eight? Aliens are among us! And I think they've replaced girls cause they, the aliens, find it easier to pass themselves as girls!"

Takato bits his lower lip and looks away, the mention of when the Digital World appeared in the sky continues to generate interest, though not as much as new events have happened to draw public attention to other matters. He, of course, avoids that subject as it only reminds him of what he lost. It's likely that Kazu mentioned it to cause him to be silent and soon enough, between Kenta and himself, Kazu plans out a hasty operation to snatch Jeri's sock puppet. He didn't like the idea of them stealing it but knew that by this point, him saying anything would some how get twisted around in such a way that they'll make it seem as though he agreed to help them in their plan. 'I wonder if Tai was ever like Kazu when it came to something like this?'

Try as he might, Takato couldn't imagine it, likely due to being Tai's younger sister. He knew that Tai typically acted differently when she had been around. Slowing his pace, space quickly stood between the pair and himself. He angles himself so he is walking next to this boy sporting a rather dark tan. This trip is a combination of his age group, pretty much every single one of them from either class groups.

"Hey! Give Jeri back her puppet!" Takato sighs and the boy to his right seems rather startled out of his own thoughts. "It's an alien device!" Kazu counters.

"Times like these I wonder why I consider them my friends..." The ten year old wonders out loud while watching as Kazu sulkily hands over the sock puppet to a teacher.

"At least they keep things from getting dull." The other remarks with a slight, bemuse smile.

"Tell me about it. Last time was the Principal being a werewolf..." Takato replies with a bit of a bemused look.

As Kazu and Kenta drift back to be with him, the other speeds up a bit, not that Takato could blame him, it's clear that Kazu plans to complain about the unfairness of not being able to take the puppet apart in order to find something of alien make within the puppet.

'Some field trip...'

It ends here

Portal Maddness 5: Naruto

I don't own Naruto or Thundercats 2011.

"Hey! I'm not the one who punched a vase because it was, and I quote, 'being perverted!' Right teme?" Naruto snaps after listening to Sakura complain endlessly for a good twenty or so minutes about their current situation.

Not to mention you guys have a slight scent of urine about you. The blond humanoid sporting canine features, known more commonly as Naruto Uzumaki silently adds sourly. Even in under the shadows of a forest, the pair are sweating, although they deny it whenever he brought up the idea of taking a break to drink from their water containers.

Sasuke grunts in what sounds like agreement with what Naruto had stated, which seems to cause Sakura to huff. "I don't see why I was the only carrying it." And the blond seriously begins to wonder why he sported a crush on the girl upon hearing that.

"You were carrying it because you said I was clumsy! Then there's the fact that you declared that Sasuke-teme needed to have both of his hands free!" Naruto snaps as he glares over his shoulder at the so-call brains of the three of them.

Once more, Sasuke grunts his usual 'hn' which again sounds like agreement with what has been said. He rolls his eyes and pushes a bunch of branches away to reveal a road. There's a sign post on the opposite side of the side.

"Greetings. Your... servants are rather noisy, don't you think?" Naruto glances to the left to find a man sporting the features of a feline sitting upon a log.

"Greetings and it's the one with pink hair that's talkative, the other just grunts. You'd think she's be able to keep her mouth shut given where we are. You never know what will show up just to see who's being so noisy." The blond ninja says as he sets his pack down, it's rather bulky but then, it holds his orange jumper within it.

Having fur not only made wearing it itchy but hot. He left the black under shirt and shorts on. About his waist is his ninja headband as it kept sliding to cover his eyes. He had been forced to put away his belt pouches, although he did re-bandaged those weapon pouches onto his hip and lower portion of his leg.

He sits down on the log and cracks his neck. "So, been on the road long?" Naruto asks after a few minutes of silence hangs in the air.

"Still got a few days before reaching Thundera. I'm Bengus." Bengus says as way of introduction.

"I'm Naruto, currently a nomad along with them as my back up." He says with a wide grin.

Then Bengus gets up, being sure to grab his pack and walking stick. "It was nice meeting you. Good luck in your travels then." He nods and replies, "Dido to you as well, sir."

With the cat themed man gone, he moves over to make room for his team mates. Glancing their way, Naruto wonders why they seem so... ridged. With a shake of his head, he pulls his pack over to him, taking out something to eat. Silence hangs between them for close to thirty minutes, at which point, Naruto puts on his pack, getting ready to head out when somebody breaks the silence.

"Naruto... who is this guy?" Sasuke demand suddenly and the blond glances over to find his team mates rather tense and lost. "And what is with the odd sounds coming from you both?"

"Huh, what's wrong with you? Bengus here says we're not far from his home, Thundera. As for 'weird' sounds, we're talking, duh."

Naruto replies, giving the pair a flat look. "You guys need to get your ears cleaned out or something?"

"Naruto... You guys are making gibberish sounds." Sakura states slowly.

"It seems more then just your appearance has been altered." Sasuke says in a flat tone. His fur bristles at the display of distrust in their eyes, it brings to mind the villagers and how they look at him.

"Yea? Well, maybe it's not me who's the problem here! We're suppose to be a team and yet, here you are, ready to do what? Put a kunai through my heart? Or is the plan to knock me out? Take my stuff and tie me up, leaving me worst then defenseless here?" Naruto snaps at the two, getting up off the log.

"I sure as hell don't get what I've done to you guys to warrant distrust! Not since we became a team at least." He says to the pair. "We're suppose to be a team and yet, here we are, as though we just became a team yesterday! Well guess what? Screw you guys! I don't need this from you and I sure has hell am tired of it from the villagers!" Naruto says.

" I AM NOT THE FUCKING FOX AND THEREFORE AM NOT RESPONSIBLE FOR KILLING ANYONE, ESPECIALLY THE FOURTH! " All the hurt feelings finally being unleashed. " I REFUSE TO TAKE THIS ANYMORE! SO SCREW YOU, SCREW HIDDEN LEAF! " Naruto rips the ninja head band from his waist, tossing it at the pair.

"Screw you!" And with that, Naruto sprints off, chakra fueling his muscles. He puts a lot of distance between them and himself.

At a river, he stops and wipes the tears that are trailing down his cheeks. His sniffles a bit as he uses the back of his hand and arms to clear the other side of his face. Wandering over to the stream, he looks down at his new appearance before looking angrily away.

He tries his hardest to shake himself out of his current state but he just keeps remembering everything that's happened to him. One tiny voice pipes as he lays on his back in the water, his belongings on the shore. If we're really on a different world, then nobody there would know about me losing my cool. We might never return to Hidden Leaf and I'll never have to face any of the villagers or be hunted down like a dog cause they can't reach me here.

"I'm safe. I'm safe from their loathing, their hate, their pity needs... Free to be whoever I want to be." Naruto whispers out loud, suddenly feeling excitement and dread at the same time.

To Readers:

To read the previous shorts of this idea, check out chapters 74, 88, 94, and 140.

Trainer Ares: Harry Potter and Pokemon

I don't own Harry Potter or Pokemon.

January 1982

A collection of papers can be found on top of the desk, one stack in particular sports articles concerning the owner of the desk, building, and finally global empire.

Who is Ares Black?

That seems to be the question one everyone's mind as the death total among prominent families continues to climb this man's name is on the lips of every Witch or Wizard as it has been confirmed that this man has been...

Another news paper on top of that one reads:

Family Connection Confirmed!

As Sirius Black is released so to is information concerning Ares Black. It seems that the already infamous Wizard is descended from a Black who was shipped out to Africa during the...

Ares drops the book he's been reading on top of the minor stack of Wizarding newspapers. The time-traveler sits down at the desk. After a moment of thoughtful pause, he places both hands on the handles of the two top drawers of his desk. A few seconds of this and a drawer drops down from the top.

Taking his hands from the handles, Ares pulls this hidden drawer open to reveal a collection of bank keys of vaults of various accounts, some ancient and other recently acquired. Tiny paper tags hang about the keys themselves, names of the previous owners and/or vault numbers. The seemingly young man moves the keys towards the back, a new tray appears, this one containing a bunch of papers and photos.

On many of the papers there are names in red ink. Ares takes a few minutes to go through the list and chuckles upon spotting the name Dolores Umbridge being in red. Finally! I thought nobody would get around to doing her. Thought I'd have to do her myself. The time-traveler thinks.

He looks at the last page and notices that number totals, red meaning dead and black meaning alive. "Only eight left? Oh, there we go, that's the end of that then." Ares murmurs as the number eight becomes a zero and the number eight is added to the number dead. And the one I would never forget will meet his end soon enough.

With a hum, he pushes the tray back like he had the one with the keys. The new tray reveals graphs and business charts. It also contains his shares in mundane businesses as, at this point, having any solid connections between a Magical business and a mundane one would only be the final push certain parties would need to 'hang' him.

His Hermione had helped him create a business outline once upon a time as they had been drinking heavily. Ares kind of forgets who it was who began the 'What If' game, and doesn't really care enough to do so either. Luna had just finished asking Dean a question about, What would he do if everyone in this room had been turned to stone.

Dean then turns to ask Hermione how would she create a business empire in the nineteen-seventies through the eighties. It hadn't taken long before his surviving best friend to summon, transfigure, or just plain draw on napkins concerning how she would go about not only using future knowledge but what she would change concerning the business world's global 'foot print'.

When they got kicked out of the bar, he would later show up to grab his coat the next day and ended up with the various papers that Hermione had either transfigure or summoned. With those papers, he would go through them and then, mostly out of boredom, used it to create his own plan, which got modified on a yearly bases until he was approached about going back in time to destroy the seventh Horcrux which wasn't him or the snake but some cloak pin that belonged to Gryffindor in the Chamber of Secrets.

Good thing I found a way around all those Unbreakable Vows or things would never change for the Wizarding world. Ares thinks to himself. They never even asked if I felt that the Mundanes were... 'out of bounds' when they began interfering with the magical world after the third time Tom aroused once more or I would have been forced to tell them my thoughts on the matter.

He had collected a certain selection of hairs before popping them into permanent Polyjuice and drank it. Ares had been sure to have enough of his old hairs to retake that form using a longer then normal Polyjuice potion when he was in the department. Ares had shed the name Harry James Potter to take up his current name and looks, using his position as Head of the Black Family and of the Potter Famly to get pass the vows while making a simple request of his own.

With a shake of his head, Ares dismisses his past to focus on his present, particularly concerning his business empire among the Mundanes. Pulls out one of the date books from the tray and turns to the page where the date tab is to see if there's anything important happening today or tomorrow as he is expected to meet with various political figures from beyond Britain.

Taking out a cell phone, he phones his Mundane office to sell his shares in this company before it crashes. Ares is sure to ask for updates, which takes up to an hour and half of his morning. As the phone call ends, he puts everything back into the tray before pushing everything back into the drawer. Tapping the bottom of the drawer, it vanishes and he gets up to move before the enchanted wall that displays the shopping district of magical London.

Ares hums thoughtfully as he watches Witches and Wizards move through the street. Though he looks in his late teens, early twenties, he is actually in his sixties, closer to his seventies. His skin is so much darker then his previous existence as Harry Potter had been, so much healthier, and sporting a totally different color for his eyes, he achieved the purple color through a potion although without it, Ares' eyes are dark brown.

The deal with the Blacks and him claiming various extincted families titles by opening their vaults grant him pretty much all of the seats upon a certain council. Without certain families holding another collection of seats, they get channeled to the Black family, to him. Sure, Albus is the head of it but he doesn't have anyone backing him as I won't back him. Finally, this community will be pulled forward while the Ministry is dismantled, it will only be charged to enforce the laws, not monitor them or reinterpret them.

With a soft snort, he glances at a recently opened store. The store sells magical items that are to function parallel to the technologies that will soon be developed. When the time comes, he'll be there to combine the two, to allow magical computers to interact with mundane devices. He even has an idea which software and game companies he will 'merge' with to achieve that as well.

Turning away from the enchanted wall, Ares heads out of his magical office. Once out of the office, he teleports to the Ministry building for the Wizengamot. With a bounce in his step, Ares walks through the doors, he had seeded the front of the room and hallway with special items that will allow him to teleport to this spot and out of it.

His entrance causes more then a few to glare in his direction but it didn't matter, not to him. I own this council, they just don't know it yet. Ares thinks with a predatory smirk.

August 2011

"You want me to take Pokemon to the next 'level'?" Ares asks with a hint of disbelief. "The so-called Gold Butcher of Britain, the Destroyer of Worlds, Bane of Society to take Pokemon and take it to place it has never been?"

Those titles were given to him long before anyone learnt of his self appointed mission to merge magic and technology together. Of course the idea of a global magical company had been alien at the time, it had all been about contacts between different families in different countries until I arrived on the scene. He muses.

"All of our sources say you are the best when it comes to merging these two elements." The chairman of Nintendo states in a matter of fact tone. "What you have done concerning magical edition of World of Warcraft shows that and that is what we need."

Ares can't deny that although what happened with World of Warcraft was more of an unexpected bonus as they had been trying to get the user more into the game. Now not only are they in the game, they pretty much occupy their avatar. It wasn't that hard to link the real body so that it benefits from all that physical exercise the avatar experiences. Sure improved their bodies though.

"I'll see what I can do. My specialists will sent you something by this time next week." Ares says to the three on the other side of the desk. As he leaves, he makes a note to stop off at a retail store to buy a DS plus a Pokemon game so he can be familiar with the game.

May 2013

Field Test: Day One

Ares holds the Pokeball in his left hand, four months ago, they activated the magically enhanced lot of land a few miles away from the Nintendo offices in Redmond Washington. With the activation, plant growth, berry plants among the list, was sped up and a variety of 'classic' Pokemon released, primarily the types that live in woodland, plains, rivers, and lakes. He sighs softly as he looks out at the map that's on the wall, it shows the minor portion of active land, most notably the Pokemon Center/hotel/shop.

Well, might was well release the Bulbasaur. Ares thinks, taking out the PokeDex to be sure to check the gender of his starter and to enter in a name he'll give to his first Pokemon. Pressing the trigger, the ball opens slightly and a beam of crimson light shots out.

Within a second, the crimson glow gives way to a female Balbasaur, he is sure to check the screen of his PokeDex after all. "Hello there." He says, crouching down as the Pokemon homes in on looking at him.

Ares feels the currently shrunk balls hanging from his belt kind of dig into his thighs. The Balbasaur cocks her head to the side, regarding him rather curiously. "I'm Ares."

The Pokemon grumbles out something that does sound like the species name and parts of it. Then, after a few minutes, the Balbasaur moves a few paces forward. Not knowing what else to do, he extends his hand out and a vine comes from the Balbasaur, gently wrapping itself about his hand. They shake once before the vines withdraw back to where the Pokemon typically holds them.

"I think I'm going to call you Ojal, after all, naming you after a plant is rather dull and uninspiring." Ares tells the newly dubbed Ojal. He gets up as Ojal glances away from him, there isn't anyone in the main hall of the center as most of the others had already left to begin testing out the enchantments, they each have a starter, a PokeDex, ten potions, and five empty PokeBalls.

He heads for the way into the park, trusting Ojal to follow after. Most of the other testers are all board members of Nintendo and members of their family, most notably are their kids or grand kids. Although, if this week passes well, the next group that consists of animal behaviorists and those who filed paper work to enter into the beta phase as well. Although most of this first group sport one of the classic starters, a single member of the group was allowed to start with a Pikachu.

He glances down at Ojal, coming to a stop before the doors leading into the Pokemon populated park, a meadow. "Ready?" Ares asks and Ojal grunts out something that is followed by a nod.

Pushing the doors, Ojal slips out before he does but she doesn't run far, she merely seems to have closed her eyes and feeling the wind blow across her face. With the metal doors clicking, he walks to stand next to the Balbasaur. From where he stood, he could faintly pick up sight of a bird type in the meadow.

"Come on, we have a long day ahead of us, Ojal." He says to the Balbasaur. He has his lunch in his pack as well as some Pokemon Chow for plant types. As Ares and Ojal walk through the meadow, flying Pokemon take to the air while some ground bound types head for shelter, it's clear that the local population has already adapted to having humans and Pokemon picking fights with them.

After about eight battles with various Rattata and a single battle with Raticate, using three potions. With Ojal feeling rather low, he finds a place to sit as he takes out some water, pouring it upon Ojal's plant bulb. This seems to perk Ojal up and a vine snakes up and wraps itself about the bottle. Letting go, he watches as Ojal gulps down some of the water and once done, the Pokemon puts the bottle down next to his feet before laying down, eyes closed, bathing in the sunlight.

Smiling, Ares take a look at his watch before rummaging through his pack for his data screen. He moves his shades up to his forehead, Ares checks his E-Mails. While he can receive messages, he can't send them but that's part of the security measures of the park just in case they have a spy among their number.

He then brings up the digital book he's been reading. It was the chipping that causes Ares to look up, he finds a Pidgey cocking its head this way and that while looking at Ojal. A snort causes the Pidgey to hop back and semi spread its wing while looking up at him.

With a shake of his head, the time-traveler returns to reading his data screen. A bit later, he feels something on his shoulder and turning his head slightly, Ares finds a Pidgey resting on his left shoulder. The Pidgey seems to be peering down at his data screen.

"You're rather bold." Ares says, startling the Pidgey slightly as it turns to look at him, its beak almost pointing itself at his eye. The bird type chirps a bit before taking to the air, he tries to follow the Pidgey as it circles overhead for a few times and then comes to settle back down on the ground, not far from Ojal and Ares.

Ojal murmurs something and that seems to causes the Pidgey to tense up as the Bulbasaur yawns. It seems that Ojal is feeling better and the Pidgey seems to bombard Ojal with questions, he assumes that as like in fiction of the Pokemon world, all Pokemon here at the park can speak to each other. With a soft sigh, he pulls out his PokeDex, pointing it at the Pidgey and learns that the Pidgey is male.

As he puts the device away as Ojal begins to reply to the Pidgey. Ares puts the data screen away after closing the digital book, making sure to put it into his pack. As he gets up, one of Ojal's vines snake to grab one of his shrunken balls and watches as Ojal gets it ready before putting it down on the ground by the Pidgey. Then, to his bewilderment and yet bemusement, the Pidgey then activates the ball.

The ball only shivered once before the capture was complete. He picks up the ball and lets the bird type out. "Well, you never see that in the games..." Ares admits softly. "Well, I think I'll call you... Calum."

The newly dubbed Calum puffs out his chest while Ojal stands up, shaking her body once her belly is off the ground. Within seconds, Calum has taken to perching on his left shoulder. Taking a moment, he says, "When you get bigger, you won't be allowed to do this."

Calum chirps but seems to settle in. With a hum, he slings only one of his pack's straps onto his right shoulder before having Calum move onto his right arm so he can put his left arm through the left strap. Instead of returning to his shoulder, Calum moves to rest on his pack.

With Ojal taking point, he walks behind her. This time, before they come to rest for lunch; it's been five hours since the first day has begun, Ojal and Calum have fought off seven Rattata, three Oddish, and two Spearow. Before taking out his lunch, he fills a bowl with Pokemon Chow and place it before the pair of likely tired and hungry Pokemon. He fills the second bowl with water before he begins to eat his own lunch.

The pair take turns at picking at the food and drinking the water. It didn't really surprise him when a Rattata appears, clearly following its nose but bolts upon seeing Ares. Then a Butterfree comes flying out of the sky and lands on Ojal's back. This causes the Bulbasaur to begin bucking the Butterfree off and Calum watches along with Ares.

Ojal then glares at Calum while growling something. The Pidgey takes to the air and dives at the Butterfree, this drives the insect away and he shakes his head in disbelief at what just happened. "Well, at least you two are getting along." Ares muses and the two murmur their agreement.

Sadly, as the wild ones get use to humans, they'll grow wary of approaching humans and their Pokemon. Ares thinks to himself, although the testing phase will last for a few years as they test out each environment and then the new species. The Legendary Pokemon will be release once we get each generation tested.

Might want to think of installing one of those time wards to help speed up testing... Those Japanese schools have those that allow you to be in a time sphere without speeding up your age. He then spent a few minutes thinking of how to make such a suggestion. Although I might want to use them to grow food on my farms, if only to keep up with the demand that'll place if we do so. Shouldn't be hard to increase inventory, just take what food that hasn't been purchased after two years of being on the shelf. Those preservative spells and ward upon the packages should keep them fresh for up to ten years.

As lunch comes to a close, they did have a few more Pokemon visitors attracted by the Pokemon food, he begins to clean up. Stuffing the grabage into his pack, he heads off to a bush to do his business, careful to put the tissue into a ziplock bag, he stuffs that into the outside compartment of his pack. As he finishes zipping up his pack, the two Pokemon come back from their own bathroom break.

"Ok, we'll head back to the center, although this time, we'll go through the forest. Be on the look out for Berries to harvest." He says hitching his pack up slightly. "Any objections?" Ares asks and the two shake their heads no.

With a nod, they head to the forest to the east, Calum flying for a bit before perching on Ares' pack. They then began to encounter more insect type Pokemon along with Bellsprouts. They also found berries and picked them, putting them in a special pouch on his belt, kind of a phany pouch.

Ares didn't see anything he wanted to add to his collection. Most of those he wanted have yet to be released, after all, they were still working on Eevee's evolutions paths, particularly those to Leafeon and Glaceon. Of course trying to create a place for the fossil types to thrive in a seperate environment, they're thinking of placing them underground, in a cave system that will be linked to each park no matter what region the park is in. Although it'll likely have to be done as a yearly event that lasts up to a week, maybe two.

Might need to help promote the idea of creating check points. Ares thinks to himself as he takes out some Oran berries to feed to Ojal and Calum as he is down to his last potion. The pair were likely tiring and he looks about for a spot for them to rest.

The spot isn't far from a river and the pair take mighty gulps from the river before they find places to rest comfortably in a patch of sunlight.

Before taking out his data screen to continue to read his book, Ares stares into the river, watching some Goldeen, Magikarp, and Poliwag within the water swim about.

He found himself in the perfect spot to watch a Fearow snatch a Magikarp out of the river. The caught fish Pokemon just wiggles in the Fearow's grasp as the bird Pokemon flies off over the tree tops. As the hour passes, he gets to see another fully evolved bird type Pokemon grab another Magikarp, Ares gets a glimpse of the feathery crest from the top of the Pidgeot's head flowing towards the tail.

Ares glances over to Calum for a moment before continuing to read his data screen. As he grows bored, he closes the book and looks through what he had recorded off of the tv. Finding his recordings of Friends, he picks one of his favorite episodes after glancing up to be sure that the pair of Pokemon seem content to continue to nap.

As the two hour marker comes, Calum wakes and after stretching moves to have a bird bath in the river. The sound of splashing water so near causes Ojal to wake and with a shrug, he stops the episode before putting his data screen away. Given how energitic the pair are, Ares assumes they are well rested and ready to continue back to the center.

Along the way, they manage to catch sight of a pair of Farfetch'd. The pair flee with the leeks in their beak, taking flight, although their flight path are already on the descent. Shaking his head, they continue on their way. As they make it out of the forest, heading west back towards the meadow, the sun is already slowly setting which means that Zubat, Golbat, and a few Crobat localed about are waking while most of the bird types are settling in to sleep.

As Ares enters into the center, his stomach growls at the smell of supper. He is sure to hold the door open for Ojal to walk through as Calum has once more stays perched on his pack. He heads for his room and has a quick shower while Ojal and Calum seem to be content poking about the room. They manage to turn on the room's tv and as he gets dress, the two seem to be happy watching a movie, the original Star Wars, it's the scene where they are in the bar with Han Solo, hiring the man to take them off the planet.

"I'll be back in an hour or two. There's a box in the washroom for the two of you to do your business." He says and the two just grunt something, it's clear that they're absorbed by the movie.

With a bemused smile and a slight shake of his head, he heads out of the room. He locks the door before heading to the dining room to eat his supper as the House Elves will be sure to send food up for Calum and Ojal when they realize they're out of their balls.

As he enters into the hall, he finds he's the last one to arrive. With a hum, he walks over to one of the tables that sport few people sitting there. They nod and greet him as Ares pulls out a chair before sitting in it, moving it up to the table as best as he can. "So... How many ran out on you?" One of his table mates asks him as he clicks the menu to show what he wants to eat for supper.

"Pardon?" Ares asks rather startled. His glass of mineral water appears a moment after he spoke.

"How many Pokemon that you caught ran off when you released them?" The man, Steven Mantle, asks him in a tone that show how annoyed he must have been when it happened to him.

"None, but then, the Pidgey allowed itself to be caught. I didn't even throw a ball, it was just sitting there and the bird just poked it." Ares says and the other four give him a look of disbelief.

"You're kidding?" Cara Valerian, girlfriend to Marcus Baker, demands.

"Well, to be truthful, Calum had shown up while we were resting in the meadow. Ojal, my Bulbasaur, was having a sun bath and I had taken out my data screen. He seem interested in Ojal, but then, there aren't any wild starters so she's rather unique. Then, as I ignored him, the Pidgey then perches on my left shoulder." He shakes his head as he remembers that.

"Well, I spoke, he flew to rest by Ojal, who's waking up, and the pair then talked. Then a vine from Ojal snakes out, taking of my shrunken balls, activating it before resting it by Calum." Ares says as he picks up his fork as his supper appears before him.

"And this Pidgey just tapped the ball?" Steve asks and he nods as Ares spears some noodles with his fork. "It just allowed itself to be captured?"

"Seems so." Ares says. "I then released him from his ball and he took to perching on my pack as we walked about." He adds before he puts a filled fork onto his mouth.

"Wait, you allowed both of these Pokemon to walk with you as you walked around?" Cara asks and he nods. "That's... a strange."

"Yellow version is the first to have a Pokemon wander behind you." One of the others muses. This soon erupted in a conversation concerning the pros and cons of allowing their starter to walk next to them.

Ares doesn't see any reason to mention that both of the two Pokemon of his are in his room, not in their balls. As dinner begins to end and dessert is about to be served, people often get up and wander around. Soon those at his table inform their contacts and friends who were sitting at the other tables.

As Ares leans back, he swirls the sparkling apple soda as he listens to the murmurs going about the hall. It wouldn't be long before others come looking for conformation concerning that story.

And so ends the first day of the field testing the park.

Field Test: Day Four

Ares studies the Pokemon egg that he discovered by Ojal this morning as they head to report the glitch that allowed Calum and Ojal to breed. Which begs the question, how many of the wild Pokemon have been breeding outside of their egg groups? He wonders as he arrives before the only vid phone in the building that allows contact from within the park to the outside.

"Mr Black, what is it you wish to discuss?" Mr Smulders, head of the park monitoring department for the field test.

"My Bulbasaur and Pidgey had an egg together." Ares informs the man and Mr Smulders blinks, clearly startled by the news. He even holds up said egg as proof.

"I see. If you will, could you place the egg on the scanning pad?" The man on the other end asks and he does so.

"We'll send you an E-Mail when we discover the glitch and have patched it up." With that, the vid phone blacks out and with a sigh, they head out of the room.

As they reach the dining hall, Ares glances between Calum and Ojal. He hadn't bothered to capture any other Pokemon the park had and now, it seems, his two had bred him a third. I wonder what moves this one will have? He wonders, not for the first time before continuing into the hall.

Everyone part of the testing group have taken to allowing their starter out of their balls. Today, there are a few other types wandering about the room as well, likely those that their trainer had developed some kind of friendship with, enough to trust them from running off when allowed out of their balls outside of battle.

A few of those Pokemon Calum and Ojal had met the morning of day two pause in their business to wave and call out greetings to his two. His pair return those waves and greetings before catching up with him. He picks up Ojal so she can sit on the chair next to him while Calum perches on the back of the chair. He hands the egg over to Ojal and the new mother gently wraps a vine about the egg.

It wasn't long before his meal order arrives. Calum and Ojal's meals had arrived once he had pulled his chair up. Calum had glided from the back of the chair to a cleared spot by a bowl of Pokemon Chow for bird types. Ojal uses her other vine to grab small amounts of chow from the bowl and brings it to her mouth.

As people finish breakfast and lingering, waiting for their families or girl/boyfriend finally leave, likely to pick up their packs from their room and then to the store to pick some more potions and Pokeballs. People do keep having newly captured Pokemon run off at a drop of the hat but they've gotten wise and come up with ways to prevent that from happening, although most now wait until they're in the center and in a enclosed room before allowing the newly captured Pokemon out of their Pokeballs.

With this happening, most were getting rather bore now with the selection of Pokemon currently being offered by the test and have taken to having matches between themselves in the meadow next to the center. Ares didn't join in such battles, prefering to walk around the park to exercise the two, doing so seems to help their stamina as Ojal doesn't feel the need to stop and bath in the sunlight as much as she had during the first day. One long hour is all she needed to remain active throughout the day.

Doesn't hurt that they seem to gather experience during those walks too. Shouldn't be long before Ojal will be ready to evolve. He thinks to himself while eating his breakfast and drinking his coffee.

As he finishes, Ares takes a few moments to reflect upon his life and the changes to the world that he caused to happen. Sure, in most he played a minor role but then, the waves he created in the UK can still be felt, particularly by those of the older generation that he hadn't posted rewards for.

And then his cell phone vibes before chiming. Taking the phone out, he finds an E-Mail from Mr Smulders. He reads it and sighs softly, it seems that it was only a minor glitch that had allowed Calum and Ojal to bred and is an easy fix. The only reason why the few others among the testing haven't had it occur is likely due to the fact that Calum and Ojal have spent so much time together and like each other. The glitch happens among those who are magic-users and there weren't that many among the testing group. The message always says that the resulting Bulbasaur will be fine and won't possess a glitch that will allow it to breed with bird types, although he shouldn't be surprise if the egg hatched faster then normal.

Nodding to himself, he closes his cell phone and finishes his mug of coffee. Glancing at the two Pokemon under his name, he notices that they are done eating. "Let's head back to the room." He says as he pushes his chair back before getting up off the chair. He's sure to pick up the egg that's resting next to Ojal, the mother allows him to do so.

The two grunt/chirp in agreement and follow him after getting off the table/chair. It takes him a half hour to have a shower, he didn't get one in once he noticed the egg next to Ojal, so he has one now. He is sure to put on something warm as they are expecting rain today. He's sure to pack some extra socks and cloths as he plans to teleport to the previous point of their walk so they can continue to go through the park, far from the center and most of the other trainers.

Once he has both Calum and Ojal in their respective balls, he slips from that location to the other one. With their arrive upon a large rock, the land mark which Ares had used for his teleportation. Leaping off the rock, he releases Calum and Ojal.

The two Pokemon shake themselves before moving about the area, investigating the spot. As noon arrives, he gets an E-Mail from the park that informs him that they opened up two new areas, one is a mountain and the other is an underground cavern, a prototype for future underground designes.

"Guess both are filled with rock types." Ares muses as he takes a few minutes to find the two open spots on the map feature on his data screen. An opening to the cavern system not that far from where they're having lunch. He is sure to check his supplies, he has a good twenty empty Pokeballs, a hundred PP potions, and between his health restoring potions and berries, about forty-seven total with most of the numbers being potions.

As they reach the cave opening, the sky clouds over and it wouldn't surprise him if it began to rain. Next to the opening, he finds a lamp on a staff, likely making it easier for him to walk about within the tunnels. He presses the button that turns the lamp on before glancing at the pair.

"Ready?" Ares asks and the two nods their heads. Ushering them into the cave, he then enters himself. The first group of Pokemon they spy is a mix group of Zubat and Golbat with a single Crobat among them. He assumes that the eggs on the ledges belong to the bat types.

They then began to encounter Paras, Geodude, Sandshew, and the odd Cubone. As they get deeper into the cave, Calum and Ojal began to fight off Zubat. As they stop by an underground river, they get to see some Psyduck and Poliwhirl hanging about the edge of said waterways.

With a frown, Ares studies the Psyduck, mentally debating if he should try and catch one, as in toss a ball after knocking it out. With a sigh, he decides upon another day. After a particularly tough battle with a Zubat, Ojal begins to glow.

Then, that glow shifts into the form of an Ivysaur. As the glow dies down, Ares and Calum get their first look at Ojal's new form. Calum chirps and circles about Ojal before landing next to his first Pokemon. Rubbing his chin, he realizes that soon enough, Calum will be doing the same.

"Congratulations, Ojal." Ares says when Calum and Ojal finish chatting with each other. Or maybe by the time we leave these caverns... He corrects himself as he takes a few minutes to read what little information his PokeDex has on Ivysaur.

They continue to encounter more wild Pokemon and he does spy some eggs, likely belonging to the Pokemon that is more then a little common in a certain area or perhaps a better word, more likely the right one, territory. Ares takes a few minutes to check his watch, having the staff lean on his chest and shoulder as he rolls his sleeve up to check his wrist watch.

With a hum, Ares allows his sleeve to go back down and grip the staff once more. "So... which direction do you guys think will guide us out of here?" He asks curiously as he finally admits that he's rather turned around in this place.

The two shake their heads and Ares hums with a frown. He glances behind him to note their tracks. And then there's always teleporting out of here. He muses to himself.

Noticing a ramp that leads up, Ares directs the two to the ramp. Slowly, they walk up the ramp and then enter into a seemingly cram into a tunnel. They pause upon seeing something sparkling in the lamp light. Calum glides from his perch on his pack and lands next to the item.

Moving over, he finds some kind of white crystal in the wall, a few inches by the floor. Nodding to Calum, the Pidgey flaps his wings a bit to reveal more of the crystal. It takes him a few minutes to realize which generation of Pokemon this resembles.

"Interesting... Well, let's keep going." Ares says to the pair of Pokemon. Calum leaps up and flies to his pack once more.

Stretching his shoulders as they continue to walk up the ramp. As they continue through the tunnel, they didn't come across any Pokemon. They come across a large area, as they move about looking for another path, they come across more of those crystals and they range from white to yellows and reds.

They also encounter a great deal of Sandshrew and Paras. The lack of bat types mean that they are far from an opening leading outside, well, Ares hopes that's what it means at least. He bends down to get a look at this blue crystal when he notices a strange print, he takes out his PokeDex and searches for what Pokemon left such a print as it looks different then those left by the other Pokemon they've encounter.

The entry for Clefairy appears, causing him to blink at the picture. Ares closes the device while humming thoughtfully. "Let's go hunting for Clefairy, after we have a snack." This is greeted with some cheers from Calum and Ojal.

Finding a good spot to sit, he sits down and once Calum gets off his pack, he moves it onto the ground so he can dig through it. Luckily, the elves had packed extra, they've been packing extra just in case he captures one or two more Pokemon.

He had saved his dessert and as Calum and Ojal ate their snack, Ares eats his cup cake and drinks his water. He is sure to fill up one of the spare bowls with water. Once they are done, he packs up their stuff and a quick answer of nature call sees them trying to follow the Clefairy tracks.

He trusts Ojal to keep them on course as she should have an easier time seeing the tracks. They find a steep climb and they climb it, although he does have trouble with the staff that holds the light but making sure it's settled on a board ledge before finding foot and hand holds to pull himself up. Ojal uses her vines to pull herself up along the rock face.

It isn't that surprising that Calum has it easier out of them but the Pidgey isn't large enough to fly about with the staff. Every so often Calum chirps something and this has Ojal alter her climb slightly.

Finally, they arrive at the top of the climb and those that actually climbed took a break from such sweaty activity.

Pulling out the two water bottles, he opens one and places it next to Ojal before opening his own to gulp down some water. Ares rotates his head about, causes his neck to crack. When Ojal is done with that bottle of water, she sets it down next to him. With a few stretches of his left arm, he gulps down one last mouthful before putting the lid back on and then putting the lid back on Ojal's bottle.

Putting his pack on, he grabs the staff and uses it to get up off the ground. Calum returns to perching upon his back pack. "See any prints here?" Ares asks Ojal, being sure to have the lamp low to the ground so Ojal have a bit more light to check for foot prints.

Ares did think about checking to see if there's an update concerning the egg he's carrying but decides to do so when he's back at his room at the center. So they continue on following what little foot prints they can concerning their search for Clefairy. They continue upwards, he assumes they are heading up as they keep walking on an incline.

They do encounter some more Paras and after the ninth after they walk into this tunnel, it's Calum's turn to evolve. Calum glows brightly and soon that light shifts into a larger bird form, that of a Pidgeotto, which is a good foot larger then his previous form and sporting a chest upon his head that goes towards the back.

Calum circles about them, clearly happy about reacting a higher form in his evolutionary line. Ares sighs while shaking his head and Ojal snaps at Calum, likely berating the bird for erasing the tracks in the dirt. Properly scolded, Calum moves to perch on his pack and chirps his apology.

They move up some more and rediscovers the tracks. As they come to an opening, they catch his first glance of Cleffa and Clefairy, although the first scatter for hiding places while the Clefairy move into cover their vanishing act, none came charging up to either Ojal or himself.

They were more startled by finding such a large number of them then to try and pick one out to try and battle it so he can catch it. At this point, I would love a canine type to sniff them out. Ares admits to himself. Or just something that's got a good hunter that knows how to track one down.

Then he notices something something sparkling faintly in the lamp light. Ares approaches it and the sparkling changes to various colors getting reflected back at him. Once he's within a certain distance, he finds more then a few eggs in a next made out of those crystal shards.

Then one of the eggs begin to shake. Moving the lamp on the end of his staff forward, Ares watches as this one egg shakes more violently. Then, snap can be heard and then parts of the egg shell fall off. It takes a few seconds before the baby Pokemon to shake off the remainder, but what startles him is the color of this Cleffa.

"Aren't you the special one, huh?" Ares murmurs softly as the bright pink Cleffa sporting green ear marks looks up at him with wide curious eyes. Calum moves to rest next the newly hatched Cleffa and chirps softly to the Shiny Cleffa.

Feeling Ojal tugging on his pants, he reaches down and picks up the Ivysaur. Heavy... He thinks to himself but manages to put her next to the nest of shards.

Ares then rummages for his data screen to take a picture of this particular scene. While the Cleffa is nervous at the appearance of said device, Calum places a wing gently behind the Shiny. Moving away, he snaps a picture and after a few more, the Cleffa getting more relax due to the fact that nothing seems to happen when he takes a picture.

Then, before leaving, he hand feeds the Shiny. While he wouldn't mind taking the Shiny back with him, Ares didn't think it very sporting as they came to capture a mature Clefairy not a newly hatched Cleffa. Nor is he particularly interested in snatching one of the eggs that are still in the next.

"Thanks for posing, little one. We'll be leaving now, so you be good for your parents, ok?" Ares says to the Shiny Cleffa as he helps Ojal down from the ledge after the pair say their good byes.

Grabbing the staff that's leaning on the ledge, he looks smiles at the Cleffa and then begins to walk away. Soft patter of feet and calls of parts of Clefairy come from the nest after they got about seven or nine feet away from the nest. Then, feeling the breeze coming from one of the tunnels, they walk down that one to come out upon the peak of a mountain.

Closing his eyes, he enjoys the feel of the wind whipping over the mountain. Looking up at the sky, the stars twinkle and not a cloud in the sky to hide their splendor. He kind of glanced at the time when he had his data screen out but it never sunk in so he rolls up his sleeve and takes a look at the time.

"Eleven pm. Looks like we'll be teleporting out of here." Ares murmurs and the pair grumble slightly at that as it means that they'll be put into their Pokeballs. With the pair in their respective balls, he teleports back to the center.

The light of the lamp dies upon entering into the center and noticing the rack filled with staffs with lights hanging from the top, he adds his staff to the rack. Yawning, he heads straight to his room. He releases the two before heading to have a shower, tossing his cloths into the dirty hamper.

Ares notes the egg laying next to Ojal and smiles a bit as both Pokemon seem to be asleep already. Turning off the lights, he crawls into the other bed, as the room sports two beds, and it takes a few minutes before he's fast asleep.

Field Test: Day Seven

Ares watches as one of the small groups heading out of the center pick up one of the staffs. It seems that a number of people were hunting within the caverns looking for that Shiny Cleffa as it seems that those monitoring this decided to release a Shiny on purpose as a treat for the group, they didn't expect that the Shiny would end up as a Cleffa.

The morning after the opening of that area, everyone was a buzz with the news of a Shiny. When he showed pictures of the Shiny Cleffa, pretty much telling what to look for, a lot of those who hadn't cared about the caverns fought to get a staff to hunt for that Cleffa within that mountain. Kids begged their parents to take them into the mountain so they can try for the Shiny.

With so many heading into the caverns, Ares had taken his pair of Pokemon about the outside of the mountain. They encounter Rhyhorn, Machop, Diglett, Geodude, Sandshrew, Paras, Pidgey, Pidgeotto, Spearow, and Fearow among the grassy ledges that are about the mountain. It takes them a while to find springs, streams, and waterfals to check to see what kind of water types hanging within them.

But today is the last day of the test, it's ending early due to having to install patches that have cropped out regarding magic users. Considering that beyond him, most of the other magic users were kids under the age of eleven. Although, considering they weren't European, they have been going to a school that is teaching them a few magical subjects, mostly history, magical creatures, and a few very basic spells, mostly cleaning spells that come in handy at home. Although, like him, they had to put their wands in secure lock-boxes and will get them back when the testing is over.

The next testing group will extend invites to adult magic users to see what glitches come up when dealing with a greater number of magic users, trained ones though. Given his connections to various magical communities, it wouldn't be hard to find some fresh graduates who wouldn't mind getting money for begin a beta and swear on their magic not to reveal any unofficial details before they open the gates to these parks.

Land has been purchased about all capital cities throughout the world (be they the capital city of a country or a state/province) and now that those sites are prepared to receive the magical 'program' that is Pokemon, they're moving on to purchase sites about smaller cities. They didn't need a lot of land, the expansion wards and charms allowed them to stretch even a foot by foot parcel of land into a fifty by fifty mile park. With the kind of land they have purchased within the limits of various capital cities, they could create rather good size countries.

With a mental shrug, Ares looks down at his egg. He's had more then a few offers for the unhatched Bulbasuar. Although, a few of the various trainers have recently decided to try their hand at Pokemon breeding, although that's still too recent to see any progress in getting their Pokemon pregnant.

I guess we might as well head into the mountain again. Might be able to catch a Slowpoke or a Psyduck before the day is done. Ares muses, he hasn't seen many of those outside of the caverns as he strokes the egg while Ojal and Pidgeotto rest next to him.

Finally the exit is cleared of trainers, he puts the egg into his pack before walking over to the rack. He tests each to see which he likes the feel of. Out of the four that remained, Ares picks the second as he liked the weight of it, not as light as number one and four but not as heavy as number three or as thick.

The two look eager to be gone from the center. They made use of the 'gate' that will teleport them instantly to one of the cavern's openings. As there doesn't seem to be any signs of other trainers within sight, Ares and his two companion Pokemon walk into the cave.

No voices echo as the lamp becomes the only source of light either. Ares' gaze often drifts up to the ceiling to spy clusters of resting bat Pokemon. They Pokemon they tend to fend off most of the time time are Geodude with some Graveler every so often, it seems that the trainers' Pokemon aren't the only ones evolving from all of the battles either.

As they walk up this ramp that leads to a higher placed ledge, they find a group of Sandshrew and Sandslash busy watching a fight between two of their number. They are so focus on the pair of fighters in their mist that none of them notice as they walk by as silently as they could and they reach the tunnel that will likely take them to another chamber of this massive underground complex.

They jerk as an Onyx slams through one wall of the tunnel just ten feet from where they are standing and through the next one. The ceiling shakes and parts of it falls down. It doesn't help that another stone snake seems to be chasing after the previous one.

"I... didn't know they released Onyx here." Ares finds himself saying, slightly numb at the size of the pair. It didn't help that the last giant anything that he's met had tried to kill him.

The staff created a shield that protected them from the rumble that got dislodged and sent flying when the two Onyx made their brief appearance. The dust settles but the shield remains in play so Ares looks up, he can't help but curse at the amount that's on top of the shield.

Slowly moving, the stuff at the top of the shield shifts as the staff moves. With a scowl, he grips the staff with both hands, he focuses magic into the staff which empowers the shield. The rumble on top of the shield shudders as the magic within the shield begins to expand outwards. It takes time but finally, a good twenty minutes later, the stuff on the shield has been shifted elsewhere.

Ares seemingly collapses and both of his Pokemon clutter close, clearly concerned about him. Sitting down, he takes off his pack and then takes his water bottle out, he gulps down water. He then pours some on his left hand and then rubs it on his face. He feels rather chilly and decides it's from the sweat he had coming out of his skin during him adding more power to the shield.

"I'll... be... fine. Just... let... me... catch... my breath." Ares manages to wheeze while looking first at Ojal and then at Calum, giving them each a small smile. He coughs a bit, after all, he hadn't had time to familiarize himself with the staff to safely feed it his magic and it likely didn't help that the magic inherent in the staff is likely House Elf magic.

After a few minutes, he feels somebody poking him in the arm. Ares looks up and finds Ojal offering him a berry. Chuckling softly, Ares gets up after taking the berry. "Thanks but I don't think it'll work on me." Is his answer as he puts the berry back into the pack.

He is then reminded about the water ball as Ojal holds it up to him using one of her vines. Ares nods his thanks and once the cap is back on the bottle, he puts it back in his pack. He shakes his head and as he shoulders the pack, Ares finally takes a look around the much altered tunnel.

"Maybe we should chase after those Onyx... If only to have one clear the path." Ares murmurs while holding the lamp part of the staff before him, moving it from left and right.

Calum chirps and the Pidgeotto leaps towards something. Following Calum, he finds a elemental stone laying under some dirt. Based on the color, he assumes that it's a fire stone. As he gets it off the ground and rubs it, he finds a image of a flame within the crystal stone.

"Guess there's some benefit to having those two race around..." Ares sighs and they range about the rumble, finding more items like gold nuggets, star pieces, fossil items that are typically used to resurrect prehistoric Pokemon, those colored crystals, special rocks that range from Ever Stones or Hard Rocks, and more evolution stones. They wandered into the right side of the tunnel and then into the left. The Pokemon they encounter during this improvise scavenger hunt are Diglett and a few Dugtrio.

Ares takes a moment to check on his watch, but finds it busted, likely due to him pouring magic into the staff. The watch had been digital and he never bothered to put any of the usual rune protections on the device, or at least upon the battery, to protect its function from his use of magic. Sighing softly, he takes a few minutes to rotate his head about, causing his neck to crack and pop.

Stretching his upper-body, Ares feels a bit sore and assumes that it's from all the bending over he's been doing in regards to picking up valuable items that the two Onyx brought to bare. Shaking his head gently, he motions for them to continue forward, moving over the rubble that fell from the ceiling. They did find more crystals and evolution stones before they cleared the ruin part of the tunnel.

The underground cavern they find at the end of the tunnel sports a river of sorts. Although Ares doesn't see it, he can hear the water and the splash of the water as something falls into it. They didn't encounter any Pokemon as they walk up to the water's bank. It seems that the local Pokemon have been scared off by something.

"It's rather disconcerting, isn't it? Nothing showing up." Ares murmurs softly and Calum chirps in agreement while resting on his pack. He doesn't hear Ojal's agreement and guesses that she might have nodded her agreement or didn't respond.

They move to the right, keeping the river to their left. Ares did often look into the water but what water types he spies quickly swim out of his sight, making it hard for him to identify them or to have either of his Pokemon to attack them. He merely sighs after a while and as they come to a wall that the river is coming out of, he decides that Ojal and himself will swim across.

"Ok, Calum, I'm going to take off my pack and after I put some of my stuff in it, I want you to fly to the other side of the river, ok?" Ares says to Calum and the Pidgeotto chirps in acknowledgment.

Smiling for a moment, Ares turns to look at Ojal. "With Calum doing that, we'll be swimming across, unless you're not fine with that?" He asks his first Pokemon.

Ojal shakes her head and so, once he sticks what he didn't want wet into the pack. Calum flies the pack over the water, the pack sports a feather light enchantment on it as well as a space expansion one. He enchanted it as he was creating the pack, Ares typically creates specific items that he needed to have enchantments on them as they held better then just buying something made by somebody else and enchanting it.

The very act of crafting an item isn't unlike a magical ritual, one of the oldest. Given what you can do with magic, it's kind of surprising that they, the Wizarding society, has such a community mind. Magic pretty much makes you independent of needing others to create most of your stuff, particularly if you have the materials to do so. Ares reflects as he slowly moves into the water, Ojal waits a bit before leaping into the water as well.

He manages to swim the distance until his feet once more makes contact with the ground. Ares stops and turns to watch Ojal come swimming. Once Ojal is on shore, he leaves the river behind. What cloths he is wearing drip and stick to his body.

Finding where Calum is currently perched with the pack, Ares begins to take off his shirt and rings it out while walking towards the pack. Letting the staff rest next to the wall, Ares focuses on grabbing his pack and getting dry cloths out of the pack, he has a few bags to put the wet cloths into so they don't soak the rest of the items within.

Any Pokemon that show up as he is doing this face Calum and Ojal. As he finishes getting his shoes on, the last item he needed to put on, Ares begins to zips the pack up but stops as some commotion happens. As he crouches, he watches as a Paras is sent flying by an air attack from Calum.

"Here's a snack for you guys. It's been trying given what we've encountered." Ares says and it didn't take long before the pair are chewing down on some Pokemon Chow. Clearly the pair had developed an appetite since breakfast.

With their bowls polish of food, he takes them and puts them back into the pack. As the two drink from the river, Ares shoulders the pack and gets up off the ground. His legs ache from all the crouching but a few stretches help relieve the pain. He grips the staff and walks a few feet away from the river.

Once Calum and Ojal have joined him, they began to survey this side of the river. It wasn't that hard to figure out that while the other side had very little in the way of Pokemon, this side still sported a few. They also found another ramp that leads upwards.

The higher they went, the more Pokemon they encounter, particularly those seemingly made out of rock. The fact they found some Rhyhorn and Rhydon inside of the mountain kind of surprised him but then, the weather likely help to drive them into the cavern area. Fortunately, they didn't encounter any Onyx.

As they make it to the seventh ledge area, Ares suggests they rest and, being hungry, he takes something out to snack on. The pair take the time to take a nap, they lean against each other as they do so. As he finishes eating, he takes out his data screen to check for any event notices before putting it away, pulling out a flashlight.

He leaves the staff with the two, using the flashlight to look around for any unusual items. Ares keeps an eye on where he left his Pokemon. As he is about to head back, he hears a soft cry.

Startled, Ares turns and then a cheerful cry echos as something bright pink sporting green charges up to him. "Err? Oh, it's you! So, how have you been?" He asks the Shiny Cleffa who's hugging his right leg.

The baby fairy lets go of his leg, allowing him to kneel down as the Shiny talks to him without him even understanding a word the little Pokemon is saying. Although due to the emotions that come out viva the tone and the little one's face, Ares can make some intelligent conclusions about what the Shiny has gone through since they last met.

Ares nods at certain intervals and rubs the Cleffa on the back when the tiny fairy pulled in close, needing some comfort. As he wipes some tears from the Shiny's face, he takes off one of the empty balls on his belt and place it down. Like Calum had, the Shiny Cleffa enters into the ball. Once the ball stops moving, he picks it up and then releases the tiny fairy Pokemon.

"Come on, let's go see if Calum and Ojal are up." Ares says and picks up the Cleffa before walking over to where the pair should still be resting. "I think Vala is a good name, don't you?" He asks and she nods while adding a murmur of agreement as they reach the area aglow in the light of the lamp.

He clicks off his flashlight as they get close. Lowering the Cleffa onto the ground, he then swings the pack off to dig up something for Vala to eat. The Shiny quickly digs in, it seems as though she's rather famished but then, Ares could only guess what kind of encounters she's had within the mountain since Vala hatched to their meeting today.

Vala seems to be happy now that she has a full belly and tugs on Ares' pants to get picked up. He does so while watching a movie on his data screen, he is using these simple wooden rings, enchanted to act as head phones or ear plugs, so that the sound of the movie doesn't wake either of his napping Pokemon. Vala joins Calum and Ojal, leaning into the nook of his left elbow.

As time passes, Calum wakes but doesn't seem interested in moving away from Ojal. What few wild Pokemon that approached, they moved along, likely confident that they weren't going any where right away. Ojal wakes and then Vala does a few minutes later.

He pauses the movie as Vala murmurs out and then yawns. He's careful to take the wooden rings from his ears. When Vala climbs down to go greet Calum and Ojal, he puts the items back into pack. He collects the bowl that he had put Vala's meal in. His original pair seem happy to have Vala with them and as part of the team.

With his pack on his back, Ares asks, "Ready to continue on our way?" The three nod while agreeing to do so. He's sure to grab the staff.

Ares picks up Vala and once he's straighten, Calum perches on his pack once more. Gripping the staff a bit more tightly with his right hand as they begin to walk, Vala finally gets comfortable in the nook of his left elbow. Those Pokemon who make their appearance, they were chased off by Ojal or Calum, depending on what kind of Pokemon they encountered.

They find a tunnel and enter it, Ares is rather wary about having another Onyx or pair of Onyx slam through the tunnel but doesn't let it keep him from pressing forward. Well, if it happens, I'll have Ojal use Leach Seed and Stun Spore on them.

To Be Continued?

Ranma and the Spring of Drown Garu

I don't own Monster Rancher or Ranma 1/2

Jusenkyo

Ranma manages to leap with ease between the bamboo poles along with his Pops. As the teen begins to head for the center, the poles begin to look... dodgy, not that this keeps the daring Saotome from pushing forward. With the first four poles managing to hold his weight, the remainder of whatever hint of doubt within Saotome the younger is purged from his mind.

Don't see what the big deal is, this is easy! Ranma thinks and as he's about to toss out a taunt out to his Pops, he hears the bamboo pole whine. He leaps upon a few poles before coming to another stop.

"Always be aware of your surroundings, boy!" The elder Saotome declares and Ranma, caught off guard, rolls with the kick as it, which causes him to fall into one of the springs below with a splash. Kicking his legs while he struggles to get out of something he's become tangled in, a much changed teenager pops his head out of the water's surface.

"Lucky hit!" The creature, commonly known as a Garu in a Monster Rancher world, shouts before swimming to the bank. Ranma shakes his whole body, tail flipping back and forth in the opposite direction then what the main body goes.

With a confident smirk, Ranma leaps upon the nearest pole, although he doesn't quite make it as he seems to have misjudge the distance. Although he does manage to get a go grip upon the pole so that as he falls, the bamboo falls down along with him. It does snap but he manages to move it so that it lands in the spring and he manages to land on top of the pole before leaping towards the earth between the springs.

As Ranma the Garu glances about, it become rather apparent that the world seems to have gotten bigger on him. Or did I get smaller? Saotome the younger wonders while flicking his tail about.

It takes the teen a few seconds to spy his Pops and the man seems to be gasping at him. With a smirk, Ranma once more leaps up and this time, manages to land on top of an undamaged bamboo pole. "What's a matter Pop? You trying to catch flies or something?"

Then, as his Pop is about to recover, Ranma launches himself in his father's direction. With a punch, that seems to spark a burst of fire, the Garu that is Ranma Saotome sends Genma Saotome into a spring about five feet away while the teen balances on top of another bamboo pole, crossing his arms while feeling very satisfied concern his counter attack. Then, Ranma almost falls off the pole as something clearly not his Pops breaks the surface of the spring.

"What the heck?" Ranma shouts while pointing down at the fairly large tanuki sporting his Pops' glasses hanging from about its head. Then, noticing that his arm sports orange fur while his hand sports a very light brown covering his much altered hand.

He then wiggles his toes and finds only three toes upon each foot from the feel of it. He feels so much like fainting but in the end, decides to head for solid ground. Along the way, Ranma gets a better look at his new reflection from the springs he's leaping over.

As he comes to a stop, he then hears, "Ranma Saotome! You dishonourable coward! Where are you? We aren't done! You owe me a FIGHT !"

The teenager turned Garu glances up at this cliff where this other teen is standing. He merely stares dumbly at the guy, suddenly finding everything to be rather unrealistic at this particular time.

Do I know him? Ranma wonders to himself while trying to place the voice as he can't see much in the way of the face or any particular details. Then his thoughts are derailed by something warm running down his back.

"Don't do that! Couldn't you warn a guy before doing that?" The now human Ranma demands and then becomes aware of how chilly he is. "I'm naked." The teen murmurs in a flat, matter of fact tone to which the portly man wearing green nods.

"Yes sir is." The caretaker of this training ground as the shorter, older man puts the kettle down onto the ground before gesturing for him to follow. "Sir can borrow cloths while I get older sir a plank to walk on."

Then, as they reach the hut, a yelp rings out and as Ranma pauses to look towards the cliff, he watches as that guy falls into a spring. "Honored sir fall into Spring of Drowned Piglet. I go pull other sir out. You, young sir, go into hut please."

Nodding as it only reinforces that yes, coming here is a rather stupid idea. It didn't take long for Ranma to find a worn chest fill with different cloths and he isn't picky, grabbing a green shirt, a pair of crimson underwear, and a pair of black pants. As he puts on some slippers, the man in green arrives with a struggling piglet, likely the teen now cursed to be a piglet.

"Warm water returns honor sir back to normal. Cold water returns honor sir to curse state." The older man explains while placing the piglet down and walking over to the sink. The portly ground's keeper fills up a cup after checking the temperature of the water.

Turning off the sink, Ranma watches as the keeper dumps the contains of the cup upon the piglet's head, transforming the little porker into a teenager, also naked one at that really looks familiar to him. The teenage Saotome rubs his chin as he tries to recall where he's meet this guy before while the green wearing ground's keep heads out of the hut. Did I skip out on any fights? Not that I recall, but there was that time...

"Ranma! Because of you, I'm cursed!" The other teen shouts, shaking a fist up in the air. That... actually sounds familiar.

"Ryoga? Ryoga! Why the heck did ya here?" Ranma can't help but ask curiously as he honestly didn't see why Ryoga would do such a dumb thing.

"You ran out on our man to man fight!" The bandanna wearing Ryoga snaps, turning to face him even though he's pretty much nude from the head down. The other teen pokes Ranma in the chest and that brought back something else.

"Hey! It wasn't my fault! Pops knocked me out the early morning of the fourth day! Before I knew it, we were on a train with the country side flying by!" Ranma counters, pushing the hand who's finger is poking him.

"And get some cloths on!" He snaps to the other teen. "That chest has cloths in it, you might want to cover yer-self!" The young Saotome adds, gesturing to the chest filled with cloths that he got his current set out of as he doubts that they'll be able to recover his previous cloths.

Ryoga looks down and blushes rather brightly, tapping into unknown speed powers, the bandanna wearing teenager seemingly teleported to the bed and pulled off the sheet to wrap about his waist. Ranma merely raises an eyebrow at all of this while crossing his arms across his chest. Ryoga can't seem to look the young Saotome in the face.

Second tick by becoming minutes until the guide enters into the hut with a very irked raccoon-dog that is carrying a pair of glasses in their mouth. Upon seeing Ranma, the tanuki begins to bark and growl at him, causing the glasses to fall onto the floor while the guide fills a cup with some water.

Well, at least we're cure, right? Ranma muses to himself as he turns around when the guide finishes filling that cup with hot water.

Ending it here

Readers: Reason where this idea came from has to do with my sudden obsession with playing Monster Rancher Advance 2 for Gameboy Advance. I had this idea of Naruto ending up in the Monster Rancher world and raising a Hellhound, a sub-breed of the Tiger species until I realized I don't see a lot of Ranma 1/2 stories featuring Monster Rancher. If you do know some, make a comment or a review, ok?

American Werewolf in Mexico: HP

I don't own Harry Potter.

Moving his bangs, the almost twenty-one year old Harry Potter also known as Boy-Who-Lived and unknown to majority of the world, member of a werewolf breed that some American company had stupidly created. At least in the wizard's bitter opinion as he stares down at the headless rabbit and with the moonlight shining down, the black furred werewolf begins on the rest of the body.

Finish eating the rabbit, Harry is no longer hungry. And then, his half hour is up and he painlessly transforms back into his typical form, the shape he was born with, minus the tattoos mimicking tiger's stripes. The stripes aren't just on his face but all over his whole body. With a shake of his head, wandless, Harry causes a glamour to spring about him, hiding his tattoos.

His gaze finally moves away from his bloody hands to glance up at the full moon, the last of the set. Taking a deep breath, Harry lets it out slowly, closing his eyes as he begins to inhales. Under the July full moon, Harry recalls just how he became a werewolf and received his tiger stripe tattoos.

September 14, 2000

Small Town In Mexico

The sun is out and yet, this werewolf stands as bold as can be with sunlight lighting up everything. The fur seems to be a light brown mixed with black spots behind the ears and a kind of V on the back. The typical nocturnal being seems to be a huge example, not that Harry is much of an expert on those affected with the curse but not even Remus tranformed really got to be very tall compared to his human form, the illusion of gained height came from the legs becoming more like the back legs of a wolf or cat and the ears.

Which causes Harry to muses out loud, "You've got to have a bit of giant's blood in you." He licks his lips, the town had been a magical community and yet, it seems that this werewolf managed to decimate it down to every last babe and pregnant woman. It's like this guy is immune to spells.

The werewolf doesn't seem to make any move to advance or retreat. He is at a lost how to kill this guy outright with spells. Tensing up, Harry flicks his wand and causes the ground about the werewolf to explode into towering spikes. The werewolf leaps back but not without getting an injury and then as the werewolf charges at him on fours, reacting on instincts, Harry fires at the werewolf but the spell, upon hitting the magical afflicted man in the form of a beast, just shimmers out of existence.

Instead of biting his arm right off the bat, the magical wolf-like being chomps down on his wand . Then, as Harry shoves his hand near the fanged mouth, the jaws open slightly and then comes down dig just hard enough to break his skin of a few of his fingers. Hissing in pain, the werewolf backs up and once off of him, does a kind of push up that allows the wolf-man to stand on his back legs.

With the nose twitching, the werewolf stares at him for a few minutes as he curses and tries to wrap his bleeding fingers. The ears perk and then, the werewolf moves to the side and then drops down on all fours, walking away. There's nothing Harry could do as his wand has been destroyed and his fingers bleeding. He can't help thinking that at least the moon wasn't out or else he'd become a werewolf as well.

September 18, 2000

Harry collapses down on the ground, he hadn't been feeling well since the evening of the fourteenth. The wounds under his bandages had been throbbing rather furiously but this morning, they haven't, which he had thought meant they were finally healing. As his glasses fall down upon the ground, the twenty year old suddenly finds his body on fire and every part of him itchy.

Then, as his senses swim and his balance vanishes, he can't help but find that a thumping sound surrounding his very being. As it ends and his senses return to him, the adult man finds himself ravenous and very parched. Then the bleeping of sheep reaches him and the thought of mutton causes him to lick his lips.

Pushing himself up off the ground, he runs, clumsily at first, towards the sound. Harry pauses at the fence and first using his hearing, then his eyes, finds this herd unattended. With a growl, Harry leaps over the fence and lands on one of the sheep, with a quick bite to the back of the neck, he begins to really tear into the dead sheep.

Still hungry, it didn't take long to get near another sheep, biting the face while forepaws moving about the upper-body of the beast. There wasn't much Harry cared about at that point beyond ending his hunger and when he finished, he feels pain again but didn't care beyond getting a good nap.

September 21, 2000

"Wakie, wakie." A voice says in a sing song way and Harry closes his mouth, he tries to swallow but it's rather dry within it. He opens his eyes and then blinks until his vision clears.

Harry bolts to sit up and stares about his surroundings, that of a parking lot. He's rather confused at the sight of the man wearing a black leather vest and loose, baggy even, jeans. "Looks like sleeping beauty is finally awake." The man says with a toothy grin.

"And you the bloody hell are you?" He demands, getting to his feet. He automaticly reaches for his wand, only he doesn't find it. The gesture of him padding at his pants seems cause the other man to chuckle.

"Well, ya ain't going to finding a magic stick about your being, don't rightly know where to get ya one being as I don't give a crap about that techno shit either." The man states with an American accent. "Name's Albert Howard and I'm here to give ya the skinny about what's what, ok Giles?"

Giles? Harry wonders while Albert continues on to say, "Ya see, about three years, I was across the boarder, running with a drug smuggling crew when this fucking wolf thing suddenly drops into the room from the fuckin' top of this stair case! Just, woosh and suddenly, lead is getting unloaded at this hell beast." Albert begins to pace, "Blood coming off of it but ain't doin' lastin' damage as it keeps getting up with bullets coming out of its damned body!"

"It gets near and it's tossing people about but then it begins to start taking bites outa people. Me included! It vanishes like, ten minutes after it showed its mug. We hunted around for it and after fifteen god-dang minutes, we thought it gone until it showed up again, only this time picking us off one by one." Harry is beginning to get an idea of what this is leading to.

"We finally track the mother-fucker down and then, witnessed it transform into this scrawny ass nerd with no scratch on him!" Albert seems to pause, his frown transforming into a wicked smirk. "Didn't take long to string the fucker up, course throughout this, the nerd was babbling to thin air. Then, as we were just getting our knives ready, the asshole just grins and begins to fucking transforms! Wising up, I quickly slit the fucker's throat and then made sure to decapitate his head."

Then the smirk vanishes from Albert's face. "Not long after that did that swarm team swarm the place. I managed to hide out among the dead, almost died when they decided to burn the place down. A few days later, I blacked out and when I woke, I was in a meat packing plant with a few dead employees about. Didn't know what to think until I got this itch during the next full moon and transformed into a fucking monster wolf, only bigger then the one that scrawny nerd had turned into and not crimson in color either."

"Didn't take me long to realize that I would end up in a kennel if I'd stayed so I headed south of the boarder and never looked back." Albert states and glances over towards Harry. "I've learnt a few things about this blessed curse, like if ya transform outside of the three days and nights of the full moon, it hurts as hell but during that time, it's painless."

"Next is, first year, your transformation lasts fifteen minutes before ya become a man again and if ya wait fifteen minutes, ya can transform again, it's limitless during that time, ya know? Second year, that time increases to thirty, and it seems that in year three, ya transformations lasts forty-five minutes." Albert watches his expression as it dawns on him just what this means.

He can transform at will and he keeps his mind. Harry thinks as he pales. He begins to look for an escape route, this only causes Albert to laugh. "Oh no, I ain't going to kill you. If I wanted to, I'd have gone for ye throat after destroying ya stick. Kind of surprised to find ya hadn't kicked the bucket, most of your kind can't survive more then a day or two. Must be being a Brit, ya different then the local stock, eh Giles?"

"Then what is it you want from me?" Harry asks, he wasn't going to volunteer his name, while he doesn't get the reference, he's pretty sure that he can live with this murder calling him Giles. He doesn't feel that he's going to like where this is heading.

"Every so often, I only lightly bite a bunch of people, track them to see which of them weren't affected and those that it takes root in, if it don't kill them within the first day that is. I then paint them up and give them this speech, I then set off on a killing spree in places where they have connections but seeing as you're a tourist, I'm just goin' to take a gamble and say that ya don't like people dying for no reason or else ya wouldn't have followed my tracks that day."

Hit the nail on the head. He thinks rather sourly and mentally groans at the sight of his bare arms. The skin about these black inked stripes is still a little red but looks fine, beyond the fact he both of his arms are tattooed. Not even the tiny bit sore... Harry thinks to himself as he rubs his right arm, noticing that it doesn't hurt despite it being rather fresh.

"So, I'll be leavin' ya to get your bearings and while your doin' that, I'll be heading out of town. I ain't going to be giving ya directions, I'm rather sure that you'll do that voodoo that you people can do to track me down." Albert states with a rather chilly causing grin on his face. "See ya around, Giles." The werewolf states with a two fingered salute and walks away, leaving Harry to watch the murder walk as he lacks the tools to prevent the bastard from doing so.

He can't help but feel so naked without a wand and he is just so damn thirsty.

December 11, 2000

Harry continues to stare at the rat he had bought from the pet shop just two hours ago. He is siting and looking down at the open box. Finally, he gives into the itch that has developed as he had been staring at the pie coated rodent. As he is naked, none of this cloths are ruined and the rat suddenly grows frantic, likely due to the face of familiar predator.

He reaches in and with a quick twitch of his rather thick fingers, snaps the rat's neck. Pulling the rest of the body out, he tries to breathe through his mouth as the rat had peed itself. With a single gulp, the rat is down his throat and likely in his belly. The hunger vanishes from him like it had when he ate that rabbit that one night in October, he had tested it again during the course of the full moon in November.

Kill an animal and devour it, the hunger vanishes only to return the next day at which point, you go kill another and devoured it. At first, he thought he could get by on already dead meat but he could eat it all night and day, it just wouldn't satisfy him, not like the action of killing and then devouring the critter he killed. Of course, there is that theory that if I just kill a single human the first night, I wouldn't have to suffer the hunger until the next month's full moon cycle. That's how Albert can keep on moving without leaving a trail of missing pets or massacred animals.

He's not willing to test that out, at least, not yet. Still, Harry could think of a certain... breed of people that nobody would miss and he wasn't talking about breeds like being a muggleborn or a pureblood either, he's talking about rapists and murders. That breed of predators that the world could do without. I wonder if being a werewolf is changing me in other ways?

Harry closes his eyes and shakes his head fifteen minutes are up and he transforms painlessly back into a human. There wasn't any blood on his hands but he does go to the sink and run water over them for a good ten minutes before getting dress. As he finishes getting his pants on, the door of this motel room suddenly opens and some suited people take a look about before moving on without so much a word of apology.

A string of Mexican Spanish beaks the silence and he walks over to his open door and finds suited agents crawling all over the place. Large vans, almost similar to RVS, parked upon the street out front of the motel. Is Albert's past catching up to him? If it is, I better get to him first.

Grabbing his jacket, his only other article of clothing and possession, Harry heads away from the motel. There's this famous mine that is a tourist trap, he's pretty sure that Albert is there or will be. He turns into an alley and with closed eyes, does his best to cast a disillusion spell on himself to hide from the eyes of the agents crawling all over the town. He didn't want to get in their sights, he rather his involvement be unknown to the world at large along with his condition.

It doesn't take long for him to arrive and to slip pass the barricades set up by the agents. He does pause when he catches sight of magic being done with what appears to be a wand, only, it's got crystals around the handle, or maybe the crystals were the grip, like leather on the hilt of a sword or dagger. Harry just stops and looks about him to see if anyone has noticed him, it didn't help that they were wearing sunglasses after all. Which could be enchanted to see those using magic to be stealthy.

After a few minutes, he finally continues into the mine. Nobody stops him or seem to halt him. Once in, he finds a trail of blood and can only guess at the number of dead already at the end of the trail. Then he catches the musk of Albert transformed and with a set expression, he slows down and does his best to cast a spell of silence on himself so he doesn't tip the other werewolf off.

He waits until he catches sight of the brown furred wolf before taking time to study the area. A number of agents lay dead and slightly mauled about the room, it wasn't that surprising as instead of having wicked claws to gore through flesh like in the movies, their only deadly weapon is their bone crunching jaws. Nor do their hand paws do well welding a weapon as they just can't get that tight of a grip. Shoulders aren't positioned well for a large range of movement either and it's just plain easier to move about on all fours then on two.

Moving into a deep enough hallway, he transforms and pads towards the entrance. A second later, he charges at Albert, his jaws managing to get a hold of the base of Albert's tail. He does his best to move along with the direction Albert moves, managing to avoid those snapping jaws from the other end.

Suddenly, something burns into his left shoulder and he lets go. Albert is charging the ranks of the incoming agents. He didn't know why the bullet his shoulder hurts so much but it does. He back as away and does his best to sink into the shadows.

Upon transforming out of his wolf form, Harry finds his shoulder still hurts but is more concerned with leaving the mine without being in the custody these agents. It takes hours of waiting and repeated casting of spells to hide him from sight and to keep them from noticing the noise he makes walking around among them as he moves to get out of the mine.

Upon noticing that Albert is still alive but injured, he picks up a gun and as silent as can be, puts a few of the bullets into Albert's head. He didn't want these people to learn anything from Albert through applications of truth serum, well, that is if potions can affect them at all. Taking out a few examples of the bullet, he then destroys the gun by melting it into a lump of metal.

Just handling the bullets causes him unease but he plans to study it to learnt why it can hurt them but not silver, like with the original type of werewolf. Once out in the area, he does his best to transfigure local material into cloths while applying a glamour to himself to cover his tattoos. He'll have to find a doctor to get the bullet out of his shoulder but at least the other bullets are in this bag he transfigured.

He feels... oddly disappointed with how everything turned out but he knows he has to leave as soon a possible. As those agents sport witches and wizards among them, they could likely hold him without much effort. Which Harry doesn't want as he has a life to get back to and likely an eager godson wanting a stack of gifts for Christmas.

July 4,2001

Finally Harry returns to his senses and heads for the farmhouse where a bachelor party is going on for Neville. It's doubtful anyone noticed his disappearance as they began partying at noon. Nobody will raise much of an eyebrow, if they are still awake, if Harry walks into the house nude but he still prefers to keep his tattoos hidden under a glamour.

Merry Christmas

Author's Note

Oh, there is more to the story, like Draco and a movement of Pureblood deciding to push through a bunch of harsh laws targeting anyone not a Pureblood, what else is new. Harry setting up a meeting with them at some isolated building he set up to be like one big walk in contract that just by drawing a wand and firing a spell at Harry pretty much gives him leave to kill said witch/wizard. Of course he only kills like three or four while the rest just plain turn on each other and make it look like Harry killed them.

By the end of it, Harry gets to raise Draco and what's her name's only two year old son, that he raises more in the mundane world as being a werewolf has been slowly altering his thought pattern to the point where he sees that if the magical society doesn't alter it'll be exposed.

Let's just say that there's a lot to the story then just Harry the werewolf killing Purebloods for being assholes. I kind of would love to portray him as a father to Draco's kid and why he pulls the kid out of Hogwarts during the Winter Holidays of the kid's first year.

Yea, I have one active imagination, the problem is, I just don't get around to typing it out.

Common Sense Exercises: Animorphs

I don't own Animorphs.

Short #1

Esplin 6483 blinks the eyes of the Hork-Bajir, a female named Jea Kepak. Esplin listens dimly to Jea while getting up off the floor, moving away from the edge of the pool. A fellow Hork-Bajir Control waits at the bottom with an impatient look upon their face while giving out orders to those new Controllers coming from the infestation pier.

"You are to answer to Sub-Visser 84." Said Controller states and Esplin heads towards this unit of fellow new Controllers, secretly amazed at how easy this walking is becoming while Jea continues to demand that the Yeerk gets out of her head, which is rather distracting in Esplin's opinion and discomfort.

Well, maybe our scientists will make use of Arn technology to create a race of non-sentient hosts. They made these Hork-Bajir and other species, why not use those expertise in a practical manner of engineering hosts? Esplin reasons to himself as he asks using Jea's voice, "Is this Sub-Visser 84's unit?"

"By the transport." The other Controller states, waving Esplin towards the ship, which surprises the Yeerk but Esplin is already heading in that direction a second after getting direction. Esplin glances about as Controllers go about their tasks, moving to avoid them as best as Jea's body could.

"Esplin 6483 reporting as ordered." The Yeerk states to the one carrying a data pad. The other Hork-Bajir Controller studies them for a moment, Jea seems to finally quiet down before the other just waves them into the ship.

"We depart in two minutes, be sure to strap yourself in." States the other Controller and Esplin once more causes Jea's body to move up the ramp. The ship looks like one of those Andalite ships, likely one of the few that was captured along with the other ships that would enable their race to travel in space.

The inside shows signs of alterations, likely due to engineers installing new equipment to replaced damaged equipment. Esplin finds the hold and finds a place to strap in, sitting next to a fellow female Controller. "You got any special skills?"

Blinking Jea's eyes, Esplin glances to the right, to the male Controller. "I use to read up on Andalite biological archives when I had access to the computer." Esplin replies to the question, not sure what that had to do with anything.

"You studying to be a scientist?" The Controller to their left asks. Esplin shakes Jea's body, while replying, "I just wanted to know what species there are out there and what kind of strengths and weaknesses they had. Most of the techno jargon went over my head, even with access to a language program."

That seems to cause the other members of the unit to relax. "First host?" A second male Controller asks and Esplin nods Jea's head.

"Ah, well, I doubt you'll get to enjoy the sensation of tree travel at our destination." The female Controller to their left states and it didn't take Esplin long to access Jea's memories. Only, they made the Yeerk rather uncomfortable as it seems to renew Jea's yelling and struggles to get out from out of Esplin's control.

Suddenly, the ship jerks and then, there's this sensation of raising up into the air. None of the others spoke, not that Esplin could blame them, it's rather tense as they could fall under attack by free Hork-Bajir and starved out of their hosts. The tension then begins to leave and conversations develop among the veterans as Esplin is the rookie among them.

Esplin's mind wanders, although staying out of Jea's memories. Esplin didn't know what the future holds and has mixed feelings concerning it, excitement and dread in equal measures.

Seven Months Later

Esplin 6483 swims about the pool, enjoying the fact that Jea's presence is gone. In some points, during his time as a guard at this Arn encampment, Esplin has taken to reading up on Arn's biological sciences and believes that it shouldn't be hard to use said technology to create a race of blank hosts. And yet, to Esplin's dismay, all those that tried to bring up seem to suffer from set back that causes them disgrace or death.

It seems that from the first time scientists have gone through Arn data banks, they had dreamed up the same thing Esplin had but nobody seem to have something to show the Council anything concerning why they should purse this course of action. Esplin had read and reread various proposals, none of which plotted out anything resembling a schedule or even a single form of a host species they could create using Arn technology.

In the end, most scientists and those in the know avoid speaking about such a possibility, thinking such a project is cursed, even if it never been brought before anyone on the Council. Esplin didn't think the project curse but admits that something doesn't want Yeerks creating their own breed of hosts using Arn technology. The Yeerk would have blamed the Arn but that species probably be happy to give them anything they wanted just so they wouldn't destroy their whole race.

Breaking Esplin out of his thoughts is his name being called to the infestation pier. Within seconds, Esplin waits for the familiar smell of Jea to come into the water before darting for the ear. With practical ease, Esplin reaches the brain of Jea and as the Yeerk settles in, mentally winces at the feelings coming from Jea's body.

You just had to find get pregnant, didn't you? Esplin says to Jea, not particularly likely the feeling while Jea just seems satisfied with the new life growing within her. The pregnancy is still in its first term so there isn't any reason for Jea not to be infested.

Getting up from the pier, Esplin takes a glance at the time piece and then heads to the nearest lab to study this DNA strand that Esplin had been slowly constructing for the heck of it. With at least three hours before Esplin's shift to begin, the Yeerk wants to take advantage of the time. While most of the DNA mimics that of a Hork-Bajir, Esplin had been inserting genes of regeneration and trying to create this brain like nerve cluster in the chest area so that beheading the being wouldn't kill it or the Yeerk.

As the screen lights up and Esplin puts in the pass-codes, a six foot creature appears. It's head rests on a bit shorter and seemingly thicker neck while a series of short, thick blades about two inches long covers the top of the head. The rest of the body is very similar to that of a Hork-Bajir except for the fact it lacks the blades upon the arms and legs. The tail sports a large bone ball at the tip while three claw like blades jet out of the club.

About the end of the tail is suppose to be an acid spitting apparatus. The acid's effect are slightly modified from the stomach acid, making it mild within the body but coming on contact with the air, it lights up on fire for a brief amount of time. Esplin had added that bio-chemical weapon just to see if it could be done and so far, even though the genome is incomplete, it seems to be rather stable.

Besides, Esplin can't take all of the credit for how easy it is to create this genome, the Arn programmers had done their best to make it rather easy to manipulate DNA to such an extent. Previously, Esplin had engaged the program to locate matching genes needed to fill in the rest, among which is to find the right kind of structure so that the bones can be light and yet tough.

Finally, two hours had passed and the creature on the screen has been altered by the introduction of the new genes. The being now stands five feet at the shoulder but is seven feet in length. The natural stance is the being resting on the four larger limbs. It is capable of standing up to operate controls using these arms that come from this chest cavity but it can't move very comfortably about being bipedal.

The primary nerve cluster is located under that chest cavity, this cluster literally needs to have a Yeerk within it just to move. The idea of this kind of nervous system comes from the Hawjabran. This will keep the Yeerk safe from the usually method of beheading.

The tail adds an extra four feet and still possesses that flame throwing acid that is created at the tip and comes out from this hollow spike. The tail is capable of curling up over the butt and could spray forward, although the head will need to duck down as not to get hit.

The color would be primarily black with spots of light blue and stripes of green. It possesses two sets of eyes, one set looking straight ahead while the other set slightly higher up and to the side, allowing for a wider range of sight. The tongue possesses air taste buds on the bottom of it while the nose possesses wide open nostrils. The mouth possesses rows of sharp teeth, although the being is omnivorous, capable of eating bark and greenery to flesh and bones of the dead.

"Impressive. A rather bulky design but given the digestive track, likely needed." Jea's body stiffens and Esplin slowly, jerkily, turns to find somebody very important standing there, looking at what Esplin's free time had wrought.

"This is just my second design. The first is bipedal, although shorter then a Hork-Bajir, it possessed wings for gliding." Esplin says and taking a look from the other Controller as permission, he saves this design and brings up his first.

Then, directs Jea's body to step back as the Emperor advances. Esplin didn't know what to do, this whole thing seems... surreal.

"Only five months to reach adulthood? Rather short life span, but then, they grow up rather quickly. Hm, yes, I want five thousand of this design ready in five months and a thousand of your second."

"Yes sir!" Esplin bows and remains so as the Emperor and bodyguards leave the room. Jea's heart pounding in their shared chest. Once alone, Esplin moves to another computer terminal and brings up the Arn's network to check upon the spawning tanks.

With a frown, Esplin finds a com-device and get a hold of the head engineer to inform them to begin creating and repairing the spawning tanks. Of course the Sub-Visser wasn't happy about it and demanded why they should do so. To which Esplin states, "Because the Emperor needs eight thousand spawning tank hooked up yesterday."

Esplin is rather overwhelmed when the Sub-Visser contacts him later informing him that they had a hundred ready to go and were working on importing more from the other settlements along with making them. Next, the head scientist contacts him concerning ways to improve the tanks, it seems that Esplin hadn't been the only one to find some project to do in their spare time beyond hanging out with their comrades in the time off lounge.

While Esplin 6483 hasn't been officially promoted, many have begun to treat him as though he possessed the rank of Sub-Visser and then that of Visser when the other Sub-Vissers of the camp began to answer to him as those spawning tanks get filled up with those engineered eggs of his first design.

Short #2

Garoff 2759 finally realize what is wrong with the ships that the new Yeerk Empire has been busy building. They were wasting resources building ships for Controllers to pilot instead of making use of Andalite technology to allow Yeerks without a host to pilot ships or even man weapon stations.

We can make them smaller, saving resources, and maybe install mini Kandrona Ray generator in them so they don't have to exit out ship. Garoff thinks. Have to be sure to have relief with them, given how large we are in our natural form it won't be much trouble.

"Now who do I have to speak with to set things in motion?" Garoff wonders out loud, using the Gedd's vocal cords in the Trade Tongue and with that, Garoff sets about looking through the crew list and is rather shocked to learn that a 'sibling' is in such an important position.

But before Garoff 2759 decides to approach said 'sibling', the Yeerk planned to do so with some plans for such ships on hand. Garoff didn't see how it'll take so long to create, not with access to the Andalite archives and use of mind thought technology to interact with the memory banks.

After five hours, Garoff is done and sends a message to said 'sibling'. Just as Garoff's replacement arrives, the Yeerk gets a reply and with a smile upon the Gedd's face, Garoff 2759 heads to meet with said spawn sibling. Even if I'm only allowed to build a single prototype, it should worth satisfying my curiosity concerning if a Yeerk without a host could contribute to the war effort. The Yeerk thinks while walking down the hallway.

Making it to the designated room, Garoff 2759 enters and tries to straighten the Gedd's pose as best as the Yeerk could do so. "This should be short and to the point." States the other Gedd controller.

"We are wasting resource on a frightful manner. The use of Andalite mental controlling technology means that instead of needing hosts to pilot ships, a single Yeerk interfering facing with the flight controls could so the same. Perhaps better as the ship's technology won't have to filter the host's mind to obey the Yeerk's mental instructions."

"Little in the way of minerals would be needed as the ships would be smaller and if we install a small Kandrona Ray generator, the ship's Yeerk crew wouldn't need to return to a pool and allow for long term survey/scouting." Garoff 2759 then waits for the other to say something or ask a series of questions.

"You want us to rely on technology that belongs to the enemy." States the other controller in a flat tone. "But you do have a point, Garoff 2759 that we are not using every means at our disposable. Create a prototype and if you can find volunteers to pilot it, we will officially review it."

Taking that as a dismissal, Garoff 2759 turns and walks out of the room. Now to find an engineer willing to help with this project. The Yeerk muses while heading to get food and liquids as Garoff's host is in need of that and rest.

Four Months Later

The wiring of the small ship is finally done, they had run into problems like how do the crew make repairs without hands and then came manufacturing equipment so it's smaller in size while still able to function. Every piece is custom made out of scrap parts. The final product possesses enough space to a crew of ten Yeerks, although it's more likely that at least five Yeerks will be used as they also have robots to do repairs as Yeerks naturally lack such appendages that they prize in hosts.

Garoff and those who aided in creating the ship have each ridden in it, circling the room, each taking turns piloting it. The weapons that the ship have also been tested and while not as powerful as normal size, they can switch intensity rather easily. It's likely that the ship and others like it could do well in stealthily entering into other ships.

One interesting idea is of a hatch would allow a Yeerk to exit out of the ship and enter into a stunned target with the ship hovering. From the updates send on to Garoff's spawn sibling, that feature seems to be rather desirable as it would allow them to take Andalites as hosts. Which would give them informants among their enemies.

Today, the ship only needs to prove itself to be tight enough that it can survive outside of the confinement of the ship as the updates of construction have kept the upper ranks of the Empire in the know concerning its performance. Garoff watches as the ship seemingly glides towards the air lock on the screen. The Yeerk's tension extends to the Gedd host body in the way of tense muscles and certain chemicals getting released within the host as well.

Garoff stays silent, the current crew has experience and there shouldn't be any problems during this flight test. They have used the air locks a few times in the past and none gave out. Only difference should be temperature. The Yeerk known as Garoff 2759 thinks to itself.

Garoff's tension gives away to relief when the request for them to return to the air lock. Things were looking up... until an Andalite star ship exits out of Z-Space. The tension returns as the alarms go off and orders for the pilots to head to their fighters. Garoff swears out loud and balls one of the Gedd's hands while glancing away from the screen showing the Andalite ship.

When the tiny ship requests orders, the Yeerk replies, "Sabotage the main ship anyway possible." Flickering the host's eyes to the screen, Garoff tries to follow the proto-type's progress.

As the fighters engage each other, the main ships attempt to get into position where they won't receive fire from the other main ship while having a clear shoot at firing at the other ship. The shields continue to keep the damage done by incoming fire at a minimum. Not being a fighter, Garoff is at a lost at how quickly order and counter orders get sent out to the smaller ships.

At some point, the main Andalite ship seems to suffer from a problem, likely engine related given the way the shield falls. Suddenly the smaller Andalite ships are retreating and they are getting hailed, when the com is brought up, they are addressed by an Andalite, one identifying themselves as Akdor 183, one of the crew of the test ship.

"Could you repeat that, Akdor 183." Janath 429 asks and Akdor 183 does so. -Carger 567, Alahar 14688, and myself are in possession of Andalite Hosts. We are currently stunning each Andalite we come across for future infestation.-

Silence seems to hang about them all as the fact they now have a number of Andalites that can be infested once they begin boarding the Dome Ship. "Good work, all fighters, secure that Dome Ship! Start loading some Yeerks into containers to be transported to the Dome Ship for infestiation!" Orders the Akdor 1154, the very same Yeerk who led the uprising against the Andalites.

Within seconds, controllers are stumbling over themselves to follow through with those orders. Everything just seems so unreal... Garoff 2759 thinks while staring up at the screen viva the eyes of the Gedd the Yeerk controls.

Unknown to Garoff 2759, the Yeerk would be given an Andalite host as a reward for being the Yeerk who envisioned the ship that allowed for the capturing of not only another Andalite Dome Ship but Andalites as hosts.

The End of the Tales?

To Readers:

Yea, been working on this since December so I hope you enjoy them.

The Looping Soul P2: Buffy

I don't own Buffy the Vampire Slayer or any other copyrights mentioned.

Casper rolls onto his stomach while putting his arms under the pillow. His thoughts circle around his defeat of that young version of Tai'Jynn. Although a school day, he doesn't feel like sitting through classes he's already sat through, listening to information he now knows off the top of his head.

Perhaps I should wait until he's reached the level I remember him reaching the first time? It would be a more... honest fight at least. The looping soul muses while his gaze is inwardly focused.

And then rather suddenly, Casper laughs at the fact that he still seems to have a moral code. "I guess it evolved like I have." The current blond muses once he's regained his composure. He couldn't keep the wide grin off his face as he finally rolls onto his side and sit up.

Swinging his legs over the edge of the bed, Casper stands up and heads to the bathroom adjacent to this bedroom. As he waits for the water to warm up so he can have a shower, he relieves himself before fully undressing himself. Tossing the cloths through this hoop that instantly teleports them to the laundry room.

His thoughts drift to the first creation of that demon body to explore the Hell dimensions.

Five Hundred and Twenty-Seventh Loop

It took a good twenty-one loops of genetic research and then another five to mix paper scroll magic into the mix to speed up the creation. It also aided in giving him options of how to express genes. Although, figuring out how to insert himself into the body had been, unsurprisingly, easy.

Not that it's really that surprising. Casper, although his current birth name is Henri Ellison, thinks while pushing his currently green bangs from his forehead. Given how the rich are always willing to pay any price in order to remain alive. The thing is, how to modify the spell so that I can go back and forth between the two.

The body within the tank is currently that of a child. The rest of the tanks that surround him are currently in the embryonic stage. Each of the embryos are meant to grow to appear vastly different then the others around it. The count is currently twenty-nine embryos and one child.

"What do you think?" Casper asks, glancing over to Jonathan. "Think you can handle this body when it's older?"

The sixteen year old nerd/warlock looks startled and opens his mouth to say, "Wha?" Casper smiles as he turns to the computer terminal, accessing the child demon's information.

"This body will be yours as a reward for helping me with this... project." He simply states to Jonathan. "I promised that you'd never have to worry about bullies ever again, didn't I? You inhabiting a demon body should give you the physical prowess you've sought."

And then there's the fact that I'll get to see if inhabiting a demonic body does indeed corrupt one or it is the spell that does so. Casper thinks to himself while Jonathan stammers out thanks. He plans to try his variation of the spells of transference with Jonathan.

Of course it goes without saying that if Jonathan dies during the course of the experiment, there are a list of others who'll be more then happy to jump at the chance to have supernatural capabilities and physical prowess. Given that nothing seems to be going wrong in growing this bodies, it means that those in the higher plane see it as a resource to exploit.

I really need to find ways to block their attempts at killing me or sending me to a Hell dimension if I interfere with their designs on the current time stream. Casper muses to himself, although he's rather restricted concerning research options about how to do so. He has been doing his best to avoid making deals with Demons as he doesn't know if such bargains will extend pass his current life in the skin of somebody who isn't Xander Harris.

Current Loop

Casper glances through his library of books, some of which were actually role playing table top game manuals instead of anything dealing with the shadow underbelly of the world which possesses magic. He's long since learnt of a number of ways to create majority of the items from each game line. His gaze lingers on what would be known as Classic World of Darkness game line, which actually led him to make overturns to the spirit world, not to be confused with lingering ghosts of people.

With a shake of his head, he pulls out one of the Dungeons & Dragons. The manual he pulls out is the one talking about vessels that allow mortals to travel to various planes of existence. He's slowly gaining an understanding of the magical 'physics' that allow others to travel between various realities, although it helps that he's been living on a Hellmouth for ages.

Casper does have a slight understanding of how to create minor pocket dimensions, he does know how to create bags of Holding after all. He is kind of interested in creating a version of it on a safe and from a safe to a closet and then from a closet to a room or even the whole of a house. He's not sure if he can work it without having physical walls but first things first, he needs to create a stable version of it for something made out of metal and that's rather problematic as at least the stuff he's used to create previous bags of Holding had been made from organic material like from plant fibers like cotton and silk from silk worms.

It's also likely that begin able to import material from other dimensions would open the way for new ways of doing things. Of course, he needs to get to those dimensions which is why learning to create a vehicle that should allow him to find dimensions that are more hospitable. It also doesn't hurt that it would finally allow him to gain access to the so-call divine realms where he can finally show how 'happy' he is at some beings' micro-management as well.

Although he does know of one way to get access to the spells to create said vehicle but, for now, he'll keep trying to puzzle it out on his own, using personal experience.

Nine Hundred and Thirteen Loops

Halloween coming up and he's slowly paging through his notebook that's warded up the yin yang to avoid the notice of 'Balance' demons. He's grown bored with using tiny bits of paper in hopes of putting a suggestion on various costumes. Casper did have a way of appeasing said God that gets invoked and hopes that it'll leave a very distinctive impression once the spell has passed.

After all, there's a whole race of tricksters in classic World of Darkness called Nuwisha. He plans to have seven 'characters' of this race along with examples from each tribe/race/court. There's going to be at least two members of the so-called extincted tribes, White Howlers and the Bunyip while the only ones being left out are the Black Spiral Dancers and the Nagah. Which brings the total of characters that will possess various people to be hundred.

Given the diversity of looks common among each of the various Fera/tribes/courts. Casper already had plans for the Scooby trio, Buffy's going to end up a Silverfang Pilodox who's breed is that of a Homid, as she needs to be reminded of her duty and she's got to have something mentally wrong upstairs as she does enjoy screwing vampires. Willow is going to end up as a Gurahl, Forest Walker Kieh to be pierce, only instead of her breed being Ursine. And finally, Xander is going to end up a male Ajaba of the Dawn Aspects with his breed being Homid.

He's set up the entrance that each person that shows up in his note book walks through the door of the costume shop, it connects them to said character sheet as just by walking through the door. After all, he knows who buys what and he's even gotten familiar with what Willow ends up buying when he buys up all the ghost costumes too. He lingers on the Gurahl character sheet that will soon connect up to Willow when the Scoobies finally go costume shopping.

Before closing the book, he takes a moment to go to the last page to where his character sheet is. That of a Camazotz, making him half of the population that will arise when everything begins. He's rather curious about what it'll be like to be one, to fly at night while relying upon echolocation.

Halloween

Casper counts himself lucky that he wasn't that high in the air when the spell broke. As he gets to his feet, he glances around at the wreckage and if this were an anime, he would be sporting a sweat drop at the sear amount of damage that's been had. Most of the dead are actual demons and vampires, he made sure that everyone who became a Fera or a Garou would not sense the Wyrm in anyone save for vampires and demons that inhabit the town.

"But then, it shouldn't be that surprising that we have so many living and passing themselves off as normal humans..." Casper murmurs thoughtfully until it dawns on him that the dawn has arrived so nobody actually ended the spell early. "Got to remember that for next time I decide to use Werewolf the Apocalypse. Or any other smart ideas."

Then, as the shock begins to wear off, kids of various ages begin to whimper while a few move about as if in a daze. Casper moves forward and gathered up the kiddies, being sure to check to see if they have any injuries but from the looks of it, they seem perfectly fine. As the memories of his character rest on the back burner, he slowly herds the kids through the town, dropping some off at their homes while picking up more.

He did find a few things that brought smiles to not just his face but the kids' and knows that it's the work of one of the seven Nuwisha. A few did seem to have left their names on some of their art work. He does make sure to keep from the routes that clearly been decorated viva limbs, organs, and bone.

It's about noon before he finally realizes how hungry he is and, making sure he has his wallet still, although the few ID in his wallet have been permanently enchanted it seems as the moment he touched it, the picture shifts to mimic his current body's face look instead of that of a bat. The name and other information shifts, although he stiffens at the age that is not in the brackets, which is his body's current age.

"Ok, get new ID, check." He murmurs under his breath as he pockets the ID before checking the rest of the contents but it seems that they remain non-magical. Closing the wallet, he walks into the breakfast restaurant and finds a number of people crowding about the tables. With a shake, he does notice the seven sitting at one table.

He knew who they were last night and not that surprised to see them acting friendly, after all, they had formed a pack last night. Which makes me wonder if any of the other packs connects survived the end of the enchantment. Casper muses as he places an order for a dozen muffins to go as he didn't want to stick around here any more then he had too.

As he sits in a park, he is reminded of the enchanted ID and pulls it out to take a long look at it. Although as he polishes off eight of the muffins, he found himself wondering if anything else had become permanently enchanted as it is doubtful that only one of item would have survived having that much magic going on, particularly as at least a hundred 'costumes' had tapped into the imagination of likely hundred of thousand gamers from around the world.

Hm, I wondered why Etan never put out any of the popular comic book characters out? Although, I have been transforming into future popular characters before, but then, I had been the only one who knew said characters. He tries to review what little he knows about previous tests. He's fairly sure he's never seen this level of destruction but then, he's never let loose over a hundred of beings geared for battle and dedicated to wiping their version of evil off the face of the Earth.

Closing the box, Casper decides to explore the memories he inherited from Torn-Scream-Echos. He's not sure when he finally came to, but the fact that the sun is setting and his box filled with what remains of his muffins being long gone means it's been a few hours at least.

Hungry once more, he gets up off the picnic table and pauses as it dawns on him that if Angle is dead then he could be seeing the sky of some Hell dimension in a few months. Murmuring a curse, he heads straight home to prepare gear for when that happens.

Current Loop

As night arrives, the opening of the door causes Casper to look up to find... "I forgot to cancel the copy, didn't I?" With a single hand sign, the clone falls to the floor as if his strings had been cut, which they had been.

Mentally murmuring curse, he carries the copy down into one of the basement level for storage as he'll use it again when he has sent his mind out of his current body and into that demonic one in another dimension.

To Be Continued

Spirital Fox Cloth: Naruto and Bleach

I don't own Bleach and Naruto!

Naruto giggles as he evades the irritated Uchiha police man, he turns right at the corner and suddenly, he trips. "Ahahahahahah..." The six year old blond screams as he brings his arms up, crossing them before his face. Then, the shadows and light seem to get colorful until suddenly he hits grass and falls forward, rolling while he finally begins to choke and cough.

As Naruto's vision slowly comes into focus and he is breathing regularly, the child groans and rolls onto his back. The sunlight greets him as he stares up into the sky while some clouds dot about. That was weird... How did I get out of the village?

Then, being a child, he grins widely and begins to laugh while talking to himself. "Hehehehe, I so show them! I'm Uzumaki Naruto, the awesomous future Hokage ever in the whole universe! Believe it!"

As he gets up off the ground, he charges off, not really paying any attention to his surrounds. The child's baggy, off white t-shirt presses itself upon the blond as Naruto races about the forest, heading northeast. Humming a wordless tune, Naruto found ways to occupy himself while waiting for those masked people to arrive and take be before the Old Man.

Then, as the blond finishes climbing up a tree, he yawns a bit and bites his lower lip as he looks up at the sky. As the sky darkens, the blond begins to get worried. "They've never waited this long to collect me..."

As the sun sets, young Naruto begins to feel rather hungry but he doesn't move to get down from the tree. Rather, he moves higher up into the tree until he finds a comfortable branch and getting comfortable, he begins to drift off. Being a warm night, Naruto drifts off to sleep.

- = Two Months Later = -

Naruto scowls as he trudges down this dirt road. The six year old kicks the ground while carrying this pack that somebody threw at him a few days ago while running away scream 'please spare me, little Kami!' While it's a step up from being called a demon brat, he hasn't been able to walk up to an adult to ask where he is and where Konohagakure is from here.

"Why are yea following me?" Naruto demands as he lets the pack fall to the ground, turning on his heels to confront the other problem that frankly, scares him more then a little. The elderly man sporting this plate on his chest and this chain that's, like, nine chains long seems to blink.

"Following you? Why would I follow you? I'm going to visit my granddaughter you whelp." The rather creepy feeling elderly man answers rather waspishly.

Naruto didn't believe it, after all, he's been bugged by these people wearing metal plates in their chest since he seemingly left his birth village. They just appear at random times, spend the day with him before vanishing. It doesn't help that they don't seem to have feet and sometimes, he hears these dull screams off in the distance that set his teeth on edge.

While he does want company, he has come to want the company of people he could actually touch. The six year old sits down with his back against the pack. His feet are sore from all this walking and he's rather thirsty, he has check the pack but found some bottle of headache juice in it, which he just left alone.

As the blond six year old is about to drift off into a nap, a hollowing roar sounds. He straightens up and his head snaps to the other side of the road. Birds fly into the sky as the roar becomes something of a background noise.

Naruto just sits there frozen as the sound draws closer and then the something begins to claw at his mind, a hunger that's worst then what he knows of right now. He's learnt through trail and error which plants he could eat without getting sick, there have been dry food to eat in the pack so he didn't have to forage around if he didn't want to. Something hazy appears coming out of the forest.

He can't see it real well as it seems to be bouncing around. And then, with a roar, Naruto sees it clearly, too clearly. Then the hunger in his mind surges forward as the monkey-spider thing leaps at him. Everything but the white monster fades to black and he knows that he's about to die.

If you don't want to die this day, use this! A voice bellows, jerking out from the feeling of hunger and the terror of the white monkey-spider inspires. He wraps himself up in the 'cloths' he mentally feels flying pass him.

The hunger vanishes and he just manages to leap out of the path of the monkey-spider monster's way. His body feels so light and feels so strong. He digs his fingers into the dirt of the path before standing up from his crouching position.

He feels something over his face and covering his head but it doesn't seem to obscure his vision in the least. "What kind of Hollow are you? Psst, it doesn't matter, that power will be mine once I consume you!" A feminine voice erupts from the monster before Naruto.

The blond child grins as he dodges away from the tail that snakes towards him. While the looks of his opponent are strange to him, the situation on the other hand is very familiar. This woman monster wants to catch Naruto? Well, loads of people wanted to catch him before and he's out race them!

"Na-uh! You can't consume me! I'm Uzumaki Naruto! Future Hokage of Leaf!" Naruto exclaims proudly, a wide foxy grin plastered upon his face under the mask he is currently wearing.

"Come and try, you Spider-hag! Catch me if ya can!" The six year old says and darting forward, he easily picks up the pack while evading the five limbs coming at him pretty much at once. With the pack on his back, he somersaults backwards before landing and darting down the path, heading back the way he came, laughing all the while.

Confronted with something familiar, Naruto doesn't care that its not some upset Uchiha, merchant, or Genin trying to grab him to bring him to 'justice'. Never mind that without the Old Man around he could wind up dead or 'consumed' as the Spider-hag put it. He doesn't even wonder why he has some red bangs whipping before his eyes or that the pack that once been so heavy is suddenly so light. Nor was there a question about how no longer feels as heat of midday.

For now, it's just a game that he is confident he can win. It never crossed his mind that there is a chance he could lose.

- = Year Later = -

Naruto blinks as Spider-hag screams, not the hollow roar that she's done before but a much more human sound. The young boy blinks and without breaking stride, shifts into those red cloths he received, with the sense of power and freedom, he easily leaps over the building and runs upon the very air towards the site where he can see the Spider-hag combat something wearing black.

Stopping short, he gets a clear look of what's fighting his 'play-mate' and 'buddy'. The person that is injuring Spider-hag sports a katanna sword, wearing black cloths, and seems to be a young teenager. Sensing something to his left, Naruto darts out of sight as somebody seemingly teleports next to where he had been standing.

Turning, he finds a woman coming at him welding another sword, only this one is much shorter and sporting very short black-blue hair with a single braid tucked behind each ear. She's fast. Faster then Spider-hag. Naruto admits as he finds it hard to keep his distance, particularly as she is attempting to use that same sword she owns upon him.

Naruto continues to try and evade the woman but she just matches his speed! He bites his lower lip to keep from crying out in pain as the sword does manage to strike him on the back of his left hand, he just manage to get out of a strike aimed for his shoulder. He is dimly aware of the defeat of Spider-hag and that the teenager is now watching this woman and him 'dance' about the sky.

"Enough of this, Sai!" Naruto finds himself unable to move much but the woman seems confident that she has him bound up. As she takes her time, the blond reaches into his own energy reserves and snaps the bindings as he rolls out of the down swing of the sword.

"Sai!" Naruto cries, the word seems to come naturally to him and suddenly, both of them seem to go rigid. Not sure how long it'll take them to break out like he had, he dart back into the village, once he's on the ground and out of sight, he transforms back.

A second after, the pair teleport about the building but he acts like he doesn't see them. The one before him glances around in bewilderment before teleporting away, along with the one behind him. Running a hand through his dyed hair, Naruto tries to come to grips at the new players that he now had to watch out for as they were clearly more skilled then Spider-hag and those other white monsters he sometimes glimpse in the months since he spied Spider-hag.

Naruto glances around the small village and then heads south, away from the village. Was that even a jutsu? He wonders, he never encountered anything like it before. Sure, those white monsters seemed to have special attacks but they always seemed to involve a body part and felt hungry to him.

"Sai?" Naruto murmurs under his breath as he remembers what it felt like to be under that jutsu and can't help but wonder how he managed to cast it upon the pair wearing those black kimonos welding those swords. Feeling a slight tug at his energy, he picks up a rock, tosses it, and declares, "Sai!"

The rock hastes a bit midair but it still moves until it lands. He also feels rather drained just by that effort of calling upon it in his current form. He then grins, he'll work on it until he can cast it without saying it out loud, believe it!

He picks up another large rock and gets ready to toss it once he feels he has a grip on his energy.

- = Two Years = -

"Oh man, I still haven't grown at all!" Naruto grumbles after he checks his height against the tree he's been using for the last month. The black dyed blond child pouts once more at this development, his bangs slipping from behind his ear to cover his face, much to his irritation.

He blows at it for a few seconds before using his left hand to brush it to the side and back behind his ear. Although Naruto is much more tan then he had when he found himself in these lands, he also filled out muscle wise. He does stand a bit taller but that is likely due to a growth spurt to make up for his poor dietary habits when he lived in Konohagakure so he is now a tall six year old but still six years old; in body development at least.

With a soft sigh, he takes the knife he has in his right hand and with a frown, decides to do some hair trimming using the knife. Without a mirror, Naruto doesn't see how uneven he is hacking it off or that his blond roots are showing even more. Putting the knife into his belt, Naruto walks over to the water bucket to take a look at his new hair do.

Sighing at the sight of his blond roots, the child pulls over rather beat up pack and digs around for some boxes containing herbs. For the next few minutes, Naruto adds various stuff to the pail of water, stirring it until it is black itself. He then adds some more and then stirs it. It takes time but a test shows it'll work as dye, he then takes a keep breath and dunks his head into the bucket.

He does this a few times and even does his best to rub it in some more before dunking his head in the pail again. He continues to do this until even his hands sport black splats. Dumping the pail, he then takes it and washes it in the stream. He returns to get soap to wash away the stains on his hands. He is careful of touching his hair, happy to allow it to dry on its own.

Feeling that he's not alone, Naruto glances to find a small trio of spirit gossiping not far from his efforts to clear the bucket and his hands. The child looks away from the three, they'll be gone by evening and no harm done to himself or to others. He had long since given up trying to puzzle out why he attracts the dead or what's the deal with those metal plates in their chests.

They also tend to vanish, hiding more likely, whenever those white monsters decide to appear. And usually when those white monsters appear so do those so call Shinigami. Although he has seen many different Shinigami since the first pair and has learnt a few more of their Kido.

A smile graces his face as he recalls the expressions those Shinigami get when he turns those same Kido on them . Once he is sure he can break a Sai without much effort on his part, he's taken to playing with the Shinigami but has done his level best to keep them from seeing him transform. He didn't like the idea of getting experimented on by them just so they can figure out how he works.

He keeps practicing them too, typically as he is now as it is so much harder to use those Kido and thus he feels a hundred times his size when he manages to pull them off! While Naruto feels a swelling of pride within his chest, he puffs out his chest while straightening his shoulders. He hums a tune while he finishes with the pail, while it did still have some dark hues, it doesn't look as black as it usually is.

He dyes his head to keep people from thinking his is some kind of Kami. While Naruto likes that better then becoming considered a demon, he just doesn't feel like it fits him. After all, he doesn't want to offend any actual Kami.

And those people can't be Shinigami either. 'Cause nobody escapes death and I've been escaping from them so there. He thinks, pleased with himself as he collects everything he brought and heads back to his camping site.

Putting things away, Naruto is sure to check to see if anything is worn before closing the pack. He leans back upon it and stares up at the sky, he finds it rather calming for a while until he gets hungry. Getting up off the pack, he heads for the village that's a few minutes run from his little campsite, all the while ignoring the fact that those three spirit were following him.

With a few coins jingling in his kimono's pants pocket, Naruto made a beeline to the small restaurant, an inn, of the small village. As he walks pass, the child notices somebody wearing monk's cloths and with a staff as he walks pass to get into the small building. Seeing the daughter of the own free, he walks over to her.

"Hey, hey, hime-chan, can I get something to eat for this?" Naruto asks, pulling out the coins he has in his pockets, offering them up to the fourteen year old. She turns to smile down at him before humming at the sight of the coins.

"Hm, let me just get your order from the kitchen, ok chibi-kun?" The daughter turns after ruffling his newly dyed locks and heads for the kitchen. He sighs a bit but is content to wait, he knows from experience how much he'll have left after he leaves with his meal.

The gossiping trio of women spirits were outside, which is just fine with him as it means they are content to only address each other then to butt into his business. As Naruto begins to fidget while standing in place, he is relieved when the daughter comes back with a bento box. As he leaves a few coins lighter, the seemingly six year old comes out to find that the monk seems to be intent on studying the three gossiping spirits.

With a shake of his head, Naruto dismisses this observation and walks away, heading to a tree to sit under to eat his bento. When he's done, the almost ten year old takes the box up to one of the benches and leaves it there. Humming to himself, he heads back to his campsite to continue to punch that post he set up.

As the day progresses, he pauses to take a breather to find that the monk had followed him back to his campsite. He frowns in puzzlement while he tries to think of a reason why he would attract the attention of this particular adult. I don't recall seeing him around here before today.

"Do you mind if I ask you a few questions?" The monk asks upon walking over to him upon seeing that he's stopped attacking the post. "You didn't do anything wrong, I just wish to know a few things concerning the area."

Naruto kind of relaxes but can't help at feeling that he isn't the right person to ask concerning the village. "I guess... What do you want to know?" He asks as the monk crouches, the staff leans on the man's left shoulder.

"Has a woman you were close to recently died?" The monk asks and he can't help but blink at the question. He shakes his head and this causes the monk to frown.

"Are you sure? It need not be your mother, an aunt or even somebody you consider to be your sister." The monk presses and he glances over to the trio of spirits, at the sight his eyes light up as he gets why the monk is asking.

"You see those three too? Never meet any of them until I visited the river today." Naruto waves a hand towards the three women. "I've gotten use to that, actually. Spirit show up, spend the day with me before they vanish." Not caring at the look that flashes across the older man's face.

Shrugging, he add, "Don't know where they go or why they show up like they do, only that they can be really annoying." The monk glances towards the spirits with a raised eyebrow.

"Three? There are three spirits here?" The monk asks and Naruto nods.

"Yea, can't you see them?" He asks with a confused look upon his face. "I mean, you were asking about a woman dying on me, right?"

"I can sense an overly female presence in that direction but I can't see her... them." The monk informs him rather truthfully after looking in that direction. "How well can you see them?"

Naruto takes a moment to look at the three, studying them more intently. It's really his first time really staring at them as he had gotten in the habit of ignoring spirits that linger in his presence. He then describes them one at a time.

The monk's expression becomes clouded, Naruto couldn't read the emotions that seem to be going on within the monk. Not having anything else to do and knowing the importance of such man as this monk, he does his best to stay still but that doesn't help him from moving back and forth or moving his hands from before him to his back. "How would you like to become my student?"

The dyed blond blinks at this question, it's rather odd that an adult wanted to teach him something. "What's the catch?" He asks warily.

"Well, you give me your name and you travel with me, studying what I have to teach." The monk states. "I am Denji."

"I'm Naruto!" He exclaims proudly and this causes the monk Denji to smile. A soft chuckle escapes from him while Naruto once more suffers from somebody ruffling his hair, causing him to pout at being treated like a little kid.

- = Nine Years Later = -

Naruto claps his hands twice as Denji-sensei had taught him to do before praying. Head bowed, he thinks, I'm sorry sensei for not being quick enough to purify that monster. Please know that though I mourn your passing, I will do my best to follow the lessons you taught me.

He stands up and though his eyes are puffy from crying, he doesn't have any more tears to shed. The incense tickle his nose, but then, this particular scent always did that. Denji-sensei's staff rests in the bundle of cloth he wrapped it in. He'll be taking it to the nearest temple and inform them about his master's death.

Alone again. He can't help but think as he stares down at the incense pot and grave offerings. Although Naruto still appears to be six years old and his blond hair is dyed black, his eyes show this true age. He wasn't an innocent child that his body shows him to be.

Looking away from the small shrine, he does his best to pick up the bundle that the staff is wrapped in and then the child size pack that has his food rations, scrolls, and two alternate changes of cloths. He moves his hair braid so it rests over his right shoulder, reaching towards his chest as he hitches the pack onto his shoulders a bit more.

While he would have liked to say good-bye to the spirit of sensei, he knew it was for the best that both of them step forward on their own paths now, each heading off into different directions. Though the weight of the staff bundle is great, Naruto walks away with it resting in his arms, the top leaning on his left shoulder as he goes.

As Naruto walks away, he reflects upon the years he spent with his master and they warm him, causing a soft smile to remain upon his face. The lessons in reading and writing might have been trying at times but he finally got to understand what the big deal was and found himself enjoying writing down his thoughts down or whatever tunes that cross his mind. Drawing came next, particularly as he got into the habit of drawing those white monsters that appear from time to time, attacking him.

I never would have gotten the confidences to attack those monsters if not for Denji-sensei. I knew that those Kido could affect those monsters, I just never bothered to fight using them. They saved my life and not always in encountering those white monsters either. He reflects, but that only brought up the matter of how his master died so he turned his mind to other matters, like that tune that's become rather popular among kids that he wrote !

Shaking his head, he thinking upon that song, a wide smile upon his face as he continues down the path. He hums a bit, the burden upon his back is rather familiar and one he'll likely continue to feel as he has yet to grow at all.

Ending it here

Readers: Ok, it has been a little over a whole month since I began this and I can't think of anything more to add, so I'm posting it. I hope you enjoy this.

Defying Pride: Dragon Flyz

I don't own Dragon Flyz.

To Readers: Events are based upon Dragon Flyz episode Son of Dread. It's central plot is about Z'neth with a case of memory loss that Dreadwing tried to used to his advantage. You can find the episode on YouTube.

The first thing to assault his senses is gargling sounds that are wet. He feels something sticking to his limbs and as he finds the strength to open his eyes, Z'neth finds his vision blurred. With his head pounding, he pushes up with his arms, a slurp sound occurs as he pulls himself out of the muck. He has coughing fits that cause his body to shake and make him feel as though he's trying to hock up a lung.

Just pulling himself up causes his senses to whirl, he doesn't even get the chance to wonder about his surrounds. His body, particularly his head and back, ache and protest any movement but instinctively he knows he needs to find a place to shelter in. That being out in the open like this could very well be the death of him.

Standing up, he then hunches over while a fist covers his mouth. His stomach calms down slightly and he becomes aware of the chill as the mud begins to come off as he rubs his arms. Z'neth dimly acknowledges his surroundings as he crosses his arms across his chest as he begins to walk.

His brain throbs and his vision keeps blurring. Must have been some fall. Z'neth thinks as he walks through this landscape featuring bones. Dragon bones.

Finally his legs give out. Privately he is amazed they took him as far as they had. Falling to his knees in pond of muck, he spaces out of it for a few seconds, becoming alarmed when he hears something behind him. With a sharp breath, he stands up once more, already looking over his shoulder to see what is coming up behind him.

He moves back as this muck monster gets close and its bulk becomes apparent. Without a thought, he brings up his arm and with his other hand, tabs his gauntlet only for it to click. He turns and flees, but he is quickly finding it hard to breath as he is pushing himself beyond his current limits.

Z'neth stumbles and falls into the muck. The muck monster bellows and he hears its paw slam into the ground not far from his leg. He turns, gasping at the sight of the wide mouth and glowing yellow eyes.

He begins to crawl away, as he grunts out, "No!" Although it comes out as go. Then, suddenly, a blast of something hits the monster and it falls back due to the force of the blast. Heart pounding, he turns to stare at the thing that almost had him.

Then all the excitement overwhelmed him and he blacks out. He barely gets a glimpse of who saved him. The toll of everything is just so exhausting.

Ten Hours Later

As Z'neth comes to once more, he finds himself in a building. Yet again, he is having trouble with his sight. Looking down, he finds that he is wearing blue armor with white straps and boots. Leaning his head back down, he closes his eyes as he hears somebody close stirring something.

He feels much more rested then before, although he still aches in places. As somebody approaches, he calls out for his father. As he glimpses a face, Z'neth asks, "Is that you father?"

His vision begins to blur as he calls out but seeing that a spoon is coming towards him, he opens his mouth. After all, he wasn't behind bar and whoever this person was, they seem interested in his welfare. Although, something about the others looks unsettled him, particularly the eyes. The glow yellow of them.

He shrugs the worry away as he continues to be spoon fed. As he finishes his fill, he drifts off into slumber. Feeling secure where he lay.

Six Hours Later

Z'neth wakes and finds himself alone. His vision is still swimming but he feels the need to get up. He has someplace to be and though he aches, he notices that they weren't as bad as before.

He feels a bit disoriented as he swings his body about and moves to get up. Pushing himself up, he notices the door. Once before it, he places both hands upon it. Feeling how solid it is with his, slightly pale hued arms still covered in that blue armor.

Then, feeling dizzy, he pushes off against the door and returns to his bed when noticed that the door didn't give. Feeling hot, he climbs up onto the bed and attempts to reach the hole in the ceiling. He needs to see his father.

Then, after exhausting himself and only causing himself become spent, he lays back down upon the bed. Groaning at how hot his body feels. Fever... I have a fever. Were Z'neth's last thoughts as he falls into a restless sleep.

Four Hours Later

He wakes to find the previous person once more coming towards him with a bowl. As the spoon comes towards him, he slaps it away. Then, he begins to black out as the person approaches more closely.

Where is my father? He wants to demand but he can't seem to get the word to come out. Father... He mentally cries out.

Seven Hours Later

Once more, he wakes and as he looks towards the door, he finds it open. Z'neth finds that his vision has cleared up and although his aches do bother him, he gets up anyway. He groans as he moves for the door.

As he walks through the halls, he finds them both familiar and wrong. He continues to ignore this, pushing down the thought that this place isn't safe. His father must be here, he hopes that his father is here. He wants to see him, to speak with him, say he's sorry for causing him to worry.

Nobody moves about the halls but him, the clicking of his boots upon the floor echo in the empty space. Slight panic sets in, is he going the right way? Has everyone gone off on a mission?

He comes to a pool of lava and the wrongest of it causes him goosebumps. This isn't home... Our father isn't here... A voice whispers in his mind and as he marches on, he slowly begins to agree with that voice.

He goes over the image of the person feeding him, the strange hue of the skin, the glowing eyes, and how thin they were. It wasn't his shape and so far, he hasn't seen a face that, for some reason, he knows is his face. His joints ache from all this walking and with each step, he feels his fear increase.

At times, he stops, resting by leaning against the walls. He grows hungry and thirsty. The heat in the halls becomes unbearable as he continues.

Then, he comes into an open cavern with stone bend like fangs leading into the mouth. Z'neth continues on after a few seconds to take this in. As he draws close, he begins to make out a central pillar, no, it was a throne.

A crimson person stands next to the care-giver, a soft chuckle comes from this guy. Z'neth notices how this one carries himself and judges that this person is likely the one Care-Giver answers to. So then, he's the boss. What does that mean for me?

And then, as he stumbles to the ground, a voice, a very deep toned voice, welcomes him as his son. Z'neth is alarmed by this, particularly as he gets a better look at the Crimson's face and knows that this isn't his father. Plus, as near as he could tell, they may be closer in age then that of father and son.

Now then, he could do one of two things, play along with it until he gets a better picture of things or he could call this guy on it. Given how weak feels and sore, the smart thing would be to play along. If he does, he could likely have a better chance at escaping.

But then there's that part within him that's made up of his pride that pretty much wants to call this guy out. That he is lying as the Crimson guy continues to say how pleased he was that he recovered. "Your son?" Z'neth inquires and then he feels a tickle of a cough.

In a split second, he chose his course of action and by suppressing the cough, he says, "While I am grateful for the help you have given me, I don't believe we are what you say we are."

Then, suddenly, his head tries to explode. As he clutches his head, fighting against the pain, he dimly hears Crimson berate Care-Giver about mutagen being permanent along with him already beginning to remember.

Finally, he collapses as a pause where Crimson expected Care-Giver to speak. What little conscious thought he had was, Why try and fool me into think your are my father?

Bit Over a Month Later

During his stay in Care-Giver's company, he never did get a name, he's been moved out of the base due to attacks by enemies of Crimson. He dimly recalls his first meeting with Crimson, he recalls getting greeted by the guy and then the pain in his head. Of course his next meeting with the guy was when he was in the worst way, being tied down to keep himself from harming himself.

Care-Giver admitted that his head injury might be a bit worst then they thought as he once more became feverish and he began to bleed from his nose and ears. He barely recalled what ramblings he had during that fevered time. What helped had to do with this strange light that was rather soothing to look into and helped with his headaches.

The pass month took a lot out of him and Care-Giver's worry seems to have faded away as his fever and the injuries from that fall healed and went away. His armor has been replaced with a shirt and pants while he also wears this hat that sports a veil to cover his face. The veil gets changed every few hours due to the liquid it as been soaked with drying up and the gases in the air beginning to affect him.

Care-Giver wears a mask that covers his lower face but soon enough, they won't need to continue dwelling in this gas filled hole in the ground as they will be leaving shortly, heading back to Crimson's base. As he looks out at the lava pool, he finally turns and asks Care-Giver his name.

"What is your name? I don't think I've hear you introduce yourself." Z'neth says and this seems to startle the other to look at him.

"Ah yes, of course." Care-Giver murmurs rather softly to himself, although with the mask, he can hear it rather easily. He's grown use that that habit in the time they have been together. "I am Gangrene. A doctor of sorts in the service of Dreadwing."

With that, Gangrene returns to packing up equipment and after a moment, he moves forward to lend a hand. Between the two of them, they finish packing everything that's important up. They head to the higher levels of the cave to eat their meal.

Soon enough, Fryte arrives upon his dragon and hands him some armor for him to change into. He has met this guy before and he didn't particular like the guy as he seems like he wanted to pick a fight as shown by the way Fryte seems so keen on threatening Ca... Gangrene during his weekly visits.

Z'neth gets the feeling that Fryte and Crimson aren't the kindness task master. At this point, he feels more of a connection with Gangrene then either of the semi seen Crimson and the threatening Fryte. Not that explains much of who I am...

Once in the air, he takes off the veil a few seconds after Gangrene takes off his mask. Feeling the wind rushing about his face, it just feels so right...

Gangrene

Dreadwing isn't going to be very pleased about his mental state. Although I must say, the mutagen has finally settled down compared to how unstable it had been at the beginning. I would have preferred something like a pair of tusks jabbing out from the lower jaw to obscure his looks a bit more, making it difficult for him to be recognized. He muses on the flight back to base. But then, Dreadwing likely wanted to shock value of one of Airlandis' top Dragonator leading an attack upon Airlandis himself.

I've managed to suppress his memories, which, regrettably includes the lay out of Airlandis and it's defenses. The hunch back thinks as Warnado comes into view. A swarm of Gremwings comes out to escort them into the heart of the caverns. Already one of them is darting on ahead to inform their master of their arrival.

Gangrene dreads his meeting with Dreadwing as it is clear that while physically, the alternations made to Z'neth will be permanent the mental ones are so very weak. Nobody can deny that Z'neth has a strong will and personality, he is the leader of a unit of Dragonators, the ones that give them the most trouble. Also, it's not like the Dragonators are likely to believe the ploy they cooked up to make them think Z'neth is dead, all they saw was the armor getting consumed by the lava.

There's too many factors involve when it comes to keeping Z'neth among our number. Anything could break through the weak walls keeping his memories at bay. I need time to come up with something that should make it harder for him to remember but at the moment, he needs to be kept away from familiar settings to have new experiences. Gangrene reviews and concludes. The science of the mind is rather unpredictable but the basics are the same.

As Skunk lands, Gangrene quickly turns to fussing over his equipment. Z'neth aids in the unpacking, he does spare a look towards the former Dragonator but given that he's the only one who is being careful, leaves him be. At least somebody knows to be careful!

Z'neth

With all the boxes containing Gangrene's equipment off of Skunk, he is escorted before Dreadwing, he finally has the name of the master of Warnado. He didn't particularly like the name and as he looks upon the man, is reluctant to be in his presence.

"Welcome back, you seem to have made a complete recovery." Dreadwing booms in his deep toned breath. He notices Fryte looking rather displeased concerning his welcome.

"Thank you. I hope you have had luck defending yourself from your enemies." Z'neth says politely.

Dreadwing gets this smirk upon his face that causes him to become even more uneasy. "They did not get what they attempted to raid from me. What I claim is rarely taken from me."

Z'neth nods as he couldn't find any words that come readily to his mind. This seems to satisfy Dreadwing and he says, "As such, I have need of someone to secure my south-eastern border. I have decide that you and a couple of my Dramen will be sent. I'll give you eight months to do this, understand Zangear?"

Z'neth nods, when Dreadwing signals his dismissal, he and three of the gathered Dramen head off to the waiting dragons. Briefly he imagined a blue among the four brown but he puts it down as his imagination. He sighs as he is upon one of the four dragons, flying away from Warnador with three warriors under his command.

What little he has gathered, he had been an exile fighter from his tribe who had the misfortune of arrived while the Lord of Warnado, Dreadwing, had been fending off invaders. His dragon was killed and he suffered a great fall. And thus, how he came to be in the care of Ca... Gangrene.

Perhaps it is for the best that my memory is gone. I won't remember the shame I caused my father that way. Z'neth thinks as Warnador vanishes over the horizon.

A Family Is Split Apart

American Werewolf in Hogsmeade: HP

I don't own Harry Potter.

January 17, 2003

Leaning back, Harry feels like rolling his eyes at the discussion going on a few tables from his own. He has the hood up and the glamor he usually wears is down. The emerald eyed wizard knows that none of them would be able to identify him, after all, Harry Potter doesn't have tattoo stripes on his face or on his body period.

If it weren't for magic, they wouldn't be any better, perhaps worst, then the non-magical populous. Harry muses to himself with a sneer and disdain shining in his emerald eyes. Even the so-called Mudbloods seem to shred their common sense striving to be accepted by the magical society.

The only reason he even entered into this tavern is due to checking the Shrieking Shack as he is thinking of buying it for its still intact tunnel as Hermione never thought to collapse the tunnel like she had to the others that lead from Hogwarts to Hogsmeade due to the Whomping Willow. What Bollocks collapsing those tunnels! They could have just Warded them so they can be of use in the future, when some other Pure-Blooded blinkered decides to capture the castle for its resources.

As Harry sips from his butter beer, he can't stand the taste of hard liquor since he became a werewolf. He finds that alcohol just doesn't affect him in the same matter either. For some reason, it causes him to become more alert and harder for him to speak. It seems that his vocal cords just relax after consuming about three glasses of wine.

Just remembering how he found that out causes him to bring his left hand up to his throat and rub the front of it, holding his fingers and thumb around his Adam's Apple for a few seconds before lowering his hand. Harry sends a glare towards the bottles behind the counter, almost wishing that he didn't have such an odd reaction concerning something that everyone in the magical society seems happy to serve to their guests and how refusing it could cause offense among such circles.

Since then, Harry's been privately experimenting upon himself to discover if any other drink or food causes an unusual reaction in him. He has come across a few strange effects in five other foods and has discovered that its likely due to the artificial additives that has become common place in non-magical foods. The more 'pure' the artificial chemical is, the longer the effect lasts without intensifying the effects, which he is just happy about.

His attention returns to the drunkards as they cheerfully declare that they are going out to hunt centaurs. Harry scowls at the group of four. Given that a recent article came out talking about fertility magic and a traditional list of what is usually used in such magic, he at least knew why they would think this such a good idea.

He gets up, upon finishing the remainder of the drink and walks before the four managed to grab their cloaks that are hanging up. A number of customers shout out protests, demanding warnings before the door opens. He sneers at that, already knowing of a ward the owner could set up to deal with any kind of outside weather coming into the building.

Harry's become something of an expert on ward schemes since he was bitten. He had begun looking into enchanting to try and mimic his now immunity to magic sent towards his person. So far, he can create a thin skin that breaks if hit with a single spell, it's a recently created scheme after he had to self-teach himself about the subject and the runes used. He had been impatient so he brewed Wit Sharping Potion to help with his studying.

The enchantment on his boots, he got a spell book from Canada that had such a niffy spell in it, allows him to walk on top of the snow and ice without breaking through the surface. He didn't need to see the moon to know what phase it is as he heads for the forest's edge. Harry finds a nice spot and waits, minutes tick by but finally, the drunkards arrive as they plow through the snow.

Once more a sneer of disdain appears upon his face. What's the use of having magic if you don't use it for the small things? Magic is like a muscle, the more you use it, the stronger it becomes. Harry thinks as he begins to undress himself.

When he's done with the group, nobody will believe they encountered a werewolf, even if the Forbidden Forest is suppose to have werewolves living within it. He didn't think anyone would be able to prove that the group saw either once he does a few spells before leaving. Once all his cloths were off, he does some quick spells with his wand before he puts his wand on top of the cloths.

With ease, fur springs forth over his body as his bones and muscles already begin to budge and move. As he hunches over as his shoulders grow heavy and his fingers thicken as his finger nails darken to become the toe claws. Unlike the artistic drawings and movie creatures that the non-magicals envision, his finger nails don't coming razor sharp talons that can slash through flesh with ease.

As he drops forward and a flick of his tail, he takes a few steps away from his spot. His nose twitching and ears moving about, he glances deeper into the forest for a few minutes before the drunkards begin firing flare spells. With a snort, Harry moves through the snow, he doesn't sink into the snow that much and he could easy move about by leaping forward if he wants to pick up speed.

As he leaps up onto a large tree trunk, he looks at the group and taking a deep breath, he begins his howl. Midway through, his head is thrown back and then lowers it as it comes to an end. Spells are flung in his direction by the panicking group. Given that they were drunk at this time, not body will think that they really encountered a werewolf that they are viewing right now.

One of the last two spells he had done had been a glamor that gave him a ghostly outline while the last spell had been to make it seem like he's got a tail of black fire. He'll alter the tracks to appear like fox tracks and nobody will be the wiser that the group was telling the truth. He lets loose a mighty snarl when a spell hits the snow a foot away from him.

His body tenses as he shifts his weight to his hind quarters. With a sharp bark, he leaps from the stump and charges towards the group, as he growls. The men, screamed and he can smell them pissing themselves before they turn about, running as fast as they can through the snow.

He slows down but dogs their heels, the idiots that they are, they didn't think of heading towards the village of Hogsmeade but heading into the forest as they head north. Finally, after about an hour, they realized they could just Apparition away, likely grown sober by then.

With a sigh, he feels his transformation reverse, a minute more and they would have witnessed him revert to his human form. Shivering, he Apparitions back to his cloths and once he's clothed, he takes out his shrunken broom and gets on. Slowly, he moves about the scene, altering his prints into that of fox tracks up to the trunk before heading off into the forest.

He then erases his other track of him charging and harrying the group. He then returns to the fox tracks and leads them to what appears to be a badger set and then heading to the beginning of his tracks, searching for fox tracks that lead into the town and does some editing so it appears that it came close but didn't venture into the town.

He had to make sure to that nobody notices him and a rather powerful Notice-Me-Not charm covers him. With a sigh, Harry lands on a cleared path, shrinks the broom once he Apparitions back home. Pocketing the broom, he enters into the house and heads for his bed.

January 20, 2003

"I can't believe you bought the Shrieking Shack!" Hermione exclaims viva the Floo Network. He sighs and heads to the kitchen, coming face to face with Professor Weasley, his bookworm of a friend is now teaching History since they managed to get rid of the previous ghost of a teacher close to five years ago.

"Well, hello to you too." Harry says dryly as he crouches down to face Hermione. "And what does my purchasing of said building have to do with you harping at me? Don't you have a class to teach?" He inquires, they haven't seen eye to eye with each other since she took it into her head to collapse all those tunnels that lead out of Hogwarts and the strain has only gone down hill since.

Of course I began to have a problem with her bossing me around once I got back from Mexico... The emerald eyed wizard thinks as she glares at him in a heated say. "You only want the property for that tunnel!"

"Actually, I plan to build an apartment complex on the property. I've already spoken with dwarfs about it and they'll start once we get a tent up, which should be by tomorrow night." Is his reply and is the truth, although the dwarfs were also going to get paid bit more to expand the tunnel to the Chamber of Secrets along with building an indoor pool and hot tub in the basement of the complex.

"You're going to do what ?!" Hermione shouts and he winces, already his ears are ringing. "You can't do that!"

"Last time I check, there's no law against building on my own land." Harry states simply. "Just as there wasn't a law against my buying up land to do some farming and ranching. Or operating my own butcher shop that has a restaurant attached to it."

"But... but, it just isn't done! Aren't you earning enough already?!" She demands and he mentally snorts at how out raged she is acting.

"Then why don't you go speak with the Pure-Blood camp? I'm sure you'll find common ground, yet again, about what 'hare brain' scheme that Potter is coming up with." Harry spats at her.

Seriously, it's like I have to fight again and again just so I can spend my money on my interests. So what if the Potters had been more into clay working then into ranching? It's not like the family clay pits are bringing in a lot of money, nobody is the least bit interested in brick making or pots for cooking, there's only a few artists that use clay in their art on any level any more. He thinks, he had begun to amass his fortune by selling clay to the non-magicals as they had plenty of uses for it compared to the magical society.

Nobody ever bothered to step up and take over the farms and ranches that use to be run by dead houses. I didn't even buy up all the available farms steads either... He thinks as Hermione attempts to inspire some kind of cultural pride into him and leave off his building project, never mind that he's already paid the dwarfs half in advance and importing ward stones.

Perhaps I should start up a factory and hire the muggleborn to create them? I know want to set up wards around my farms and ranches just in case somebody thinks they can set fire to the crops and kill the animals. Harry's gaze turns inward as he begins to come up with such an idea. There are some properties he already owns that have crumbling structures that were of no use to him.

"...paying attention! Harry James Potter are you paying attention?!" Hermione demands and he blinks, coming to realize that she's done with her lecture.

"Kreacher." He says in a soft tone and the old House Elf pops in next to him. "Please disconnect the Floo for me? I am done speaking with the 'good' professor." Harry says as he stands up from his crouch.

"As Master wishes." Kreacher says and soon, Hermione's head is gone from the fire. "Thank you Kreacher." He says and Kreacher nods before returning to his work.

"Hupa." Harry says and a much younger House Elf appears, "Yes Master Harry?"

"I believe a certain Dragon will be informed about my private business." He says to Hupa and the House Elf nods in understanding, vanishing from the kitchen.

A number of Hogwarts House Elves had wanted to work for him after what they heard he had done for Dobby. He hadn't wanted to 'lure' away any from Hogwarts but after Mexico, he began to ask questions and finally remembered something about why they would have been eager to leave Hogwarts employment, now why he forgot about this bit of information had other concerns at the time but now, with the need for loyal workers after the disaster of trying to hire farm hands from the magical society, he approached the House Elves and about twenty entered into his service, they were happier to be in his service when he hired Squibs to work on his farms and ranches as they preferred taking care of humans more then animals and plants.

If they knew about his altered nature, they never seem to mention it and he's fairly certain they knew what changes he has undergone since Mexico. Nor do they seem particularly displeased about working for him. Harry smiles as he walks out of the kitchen, heading back to going through his mail.

February 19, 2003

"Fine work, Master Garth, fine work indeed." Harry says as he studies the steel door that sports an etching of a younger version of himself stabbing the monstrous snake in the mouth. So that's why they wanted the memory...

"Your welcome, Mr Potter. And after we got a look at said skeleton of the beast, well, it's the least we could do. Particularly as you just gave us the skeleton for nothing!" Master Garth of the Crimson Mead, at least that's what the translation of the dwarf word the master craftsman gave him at any rate.

"It's not like the Headmistress or the staff seemed interested in clearing it out from the chamber." The emerald eyed wizard says in a dismissive tone. "Besides, I like the idea of it finding its way to a Wizarding museum, particularly a none UK one."

"We'll let you know which country won it then." Master Garth says but before they could continue the conversation, a runner comes down the tunnel on one of the enchanted carts for the dwarfs to use to take away the dirt and to help speed travel back and forth along the tunnel. "Some Dogs showed up asking for our client."

I don't think I'll ever get use to hearing Pure-Blood's getting called Dogs. Harry muses to himself. "Well, better late then when we broke ground." He states out loud.

"True." Master Garth says and he moves to the cart that brought the messenger. Once in, the dwarf messenger shifts the levers to return to the tunnel entrance before shifting the one that allows it to go.

Within minutes, the cart arrives and Harry climbs off. "Thank you." He says to the young dwarf who nods in return.

As he moves through the packing of equipment and the moving the crates that contain the shrunken dirt from the tunnel digging. The 'machine' that shrinks the dirt remains untouched along with the other enchanted mining karts. Within two to three days, the dwarfs will be gone and he'll start calling up those applying for apartments for interviews.

The total of the apartment building can house up to a full thousand families. The amount of ward stones he used helps maintaining the sheer size that he enchanted the building to hold. He already decided which three House Elves he'll put on as a starter staff and will likely add more when the number of occupancy grows. Each floor above the main floor sports up to rooms for two hundred on each floor and there is five floors total.

He'll hire some of the unemployed people wanting to rent an apartment to create a landscape and to maintain it. He expects most of those applying are single, not that it stopped him from ensuring that each set of rooms is like a one story house. There isn't any furniture in any of the apartments, and again, he's fairly happy to allow some of those unemployed to do wood working for other occupancies as part of their rent.

Ever since he learnt just how many Muggleborn migrate out of the UK or attempt to be reabsorbed into non-magical community, he was disgusted at the waste of supposedly well educated Muggleborn just wasting their talents due to nobody willing to pay them or allow them to operate their own businesses. Heck, he even paid for the education of interested Muggleborn to attend cooking schools for his restaurant as long as they agree they to work for him for the first three years after they graduate from the school.

So far, none of them have been able to find anyone willing to hire them claiming their dishes are too, Muggle in nature. Which is why he's given his more senior workers the chance to begin experiment with ingredients from a magical animals to be used in dishes. He has recently imported domestic magical breeds to be raised on his ranches just to get said product to be used.

Why is it I feel as though I'm the only one who sees that the economics of the Wizarding society is so stagnant? Harry wonders as he walks up to the lift once he has crossed the basement. He feels a headache creep up on him and it'll likely get worst.

Hupa has been keeping track of Draco's political movement, he's of the opinion that the only reason anyone follows Draco is due to his father and his wife, both of whom were much more charismatic then his childhood rival. Also, Draco still can't get over giving empty threats if things don't go his way, although if Draco's wife throws her weight behind a threat...

As he exits out of the lift and walks through the lobby, Harry calmly reminds himself that he is powerful enough to rip into Draco and his family they ever become an actual, active threat without any use of magic or being injured viva their spells. He also had an odd idea concerning the use of Magical Contracts, after all, as he never put his name in by hand in that tournament it wasn't official until he participated in that first task, after that, he couldn't get out of it.

The sight of the tent over head blocks most of the natural light, not that Harry notices that he's exited out of the apartment complex. His mind continues to be elsewhere as he walks towards the entrance of the tent, simple walking there instead of using magic to hurry to the encounter with a bunch of wizards and witches out raged over his latest project. His boots go through the wet muddy ground as the tent's temperature enchantment keeps it in the plus range instead of the negative one.

He's fairly sure that if any adult had actually read the rule book, they wouldn't have kept saying he had to participate or confirm that he was an adult, which meant that he was an adult when he was charged with that use of underage magic in defense of himself and his cousin. Not that anyone would admit it or wanted to think that I was capable of making my own choices. Dumbledore pretty much wanted me to be that sacrificial lamb after all.

Nobody knew who it was that destroyed the portrait of one Albus Dumbledore and none of the other protraits knew how that came about either nor could they repair it either. All of the other spares had been destroyed in the same mysterious fashion as well. Within three months, no image of said Dumbledore anywhere in the world and he's content with that, for now, who knows, he might have to take to finding ways to erase the man's total impact upon history, leaving him to be just a foot note in a Hogwarts book of being a transfiguration professor.

Pushing those thoughts from his mind as Harry hears a demand for the dwarfs to step away to allow them entrance into his property. The dwarfs in his way part to let him stand before the entrance. He nods his thanks to either side before coming to a stop.

"I would prefer they didn't." He pipes in as he comes before the tent entrance, blinking slightly at the sudden increase of natural light and the slight chill, although he doesn't step out of the tent as he has no particular want to catch a cold as he didn't stop to put on some heavy cloths for the current weather going on outside of the construction site.

"Potter! You took your bloody time, as always." Snaps the ring leader of the current group of magic users standing out in the cold. A murmur of agreement circulates within the crowd.

"Well excuse me of wanting to finish the inspection of my building. Which, just to let you know, these good beings finished just hours ago." The emerald eyed wizard states in a slightly dry tone.

"They couldn't have finished already! The bloody tent hasn't been up for barely a full month!" One of the locals that live in Hogsmeade says in full disbelief.

"You had some nerve of hiring these halflings to built your building instead of proper wizards. Bet they did botched it." A witch mutters softly to her neighbor but he heard her none the less and given how the dwarfs tense, they did as well.

"Oh shut it already. I'm the proper owner of this property and I got all my papers in order, so I don't need checky cobbers coming around telling me what I can and can't build or who I hire to build it! So clear off." Harry snaps at the group.

"Actually, you aren't the proper owner of this property." Draco pipes in as the group seem to be fingering their wands. "And we got the documents to prove it. Hogsmeade's landower is whoever is Headmaster of Hogwarts."

"Actually, it was the Founders who hold the land in trust and give management of said land to the Headmaster of Hogwarts. Any proper heirs of the Founders, as long as they get recognized by the Founders' portraits, can do as they please with any land that the Founders hold." Harry pulls out two scrolls, one from the magical portrait of Slytherin and from Hufflepuff, unrolling them before the crowd's eyes.

"These papers proclaim that I am the proper heir to the lines of Slytherin and Hufflepuff. The blood potion mapped out my bloodline and both portraits declare am of their blood and can lay claim to their lines." Harry says to the group, the dwarfs had found the magical portrait of founder of the 'Pure-Blood' house in the resting place of the Basilisk. Being able to command the beast to move out of the way had been part of the test to prove that one is a member of Slytherin's bloodline.

It was from that painting that he learnt of the rights of the Founders' Heirs and that just being a member of the blood isn't enough to lay claim. No, they wanted heirs that prove that they could lead as they had, possessing the stern stuff that allowed them to go against the conventional standards of their time. He proved that to both of the two, Hufflepuff by his creation on work for those that come from non-magical parents and to Slytherin by the fact his thinking outside the box when it comes to dealing with the stagnation of the magical society.

He hasn't found either Griffindor or Ravenclaw's magical portraits but as he had been declared the heir of the two he had found, he wasn't going to make it a priority of his either. Perhaps when his god-son is about to enter into the learned halls of the school he will, if only to do a rapid update of the school and to get a more balance in what is taught, maybe increasing what ages are accepted or just the creation of a school that could teach from six year olds to ten year olds.

"So, you are a Dark Lord then!" Exclaims one of the group. "You must have used Dark magic to get the Hufflepuff's acceptance!" Another exclaims.

"Oh please, you are just a bunch of bloody fools if you think I could fool those two portraits. And I'll have you know that Old Tommy boy was never Slytherin's officially sanctioned heir either! The man was appalled of Riddle for what he done concerning the basilisk. Tom failed, failed horribly and only acknowledged that the boy had his talent for speaking with snakes and nothing else." Harry states in a hard, matter of fact tone.

"How can we believe any of this?!" Cries a witch among the group, the same one who mentioned the dwarfs doing a botched job. "How do we even know that those aren't fake?"

With a snort, Harry uses a bit of magic to roll the scrolls, tossing them at the leader, Draco just manages to grab them before they fell. "It's not my job to converse you nor do I really care. Come next year, you'll see my name upon the letters getting sent out as well as my official position."

With a nod, the final dwarf closes the flap and the entrance seals itself. "Stupid blood buggers." One of the dwarfs say as they head off to help with the packing. The crates of shrunken earth will be used by that landscapers to flatten the ground.

"Master Harry Potter sir." He turns to find Hearth standing to his right, offering him a cup of hot chocolate. Harry's expression softens as he accepts the drink.

"Thank you Hearth." He says and the House Elf nods before popping away with the tray. Harry sighs and begins walking to the apartment complex as he slowly gulps down the hot drink, helping to take the slight chill off from some of the chilly wind entering into the tent.

As long as I stay at least four or five steps ahead of them, I'll be happy. He thinks, he mentally reminds himself to meet with that Canadian lawyer he has previously contacted. He'll need coaching for when they bring him before the Wizengamot, he knows some of the hidden loop holes but he needs to know upon what grounds they'll try and bring up on him.

Given that state of the group, he's likely got three months to get prepared. It'll take that long for Draco's wife to organize things through her husband. Might help to go through those journals in the Black's library as well, never know what kind of blackmail they house.

July 2, 2003

Draco

"There's nothing we can do to over turn this! We've had how many people try to find a loop hole but they can't find anything!" Draco exclaims and when done, flings himself into his chair. A dark expression upon his face at the fact that Potter has achieved yet another victory in defying the very heart of the world, the Traditions of the Wizarding World.

"There is one way..." He looks up to gaze at his wife, although her expression is rather grave. "Which is?"

"Challenge him in a Dual of Conquest or gather people to challenge him one after the other to wear him down." Idania Blishwick nee Malfoy informs him and he blinks, not sure what this challenge is.

"I thought such duals were disconnected and outlawed." He mostly guesses but Idania sighs. "No, they just generate fines but I'm sure we can get a written pardon from the Ministry, particularly if they know we only wish to challenge just the one person."

Draco perks up and is about to open his mouth when Idania pins him with a look. "And don't say you can take him right now. Your skills have grown rusty. We'll hire a tutor or two to get you or whoever else you wish to throw at Potter to sharpen those skills, perhaps even learn a few tricks that he wouldn't be expecting."

His face reddens then pales as he does recall the few times he has seen Potter use a wand. Draco doesn't like it but his wife as a point. "Besides, at the moment, you do wish to see your child born, don't you?" His wife asks and it takes him a few minutes to realize what that means.

"Your pregnant? Do we know if its a he?" Draco asks, getting up to place a hand upon his wife's belly.

"It's a boy but whether he'll be able to do magic..." And he frowns but couldn't argue. "For now, let Potter bask in his achievements and gather more as in a year or two, you'll claim all that is his for your own, husband."

He liked that idea, after all, Harry's has spent all that money to import those magical livestock. Let him do the hard work and grow lazy in the mean time. Then I'll strike and take everything that is his as is my right as a Malfoy.

Harry Potter

Harry gets a thoughtful look upon his face upon hearing from Hupa about the fact that the master mind behind the Malfoy family plans to train Draco and a number of others up, likely those that will have given an Oath of Loyalty to Draco personally and challenge him in a year or three and that the fact the wife is with child who's using it as an excuse.

"Harry! Harry! Guess what?!" Harry turns to look towards the fire place to find Nevile's head popping out of the fire.

"Guess? Me?" He asks the man who has replaced Hermione in his circle of friends.

"I'm going to be a dad! Can you believe it?! A father! To a babe!" Nevile exclaims joyously.

"Good on you mate! Want me to come over or you want to come here?" He asks as he gets up from his chair.

"I'll come through!" And soon, he and Neville are chatting away about what good news this is.

Until Later

Portal Maddness 6: Naruto

I don't own Naruto, Pokemon, Werewolf the Apocalypse, and Dragon Drive!

"Another story please! Pretty please?" Young Lore-Gather, Coastal-Wave-Driver asks, doing his best to look cute an innocent as only an otter could, his many time descent is of the sea otter tribe. "I really want to hear the one where you trick the sun into granting us Auspices!"

"How about you tell it this time, grandson?" Naruto, Tricks-the-Sun and founder of the Wereotter line of shape-changers. It's been over a few thousand years since he found himself in this strange world and his descents have gone on to form tribes based upon what type of otter they change into and from all over the world. Otter Den is located in the Umbra and has been his home since he stopped wandering the material world, sowing his oats as it were among both human and otter populations.

"Ah, but you are such a great story teller! How about the tale of the time you gambling with Old Man Coyote?" Coastal-Wave-Driver continues to try to wheeled another story out of him. He smiles as he slowly shakes his head.

"Now, now... if you won't tell me a story then I believe it's time for you to turn in. We'll be going hunting for a special Spirit tomorrow, so we will be needing to get up rather early." He says as he gets up from his mat in his, as the Garou could call it, Crinos form.

"Yes sir." Coastal-Wave-Driver says, getting up while in his near-otter form, leaving the communal room, heading for his assigned room before Naruto heads for his own, assuming his birth form, although instead of the bright blond hair, his hair is as white as purist snow and is done up in a braid that has grown to the ground. Looking to still be in his mid-twenties, he heads for his room. There's still a lot to be done in order to prepare Coastal-Wave-Driver for his position as his emissary to the court of Luna.

Sasuke leans upon the rail, his eyes focused on the display in the water showing a battle between two teams, each riding upon monstrous creatures that the locals call Dragons. His left hand rubs the spot where his right hand's pinky and ring finger should be. Since they had been bitten off, he's found it hard to do jutsus and he's had to learn to deal with missing two of his fingers. And nothing to show for it either, I never did get to partner with any of these beasts either. Training my ass, all I ever did was clean stables, never got the chance to really interact with one, even to bath it.

In the end, he turned to thieving and robbing which lead to gambling. Even after twenty years, he still haven't met a worth while woman to bed, let alone bear him strong sons. Oh, he's paid for services but never for that. And the few he's sure weren't in that line of profession tended to be just as thieving as him, sometimes, better then him as much as he hates to admit it.

Soon enough, the battle is over and the team he bet on won. He heads off to find his bookie and get his money.

Sakura laughs as yet another victory is attained, Kuno the Vulpix turns and leaps into her arms, happy to cuddle. Finding a Oran Berry, she feeds it to Kuno while the pair of opponents are attending to their Pokemon injuries using Potions. Even with two against one and with at least one of the enemy Pokemon being a Water-Type, it didn't hinder Kuno at all. Once she has the money, she leaves the clearing, heading for the cafe that she owns.

"Grandma, we need you at the counter. Ben needs his break and I have to make more sandwiches." Ranko says while continuing,

"Grandpa and mom have gone into town to get more supplies while dad's up in his room, trying to recover from last night."

"I understand, Ranko dear." The fifty-one year old Sakura Zecele nee Haruno moves to stand by the cash register while Kuno remains upon her left shoulder. Kuno is just the latest Pokemon that she's been training, her first Pokemon Chikorita she named Ino, after her old friend.

Tucking a loose strand of hair behind her ear, she reflects upon her time on Team 7 and while she would love to know what became of the pair of numb-skulls, she is content with her lot in life. She found her self-confidence, made new friends, found a nice man to settle down with, started a family, taken up Pokemon breeding along side of running a cafe, and seen her children go their own journeys, living their own lives.

Digimon Loops: TK 1

I don't own Digimon!

Loop 1a

TK scratches his head as he tries to come to terms with the sight before him. Although, this does give me an idea. He muses as his look turns into a smirk, which looks rather wrong on his eight year old face before he walks over and picks one of the mushrooms.

"Patamon, you just gave me an idea." The Digidestine of Hope says to his partner as the rookie comes over to rest on his back pack, leaving DemiDevimon to his panicking over not knowing who he is after eating his fill of the Mushrooms of Forgetfulness.

"So does this mean that next loop I can delete DemiDevimon?" Patamon asks in a hopeful tone. It's always been a sore point between them given DemiDevimon's actions during their first time through these events.

"We'll see, it depends if we need him to do this if it fails this time." The green clad eight year old Looper. "For now, just help gather these mushrooms up into my pack." He goes so far as to take the pack off his back, he checks to be sure he has room or he'd have to make room.

"So, what's the plan, after all, these mushrooms do mess with your mind." Angemon asks upon Digivolving. It's not that surprising, Patamon rarely spent much time in either his Champion form or Ultimate like the others. TK hadn't been much into fighting at this age the first time he had been through this so Angemon and MagnaAngemon were a rare sight before.

"That's the whole point. After all, do you think Myotismon will be able to cure his memory loss?" He asks, gesturing over to where DemiDevimon is busy getting into a fight with some Gazimon who just shown up to avenge Etemon's defeat.

"No... oh! Yea, that would be an interesting sight. You think we can reform them?" Angemon asks and he shrugs.

Loop 2

"Ok, let's see if that hack paid off." TK growls as he holds out his Digivice and imagines himself at age fifteen and a stream of light comes out of the screen, a egg of light engulfs the nine year old and when it leaves, revealing him at the age that the loop end/restarts. "Well, it's a start." He murmurs as he takes in his appearance.

Nail polish? He thinks, his eyes narrowing at the black nail polish and upon the black, long sleeve shirt and jeans. A glance towards a mirror and he finds bright blue hair, bright spring green eyes along with some purple tattoos on his forehead and under his eyes.

His right eye twitches before turning to glare at his Digivice. "Ok, let's see if it reverts at least." He states darkly and within seconds of the light vanishing, he walks over to a mirror and sighs in relief at the fact that he is back to his usual nine year old self.

"Sure, it works when I will myself into my fifteen year old self but I do it in the real world? Maybe it's a matter of practice..." TK says out loud as he regards the Digivice once more. Once I get to fifteen, I'll try for age twenty-something.

Taking in a deep calming breath, he again wills his appearance to assume his fifteen year old self only to find his cloths being neutral brown and black. His hair going all the way down to the ground while being bright yellow in color and his ears seem a bit more pointed then usual. "Ok, maybe I should try hacking it again... I mean, sure, I manage to create that storage space but I can't get it to allow me to assume a more mature appearance?"

He dispels his current appearance and walks back to his computer, he did wonder if maybe he shouldn't get Izzy to help in hacking it to allow them to alter their appearance while in the real world.

Loop 1b

They stood upon a sky scraper, watching the Dark Masters and Myotismon lead an army of Digimon in conquering Tokyo. The non-looping Digidestine were still in the Digital World, showing their families around the Digital World. Even now, neither of the Loopers knew how it came to this.

"Maybe it's the nature of the beast?" Angemon muses and TK just sighs, nodding a bit in agreement.

"You think its because we failed to answer those questions they asked concerning what humans are doing to correct the environmental problems they create?" Angemon asks and TK just closes his eyes.

"Maybe, Angemon, maybe." The eight year old muses.

Loop 3

TK looks between the two scrips and with a press of the button, one of them gets deleted and the remaining one gets copied. "Next, changing the director and voice actors." He murmurs as he continues to hack this studio's system.

Thanks to lessons he received from Izzy and reading a number of hacking help guides, he's rather decent hacker and program writer. After all, if he wanted to spend any time with Patamon before the fight against the Digimon Emperor, he had to create a gate program to allow him access. He had to modify it to allow Patamon to cross into the real world as well.

Then he grew bored of watching the same movies and shows come out time after time. Then, some review commenting on how such and such a director could have been a better choice while another suggested a different lead actor. It took him Loops to figure out the various computer systems and how it all connects to making a movie. The produce of said tampering is kept in his Digivice's storage space.

It's always interesting to compare the same movie done by different directors using different actors, even different movie effects company. While he couldn't be bothered to use the various graphic programs to make a movie himself but he's been able to sell them to various parties to ensure the best CGI is used.

Next up, TV shows. He thinks with a smirk, after all, he's getting tired of seeing the same line up of 'new' shows. He's got a number of ideas of what kind of new shows he would like to be made and future scripts of shows that get produced by the time he reaches the age of fifteen. Once more such things are kept in the storage space, waiting to come out to be used.

He makes sure everything is set up for the change he made to the movie before erasing his presence within that system. Once that's done, he logs off and turns off his computer. Getting up, he looks over to where Patamon is watching one of those movies he stores in his Digivice.

Loop 4a

As Angemon gets encased in an egg of light, so too did TK. When they are visible, TK couldn't help but noticed that everything seems to be, odd. "Well, it worked! So, what do you think... TK?"

TK blinks and looks towards the orange haired twenty-something wearing a white shirt and blue jeans. "What? Dear god what happened to my voice!" The blond colored mini pegasus looking rookie says, rearing up, trying to grab his throat but doesn't. He looks down and finds silver leg braces before the black hooves. He flaps his wings trying to keep from falling forward.

"You're a Digimon, TK." The Digimon turned human says and TK didn't know what to say as he finally falls forward, standing upon his four hooves. "And, I'm human. So this is what it feels like to be a human." Angemon muses as TK turns to regard the rest of his changed form.

"That's great, but just what kind of Digimon did I transform into?" TK wonders as he rears back up and gets a better look at his chest. Stand up like that, he stands about as tall as a thirteen year old, which could mean he is a champion or just a really large rookie. "I can't be a rookie, could I? Although, I've never met a rookie that's larger then Gabumon or Agumon."

"Hm, let's see if your Digivice has a listing of you." Angemon muses, picking his Digivice up from its position on his pack. It wasn't long before the lap top is up and his Digivice is connected.

"I can't believe I look like a My Little Pony!" He mutters as his current form's picture comes into view. Angemon snorts softly and he finally looked at the name.

Loop 5

"Ok, that's the last time we force feed Apocalymon Mushrooms of Forgetfulness." TK says to Patamon, who is resting on his head. The surroundings are different then what he's use to.

"It might have something to do with getting the others to focus on helping him break out of the time loop as well." Patamon pips. "After all, we've never had them try and help him before."

"Ah, excuse me, but, did you guys really brainwash Apocalymon?" A new voice inquires and he turns to find himself staring at someone who sports a resemblance to Kari, if only in the eye department but sports goggles like Tai and later Davis. "Ah, TK and Patamon right?"

"Yea and you two are?" TK asks, noticing a rather large crimson dino like Digimon sporting black markings and ears like Patamon.

"Ah, sorry, I'm Takato and this is my partner Guilmon." Takato says while Guilmon chirps in a hello. "We're also stuck in a Time Loop as I believe you two are."

"I'm kind of curious, how did you know our names?" Patamon asks and Guilmon chirps in an answer, "It's cause your adventures are featured in a TV show!"

That's... kind of sad actually. He thinks to himself. "I guess it's a little too late to ask for Royalties." TK says in a dry tone causing Takato to snort in amusement at that.

Suddenly they hear a yelp and they look over to find some teenager running away from blond teenager riding upon a blue canine Digimon. "Get back here Marcus! I won our bet and I want that KISS!" The blond teenager yells while what appears to be an Agumon sporting red leathers about his claws runs after the others.

"Hey! Wait for me Boss!" The Agumon cries while entering into a fast walk.

"..." None of the four didn't know what to say at the sight, especially Guilmon. As the Agumon vanishes from sight and they were about to break the silence when a raging tornado erupts, sending a car to land behind them.

"We aren't the only Loopers here." Takato observes and TK couldn't help but nod in agreement. "I don't think this is going to end well." Patamon adds thoughtfully as they watch as a group of Digimon get raised into the air, swirling about the center figure of a Digimon that sports butterfly wings.

"I guess that leaves us as the sane ones." TK comments as some of those Digimon in the tornado suddenly Digivolve into larger forms and try to take out the central Digimon, who also assumes a more mature form.

Loop 6

TK finishes the test with time to spare, not surprising as he knew the material well enough to do it in his sleep, which he's done for a loop once. He's even advanced enough to get into university and he's taken the whole range of university classes from every University in Japan. He has been thinking of applying for out of Japan, if only for a different scenery, after all, he's pretty sure he can get into any university, although he really should brush up on his foreign languages, his English is good, after all, he has long since mastered his ability to alter himself in the real world.

Maybe I should give 'accidentally' being left behind a try? Might be interesting to see if I can stop Ken in his tracks before he gets fully established as the Digimon Emperor... TK muses as he stares off at some random point while resting his head on the palm of his hand.

Although, hopefully, the next loop starts when I'm eight instead of when I'm elven like this one did. He thinks with a frown. I wonder if Takato and Guilmon are having this problem too concerning when the loop resets? Sure, sometimes we'd wake after a few days of being in the Digital World to showing up just before we face the Dark Masters but I was eight years old when we'd wake.

I wonder what Patamon is doing? Hm, that reminds me, even if I don't do that left behind in the Digital World, maybe we pull a switch? He goes to school while I do whatever Digimon do while in the real world? TK wonders, although it's a strange arrangement that for Patamon to assume human form, either a preteen or an adult(It depends on his evolutionary stage) he had to be the Digimon partner.

Not that he has ever Digivolved into a champion or de-Digivolve into an in-training Digimon. "Just have to discuss it with him." He murmurs under his breath out loud. He's pretty sure they both want to experience new things and they still haven't really taken advantage of their ability to turn into adults much during these loops either.

Loop 4b

"Folamon?! The flying foal Digimon, said to be related to Pegasusmon. What kind of name is that?" Folamon, AKA TK, cries out while the adult, AKA Angemon, reads out the list of attacks that he can preform.

"Hyper Senses, Cloud Vapor, and Silver Rain." While Folamon snorts, the orange haired adult reads the descriptions of the attacks. "Hyper Senses speeds up time which allows the illusion of super speed and agility. Cloud Vapor is used to cover enemy foes in a vapor that can cause sleep. Silver Rain is a spray of needles coming from the mane or tail."

"Is this because I stored the Digi-Egg of Hope in that storage space isn't it?" He wonders out loud but nobody answers him. "We will hack the Digivice to fix it so we can both be human at the same time." He states and Angemon just shrugs.

"So, you want to get something to eat?" Angemon asks after a few minutes, derailing TK's mental review of what kind of code to use to do so.

Blinking, his stomach growls and he realizes that he is really hungry. "Yea, I am. My wallet is in my pack." He says as he glances around the living room of the apartment.

"Yes! I get to pick what we eat!" Angemon cheers and he snorts softly, it's not as if he never consults with Angemon about what he wants to eat, they just had a system where they take turns picking what they order in. Although, given that Angemon will be the one to actually place the order...

I hope he orders extra due to my size. I feel like I can eat a horse... Folamon thinks to himself.

Loop 7

As Takato comes to sit down at the table, Zoe is leading JP into the fast food joint while wearing a white leather jacket and biker pants while JP is wearing a studded collar and pulled along with a leash. "Stay here, JP. I'll be back with our food."

"Yes Mistress." The Warrior of Lightning says in agreement while sporting a silly smile while taking hold of the leash.

She's going to sit and eat with us? TK thinks in alarm, paling rapidly, true this is only the second time that he's met with Takato and the other Chosen Loopers, but in his experience from the last time they were in this fusion loop is that the other two Loopers were perverts.

He recalls how Thomas proposed a three way between Takato, Thomas, and himself, which proved to be the more disturbing then when Zoe proposed a three or multi way between Kari(or any female Chosen), herself, and him. TK is pretty sure she proposed the same thing with Takato but didn't want to know if Guilmon's partner actually went through with it, after all, most of the others tend to spend be around the age of twenty when their loops reset so they've been through puberty while he was usually just discovering his hormones.

Even when he passes himself off as a twenty-something year old, he didn't feel much incline to talk women into having one night stands with him or looking at porn. He's pretty sure that Patamon doesn't do so either the few times he's assumed human form. But then, the others tend to become of age to do such activities after a few years while I never do unless I cheat using my Digivice to alter my appearance.

Takato raises an eyebrow but continues eating and he follows suit. Soon enough, Zoe appears with a tray of food and he scoots over to make room as does Takato. Both of their partners had decided to find their own place to order their lunch from, he just made sure they had enough money in order to do so. He's pretty sure the other Digidestine were off getting to know the other non-awake Chosen.

"It's so good to see you two again, Takato. TK." Zoe says in a silky tone which causes Takato to blush. "How have things been for the both of you since we last met?"

"Well, the starting point for my Loop seems to be off now a days, so far, I haven't restarted when I'm over the age of twelve." He tells the leather wearing Warrior of Wind.

"I have noticed that myself. It sucks to wake up to find the D-Reaper in the real world." Takato tells them. "There's so little time to make the corrections to ensure that the code doesn't send the Digimon back to the Digital World."

"Agreed. I found myself rather displeased when such happens after I have lost my human Spirit." Zoe says, JP never says anything, just eats his burgers throughout this discussion.

"Thomas much feel the same way. I can't see how it can effect the three of us without effecting him as well." Takato remarks thoughtfully.

"Hmm, Thomas..." Zoe gets this smile on her face that sends shivers down his back. Did he really want to know what went on between the two? Nope, not at all, he didn't even want to think that they may have traded trips and bedroom tricks.

"Where are your partners?" Zoe asks after a few minutes of silence.

"Out at a different restaurant getting lunch." He answers as Takato seems to be chewing on what's in his mouth. She doesn't know about Patamon's ability to become human, does she? He wonders as he looks down at his fries, picking one up, dipping it in the gravy before popping it into his mouth.

I don't think I told Takato about it last time and I didn't spend much time around her for her to get it out of me. He wonders as he glances over to Takato and then over to Zoe.

"I still can't believe you guys have partners. Also, have you ever got Patamon to become a Mega yet?" Zoe says and looks over at him.

"As far as I'm aware, there hasn't been any enemies around to cause him to need to." He answers with a shrug, after all, Angemon hasn't need to Digivolve into MagnaAngemon to deal with Piedmon after how many loops? Nor does Angemon revert to an egg upon defeating Devimon. "He's gotten to be fairly powerful, I can't recall the last time he's reverted to his egg stage upon defeating Devimon."

"Huh, Patamon too? I guess that means that Gaomon is the same. I recall Growlmon easily handling the Tiger Deva without needing to become an Ultimate these days. Then there's those few times where... So, you been feeling more powerful then, Zoe?" Takato asks.

"Very much so." Zoe says with a smile, likely recalling her current rate of easy victories.

"Anyway, I came over to ask you, TK, to hack my Digivice to set up that storage space for me. I heard you did it for Takato just as we defeated that... Quartzmon? I think that's his name, and had been hoping you can do the same for mine." Zoe tells him and he nods.

"Sure, I'll just need to borrow Izzy's pineapple lap top as it's more then capable of handling anything connected to the Digital World and Digivices." He tells her and she smiles brightly at him, causing him to blush a bit.

"Thank you, TK! How can I ever repay you?" Zoe asks and he replies, "By allowing my brother to leave your bed under his own power for this loop."

"Done!"

To Be Continued . . .

Digimon Loops: TK 2

I don't own Digimon!

Loop 1a

Glancing around at the group as they sit about the fire, TK sighs. He reaches for his Digivice, touching it as he remembers his earlier loops and how he'd try to convince the others about time looping. Sure, Azulongmon had installed something onto his Digivice to help end the time loop but what's he going to do with it? Nobody explained what the program did and all his hacking of his Digivice, he didn't know what to look for to see if it's still installed.

He reflects on the scene going on before him, recalling his promise about not manipulating them into doing something just because he found it funny or for Patamon and his entertainment purposes. He made during a loop where he convinced the group rather early about the time loops and they asking if they, Patamon and him, had done anything... unethical concerning them. Both Patamon and him promised never to do that and though they were suspicious about it, which only resolved his intentions of fulfilling that promise, they never made the accusation again for that loop.

That's not to mean that they hadn't pulled minor pranks on the group, like convincing them that when both Patamon and himself were dunked in cold water they switch roles and only in dunking them both in warm water reverses it. He had to admit, it had been interesting fighting in those battle instead of standing on the sidelines and cheering Patamon on. He feels his lips twinge a bit but keeps them from forming a smile.

For entertainment, Patamon and him often find ways of using certain timing to make the Dark Masters and Myotismon look like fools or get them the mistaken impression of a 'deadly' human weakness. He sighs softly as he comes out of his thoughts to look up at the sky.

He leans backwards until he's laying on his back, watching the sky. Soon enough, people will be climbing into the...

Blinking, TK looks over to the trolley car and a smile slowly blooms, after all, he's never seen if he could get it to work. Who knows what new encounters could happen if he gets it up and running. "Ah, I'm going to look around, is that ok, Matt? Tai?" He asks once he is sitting up and they didn't seem too concern.

"Keep Patamon with you." Matt says and he nods. Patamon gives him a puzzled look while he just smiles widely and the rookie blink before smiling himself, trusting that he knows what he's up to and that it'll be entertaining.

- - T - -

TK just blinks at the still covered in snow camp grounds. "Well, this is something different." Patamon remarks and the young blond nods slowly as kids and teachers gather around to stare in awe at the sudden appearance of the trolley car.

"And we left the others back in the Digital World... I wonder if this means that Izzy gets to defeat Devimon?" Patamon wonders out loud and he turns as one of the teachers force the door open.

Now then, how to explain why I am the driver... And it looks like the others haven't found a way back home yet, which is troubling... The eight year old looper thinks as he glances about the crowd, hoping to spy the rest of the group.

Loop 2

"Bubble boom!" Patamon cries as the force of air sails through the air, hitting a certain crimson bug champion. As the other Digimon are currently still in their in-training forms, they didn't lend their aid.

Patamon's attack hits and suddenly, the giant bug's data threatens to break apart, much to his surprise. He glances over to the orange rookie and finds that Patamon looks just as surprised by this as he was. I wonder if this is why Kuwagamon never gets up to send us over the cliff edge these pass loops?

Patamon fires off another attack and this deletes the crimson champion, the virus' data reveals Black Gears, which sail away. All of the others of the group seem to be looking in awe at Patamon. Which leads to another thought, I wonder if this means he can defeat Devimon without getting deleted himself as Angemon? We are so going to test it when that bastard turns up.

Loop 3

TK turns to his Digivice now that Matt and Gabumon have taken off to that dinner where they will slave away along with Joe and Gomamon. He wills the Digi-Egg of Hope to appear and it does in his free hand. "Ready Patamon?"

Patamon nods with a smirk, "Ready TK!"

"Digi-Armor Energize!" The eight year old Digidestine of Hope declares, pointing the Digi-Egg in Patamon's direction. The usual white cocoon appears around the rookie and when it vanishes, Pegasusmon is standing there.

With a grin, TK is engulfed in that same light cocoon and reveals a thirteen year old wearing a dark gray hoodie along with fingerless gloves along with a pair of blue jeans. His knapsack is now within his Digivice. He walks over to his partner, the hood is up and covering his hair while a cloth mask covers the lower part of his head, covering a bit of of his nose and all of his mouth.

Getting on Pegasusmon back with ease, once he has settled, the orange Armor Digimon takes to the air. "Myotismon's castle?" Pegasusmon asks.

He thinks about it for a few minutes before shaking his head, saying, "Nay, it's too easy as we know where it is and it unlikely to change locations. No, let's see if we can't find out the current lairs of the Dark Masters. Even if we just get leads, we can continue the investigation next loop."

"Sounds good."

Loop 4

"Hey CB!" Davis greets him as he adjusts to his surroundings. He stares at Davis in a blank kind of fashion while blinking at the Veemon's human partner. The question becomes, have we taken down Ken as the Digimon Emperor or not?

"Ah, Davis, so, excited to face off against Ken and his team?" He asks the current possessor of Tai's goggles.

"Well, yea, but yea know, that isn't for a month!" Davis answers before adding, "Good to know you think we can make it to do so though." The other preteen beams with pride.

He just nods and wonders what he should do next now that he confirms that this is before Ken unveiled himself to be the Digimon Emperor. It'll be redundant if place those bets but I could use the cash for, well, where haven't I been on vacation yet? He wonders as he takes in the room they are in, it seems that he can't leave as they were due to travel to the Digital World today and since neither of them brought their partners, it means that they may have needed their recharge.

With a sigh, he pulls out his cell phone and take a hard long look at the date. With a nod, he moves to a computer while Davis seems to just waiting for the others to arrive. He does recall this day and the reason why they were late so he had plenty of time to do some hacking, he just hopes that Davis decides to take a nap instead of coming up behind him to watch him do his thing.

"Going to work on some homework, VB?" Davis asks and he sighs. Is it a wonder I ever feel like decking him? Do I really want to reason out what his problem with me really is? He wonders as he writes a minor program to free up more bandwidth for the next two hours.

"Something like that... Did you need help with your homework?" He turns by the end, looking at Davis who just look clueless as to why he'd ask to help him with it or that he'd want TK's help to begin with.

"Why? They'll be here soon, so it's not like we'd have the time to do that stuff." Is Davis' answer and it takes a moment before he smiles slightly as he has an idea.

"What are you willing to be they'll show up in the next fifteen minutes?" He asks the goggle wearing preteen, he knew what he wants out of Davis, the question is, how many bets will it take in order to up the wager to that point.

"What, do you know something as to why they'd be late, RT?" Davis asks, annoyed at being out of the 'loop'.

"Haven't heard anything about why they'd be late." He says before adding, "If I lose, I'll call Kari by her last name and if I win, you have to address her by her whole name."

"For how long?"

"How about a day?"

"Your on!"

Loop 5

"TK?"

"Yes?"

"Do you know why...?"

"No, I really don't know why you are human or why we're suppose to be fraternal twins." He says looking over to, according to computer records, his twin brother, named Shoya.

The orange haired ten year old sighs, "Well then, how about these two?" Shoya motions to the pair of strange beasts, one of which 'belongs' to him. The two beasts are not of the same species as one sports a plant bulb on its back and the others sports a open flame upon its, her, tail.

"Think of it this way... Shoya. We won't be dealing with the Dark Masters or Myotismon." TK says to his current 'brother'. He used the name as he'll have to get use to using it while they are in this universe.

Wish I know why this all seems familiar though...

Loop 1b

TK sighs as he stares at Davis, Yolei, and of course, Kari, no Cody as he's way too young to be allowed to join them. Of course they'll be joined by another two, one of which is from America, most likely Willis and he's not sure what's keeping Ken, assuming that Ken will be joining them and not someone else. This isn't want I had hoped to happen upon getting that trolley car to work. I just thought it would be nice to have a ride as we traveled the Digital World...

"Sorry I'm late, it took me a while to find this place." He turns to find Ryo, a younger Ryo then he's use to seeing, walking down the path. Well, won't this be an interesting story to tell Takato when we meet up again.

"Hi, I'm TK and this is Patamon. He's Davis, the one with purple hair is Yolei and the one with hazel red eyes is Kari." He says as way of introduction, wondering if he should just see if he can't get Patamon to achieve his Mega level and leave them out of it. Hopefully Millenniummon doesn't decide to make an appearance...

The others go shy at having someone as old as Ryo around, which seems to surprise him when it shouldn't. With a slight couch, he grabs their attention once more. "Ok, the one other will be meeting us once we cross into the Digital World. And as to what Patamon is, he's a Digimon and each of you will be gaining a partner to protect you when we cross over."

"Are they going to look like Patamon?" Yolei asks before he can continue on with his explanation.

"Ah, no. No all Digimon look like Patamon and each different Digimon has a different name." He says.

"Kind of like Pokemon then?" Ryo asks curiously and he blinks but just nods as he wonders just what a Pokemon is and how something so small should be compared to a Digimon.

"I guess I'll let Gennai explain the rest then. Ok, gather around and I'll get the gate to open." He tells the group and once they are behind him, he holds out his Digivice towards the TV set and within seconds, they land in Gennai's living room, surprisingly, not in a dog pile.

"Wow, that was cool! Can we do that again?" Davis asks, suddenly resembling his future twelve year old self.

"I'm sorry to say that you will not." Old Gennai answers. "You have been summoned to help combat the Dark Masters, who have captured the other Digidestined."

TK feels a bit guilty about the situation but excited as well as this was something new to do. He glances around, finally spotting Willis with his twin partners, both of which were fine as in not influenced by a certain virus. I wonder if I could create a vaccine for it?

As Gennai brings them all up to date concerning the situation, he does his best to listen as to remember this loop better. Although, he just might need to write all this down just so he doesn't get it all mixed up. Then, as Gennai finishes, he leads them out into the court yard and he is surprised to find Gatomon in her rookie form among the group as well as a certain rookie he typically sees in his Ultimate form of Cyberdramon.

"Davish!" And so the blue rookie known as Veemon tackles Davis to the ground, arms about the other boy's neck while the Digimon says how happy he is to finally meet him. He turns to watch the meeting between the others and while none of them had the Digimon partner pinning them to the ground, it's clear that they were happy to finally met their human partners or is that counter parts?

- - T - -

"Patamon Warp Digivolve too... Seraphymon!"

TK feels kind of tired but not so much at the same time. He shrugs it off, after all, its not every loop that Patamon achieves his Mega form, let alone fight in said form. Although it's not every loop that sees Apocalymon managing to by pass the Fire Wall and then DNA Digivolve with the Dark Masters.

"Ascension Hallow." His partner declares in a rather calm, even neutral tone. Lightning comes shooting down and hitting the vastly different Apocalymon then previous encounters.

Just this one attack has causes black data to bleed from cracked parts. "Divine Breaker." The out stretched palm of Seraphymon soon grows an orb of light, then, with a flick of the wrist, it is sent into the defending Apocalymon, the orb goes right through the limbs and even main body, exiting out the back before exploding, as the light touches Apocalymon, the Dark Digimon screams and the data breaks apart as Apocalymon reverts to his usual form.

With that, Seraphymon reverts back to Patamon and although Patamon remains flying, he could tell that his best friend and fellow looper is tired. The others seem to have regained energy, likely due to that light from that orb.

Soon enough, the other Digimon ranging from Ultimate to Mega reenter the battle. With a touch to his Digivice, Patamon Digivolves into Angemon. Mental note, never exit the Digital World until pursuing Myoticmon to real world.

Most of Apocalymon's energy is gone so the incoming attacks finished him off. Without any energy, no threat of implosion and thus, no need to a cage created viva Digivices.

Not that the others knew that as they cheered and congratulated their partners for a job well done.

Soon enough, they come to congregate around Patamon and himself as he feels rather embarrassed of the praise they were giving them, particularly given he felt rather responsible for everything that happened.

Loop 6

"Hey TK? You know you are late for the trolley ride home, right?" Patamon asks as they lay on some rocks by the river.

"Well, yea, that's the point. See, I've been wondering if I could have stopped Ken in his tracks if I were to be left behind. And after being bored for, oh, the pass elven loops, I've decided to finally do it this loop." TK explains to his partner.

"Oh, well, aren't you going to miss your parents and the others?" Patamon asks curiously and he sighs.

He glances towards Patamon with a raised eye brow.

"Oh, yea, sorry. It's easier to avoid the other Digimon just by leaving for a random island when I want to be alone."

"And it's not like my schooling is needed, I've graduated from various university with so many different degrees that some time away from it is like a dream. Heck, I've been thinking of applying to collages and universities in Africa and South America just for a change of scenery."

"Have you thought of... well, I doubt you would as that would cause everyone to mourn you."

"Yea, faking my death is a big no. And I have done the go to another country under one name and when there use another one while taking on an adult appearance. Sad to say, I think I'm better off with getting money viva gambling. Work is over rated, particularly if you are running your own company. Stupid politics and don't even get me started on the times I've done government jobs. Stupid paper work and idiot people not using their god damn common sense to solve their problems..."

"Well, it's not like I know any of that." Patamon says and he blinks before a plan forms.

"You know, if we can figure out how to get you to take on my exact appearance, you could give living life as a kid a try." He muses.

"But it seems so boring... The school part that is." His partner replies.

"Don't you get bored just hanging around without any purpose? At least with school, you get a direction to get to." He points out. "Plus, it's an education that can be used towards whatever goals you want to try out while you are human."

"Well, I always did want to learn how to cook..." Patamon admits.

"So it's settled, we keep working on that transformation until you can pass as me, even if I have to forgo being Folamon and be transformed into a Patamon."

"So, when did you want to get on that?"

"How about tomorrow?" He suggests as the eclipse occurs. "Besides, we'll likely be busy later concerning my missing the ride home."

"Well, yea, but I bet a lot of them will be happy to have you around despite it all."

"And you would know, wouldn't you?"

Loop 7

"Call them OFF! CALL THEM OFF!" Patamon cries as he flies pass the restaurant with a rather large following of Monsters, a usual all female race called Pixies. Sadly, upon arrival in this universe, Patamon found himself being the rare, mythical male type, hence the swarm out to see if there are any truth to the myth about how powerful the children would be between said mythical male and a member of the typical Pixie race.

"Oh, Patamon has a lot of new friends." Guilmon notes, the crimson rookie also became a member of a race of Monsters, only called Dinos and is also a mythical rare type of said race as well.

"Just as long as you don't see Thomas or Zoe among that group of 'friends' I'm happy." He states.

"What makes you think they are in this universe?" Takato asks.

"Well, Guilmon and yourself are here and when that happens, they are also here as well." TK points out as he finishes cutting into his steak.

"I hate that logic." Guilmon's human partner murmurs, looking back down at his plate. "Also, shouldn't you be doing something for your partner?"

"Like what? Face that horde of hormonal Pixies and experience whatever elemental attacks they posses? No thank you, besides, I'll make it up to him when we return home." He says in reply before popping a piece of steak into his mouth.

"So, you two visited any other universes?" He asks after a few minutes of silence.

"Well, yea, one called the Magi-Nation. Crazy world that one, they use special rings to summon magical monsters." Takato tells him.

"Patamon and I spent time in a Pokemon universe. He got transformed into a ten year old and his name was Shoya, also my fraternal twin brother. His partner was a Charmander."

"Really? So, what was differences between you two?" Takato asks curiously.

"He sported orange hair, a heck of a lot straighter then mine plus longer, and he kept his eye color." He tells Takato and realizes that in the previous two encounters with Takato and the others, he never mentioned the fact that Patamon can transform into a human and himself into a Digimon. And for good reason. He thinks as he looks out the window at the rather large battle/cat fight going on over Patamon, who seems to be tied up on the ground, struggling to get out of his bindings. He could easily picture Thomas or Zoe standing over Patamon at this point, ready to show his partner a 'good' time.

"How many did you guys end up catching?" Takato asks curiously and it takes him a few minutes to remember that particular loop.

"Let's see, I caught forty-seven. Shoya went on a rather big collection spree and captured five hundred twenty-three Pokemon from various countries, not including the ones he bred, which had been around fifteen."

"How many badges did you guys earn?" Takato asks upon swallowing what's in his mouth.

"Well, you need eight badges to compete in the yearly tournament per league and there were five leagues so... forty badges for the both of us. Since we did stick around to participate in each tournament, our average rankings among the five tournaments were, for me, seventeen and for Shoya, twelve."

"It didn't bother you that Shoya beat you in rank?"

"Not really, and it's not that surprising. I'm pretty sure you'd beat me too. After all, how often is it that I end up in a fight with a Digimon compared to the fights Guilmon and you get into as Gallantmon?"

"I see your point." Takato agrees as he focuses on eating more of his steak, particularly as there were now holes in the bar's wall and roof. A few Pixies have crashed into different tables and even into the bar.

They both remain silent, each deciding to eat their fill before the bar, and likely, much of the town was destroyed viva the Pixie Battle Royal. After all, they will likely be lending their help in repairing the buildings if they weren't chased out of town when the towns folk realize that Patamon is his traveling companion and friend.

To Be Continued . . .

Digimon Loops: TK 3

I don't own Digimon!

Loop 1a

TK merely watches in udder amazement as the others save for him get a Digivice. It had been a very interesting few months and a first for him too as he usually Wakes after being sent to the Digital World, never before has it ever been before being sent. Ok, this is very different and could go very wrong...

His brother and the others get swept away, leaving him alone. Heads inside and begins to pack what he can before they get back, hopefully within five minutes. Checking the clock every once in a while and sure enough, the snow melts fairly quickly, he hadn't known snow could vanish so fast but it did and he was around to glimpse it.

Time comes and from the small building, he witness the Digimon head off to go collect some plant material. Within moments, the others wake and, to his surprise, they call out for Davis only for Izzy to remind the group that Davis had been at home when he traveled to the Digital World. So, Davis took my place so does this mean Ken took Kari's? Or did Ryo?

"Hey you guys! Where did you run off to?" He asks as he comes out of the building, it's a mixed blessing about Looping is that it forces one to perfect their acting skills as well as lying skills. Never mind going over the same events again and again unless you do make a small change, even then it takes a while for that little ripple to cause something larger to happen but time is something he has.

"TK, you're ok?" Matt asks, coming over to examine him.

"Why wouldn't I be, Matt? Look, the snow's all gone!" He remarks and the others do notice.

"I'm going to tell the teacher you guys are back, ok?" He spotted the Digimon returning and takes off at a dead run with a frown on his face at the mystery of why he isn't a Digidestine or worry about what that means concerning Patamon.

Loop 2

Getting off the elevator, TK's wrist is grabbed by Maiko, she pulls the current blond teen out of it and he gets his first look of the underground area, in particular a screen featuring combating beasts that sport wings. "Welcome to Dragon Drive, Kero!"

Oh yea, Mai's nickname for him isn't TK but the last part of his name, minus the u and adding the o to it. His nickname for her was merely the first three letters of her name, Mai.

"Dragon... Drive?" He repeats slowly, while he will admit that they do bare the Western Dragon body type, a number of them don't seem to sport the rest of the characteristics like being red, breathing only fire, or sporting just scales. A number of those shown on the screen possess fur, feathers, and what could be hide.

"Yip!" And then she proceeds to tell him about the game, although at the mention of the word Digital, it finally clicks about why he ended up here, although he doesn't particularly like the fact he seemed to have switched with somebody to live out their life and it could be that they are living his life...

I wonder what Patamon is going to look like as a dragon?

- - T - -

Let's see, on the plus side, I have Chibi and a older brother. On the down side, I'm eight years old, stuck in some world called Digi-

World, and there doesn't seem to be any other humans around here save for this group and myself. Reiji thinks as he looks around while Chibi, he just knows it's Chibi despite the different appearance.

Suddenly a huge crimson insect appears and bellows. Reiji is about to shout for Chibi to attack when his partner, who can now speak, says "That's a Champion Digimon, I'm still at the In-Training stage, Rei!"

"Oh..." But as the other partners leap and begin attacking, so does Chibi.

Then, they as a group cry out as they get battered to the side, light engulfs the bodies of the Digital Monsters or Digimon for short. When the light vanishes, Chibi does look more like himself.

Well, hopefully, this loop won't last very long and we can get back to our home within a year.

Loop 3a

TK sits at the pier with Takato to his left, both of them doing some fishing at a river in Western Plaguelands. Takato is currently a warrior Worgen and himself to be a druid Night Elf. The few times they spotted Thomas and Zoe, Thomas being a mage Human and Zoe being a shaman Draenei.

Feeling a tug, he does his best to pull the line out while hoping it to be a fish instead of some weed or even a tangled line. He grins at the fish and into the bucket the fish goes. He then casts the line back into the river.

"Pretty relaxing afternoon." Takato remarks, he's currently in his human form. "Still, in the three months we've been here, we still haven't found our partners or even Thomas' own."

"At least they weren't a pet when we woke here." He replies, it's not the first time they've discussed this. He's fairly confident that they'd find them. He's pretty sure that where ever Patamon is, he's sporting the symbol of Hope some where on his cloths, same as him. Takato sports the hazard like symbol on his own cloths. He's unsure if either Thomas or Zoe are sporting any particular symbols.

"At least we hope they are not pets in this universe." Takato mutters darkly and he lets it go as Takato pulls up his line, sporting a trout of some kind.

Loop 4

TK stands still, watching as Patamon speak with a party from the town. He admitted that Patamon does look good in those cloths, particularly with the orange hair. A few of the women and children around them gaze in awe at himself. Still, even after seven years, I'm still not use to those kind of looks. He thinks to himself as he flickers his ears back.

Happily, they weren't alone in this universe nor was he the only one with reversal of fortunes. Not that it meant much to Thomas or Zoe, it only seemed to encourage their usual activities once they adjusted. Although, I wonder if it's true what we heard concerning Zoe? She couldn't be pregnant, right?

"TK! I've talk them into allowing you to follow into the townhall. You coming right?" Patamon, or to use his human name Shoya, mentally asks him.

"I'm coming, Shoya." He replies and gingerly entering a fast trot. He adapted easier to being a Companion, it's not unlike his times spent as Folamon, just no flying or special attacks.

His hooves hit the ground and with each step, his silver hooves make a sound not unlike bells. Again, the eyes of the 'common' people follow him with looks of awe and longing. This is only the third village they have visited since they began their solo assignment as Heralds of Valdemar. Their previous time traveling through outlaying villages and towns, they were with an experienced Herald, thus he didn't have to deal with all of the stares.

He wonders if Takato or Thomas were getting these stares on their tour of assignment.

Loop 1b

Holding out his Digivice, he wills a wall of light to form, defending Ryo and himself from the incoming Dark Spores. The Dark Spores try to force their way through but he knows they won't do so. He's been in these loops far to long and no matter how powerful Millenniummon is at this moment, the mega won't win this, he's too willful and sure of his own power to have a spore get lodged into his neck or into Ryo's.

The Dark Spores dissolve in a flash when the light shield flares brightly, almost blinding him. "TK..." Ryo states in a tone sporting awe and surprise.

"Yes Ryo?" He asks as he turns to give the older boy a curious look, the light wall had vanished upon that flaring.

Ryo gawks at him for a few minutes before saying, "Ah, good job...?" The tone ends as if it were a question.

"Ok Ryo." He says cheerfully, glad that it's over. TK's not sure what to make of this whole adventure but logically speaking, he is fairly certain that he assumed Ken's role in it just like Ken assumed Kari's role in the first adventures concerning the Digital World. At the moment he's considered the Chosen of Kindness which would make Kari Chosen of Miracles, taking Davis' roll.

That's considering if we do end up having the second series of adventures as I'm do not going to be the Digimon Emperor. He thinks as they get reunited with Patamon and Salamon, which is a surprise as he's use to her being in her champion form of Gatomon.

"He's finally gone, right?" Patamon asks and he sighs, "I don't know, Patamon, I don't know."

Loop 5

"Again?"

"Seems so, Shoya."

"Ah, damn it. So, which one is yours?"

"I'm going to guess, the one grass snake? Why, you want the grass snake?"

"Nay, I'm good with the otter."

"Alright. Now the question is, can we remember their names, be it their species or the ones we might have given them."

"I think mine starts with an O with a watt somewhere in it."

:This is embarrassing isn't it? They forgot our names."

"I keep thinking Sev for some reason."

:Speak for yourself, I kind of like the name Sev, it's better then the other name he gave me.:

"This is going to be a long one, isn't it?"

"Seems likely."

:I wonder if they mean long life...:

:Hm, that's a nice thought isn't it?:

Loop 3b

"Hey, Patamon?" Guilmon, currently a Troll hunter, asks.

"Yes Guilmon?" Patamon says in reply, he's currently a Paladin Blood Elf.

"Can I buy it?" Guilmon asks while the kitten's paw remains upon the out stretched finger. The black kitten then bats the finger a bit before trying to nibble on it.

"I don't see why not. You do have the silver to pay for it." The orange haired Blood Elf says and Guilmon nods in agreement, clearly happy, although the hunter's pet lion seems rather bored of everything and is trying to sleep in the middle of the path through the store.

"Check out what I won at the Auction House!" Gaomon, an Orc rogue, states, displaying a rather shiny dagger, as the rogue comes trotting into the store. "Is Guilmon buying a kitten?"

"I'm about to buy the kitten." Guilmon corrects rather gently as he picks up the carrier and then heads to the counter to pay for the kitten.

"I thought that's why he tamed the lion was to have a cat?" Gaomon asks Patamon, who just shrugs.

"So, did you get any leads about the others?" Patamon asks Gaomon.

"Oh, yea, there's a pair of Alliance members who have been acting in the manner of Master Thomas and Mistress Zoe."

"Location?" Patamon asks.

"Through the Dark Portal in Outlands." Reports Gaomon. "As for Takato and TK, there's a pair up in Western Plaguelands who answer to those names."

"Right, so which of the two do you think we should find first?" The paladin asks the rogue.

The Orc seems a bit torn about it, Gaomon doesn't answer until they were at the Wyvern Post that is over a certain bar in Boot Bay. "Takato and TK seem to be in one place, they would be easier to fetch before heading to Outland." The rogue finally states and Patamon just nods.

"My friends and I would like to fly to Western Plaguelands." Patamon requests to the flight path master.

"That will be four gold." The Flight Master says and he hands over the four gold. Soon enough, they are flying in the air, heading northward.

Loop 1c

TK stares thoughtfully at the Control Spire as he flies upon his partner's back. "Still haven't hear who set it up?" He asks, he's ten years old and is currently on summer vacation. His mom thinks he's gone to spend a week with his dad, not that she'll get a hold of him nor really remember that little fact either given the timing of it all.

"Should we destroy it?" Pegasusmon asks him after a few minutes of silence as they circle the Control Spire.

He gives it a moment's thought before agree, particularly as some flying Digimon have taken to the air. Each likely sporting a ring on their bodies. With a single firing of Silver Blaze, the spire is destroyed and the flying Digimon seem to hover for a few seconds before scattering.

"Is there another one around here?" He asks curiously.

"There are two more, not far from here." The armor Digimon replies. "You think we'll find out who's the puppet?"

"We might." TK agrees and with a flap of the wings, his partner heads for the next Control Spire.

- - T - -

Yip, this is a rather big shock, isn't it? TK thinks as Izzy stands upon Kabuterimon's back. It's doubtful that Izzy can ID him, he had thought ahead about disguising himself.

Currently, TK appears to be thirteen, raven black hair done up in what is called a lazy hawk, it is a type of Mohawk. Current eye color is a dark hazel while his skin tone is a rather bronze color. Well, something had to give. Not unlike what happened with the Trolly Car incident really.

This is so not going to end well. He thinks as Pegasusmon begin dodging maneuvers as Kabuterimon readies to attack. "At least it's not Joe, now that would be wrong. Just plain wrong." He murmurs softly to himself as he keeps a firm grip upon his partner's mane.

Being fired at tends to grab ones' attention and so, he doesn't really think much about how Izzy got corrupted or is under a certain Digimon's control, he just wanted to think of a way to capture the other Digidestine unharmed before even exploring such things.

Loop 3c

There's knocking upon our door... TK thinks in a half awake state as he rolls onto his side and then sits up. Shivering, he pulls the sheet about his while his bare feet touch the cool floor.

Yawning a jaw breaking yawn, he walks over to answer the door. Upon opening it, he barely registers a cry before finding himself upon the floor. "TAKATOMON!"

"Ok, I'm wake and I hate to say it but Takato's in that bed." He says, managing to point a hand towards the sleeping warrior.

"Oops, sorry TK." Guilmon says and he's able to get up off the floor while Guilmon, currently an Troll, pokes the Worgen that is Takato.

"Horde?" He inquires as he looks at the other two, namely a Blood Elf and an Orc.

"And you are Alliance." The Blood Elf, who's features remind him of Patamon's human form.

"Good to see you three, Patamon. Gaomon." He says, nodding first towards the Blood Elf and then to the Orc.

"And to you, TK." Gaomon says with a nod while Patamon just smiles.

"Now then, what time is it? And is it safe to go to sleep?" He asks, rather hoping they hadn't brought Thomas or Zoe with them.

"Ah, they are out of rooms for the night..." Gaomon says and he sighs.

"If you care to, you can share the bed." He says as he takes off the blanket, handing it to Patamon before assuming his panther form.

He circles a spot about five times before curling up and going back to sleep. The sound of the door closing and a soft yelp from Takato are among the last things he hears before he returns to dreamland.

To Be Continued . . .

Digimon Loops: TK 4

I don't own Digimon!

Loop 1

They sit around the library's table, TK glances around the table before focusing on the oldest member within the room, by more then a few centuries. Shoya is currently in the slot for Angel from Buffy the Vampire Slayer.

Takato seems to have replaced Rupert Giles while Zoe did Buffy. The weirdest among them has to be Thomas, who's taken Willow's role and gender. He's just plain freaked out by that, particularly as Thomas is taking his... her new gender fairly well and is looking rather lustful at him with a smile that makes him both blush and feel as if he's been dumped into a barrel of ice water.

It's kind of a worst nightmare come turn, he's human and almost legal in a universe where Thomas and Zoe can get at him. Damn it, screwed either way... Stupid figure of speak that is so damn literal in this case. He thinks as he glances towards the shelves.

"Shouldn't we be, I don't know, researching demons or mystical stuff?" TK ventures to ask the group.

"I guess we should. I mean, this is something new for us to do, right?" Shoya says in support.

"Hmm, I always wondered how good a succubus is in bed." Thomas muses.

"Point, I wonder how much stamina a vampire has if full of blood." Zoe remarks, turning to look over at Shoya.

"No screwing Patamon." Takato states. "I don't think we want to find out what he's like without a Soul."

"Shoya, his name is currently Shoya or, Angel, given that he could still have earned that name." He states and the other two glance at him with questioning looks.

"While this is his first time as a vampire, it ain't his first time being human." He states simply and Takato nods, having heard about this.

"Ok, if Patamon is here, where are our partners?" Thomas wonder and they all look towards Shoya.

"Well, one of them might, if I recall correctly, be Spike. It's hard to say if who I remember is Guilmon or Gaomon." Shoya says with a shrug.

"What's his hair color?" Takato ask curiously.

"A dark black, with... oh, so I do know which one became Spike." Shoya muses.

"So that leave..."

Suddenly a cry of, "Takatomon!" And within seconds, they find a red haired older looking teen hugging the much older Takato.

"I'm betting he replaced Oz." TK states.

"No bet. The question is, is he a werewolf right now?" Zoe wonders.

"Well, we'll know in a few days, I think." Thomas states. "There should one coming up soon."

He sighs softly, he is hoping that he doesn't wind up with Xander's problem concerning female demons, he'd be lucky to remain out of bed with either Thomas and/or Zoe.

TK did find it a little odd for Patamon to wind up as a vampire though, but not overly as he did recall their time in World of WarCraft universe.

Loop 2a

Coming Awake while confronting a certain crimson insect Champion wasn't all that odd. What threw him is the fact that he's currently a Digimon known as Folamon. Within a second he turns to look towards the group of kids behind the line of Rookies, the other Rookies attack.

He quickly focuses on their foe and leaps into the air. With flick of his head, his cry joins the others, "Silver Rain!" Silver nails fly from his mane, flying into the chest of the Champion.

He hovers in the air while the Champion falls down and the Digimon plus Digidestine cheer, well, except for Shoya and himself. He turns and flies so he lands next to Shoya. Wordlessly, he lowers himself and within seconds, eight year old Shoya is on his back, a firm grip upon his mane.

He launches himself into the air as the usual events play out, again. The cliff falls with the Digidestine plus partners down into the river. Within seconds, Gomamon summons the raft of fish.

Folamon follows after the raft, his hunger was easily rectified as he borrows energy from the Digivice. "So... I guess Matt's my brother for the loop."

"Seems so." He agrees, moving towards a fruit tree and hovering as Shoya harvests as much fruit as he can carry. "It seems that it's only you and me who've switched."

"Well, it's not like they are Awake... Although, it does make you wonder what kind of Digimon they'd wind up as." Shoya remarks as he catches up to the raft.

Soon enough, the others make it to shore and another round of introductions will begin. Once on the ground, Shoya and him begin to eat the fruit, they'll need all their energy for the up coming days. I guess I'll finally get around to seeing what kind of Champion and Ultimate form I have... Armor too, I guess.

Loop 3

TK reclines on the chair, his fingers slowly going over the strings of the guitar that he bought. His current appearance is a raven haired nineteen year old sporting emerald eyes. And open guitar case on the pavement before him. It's early in the morning, the sun is just raising up.

Due to a relatively recent loop in which Patamon and himself switched roles, he had come to realize just how much he took Matt for granted, well, when they were in the same universe. Tai as well, as the goggle wearing preteen usually does fill the role of second older brother.

Well, to be fair, Sora's kind of fits the role of older sister/motherly figure. Joe's like the responsible older cousin while Mimi is that spoiled sister. Izzy's a friend, more like a friend of my siblings then mine... TK reflects as he slowly increases the pace his fingers move about the strings.

He's rather afraid to fit Kari into a role, she typically is his best friend and the one he protects. The relationship is... it's hard for him to pin her down, she has been a romantic interest for him but as the loops continued and he began to feel older then his appearance, he felt rather disgruntled about pinning away for Kari. It doesn't help that there's some kind of relationship between them, Hope and Light... Their chests seem to reach for each other.

He is still drawn to Kari, it's something he can't deny, their chests were a part of them, it's just that, what kind of relationship did he want with her. Friendship is the most typical between them and it's one he does his best to keep it that way, but then he's fifteen and sees her... Particularly at a dance or something...

Doing his best to push that kind of thinking away, he focuses on the song he's trying to play. It's a song by a band that hasn't formed as of yet, so the song didn't legally belong to the band either. One could say if he wrote it up and sold it to a current band, they would legally own the copy rights to the song. Of course, he's just strumming on the guitar, doing his best to recall all the recent lessons he asked Matt for in the last few loops, doing his best to spend some quality time with his older brother.

He's done something similar back when the Loops were new to both Patamon and himself but after a while, it became something of a pain to regain the trust he had with them. The fact that he knew a quick way to establish said bond kind of made it... not as valued as it once was.

And then I decided to spend Kami knows how many Loops convincing them that time is looping. He thinks to himself. Which lead to that promise that he keeps by doing his best to keep an emotional distance between himself and the non-Awake Digidestine.

I wonder if that's what drove Thomas and Zoe over the deep end? He muses, shivering at just thinking of the pair of sex obsessed Loopers.

In the end, TK pushes such thoughts out of his head and focuses on playing his guitar.

Loop 4

"Four moons in the night sky... Ah damn it, looks like I owe Takato a DVD." TK mutters as he touches his leather bag. Within it he feels a few coins, not bad for an eight year old and is the youngest Looper in this universe.

As he heads for the nursery barn, he gets this nagging feeling he should know about this world. It's not until he's in the barn and spies a 'dragon' does he remember, after all, he's fairly certain he arranged for this book series to either become a mini series or a series of movies. Jane Yolen is the author if I recall.

"The Pit Dragon trilogy." He murmurs as his hand moves to touch his Digivice in his belt pouch. He feels some connection to the beasts around him as he walks over to deliver what he came to deliver.

Once the delivery was made, he races back to the main building. He nods to the native Looper, Jakkin who nods back. He heads for his bunk, it's going to be one of those loops and he shuttered to think of what became of their Digimon partners for the Loop.

- - T - -

Shoya face palms at Guilmon's antics. Gaomon seems rather bemused over their youngest member's actions. He's yet to learn either of their human names so he keeps using their Digimon one, both mentally and when addressing them.

He wonders where their partners were but, for now, it seems that they are on their own. Their current universe is one from the comics, likely the DC given that there does seem to be an actual Superman in the US. It makes him wonder if they will gain special powers when they hit puberty, which should be in seven to eight years.

He looks up when his aunt when she calls his name. He says, "Bye you guys." Once up he walks over to her, wondering when this Loop will end so they can be with their partners once more.

Loop 5

TK finished going up the stairs, he glances around the Hinata Inn, or should he say the Hinata Dorms? His name for the Loop? Takeru Urashima, his adopted sibling for the Loop? Shoya Urashima, who's still male. His goal for the Loop? Get into Tokyo U, which should prove a breeze as he's done so plenty of times back in his home universe.

The only problems he foresees in this Loop is the various girls and women who call the Dorms home. "Maybe I should have headed into the Tea Cafe to wait for them..." He murmurs as he turns to look towards said cafe.

With a sigh, he turns back to the building and take a few steps toward it. He stops, his frown deepens and with a shake, he turns around and does the smart thing, heading for the cafe ran by his aunt/cousin. He didn't want to get attacked and if he did enter into the inn turned dorm, it's more then likely he would be under-attack by at least two of members of the dorm, particularly violent man-haters.

- - T - -

"This is a GIRL's Dorm! We don't need any MALES!" TK sighs at the explosion coming from a certain violent woman pretty much screams and growls at the same time.

His current aunt/cousin stiffens next to him, clearly not liking the out burst. The heiress to a certain kendo style looks a bit nervous as the temperature dropped a drop but goes on to agree with Naru, "We can look after the dorm ourselves."

"Then I hate to point out that Granny already made her choice and as of today, I am the owner and manager of this place. While you may not have a problem disrespecting me, you are disrespecting my grandmother by your attitude. It would seem that you didn't possess any real trust in my grandmother's judgement, its a good thing that you are all free to seek out new places to live as I plan to respect my grandmother's decision and remain owner slash manager of Hinata Dorms." He states in a calm, matter of fact way that caused two of the group to glare venomously at him and the others to sport slightly guilty look.

"Why should we leave your the..."

"I'm the owner as of today and thus, have an investment in this place. I am not an intruder as I was invited here. If you can't get it through your head that I am now responsible for the operation and maintenance of my family's legacy then I expect you have alternate places and you are free of your tenant agreement for Hinata Dorms." He states, cutting of some illogical rant and that seems to inflame the two troublesome tenants, he could hear Naru's teeth grinding together and Motoko's grip upon her katana tightens as her already frosty demeanor gets cooler.

"Just like a male, throwing your weight around." Naru growls, trying to physically intimidate him by standing up just so and leaning on the table, her palms flat on the table. "I can't believe you have nothing to say about this, Haruka!"

"Nothing he is stating if false, Naru-chan. And frankly, I find Motoko and your own attitude about this rather distressing. TK hasn't done anything to gather such outrage, he's been polite throughout dinner even with cutting remarks coming from the pair of you." Haruka states. "Given that this has been sprung on your the last minute, perhaps a good nights sleep is needed before we continue with this discussion."

He nods in agreement, saying, "You are right, Haruka. Perhaps we should continue this discussion with a night sleep behind us."

With a scowl on their faces, Naru and Motoko get up, soon enough, the others follow their example save one. He sighs softly but lends a hand to Shinobu in cleaning up the table. Haruka also helps.

Soon enough, Haruka shows him to his new room, a glance up shows that yes, there is a hole in the ceiling. He'll have to repair it first if only to get some privacy from Naru. They had a short private talk before Haruka leaves him alone, he puts his suit case down by the door.

Glancing around, he pulls out his Digivice and within seconds, he has some of his possessions out and ready to be placed. Once he picks out what he wants out, he puts the rest back into his storage space within his Digivice and walks over to his suit case, beginning to put the cloths away into the dresser in the room.

He is on his lab top, waiting until eleven pm to go have a dip in the hot spring. After a good hour, he climbs out and uses his Digivice to shroud him in shadows. Stepping into one, he exits out in the hall, he finds both Motoko and Naru waiting outside of the Hot Springs, it seems they planned some kind of confrontation where they believe he would be at his weakest.

Got to remember to post a new schedule for the Hot Springs. Also... might need to wait a bit before asking Shoya to join me here... He thinks as he walks back to his room, once more entering into his room viva the shadows. Once within, the shroud fades away and he finishes up drying off before putting on some PJs and turning in for the night, his Digivice clipped on his pants encase they decide to barge into his room for that confrontation they seem to want to happen.

- - T - -

"This is my adopted brother, Shoya and he's agreed to take the post of assistant manager of Hinata." TK states, it's been two weeks and things seem to have become rather troublesome, the magic of the land keeps trying to throw him in the path the women/girls and it's only by using his Digivice has he avoided said situations from happening.

Figuring that haven't Shoya around might help fend off the pressure from the magic, he finally asked him to assume said post. He also plans to hire some expert carpenters to help repair what he can't, it shouldn't be too hard as he has more then enough money. With Hinata back in good condition, he plans to look for new tenants, ones without any problems with men, heck, he might make the Dorm co-ed just to satisfy the match making magic of Hinata.

Might be a good idea to get an estimate for replacing the Annex while they are here. TK muses as he doesn't really listen to the protests of the two man-haters or the 'subtle' flirtations of a certain fox like woman. As long as they don't try anything physically, he is content to let them vent.

Soon enough, pair will become more enraged when he announces the coming of the carpenters and most likely when he decides for the dorm to become co-ed. He'll mostly ignore Motoko's continuous challenge attempts, after all, it's rather one sided and by keep demanding said challenge isn't showing how dishonorable he is, as he keeps pointing out she can't offer anything equal to the ownership and management of Hinata Dorm, which has been in his family for... well, he doesn't know how long really.

Until Motoko could come up with something of equal value with both value in both historic and economic, he won't fight in a duel with her.

They should be happy I haven't terminated their tenant contracts. He thinks, glances towards the two man-haters. Although, I should contact their families if only to let them know how poorly their children are acting. They really need to reconnect with reality.

Loop 2b

"Folamon Digivolve to..." He cries as he is within the hand of the giant Devimon. He feels a surge of energy throughout his whole being. His body undergoes a change as the power settles around him, he feels solid once more as he declare, in a much more mature tone, "Sinyoumon!"

The hand of Devimon opens and moves from his floating body. Sinyoumon's larger then Pegasusmon with four pairs of wings while sporting an gold ornament upon his head sporting a golden horn. About his neck floats a solid gold ring that sports two inchs from his skin. His fur is bright white while bright blue marks upon his face, neck, and lowerback. His mane is braided with a silver ring holding the braid together while his tail is that of a lion's with the tuff being a blue flame.

"Sinyoumon, Champion level Digimon, Vaccine. This Holy Beast is said to be the Bringer of Hope while signally a time of Great Dispair. His Exorcism's Roar is said to dispel dispair within all that hear it." Tentomon says in awe. Oh great, I'm a sign of the future reign of the Dark Masters.

"Your time of Darkness has come to an end, Devimon. File Island shall be cleansed and peace shall return to the isle." He declares to the evil Digimon, who just scowls at him.

"Sinyoumon! It is you who shall fall this day! File Island is mine! And from it, I shall cover this world in Darkness so complete as to destroy all Light!" The giant Devimon declares.

"We shall see." Sinyoumon states calmly and charges Devimon, crying, "Exorcism's Roar!"

The attack causes Devimon to flinch while it rips through the area hit by the attack. He's actually kind of surprised that it did any kind of damage given that Devimon has consumed how many Black Gears and Ogremon. He easily dodges Devimon's Touch of Evil and counters with Exorcism's Roar, being so close to Devimon causes the area to peel and burn.

He is sent flying due to a back hand, he stablizes and dodges an attack called Death Hand. Narrowing his eyes, he draws on the energy of Shoya's Digivice and then fires an Exorcism's Roar, this causes Devimon to bleed data while placing a hand over the injured area. He chargers the evil Digimon as he calls upon the power within said Digivice.

"Golden Charge!" He declares and becomes covered in a bright, golden light. Devimon's incoming hand is destroyed upon coming into contact with the light and the light dims, he does slam into the body, causing Devimon to fall into a cliff side.

He is sent flying when Ogremon comes out of the chest, slamming his bone club onto his head. Sinyoumon stablizes himself within a few feet of the ground. Taking a calming breath, he centers himself, doing his best to recall the recent conversation with Shoya about accessing the others' Digivices power.

Sure, as Devimon's hand is restored and gets up from the ground, saying something about lacking in power, he finally feels the connection, it's not all that different then those times when they've faced Apocalymon and need to restore themselves back into their original forms. Devimon exclaims about the light as he feels a huge amount of energy, an energy he finds rather hard to keep hold of and knows that he needs to release it very soon.

He raises into the air and declares, "Exorcism's Roar!" The energy flows from him and he's more then a little relieved to have all that power out of him. The attack ripes into Devimon and soon, Devimon bursts into data while a bright golden light explodes from within.

His job done and exhuation coming onto him. he returns to his rookie form of Folamon. He lands on the ground the others recover and celebrate the victory. For himself, he'd rather have something to eat, although he can just graze some grass. Food is rather easy to come by for him as Folamon as he can eat the plant that's around them unlike the other Digimon.

Loop 6

TK can't help but sigh, this loop for whatever reasons just seem to cause him a headache. Maybe it's due to the fact that they Woke at the point where Matt was saying goodbye to him and wouldn't change his mind about going even when he pointed out what kind of trouble could happen with Matt away. He even tried to use the Sad-Puppy-Eyes but his 'older' brother managed to resist, which he put down as still being slightly disoriented from the sudden Waking.

Well, that happens, so it's rather common. He thinks as they run towards the door that Myotismon is heading for. Then DemiDevimon proved to be extra annoying while I was modifying those rides, doing his upmost to get me to cry and argue with Patamon...

"Patamon..." He mutters.

"Yes?"

"I'm tired of this, could you?"

"You really want me to?"

"Why the heck not? Besides, you can get it while you do it. Just don't beat him up too badly, wouldn't want the... pansy to get deleted so soon." He states.

"Oh, I am SO going to enjoy this!" Patamon chimes in and as the latest Digimon comes to delay them once more. Louder, the rookie says, "Don't worry, I got this!"

Within seconds, Angemon deletes the latest hurdle and takes careful aim. With a single cry of Hand of Fate, the Digimon pulling the carriage and the carriage are deleted. Before Myotismon could react, Angemon throws his staff which flies, nailing the Ultimate in the back of the head.

"Lord Myotismon!" Cries Gatomon and a number of Digimon who aren't through the Gate pause and turn around.

"Wow... First Devimon and now it seems Myotismon isn't able to fend off Angemon." Tai comments, he sniffles a snort.

"The Gate!" He shouts and that gets the rest of the group in gear, although not without some comments from each respective Digidestine while Angemon has Myotismon in a head lock while using his staff to keep the Utlimate kneeling on the ground, "Say Unclemon! Come on and say it!"

"Never! Crim-" He shakes his head as they race pass while Gatomon and DemiDevimon argue over what they should do. He ignores the fact that Angemon just cracked the Ultimate's neck, paralyzing the vampire like Digimon for a few days.

"Don't look back! Keep going forward!" He cries as he snags the cat Champion, surprising her enough that as he leaps through the air, he crosses over into the Real World with her. He's fairly sure that the others followed his example.

TK woke to the Digimon arguing with Gatomon, he glances at the others and shrug, he's grown use to traveling between the dimensions so he typically wakes from traveling through the gate sooner then the other Digidestine. He smiles at the sight of the Tag and Crest of Light about Gatomon's neck, Gatomon looks slightly dazed, likely due to Patamon informing the Champion that she's the partner Digimon to the eighth Digidestine and likely used the explianations that he learnt thus viva the time when the light of the Digivices boosted his power to defeat Devimon.

He's fairly certain of that due to them cooking up that story and feeding it to the others in previous Loops where Patamon and him rescued Gatomon from Myotismon's evil clutches. TK leans back and stares up at the sky, he feels so much better, that headache he had since DemiDevimon made his appearance has vanished now that they are in the Real World or should it be, Human World?

The Digimon continue their discussion to the point where the other Digidestine wake up and wonder what they are arguing about now. Only to get slightly freaked out at the sight of Gatomon wearing a Tag and Crest. He sighs, sure, Myotismon will crossover, just not right away.

Last time they did pulled something like this, it took the vampire wanna-be about an hour Human time, to get the spare pack of cards. Given a minor trick he did to the cards in Gennai's possession, they'll ownly reveal themselves after a full day had pass in the Human World since TK and the others got here, well, mostly himself as the trick is connected to his Digivice.

Soon enough, the others brought up other consures then whether it's true that Gatomon is the eighth child's Digimon or not. Mainly concern about how long it'll take before Myotismon joins them in the Real World. He doesn't comment on that, only asking them about how are they going to smuggle the Digimon onto the bus.

He smiles, it's been far too long since they beaten Myotismon into entering the Real World and he can't wait to get home so he can begin doing something that took some real thought, after all, Patamon's more then capable of destroying the vampire wanna-be and the Dark Masters, Apocalymon... well, they're getting there, still, being able to destroy half of that Digimon's body with one shoot isn't that bad, particularly when Pataomon is only a Champion, as MagnaAngemon, it's still a mess as some parts of the huge Apocalymon don't get the chance to enter into the Gate of Destiny, only as Seraphimon did no parts of said Digimon remain to reform and give them trouble.

Loop 7

"Oh God..." TK murmurs as he Wakes to find himself, unsurprisingly in the Digital World, but older then eight years old. "Let's see... hmm, rather late in too..."

He rubs his chin as he plots, Patamon flying over, also likely thinking over just what they would do now. They hold a whisper conversation between them, not really paying much mind to battle going on between MagnaVeemon and Chimeramon or the falling debris, it didn't take much more then a thought to have a shield up to protect them from such.

With a soft snort and a smirk coming from one of them, TK heads for a certain portion of the base that belongs to Ken while Patamon is rather smug for convincing TK to go along with what he has planned.

Not that TK put up much of a fight at when Patamon makes a point concerning an unused item within his storage space. One made by a certain Digidestined when he had been on a power trip, and it wasn't TK who made it, shockingly enough, it had been Mimi who 'created' it, AKA ordered it made(that had been a very strange loop, particularly as they had to escape her lab of all things).

Once at the reactor that connects into a certain depressing place. Patamon becomes Angemon while he summons the device from his Digivice. TK hangs back, letting Angemon work with the device while he does his best to repress that whole Loop. Oh, sure, they didn't have to worry about any Digimon, hell, what Mimi... TK finds a spot to sit cross legged, it seems that he's got to get serious about repressing that Loop if he recalls Apocalymon's time in that particular Loop.

"Ok, I think it's ready to go!" TK opens his eyes and blinks a bit as his gaze refocuses, allowing him to see in the near dark space once more. "Kami help us if this thing reacts like it did when she had it up for that practice run."

"Come on, it could allow us to visit Takato and Guilmon or the other Digital Worlds Connected to a Human World." Angemon points out. "I believe it will work, don't you?"

"Oh, sure, it'll work, the question becomes, if it'll work too well." He murmurs, pushing that 'test' out of his mind. After all, he hadn't enjoyed getting used as a bartering chip as Mimi does her best to create some kind of permenant deal with that planet full of boundiful women, nor did he enjoy the fact that Mimi had figured out how to age him eitehr. Make my body match my mind, I nearly died damn it!

He's not even going to entertian the thought that he spent the rest of that Loop in a clone body. Nope, he's not even going to think that he died as if he did die in a Loop, it's suppose to restart after all so he clearly didn't die. And Matt allowed him to get tattooed as a joke, that's that. There's no way that Mimi figured out how to keep the Loop from restarting, none at all, that's his story and he's sticking to it.

Then, as the device does what it does, the world shifts as his eyes widen. Within seconds, darkness engulfs him. Upon waking, he finds himself under ground and wills a orb of light to appear over him, giving him a better look at his surroundings.

He glances towards this collapsed being. Getting up, he glances up to find a gate of some sort up at the ceiling, he can see the device from the back, or what they had thought was the back it seems. With a slight shake of his head, he walks over to the being, he holds out his Digivice and light erupts from it, flowing through the air into the being that is his partner, given the fleshiness, TK mentally label his partner by his human name, Shoya, as it's clear that this dimension doesn't allow for Digimon to arrive as is.

Within seconds, the winged being gets to his feet. TK studies Shoya's new appearance. "The four eyes seems to be over kill." He muses and Shoya moves a hand over his face to find that yes, he now possesses four eyes, one set of eyes are where you'd expect them, the second set are up by the temple area, although the head isn't very humanish, more like an ape's really.

"A mirror if you please." Shoya asks and he nods, after all, he, too, wants to check himself out just incase anything about himself is different. With two large mirrors out of his storage space, he notices that he possesses this small horn in the middle of his head just above his eyebrowse while he's got the thin beginnings of antlers near his hair line.

Other then the horn and antlers, he's got some glowing marks under his eyes and at his throat. Raising his shirt, he finds more glowing marks there, which causes him to conclude he's got them all over his body. "Well, only minor changes for me. Big ones for you, Shoya." He says as he stores the mirror back in his storage space.

"I've got a lot of muscle, not sure if I can fly though." Shoya mutters, moving away from his mirror, which means he's done with it. While Shoya looks around, he stores the mirror away and with a parting glance, follows Shoya, leaving a trail of tiny glowing orbs so they can find their way back.

After about an hour of walking around, they decide to head back to the place they woke in. "Think a rope will do it?" Shoya asks.

"It could but the problem will be the translation between the two. It'll likely knock us out. We'd need somebody to haul us up." TK says as he sits down as he summons a portable game system to entertain himself for a bit, after all, he's fairly sure the others will come looking for them.

After four hours, according to the portable game system at least, although distortied but still understandable. TK looks up and waves while Shoya is already up, waving both his arms. Within a few minutes, as they look up, Yolei and Hawkmon are looking 'down' with startled expressions. "TK, is that you? And is that... Patamon?"

"Yes! Could you find some rope to lift us back through? There's not much to see down here!" TK shouts with his hands cupped about his mouth, the portable game system having been sent to his storage space with a thought.

"Right! Hawkmon, stay here while I go and get the others!" Yolei tells her partner. He doesn't hear Hawkmon's reply but Yolei does vanish from his sight.

Some minutes later, the others appear along with some rope. Soon enough, two strands of rope are sent through. Glancing towards Shoya, they approach and create a make shift harnass about their bodies. "Are you guys ready?" Shoya shouts.

"The ropes are secure, you two can climb up!" Davis shouts. He sighs but begins to climb up the rope. Sadly, he was proven right about not being able to make it through the portal without fainting as their bodies get translated back into their original forms, causing them to fall back towards the cave floor.

"TK! Patamon! Are you guys ok?! TK! Patamon!" He wakes to both Kari and Gatomon shouting their concerns. "Let me go! I want to go check on them!" Kari says.

"It's not safe for you to do that, Kari!" Yolei says as he checks himself over before looking over to Shoya.

"We're fine but I think you'll have to pull us up! When we tried to go through the portal, it caused us to faint! I think it's due to it trying to restore us to our original looks!" He shouts up.

"Thank god you two are ok!" Kari cries out.

"Are you sure you can't climb up, TM? Maybe you didn't tried hard enough!" Davis calls out before yelping a bit. "Ouch, that hurt Yolei!"

"They already tried that, for all we know, next time they'll cause the rope to snap!" Yolei snaps angerily at Davis, it's clear that this whole thing is worrying them. "Who knew Ken built something like this during his time as the Digimon Emperor?"

He flushes a bit at that conclusion but doesn't see any reason to correct that assumption. It takes a few minutes before they are ready to pull them out, their partners Armor Digivolved into their respective forms and they pulled Shoya and himself out. He blacks out and wakes to find three of the four about him, staring down with worried looks.

"Is Angemon alright?" He asks as the others sigh in relief. "Well, he's kind of fuzzing..." Is Yolei's reply and he sits up, glancing to where the Digimon are circled around Angemon's phasing body.

With a soft sigh, he pulls out his Digivice and holds it towards Angemon's body. Light shoots out and within seconds, Angemon is once more solid and awake. "Wow, how did you know that would fix him?" Cody asks.

"Well, it worked when we landed in the cave that's on the other side of the portal." He says truthfully as Angemon returns to his rookie form. The others relax and he stands up, he then turns to look into the portal, wondering when he'll have the chance to turn it off and sent the device into the storage space.

"Well, now we have to figure out how to get rid of that portal." Yolei says and he nods in agreement. "I guess Ken wasn't satisfied with conquering if he built a machine to access other dimensions." She adds with a frown and he wanted to wince but doesn't.

"Well, it wasn't a success given to what happened with Patamon." Cody states and the others agree. The others, including the Digimon, debate how to deal with the portal.

As Patamon flies over and lands on his head, he takes some time to figure out how to get pass the portal. The top has a gap that Patamon would fit through without touching the portal. So far, nobody has mentioned having Patamon fly over that gap and decides, after a few minutes of debate turned arguement, to say, "Well, it's not like anyone is fool enough to enter into the ex-Digimon Emperor's base so we can come back later to deal with the portal."

The others agree, if only due to all the excitement of the day. He leads the others out of the base and then through the Digi-Port. He doesn't try to sneak over to use Izzy's computer, he doubts anyone will mess with the base. Once they arrive home though, even before he accesses the gate, he spends a few minutes setting it up so that if anyone is tracking the opening of the Digi-Port they won't track it to his apartment building and they return to the area where the base is.

"Well, we're back." Patamon states in a dead pan way. He chuckles at his partner's tone.

"You just need to fly in that gap between the ceiling and the portal. Turn off the device and I'll then sent it into storage." He explains and within second, Patamon spies the gap and then flies through it.

Within a minute, the portal fades as it closes. Walking up to the device, he touches it before sending it into his storage space. "Well, that's that." He says with a sigh.

"True. I wonder what the others will say when they come and find the portal gone." Patamon states.

"Well, we'll just have to bring the ceiling down, once we disable the core." He says as he walks to where the engine is. Summoning the Crest of Kindness, he places it into the spot and once the core is down, he uses his Digivice to retrieve the Crest back so he can send it into his storage space.

Then, suddenly, he's Folamon and he glances towards Shoya, giving the other a dirty look. "Come on, I've collapsed the ceiling how many times? Besides, it'll give ya more experience in your Champion form." Shoya points out with a grin.

"I have to point out, it was your idea to used that portal device." He points out to Shoya.

"Yea, but you are the one who wanted to keep that portal device." Shoya states with his arms crossed. With a snort, he looks into himself and within seconds, he is Sinyoumon.

As he is about to fire off an Exorism's Roar, he hears a faint, "Hello? Hello!" Sinyoumon glances over to Shoya with a questioning look.

"Hey! We're over here!" His partner calls out and soon enough, they are joined in the chamber by Joe and Gomamon.

"Who's that?" Joe asks with a slight worried expression. Gomamon answers, "That's Sinyoumon, a Champion Digimon and a Vaccine. He's a Holy Beast type."

"And I'm Shoya." His current human partner says as way of greeting. "We found a gate that landed us here."

"Ah, I see, I'm Joe and this is Gomamon." He notices a particular look on Joe's face as the older teen studies Shoya's face.

"You look familiar... You know Matt or TK?" Joe asks and Shoya replies, "A cousin of their's, can't recall how closely related we are though."

"Oh, well, you do bear a striking resemblance to them. You could almost pass as their sibling." Joe says as he finally decides to come flying down to the ground.

"You guys expecting trouble?" Gomamon asks him and he replies gruffly, "Well, it does look like a battle scene around here."

"Yea some friends of ours just took down the sleaze known as the Digimon Emperor." Gomamon says, causing Joe to sigh. "What, I'm just telling them the truth."

"Good to know, those Control Towers were causing property values to drop." He remarks and Gomamon chuckles while the corners of Joe's mouth twitch upwards. "It is nice to meet with you both." He bows his head to the pair.

"You as well." Joe says, returning his bow. "Dido!" Gomamon says with a wide grin.

"Well, it is rather late, perhaps we should leave. It's rather creepy in here." Gomamon says, shivering a bit. "I wouldn't be surprise to find a ghostmon or something in here."

He agrees, after all, this chamber is usually connected with the Dark Ocean. Although the connection is current shut off, he's fairly sure that it can be open again. Guess we won't be able to destroy the base right now after all...

"Mind giving us a lift as well?" Gomamon asks as Shoya climbs up onto his back. "I don't see why not." He admits and soon, he's flying out of the base with Joe and Gomamon on his back.

He heads for the gate, once everyone is off his back, he returns to his Rookie form. "Huh, you're a big one aren't ya?" Gomamon remarks to him and he folds his wings onto his back.

"I've known others to be as big as me." Folamon remarks, they say their good-byes. Soon enough, they are in his room. They both glow and he is returned to being human and Shoya into Patamon.

He can only imagine what Joe and Gomamon will report about the whole event. For now, he's hungry and tired. Leaving Patamon in his room, he grabs them a meal and then when they are done, takes the remains back to the kitchen. Once he's done cleaning them, he heads to his room, Patamon is already fast asleep and he soon joins his partner in dream land.

Loop 2c

I really, really hard Piedmon. Sinyoumon thinks to himself as he is sent flying as Shoya and Kari are climbing the rope. Why do we always have to climb that rope in order to defeat him when we are at this point? He wonders as he hits the ground, skidding over the surface of the ground.

Shaking his head, he watches the pair. As he gets to his feet, Sinyoumon sways a bit and cries out, "Shoya!" The rope gets cut and as the pair fall, he soon feels energy surging from Shoya to himself.

"Sinyoumon Digivolves to..." He declares and his whole being alters, he assume a more human form. "KishiAngemon!" Four pairs of white feathered wings come from his back while he's chest, arms, and legs are covered in golden armor while about his head is a golden metal band while his blond hair is short and spiked. A broad energy sword is in his right and a upon the shield is the Crest of Hope is in his left.

He easily catches the falling pair. "Well, this is unexpected... An Angel, huh?" He can hear the words 'finally'. "Thanks KishiAngemon!" Kari says and he hums in agreement.

As he puts the pair down, KishiAngemon turns to face the angry Piedmon. "Be careful." Kari says and he says calmly, "Don't worry, I'll get him."

He holds his shield up and aiming it at the very displeased Mega Digimon. He pulls his left arm back, ready to send the shield flying. "Holy Shield!" He cries, throwing the shield at Piedmon, the shield becomes a disc of golden energy, it cracks one of Piedmon's swords as the Clown uses the sword to block the shield.

His sword clashes with the other one as he comes charging in seconds after throwing his shield. As he pulls away from Piedmon, his shield is back upon his left arm and he uses the shield to defend from Piedmon's Thrump Sword. With a push of his left arm, the swords are tossed to the side.

He twirls the energy sword and then charges, crying out, "Holy Cursade!" His energy sword thins and lengths. He slashes at Piedmon, although the Mega tosses the white cloth, his attack destroys it. "That's one trick down." He states and Piedmon gives him an ugly look.

"Well, it's been fun but... Ending Snipe!" He cuts the attack in half with his sword, although he does get some damage from the electricity. He closes in and slices at the Mega, Piedmon tries to punch him but he uses his shield to block and then slam the shield into Piedmon's chest before bringing his sword down, it slices through the cloths of Piedmon's chest but the Clown manages to back up.

On and on they go, each of them using a mixture of special attacks and physical ones. When he manages to steal those in the form of keychains, he pulls back and lets loose his most powerful attack. "Heaven's Shackles!" From his shield, chains with shackles fly out and clamps upon the exhausted Mega's body. The shield moves from his left arm and raises into the air, facing while floating above Piedmon's captive body.

Then, the shield becomes a disc of golden light and quick as a fox, slams down, destroying Piedmon. With the Mega gone, the shield returns to his left arm. He then quickly places the transformed Digimon and Digidestined. Half a minute later, they regain their true forms and seem confused.

He returns to being Folamon and soon, Mimi arrives with reinforcements. He enjoys the break, after all, he knows who they'll face next.

To Be Continued . . .

Digimon Loops: TK 5

I don't own Digimon!

Loop 1

TK types away at his mom's computer, it's rather old but then, he is only six years old, which is two years younger then he's use to being. He goes through the lines of data a third time and finding no error, he presses enter. Slowly the code is transformed into a minor Gate and his Digivice's image forms upon the screen.

Within seconds, it materializes out of the computer viva the screen. He watches as it lands before the keyboard and the computer then shuts down. He carefully gets up on the chair and every so gently grabs the device, he pockets it a minute before his mom comes in and scowls him about 'playing' with her computer.

Getting sent out of the room, his mom boots up the computer while he heads for his room. Once within, TK takes out his Digivice as he sits on his bed. He checks to see if it's functional before looking around. He grabs a few items, things he gathered up before even touching the computer to get his Digivice transferred to him.

With his pack on his back, he heads out of the front door and once his shoes are on, he opens the door once he assumes an older appearance. Check to be sure he has the spare set of keys in his pocket, he walks to the elevator and waits for it to arrive so he can leave the building.

The few looks he gathers as he walks down the street aren't that surprising, TK knows he looks dashing and he chose to appear as such. He finds a lotto place and flirts a bit with the young woman in front of him to pass the time. Soon enough, he walks away with his ticket and in the company of said university student for a quick coffee date as she needs to be back for an afternoon class.

TK pulls out his Digivice and checks the time, he hurries off to school. He's got the prefect excuse, his mom was busy and forgot to send him along or walk him to school. His appearance alters within a block of the school and he smiles, knowing that the lotto ticket will be safe in his storage space. Tonight is as good a time as any to check and see if time is still lopsided... Hopefully Patamon isn't an Egg or in that lab...

- - T - -

Yip, I'm too early, by centuries it seems. Folamon thinks to himself as he soars over the castle that would one day become Myotismon's castle and way into the Real World. It's a hard concept to wrap his head around but it doesn't stop it from being true.

It takes him some time to find a way into the castle and to find a perfect perch to watch the human like digital beings moving about the lab. He didn't notice any Digi-Eggs or Digivice let alone Tags and Crests. It seems as though they were still in the process of either creating or locating suitable Digimon. Could be wrong and they're having trouble matching traits to Crests.

Observing the various digital humans move about the lab, typing away at the computers, or just tinkering with the machinery, Folamon turns as leaves. Once more in the air, he wonders what he should do next now that he's confirmed that it'll be some time before he can look forward to having his best friend and fellow anchor, Patamon, around with him.

Well, whatever I want to do, I have a lot of time to be doing it. He muses to himself. Although to be fair, he hadn't expected to arrive in his Rookie form when he used his mom's computer to create a Digi-Port but that's what happened. He concluded that the Digital World wasn't ready for human visitation and took advantage of his current form to make good time to arrive at the castle/lab where the others and his own Digimon was created/gathered with their Digivice plus Tags and Crests.

- - T - -

And I'm no longer alone! Folamon thinks as Patamon's Egg hatches. Within seconds, his form alters and he assumes his human form right as the shell breaks apart to reveal the Baby. "You wouldn't believe what I've been up to without you around." He whispers to the young Digimon who seems to be blinking rapidly at him, clearly not believing he's here.

"Huh?" Before Digivolving all the way to Rookie.

"I arrived two years early, I've spend centuries, thousands of years, hanging around the Digital World, sometimes between trips to and from the Real World. It's been crazy but the time shift is getting shorter, which might explain why it was so easy for us to fix it in the first place. To have time between the two Worlds go at the same rate." He tells Patamon. "Did I mention I was Folamon for those years?"

Patamon snorts softly, slowly shaking his head. "Well, it's not like I could be born faster and how often do you think you Waking before your eight will happen?" The orange Rookie remarks.

"Point, but I still would have loved to have you around. You wouldn't believe just who I've befriended just to have some company." TK tells his partner as he looks off at the very familiar mountain. He hears somebody's stomach growling and with a sigh, he grabs the leaf bundle he created over and placing it on his lap as he leans back onto the tree trunk, his shoulders helping to keep him steady while Patamon eats to his heart content of the various food stuffs he had gathered.

With Patamon's first meal out of the way, they sat on the branch, watching the sun climb higher into the air. His body complains about the way he is sitting but given he had been perched up here as Folamon, he's just happy he kept his balance on the branch, it did help that he already had his back facing the trunk.

"So... did ya do anything to the D-Four? Like pranks and such?" Patamon asks him, breaking the comfortable silence between them.

"Of course, although I admit, it was rather difficult figuring out which of the Digimon were going to Digivolve into them but I got them." He assures his partner.

"Videos? Or just pictures?" His partner presses, causing him to chuckle.

"How about having the footage edited and added music to go along with it?" He asks Patamon and from the look on his friend's face, it's clear he wanted to see it NOW!

Within seconds, a tablet appears and once the password is entered, he presses the play button and Patamon's blue eyes are fixated to the screen while the music plays along with the slap stick sounds to help with the prank. It wasn't long before Patamon is laughing so hard he was crying and almost fallen off the branch, quickly using his ears to hover over the branch while still laughing roaringly at the various pranks and the reactions the caused with the victims.

A glance down shows that the other Digimon partners have gathered around, curious as to where the laughter is coming from. He already set up a sight barrier to keep them from recognizing him as a human, to them, he still looks like Folamon.

He just grins, he knew he did a very good job of editing the various footage all together along with sound effects and picked the right set of songs to go along with each of the four.

Loop 2

"Are you sure these will allow us to send Emails and share data, even allow for us to play multiplayer games together? Automatically stores into our storage space?" Zoe asks, a frown upon her face while looking at tiny connective port. "It looks like it's barely a flash drive."

"It works as long as you have your Digivice on you." TK informs the group. He is a bit puzzled about both Thomas and Zoe as they have been disturbingly normal throughout their time in this universe. Although to be fair, he usually does his best to stay out of their way as much as possible so for all he knows, they've been acting like this for the last few times they've met in this universe.

"It works, the previous attempt was a mother board you had to install on a computer or connect it to one." Takato explains and he nods in agreement. "It was a pain to remember to store the computer that had it before the Loop ends."

He had given Takato twenty of them, he's not sure how many Takato had lost to the Loop but he's also fairly certain that Guilmon's partner knew how to create one by now as well. It wouldn't surprise him if at least seven had been dismantled just to be sure on their workings and likely to repair it or recreate it. That version had been a bit glitchy with large time pauses every few hours. The latest one is one they created together, they even figured out how to patch the connection through their Digivice instead of using the Digivice as the key to open such a connection.

The happy part about that is that he didn't have to take each Digivice and install such a connection. There's something universal about Digivices, even if the version looks different or even has functions different from another version. "I don't think I'll ever understand how you can toy around with any Digivices and make sense of its codes." Thomas states with a shake of his head.

He gives Thomas a frowning confusing look until he realizes that Thomas doesn't know about Gennai or even Digi-Gnomes. Then his confusion clears up while Thomas gives him a minor glare. "I don't suppose Takato's shared with you the DVDs of the cartoon series based on my universes adventures?" He asks Thomas and glances over to Zoe, both seem to be looking over at Takato.

"Neither of you asked what that cartoon is based off of when I tried to offer it to you. You were more interested in me then 'some cartoon'." Takato reminds the pair. "You weren't even the least bit interested in the fact that I came from a world where a group of college students claimed to have created Digimon."

The pair look a bit guilty about that, finding out that they missed out on a massive amount of information that could help in their endeavors. Having some mercy on the pair, even if they rarely showed any when they had been pursuing their... previous goals.

Loop 3

Hikari Yagami? TK can't help but think as he walks along next to the girl as they enter the building. She had come to watch her brother, Taichi, participate in this V-Pet tournament. Although he's only been Wake since he woke this morning, he hadn't really thought that he Woke in another world but clearly he had.

He touches the Digivice in his sweater pocket as he gets his first glimpse of Taichi Yagami, who turns to give them a puzzled look before smiling and greeting them. "Hey Hikari, who's your friend?"

"This is TK, we just met outside." Hikari tells her brother, a bit shyly. "TK, this is my brother, Taichi."

"Hello!" He says cheerfully. "Nice to met ya."

Taichi smiles more warmly and replies, "Nice to see you too. So, you came with a parent or sibling?"

"Nope, I was just looking around. We just move here." He explains. "My mom's rather busy with her new job." He adds, which is true as he did take a moment to check through his memories of his time in this universe.

"What does your mom do?" Taichi asks curiously.

"News reporter." He answers, adding, "My dad works for a tv station. I don't see him or Yamato much, though hopefully that will change."

"Your parents' aren't together anymore?" Taichi asks with a hint of sadness. He feels Hikari reaching out with her left to grasp his right, he didn't fight it and they held hands for a few seconds before they let go.

"Yea... but I've gotten use to it." He answers truthfully.

"Ah, well, I better hurry and get registered. See you afterwards, ok?" Taichi says and they nod, murmuring their agreements.

"So... what do you think of my brother?" Hikari asks him as they head to stand in line to get into the stadium.

"He's nice." He says and Hikari nods. "And I think he's lucky to have you as his little sister." That causes her to blush and duck her head, it seems this version of his best friend is rather shy.

A bit after they found some seats, Taichi joins them, Hikari asks why he isn't in the back with the others. To which Taichi says simply, "I don't have the right kind of Digimon to be allowed into the tournament."

"What kind of Digimon do you have?" He asks curiously and Taichi replies, "Zeromaru is a Veedramon."

He frowns as he considers that tid bit of information. "Oh." TK says while Hikari does her best to make her brother feel better about it. Wonder how different a Veedramon is from an ExVeemon?

- - T - -

Taichi didn't really know what to make of having his sister here at the stadium, let alone the boy she's befriended. He's been through a lot of Loops and never in his experience has his little sister come to watch him participate in this tournament. He knows she's never befriended someone matching TK's description either. In his experience, a small change means something big has changed which leads him to believe that something, likely involving TK or his little sister is going to happen in the near future.

"I don't suppose you have a V-pet?" He asks the young blond after the first round. TK looks over at him before answering, "I didn't buy one nor did my parents. Yamato didn't see the point in them, but then, he's more into music then into raising a pet."

"You ever wanted one?" He asks and TK's eyes flash in amusement for a second, but he saw it and it only confirmed that TK is involved in the change to the Loop. "I don't think I'd want to own a Digimon."

He takes note that the eight year old didn't really answer the question. "How about you, Hikari? Did ya ever want one of the V-pets?" TK asks his sister, he looks over to Hikari, suddenly wondering what her answer will be.

"Well, I like the idea of having a pet with you all the time but, well, I'd like one that I can cuddle with too." Hikari answers and TK as a soft smile, nodding.

He looks away, he didn't know what he should feel about TK involving his baby sister in their discussion. Soon enough, the pair of them talk about previous pets they had and what kind of pets they'd want in the future. He better not be planning to use Hikari in his devilish plans. He thinks to himself.

Soon the tournament is over and as he escorts the pair out of the stadium, his little sister and the likely future foe are talking rather animatedly about the fights. Being rather truthful with himself, he's never seen Hikari so relaxed, so open with anyone who isn't a family member. Worry about it later, it's not like either of them will be following me into the Digital World.

As they are about to exit out of the building, the typical event happens. It matters not if he's the one to hunt down Neo to demand that challenge, something always happens that causes the two of them to have their match that sends them into the Digital World. Sure enough, a slight cough and he turns to find an adult wanting a word. "Ah, why don't you two head out? This shouldn't take long."

"I want to stay with you, Taichi." Hikari says upon grabbing his sleeve. He looks down, rather startled by that, usually Hikari does as he requests. Looking down, he finds a very determined look upon her face and he gives in.

A quick look over to TK shows that the blond as a sad-like look in his eyes while sporting a smile. He looks back to Hikari, TK pipes in, saying, "I wouldn't mind keeping Hikari company."

Hikari sends TK a smile while blushing slightly. Oh boy, that's not good. He thinks as he realizes that his kid sister seems to have a crush on the blond.

"They can come, Neo just wants a quick word with the owner of the glitchy V-pet." The woman says and soon guides them to the back into the stadium. The typical reason for wanting to met with me. Taichi thinks to himself.

- - T - -

TK is sure to keep a good grip on Hikari's wrist as they fall through the Gate. It's rather raw, like the one that usually opens when they are at the campsite. I guess I will get to see a Veedramon. He thinks to himself as they finally land.

"Are you ok?" He asks Hikari, he had done a maneuver so that he is under her just as the land came into sight. Within seconds of asking that, Hikari gets off and is bowing to him, apologizing for landing on him.

"It's alright, Hikari. I didn't want you to get hurt." He tells Kari's alternate counter part.

"TK!" He hears Patamon cry out and by the time he's standing up, his partner is on his bare head. Hikari seems a bit speechless about what just happened.

"This is Patamon, Patamon, this is Hikari Yagami." He says as way of introduction.

"Nice to met you." Patamon says and Hikari nods, "And you, Patamon."

"I thought you don't own a V-pet?" Hikari asks after a moment.

"Well, I don't own Patamon nor do I have a V-pet. It's kind of difficult to explain our relationship." TK admits to Hikari.

"Hi-chan!" Looking to the side, they find another Rookie, this one Salamon.

"Well, I guess I know what you mean. I don't own one either." Hikari says before calling out, "Hey Sally-chan!"

As the Salamon leaps into Hikari's arms, they hug each other, clearly glad to be with one another. "Sally, this is TK and his friend Patamon."

"Don't you have a name?" Sally asks Patamon.

"Well, I guess Shoya is a name." Patamon admits and he nods in agreement.

"Then why introduce him as Patamon?" Hikari asks and he admits, "Well, the usual times we call him Shoya are when he's not a Rookie."

"You mean you can Digivolve?" Sally asks Shoya, to which Shoya says, "Well, I can become an Angemon but I've got a more interesting Digivolution form call Pegasusmon. You want to see it?"

"Sure!" The pair agree and with that, Shoya flies to a spot.

"Digi-Armor Energize!" He cries, bring out his Digivce, summoning the Digi-Egg of Hope from his storage space.

"Patamon Armor Digivolve to..." Light engulfs Patamon and then, breaks apart to reveal Pegasusmon. "Pegasusmon, Flying Hope!"

"Ohh, awwww." The pair chime in, causing TK to smile. It wasn't long before they move to examine Pegasusmon, his partner clearly enjoys the attention.

Suddenly, some attack lands near, they all turn to find a group of Digimon refilling a cannon. "Climb on! Hurry!" Shoya commands while his partner kneels down to allow them easier access to climb onto his back.

Once they are all on, Shoya flies up and away while a shot from the cannon misses them by a wide mile.

- - T - -

Taichi arrives at the castle of Lord HolyAngemon with both Zeromaru and Gabo, well, after playing a minor joke on Gabo they went straight to the castle. An alarm rings out as they get within sight and as he looks around, he finds Hikari running towards him with a Salamon next to her. "Onii-chan!"

"Hikari?" He stammers out after hugging his little sister. "What... how?"

"Well, TK and I got sucked into this bright light and we found ourselves falling. TK managed to grab a hold of my arm and then, I landed on him. I got to meet his friend Shoya, who's a Patamon and then I introduced Sally to them both." Hikari tells him excitedly. "Shoya Digivolved into Pegasusmon, when we got fired at, we climbed onto his back and flew here, where Sally said it was safe." She is smiling up at him.

Then, noticing Zeromaru, his baby sister greets the blue Champion Digimon. "Hello there, I'm Hikari Yagami and this is my friend Sally." She says to her partner and Gabo.

"I'm Zeromaru, Taichi's partner and this is Gabo, he's our guide." Zero says. Sally smiles as she nods her greeting.

"So... TK's here and he's friends with a Patamon?" He can't help but repeat. Finding it hard to believe.

"Yea, and Shoya is also capable to Digivolving into an Angemon too, at least, that's what TK claims." His shy, often sick sister says with a nod.

"What's a Pegasusmon?" He asks, turning to look at Gabo, expecting the Rookie to know.

"Ah... I know that it involves a special kind of Digi-Egg." Gabo stammers.

"It's an ancient form of Digivolving that requires a Digi-Egg sporting a special symbol called a Crest. A Patamon Digivolves into a Pegasusmon using one sporting the Crest of Hope." Lord HolyAngemon explains, coming up to his right as he had turned to his left. "It is very surprising that young TK and Shoya know of it and found one of these Digi-Eggs."

Ancient form huh? And just what does a Crest of Hope look like? He wonders, sure, this was something new to learn and something to look into later, like another Loop, but for now, he's more concerned about what TK and his friend are up to. "So... what does a Crest for Hope look like?" He asks.

"It's kind of an image of a sun rising over a mountain peek." TK says and he looks to find TK moving from a jog into a fast walk. Spotting a Patamon on the boy's head, he assumes that is Shoya. The blond comes to a stop and turns his gaze to Zeromaru. "So, this is your Digimon, the Veedramon?"

"I prefer Zeromaru." His partner states in a huff and TK nods, the boy's gazes turns to Gabo and he notices the slight widening of the eyes, it's clear that TK recognizes Gabo.

"Hello, I'm TK and this is Shoya." TK says politely to Gabo.

"I'm Gabo, I'm a Gabumon." The Rookie says proudly and TK nods slowly before turning to Lord HolyAngemon.

"It seems that he found us, so your offer for assistance proved unnecessary." TK says, addressing Lord HolyAngemon. "And I believe Taichi and Zeromaru are better suited to the task you need done." The eight year adds.

"I believe you are correct, Takeru, but I hope Hikari, Sally, Shoya, and yourself will continue to enjoy my hospitality." Lord HolyAngemon says with a soft smile.

"I believe we'd be delighted to, sir." TK says and looks over to Hikari, who picks up the hint and agrees with TK.

"We'll see you later, Onii-chan. I want to see more of the castle!" Hikari says and he nods, smiling gently as the two eight year olds and their Digimon friends leave.

"Let us retire to my study, if that is alright with you, Taichi? Zeromaru?" Lord HolyAngemon requests. "We would be delighted to, sir." He says with a glance towards Zero, who shrugs and gives a bit of a nod.

I believe TK is more familiar with the Digital World then I expect, he'll keep Hi-chan safe for now. He decides as they fall in step behind the minor parade of guards as Lord HolyAngemon heads into the castle.

- - T - -

"So, how long have you been Looping?" He is startled and glances to his right to find TK standing there, Shoya no where in sight.

"What gives you that idea? Your crazy." Taichi says, nervously chuckling to brush off that statement.

"Well then, I guess proper introductions are needed. Hello, I'm Takeru Takaishi, commonly called TK. I'm the Digidestine of Hope, my partner is Shoya, he's a Patamon. I'm usually a part of a group of seven, later eight, kids send through a Gate into a Digital world where we need to combat Evil Digimon who plot to take over that world and throw the balance of the worlds out of balance." TK says and continues, "Taichi Kamiya , your double who prefers Tai, is the Digidestine of Courage and partners with Agumon. My brother Yamato Ishida, commonly known as Matt, is the Digidestine of Friendship and partners with Gabumon."

"Hikari Kamiya , commonly known as Kari, is the Digidestine of Light and partners with Gatomon, Salamon's Champion form." TK adds and his eyes widen, his mouth opens a bit. "I'm also a Looper, as in stuck in a Time Loop that resets itself when I'm getting close to being in my late teens and Wake to find myself eight years old again. Once more getting sucked through a Gate to met with my Digimon partner and best friend for life. I've met with three other Loopers who also part of groups who save their Digital World and we tend to met during some crisis that's named after a crystal."

"Your serious aren't you?" He asks and the blond nods. "I've got a double in your world?" Another nod. "Who's got a little sister, who becomes your... girlfriend."

"Well, we've never really dated and not just because of your double. We're best friends as we were the only eight year olds in the group and when we got older, we didn't become anything more, likely due to that friendship. Now? It'll be too weird to date her as I'm thousand of years older then her." TK explains with a sigh, the blond walks over and sits down next to him.

"So... you got a number of interesting stories to tell then?" He asks and TK nods. Then, as TK holds out his hand, a photo appears and he picks it up, studying the group of kids plus Digimon, not just their partners from the looks of it. He stares at the image of his double, Tai, and then at Kari, he notices the whistle about her neck. "Who's the one in pink?"

"That's Mimi, her partner's Palmon. Hmm, well, remind me to ask for your Digivice later, I'll add a storage space to it so you can keep personal effect you don't want to lose when Time resets, might as well give you the Dimensional Connection too, so you can chat with people who are in the same situation." The blond goes on to tell him a bit more about these fellow Loopers, "Takato's partners with Guilmon, they Bio Merge into Gallantmon. Zoe typically becomes the Legendary Warrior of Wind, it's something about collecting a pair of figurines that allow her to do it. Thomas works for some kind of agency and is partners with Gaomon."

"Bio Merge?" He tries to wrap his mind around it. "Well, it allows the partner to fight along with their partner." TK explains with a shrug and he just nods, handing the picture back to TK.

"So, when do you plan to share your story?" He asks and TK replies, "Later, like when we have the time to exchange such epic tales."

"Sounds good." He agrees, he's already looking forward to hearing more about his double and his sister's double.

Loop 4

TK Wakes in the middle of the cave where Kari and himself retrieve their Digi-Eggs of Hope and Light. Rather close to the beginning of our adventures. He muses to himself, which gives him plenty of time to do a number of things concerning movies, tv series, and getting a number of manga published to go along with those series. Wonder if Takato or Thomas have any games they know are hits and willing to send them here? He wonders as he acts out the 'scene'.

As he goes for the Digi-Egg of Hope, Kari says, "I guess you're more nervous then I thought if your reaching for the one with the Crest of Hope on it."

He blushes a bit and moves a step to stand before the Digi-Egg of Light. "I guess I am. I mean, I don't want another partner..." He confesses and Kari smiles a bit in understanding.

Well, this is different. I wonder what kind of Digimon Patamon will become using the Digi-Egg of Light? TK wonders as he reaches out and grasps the white Digi-Egg sporting the Crest of Light.

As they hold their 'respective' Digi-Eggs in the air, he does note that green light is coming from the spot where he grabbed the Digi-Egg of Light while pink from the Digi-Egg of Hope. Soon enough they Digi-Armor Energize and Patamon becomes a... land bound fish sporting boxing gloves. "That's... unexpected." And kind of familiar actually... He thinks before turning to look over at what Gatomon became.

Gatomon became a goat like Digimon named Oryxmon. "Well, that's more useful then a fish on land." He admits and the others agree, Patamon returns to being Patamon, he sighs.

"I'm sure we'll be fighting around water... eventually." Kari says to comfort him and he nods. "Yea, I guess so." He says as Patamon comes to rest in his arms.

"Let's go Oryxmon! Coming Cody?" Kari says as she heads out after a minor quake, it means that the others out side could use some help. "You guys go on, I think Patamon and I need some time alone for the moment."

"Right, see you soon TK!" With that, the other three leave.

"That seemed too familiar for my liking, TK." Patamon states and he hums in agreement. "I'm reminded of Joe for some reason... Might have been something from when our earlier Loops that we stop from happening." He muses and his partner nods.

"So... what are we going to do about this? I mean, we can't be productive members of the team if I'm a fish out of water." Patamon comments and he hums as he thinks on this. "Well, there's always that Robin Hood plan... We'd have to do something to your Pegasusmon form to make it... not recognized as Flying Hope. Turn the gold into ivory, alter the basic coat along as with hiding the Crest of Hope..."

Patamon hums and quickly moves to stand a few feet, within seconds, Pegasusmon stands before him. Taking his altered Digivice, he holds it out and after a few attempts at altering, which it resists for about a minute. The coat color goes a ghostly silvery blue, the helmet plus chest piece are very different not only becoming ivory but not as sharp while the Crest on the chest piece is gone, and the armor leggings are much shorter, made out of ivory, and lacking in gems and finally, the belly is a dark grey. "I even feel different. I better not have been transformed into a Virus TK..." He winces a bit.

"Well, it's a disguise and to be fair, I'm not sure if the changes are only in appearance... We'll figure out later how to make the changes only to the appearance, leaving the core Data alone." He assures his partner before assuming an older, darker look that sports a face mask to cover his lower face and a hood to cover his shockingly white hair, his eyes are likely a bright purple as he was going for shocking after all. He climbs on and within seconds, they walk through a dark shadow and appear outside under an overhang.

Within seconds they are flying over the battle, surprisingly enough, it seems Oryxmon is doing rather well, having already shattered a Dark Ring on one of Tyrannomon. They watch the battle as another Dark Ring is destroyed. Then, suddenly, a swarm of Dark Ring appear and once more, the freed Tyrannomon are re-enslaved and the fight continues. Each Dark Ring they destroy, another replaces it and it's taking its toll upon the Tyrannomon. "Guess we best reveal ourselves." He says to his partner and with a snort, his partner does a nose dive.

His best friend roars in a very animistic way and within seconds, they've zipped about the battle field, destroying all visible Dark Rings. They rise into the air quickly and vanish into the shadows, returning to the cave. Within seconds, he comes running out with Patamon.

"Sorry but some stones blocked the entrance. What did we miss?" He asks, he spoke the truth, although he did use his Digivice to clear it.

"Some other guy appeared and destroyed all the Dark Rings is what happened!" Yolei shouts. "They vanishes over there." She gestures towards the spot they had vanished in their disguises.

They spend a good twenty minutes searching for a sign of the odd pair but nothing turns up. In the end, with evening pressing in and they needing to return home, they leave, although not without Davis rubbing it in that his Armor Digivolution not helping them in their fight with the Tyrannomon only to be told that it's not his fault concerning what Patamon Digivolved into. He smiles his thanks to the others for their encouragement.

Upon returning home, he summons out a laptop that wouldn't see the market until a few years. He checks his messages, finding a few of them concerning an upcoming gaming event for all of them, including Taichi. He answers them before checking to see if Takato's online. He leaves the laptop alone as he heads to get something to eat, upon returning, he fines that Takato's on but busy.

He sends him a message asking if he knew of an incident concerning him ever using the Digi-Egg of Light. As he does some other stuff using the computer, he gets a beep and opens the link to video chat with Takato. "What do you mean? Surely you can remember what happened and how Joe accidently swapped your D-terminals." His friend and fellow Anchor says to him.

"Hmm, that does sound familiar but I get the feeling I've been keeping the whole event from happening so we haven't experienced it since our early Loops." He admits to the boy who could pass as a relative of Kari's due to them having the same hazel red eyes. "Reason I'm asking is that I'm currently the Digidestine of Light, Kari and I just picked up our Digi-Eggs."

"Really? You and Kari switched Crests? I guess this is the first time it's happened huh?" Takato asks and he nods. "So, what have you guys got planned to help in the fights? I mean, there haven't been many water battles which means you don't have much use of having Patamon become Manbomon." His friend in another dimension adds.

"Well, I used the one I have in storage to have Patamon become Pegasusmon, then I used my Digivice to alter him... It was rather creepy and Patamon mentioned feeling different." TK tells Takato.

"Well, I don't think I've ever tried to recolor any of Guilmon's evolutions, well, not using my Digivice any way. It could be that you did alter him, caused him to become another kind of Digimon. Think you can create a picture using your Digivice?" Takato asks and he does so, doing his best to recall the details of the ivory armor down to the color of the mane and tail.

As he waits, he checks on his coding and sipping a drink. "Well, congratulations on either creating a new Digimon or simply managing to alter his coloration. I'm not getting any profile on my Digivice so it might just be some kind of expression of Pegasusmon. Might want to use your computers to scan him in that alternate form just to be sure. Now if you excuse me, I've got put some finishing touches to a prank."

TK nods and soon enough, Takato logs off from their chat. He puts the finishing touches on his program before sending it out onto the internet. He then closes the blinds and curtains of his windows, checking to be sure his mom is absorbed into whatever she's doing. He even uses his Digivice to engulf the room in a ward. He then begins to sent a lot of the stuff in his room into his storage space before summoning the equipment he needs to run the kind of scans needed to check on that alteration.

Patamon is kind enough to move to the platform and without much fanfare Pegasusmon is standing there. He runs a few scans to be sure nothing is wrong before redoing what he did in the cave. Once his partner is in his recoloring and alternate armor, he begins the scans. Sure enough, there is some glitches and with aid of the equipment, he fixes the data until the only changes are appearance, the attacks just needed to be repaired as the change does seem to not allow for special attacks, although it does seem that it increases the physical capabilities but figures they'd need the special attacks in future fights.

"Well, I don't feel funny any more." T-Pegasusmon, short for Transformed Pegasusmon, states. "I got an idea, why don't you try some other alternate coloring just for practice? It should be safe enough with this equipment out."

"You sure you want to go through with it? We are pretty much done." He tells his partner.

"If you can alter yourself so easily, we might as well get use to doing it to me. I mean, Halloween and pranking." T-Pegasusmon argues and he gives his partner a slight smile.

"Ok, fine, as long as you want to, I guess we can go ahead and do this. How about you picture what colors and armor you want? It might cause less Data glitches and fragmenting." He says and for the next two hours, they not only continue with Pegasusmon alternate coloring, but alternate colors and looks for his partner's Rookie, Champion, and Ultimate forms. It surprised them both that HolyAngemon is a valid alternate form for MagnaAngemon, not that they ever figured out what became of the other wings when MagnaAngemon mode changes into HolyAngemon, could be that they combine to form such large set of wings or even into the robe.

Tired, they spent about twenty minutes putting away the equipment and putting the room back to the way it was. Once done, they head to bed.

Loop 5

As he blinks, he glances about, sure enough, he's Folamon and in a forest. "Guilmon...?" His head perks up and he flies over to find an eight year old Takato sitting up.

"Nope, no Guilmon around." He tells Takato. "I'm also going out on a limb and say, you're now the Digidestine of Hope or maybe Digidestine of Digital Hazard?"

"Wait, how would you... TK?" Takato's eyes widen while taking him in, clearly stunned at the fact that he's a Digimon.

"Folamon, the flying foal monster. Rookie level vaccine. Attacks are Hyper Senses, Cloud Vapor, and Silver Rain." Folamon states, he knows he resembles Pegasusmon, only younger looking and lacking the armor, plus sporting more blond appearance with the mane being orange. "My Champion form is Sinyoumon, never advanced beyond Champion." He tells Takato who only wordlessly mouths the name Sinyoumon.

"Takato! There you are, ah, I see you have one too." Matt comes charging over with his partner under his arm. "Are you ok? Anything ache?"

Takato's eyes seem to be bug out at how Matt is treating him along with calling him by his name. "I'm fine, Matt." Takato says, finally finding his voice and while Matt finally nods.

Soon enough they run into Tai, Izzy, and their respective In-Training Digimon. "This is going to be one strange Loop..." Takato murmurs and he shrugs, remarking softly for Takato to hear, "Just remember, you don't have modify cards and you've got an older brother."

"I take it Patamon and yourself have swapped places before?" Takato asks as they wait for Mimi to join them, along with a certain Champion Digimon chasing them. He hums in agreement and Takato then asks, "What does he look like when he's human?"

"Well, orange hair sports a clearly a family resemblance with Matt and I." He tells Takato before grabbing the back of Takato's shirt and turning tail seconds before a roar causes the others to see what made that sound. Once at the cliff, he puts Takato down before kneeling, Takato quickly climbs onto his back as he takes to the air, more then ready to help the others in firing off an attack at Kuwagamon when the others Digivolve into Rookies.

Their attacks cause Kuwagamon to fall down, for about a minute. Then Kuwagamon gets up and causes the cliff to fall, not that it bothered Takato or himself as he's already in the air. That doesn't mean he doesn't follow after the others as Gomamon summon those fish to form that raft. "I wonder how Guilmon and Patamon are getting along?" Takato wonders as they follow after the raft and he shrugs as he flies after the rest of the group.

"Well, they've gotten along before without either of us, I don't see how now will be any different." Folamon informs his current partner and fellow Anchor.

- - T - -

"Where's Takatomon?" Guilmon asks the preteen Patamon as they head to the bakery. Shoya's had a rather interesting two days, he pretty much had expected Guilmon to be with him from day one but found out otherwise.

"Well, it could be that he's with TK, I mean, I'm here and he's not." Shoya tells Guilmon, it's not the first time they've been on their own, only difference is that this time, he's human and currently the other Rookie's partner. "Since I have Takato's Digivice, we can contact them tonight and confirm it." He adds and that cheers Guilmon up.

"I wonder if Takatomon really is a Takatomon!" Guilmon chimes and he smiles, shrugging, although out of the two humans, he knows TK is capable of becoming a Digimon so chances are, Folamon is partners with Takato instead of the other way around.

To Be Continued . . .

Digimon Loops: TK 6

I don't own Digimon!

Loop 1

TK yawns mightily as he gets up, walking out of the tent. An gray Eevee he named Shade follows him out, the Everstone collar's tags clicking as Shade stops to scratch around the head. Finding a nice spot, he relieves himself as he looks up at the half moon and seconds later, at the stars. As he finishes, he turns around and smiles at Shade, taking a few steps, he bends down and scratches behind Shade's left ear. "Sorry for waking you, Shade. Let's get back to the tent."

Shade yawns and stands up, the Eevee turns around and leads the way back to the campsite. He pauses to counts the other tents, it's an odd to be with the others in a Pokemon Loop, particularly interesting to see their partners as humans with their own names. Zeromaru's official name Aoki 'Zero' Yagami, older brother of Taichi and Hikari, although Hikari isn't a Looper although she does recall being a close childhood friend of Shoya and himself. Likely due to his being a Champion at the beginning of their adventures. He muses privately as he looks towards the shared tent of Takato and Jiro Matsuki.

The tent after the Matsuki brother is Shoya's tent, Zoe's tent, Thomas' tent, and Thomas' younger brother officially named Cale Norstein. He notes that Thomas' and Cale's canine Pokemon, Thomas' is a Houndoom named Grace and Cale's Growlithe name Stripes looking in their direction. With a whiff of his scent and Shade's, the pair of canine Pokemon's heads drop down upon their forepaws, already to go back to sleep.

He enters his tent and crawls over into his sleeping bag. As he zips it up, Shade comes to rest near his feet. Giving the Shiny Eevee a smile, he rests his head down upon the pillow. As he lies on his back, he reflects upon the three years they've spent traveling, earning Gym Badges, entering tournaments, and generally enjoying not having to save two worlds. It's not unlike a vacation, I mean, how many worlds let ten year olds go out and explore the world without a parent? He muses sleepily as he shift slightly and begins to drift off once more.

- - T - -

:TK-sama! Time to get up!: Shade chimes as he nuzzles his trainer's cheek. He woke upon hearing Aoki getting up to begin cooking breakfast, he stuck his head out of the tent and found Aoki releasing Flicker the Litwick, having her re-start the fire. Grace and Stripes barked their greetings to Flicker before turning around to wake their trainers.

TK grumbles and turns his face away. He cocks his head to the side and then tugs on his ear, that wakes TK-sama up. :Morning!: He growls softly, his tail wagging behind him.

"Good morning to you, too, Shade." TK greets him after yawning and sitting up. TK pats him on the head and with that, he darts out of the tent, spying Hikari's Ninetails named Lorna sitting before Hikari's tent as a guard.

:Morning Lorna.: He says shyly to the much more evolved Pokemon. Lorna nods, replying to his greeting, :And to you, Shade:

: Big Brother!: A brown blur comes out of Shoya's tent and tackles him. Young Voss, hatched just last month, believes him to be a sibling and he never really corrected the hatchling and to be fair, he kind of liked the title.

:Hello Voss, had a good sleep?: Shade asks the normal colored Eevee. :Yip!: Chimes Voss, then adds, :Shoya-kun let me sleep on his chest!:

He licks Voss' nose and the young Eevee gets up, he moves to lick Voss' face and Voss pulls away as he moves to do his ears. :Not bath time, Shade-nii-chan!:

Shade gets up, chuckling as Voss darts over to welcome TK as his trainer gets out of the tent. "Voss! It's good to see you too." TK says to the hyperactive Eevee.

Soon enough, the humans are all up and out of their respective tents. After the humans ate, they release those Pokemon still in their PokeBalls and soon enough, they get their breakfast as Jiro and Takato wash the dirty dishes while Shoya and TK fed their monsters. As everyone finishes, the larger monsters are once more in their respective PokeBalls, which means besides him, Victoria the Lucario and Angus the Croagunk.

Before they split up, the humans pick some point on a map to meet up in a few days' time. Takato and Jiro are the first to head off from the group, fairly quickly they all did, even Zero departs from his siblings, Taichi and Hikari, which also means that Hikari does the same. He says good-bye to Voss and to Lorna as Shoya leaves.

:And there goes your, little brother.: Victoria teases him and Shade sends the Lucario a slight glare. :And your... girlfriend!: He blushes at that, stuttering, :Lorna isn't my girlfriend.:

:Not for a lack of wishing.: Victoria states, walking pass as he had slowed his pace. With a shake of his head, he picks up his pace and does his best to keep pace with TK while the two taller monsters stride about a foot ahead of them.

Loop 2

"Oh that can't be good..." TK murmurs as he Awaken to him staring up at the full moon, it's misty, and as he glances about, he finds standing stones. His cloths appear to be old fashion sort. Not in Japan am I? He wonders to himself.

Suddenly, he turns and something huge plus grey lands on him, biting him near his neck. Panicking, he causes his Digivice to light up and within seconds, the monster is tossed towards a stone. As he touches the bite wound, he gets a good idea of what attacked him. Light from his Digivice keeps the man-beast at the stone, he slowly gets up as the locals come into view, their guns pointing at him first before gasping and pointing them at the man-beast.

"By God, he's got wings!" A horse man exclaims upon looking at him, he glances over his shoulder to find rays of light forming a pair of wings behind him. Just my luck... He thinks with a slight frown as he feels the spot where his hand is knit up.

Pulling his hand away, he finds some blood on his hand as gun shots echo as said gunmen fire at the man-beast, who only growls and snarls as the bullets enter into him. The light remains, holding the cursed beast to the stone, while the glow around him fades. "Are you alright, Mr Talbot?"

"I believe so, gentlemen. I guess we wait until dawn to learn the identity of the cursed one?" He inquires, nodding towards the man-beast.

The others glance at each other and then back at the cursed man, the werewolf. "If the blessing of the Good Lord holds, then that does seem sensible." Many of the men were already in the process of reloading their rifles.

"I guess it wasn't the bear." One of the grizzled men remarks as people come along with strong drink. A number of children soberly studies the wolfman before their mother/fathers/uncles/aunts escort them back to the village or camp. An old woman comes to check on him, asking softly, "Were you bitten?"

"Yea, but I doubt I'll end up like him." He says softly. She gives him a look but he smiles slightly, he doubts his Digivice would allow him to wind up as a mindless killing beast.

To be fair, this is the first time I've dealt with this sort of thing, well, outside of the Buffy the Vampire Slayer world. I wonder if Taichi's experienced something like this? He wonders as the old woman, Maleva, used some cloth to wipe the blood away from his now healed bite wound.

He doesn't react much to the pressure of Maleva's fingers to said area. "There isn't any bruising." She finally states and he nods, not surprised.

A mug of something warm is handed to him and he drinks it, it's rather bitter but then, he's fairly sure that it's beer or something similar. After all, it's odd to be an adult and expected to drink said kind of drinks. And other activities. He muses to himself as he glances towards the werewolf.

As time marched on, some of the men fell asleep while other come and go, likely just wanting to get away from the monster. Dawn finally arrives and those awake, poked and prodded those that fell asleep. Before their eyes, they witnessed the fur falling out, the claws shrink to become nails, sharp fangs turn into normal teeth, and the muscles relax. Gasps ring out as the light fades and they realize who is the monster in their mist.

"Sir Talbot!" He gets some pitying looks as they make some connection between the elderly man and the events that let to him being in the area. As his 'father' wakes someone fires their rifle, within seconds more of them go off, killing the man who just minutes ago had been a man crossed with a beast. Soon the gun smoke clears and they can all see the result of the gun shots.

Then, one of the men turn to look at him. They shift their weight as a few begin to clean their rifles. "He was bitten, right?"

"Ye weren't around! The Good Lord protected him! Even healed that bite wound!"

"Wings of Light were coming out of his back. The Lord is merciful."

Around and around the conversation goes, a number of the men wished to end his life while those who were around to witness the Lord's Blessing defended him. End the end, they decided that come the next full moon, he'll be placed in a cell and if he transforms, well, they'd know whether or not the Lord Blessed him. And so, his horse is returned to him and his so call father's body is placed on a wagon. He is lead back to the manor with a number of men dispersing as they go through the local village.

An elderly man, clearly Sir Talbot's friend and servant look grimly at the wagon. The woman, who wasn't anyone he recognized looks a bit happy to see him well, although she seems disturbed by the wagon. As he stops the horse, he says to the pair, "My father is dead. Many men lost their lives last night and when it was revealed what he was..."

The man nods in understanding, he gets down off the horse and the woman, a lady of a noble house more then likely, gives him a hug. "I know you weren't very close to your father, but I will miss him." She whispers to him before pulling away.

"Did anyone... get bitten?" The breaded elderly man inquires and some of the men glance at him, uneasily. "I see."

"Come next moon, I'll be entering into a heavy secure cell. If I transform, I will likely share my father's fate." He states simply and the man seems sadden by this while the lady seems puzzled.

"Surely you are joking..." She says and he looks her in the eyes, stating simply, "We managed to capture a wild thing and come dawn, we watched its fur fall out, vanishing as it did so, talon like claws become simple finger nails, and the face relax into that of a man's. The Good Lord sent his Blessing, allowing us to keep the beast pinned to a stone until dawn. It may be hard to believe but we saw what we saw, my Lady."

- - T - -

They really tried to make it as secure as possible, didn't they? He muses as he approaches the cell. "The bars are of silver, the priest blessed them." One of his escorts explains, he nods in understanding but doubted that them being of silver would really stop a werewolf.

What reading he did, which turned out to be very little information upon the subject, and the conversation with Maleva before the gypsies left seems to imply that the silver needed to be in his heart to be effective. Not that he thought he'd transform, he had already done so a week after the incident and found it rather easy to control the instincts of the new body. Dark golden fur covering him from head to paws, a huge canine head, strongly built body, a preference for being on all fours, and a slightly bushy tail. Transformed into said state seemingly added an extra four feet but that could be explained viva lengthening of limbs and the up right ears.

The hinges need to be oiled as they squeak as the door opens and then thumps closes. They lock the door and soon enough, they pull back from the cell. He stands around in the center of the cell, waiting for the moon to rise. The sky darkens and after a while, the full moon slowly reaches its post.

After a while, he grows tired and sits down upon the ground. In time, he lies onto the ground and dozes off. He wakes to the sound of the door opens. "I guess the Good Lord has indeed blessed you, Mr Talbot. Yer free to go." One of the townsfolk says as he sits up, stiffing a yawn. He nods as he gets to his feet, walking out of the building, he finds his horse waiting for him along with his dead father's servant.

As they ride home, he inquires to the elderly Muslim, "So, have you decided whether you wish to remain here or return to your homeland?"

"I believe I shall, you do plan to sell the estate and the lands I believe." To which he nods, as he plans to leave Britain behind, heading to America, buy a huge trace of land and just enjoy a minor vacation. He'll be sure to record his condition, taking samples to sent to Thomas, who's been studying various sciences.

Soon he heads to his room, and falls asleep once he gets out of his dirty cloths.

Loop 3

The gun is finally empty, not that it seemed to cause pause from the shambling corpses. A few thuds ring out, it seems that some of the animated bodies trip over their own fallen. Then, suddenly, meaty slashes echo and he looks up to find Shirou moving silently among the herd of zombies, beheading them quickly and effectively.

"You alright, TK?" Shirou Emiya, one of the fellow anchors of this Loop, asks him.

"Yea, I'm just a bit stunned that at how many rounds I managed to get off." He tells the Looping Magus. "I still would give my right arm for that plasma gun in my storage space." He adds as he dusts off his leather pants, made out of cow leather.

"You aren't the only one aching for modern convinces, or should we call them future convinces?" Shirou muses as he moves among the bodies, marking each fleshy limb with a rune.

"Whatever works." He says as he comes out from the building he had taken shelter in. He would have headed to the second level if the stairs hadn't been sporting magical traps, it's bad enough that just holding a hand over the first step passively activated part of the trap's function. Reason why he was even exploring the town has to do with looking for anything useful for the group's mission of killing Raven.

"Weird West indeed." The nineteen year old, blond anchor curses as he watches as Shirou finishes up cleaning the area of dead bodies and parts. The fire is mystical in nature, leaving no smoke at all.

"Indeed." Shirou agrees, coming over to where he's standing.

"I mostly just found them stored away in the buildings. They didn't start coming out until I tripped the mystical trap that's on the stairs." He reports to the Magus Killer. "Just having my hand over the first step stirred these guys into action."

Shirou's eyes hardened and marches through the doorway. He falls into step behind Shirou, it wasn't long before they stand at the bottom of the stairs. It didn't take long for Shirou to cause the trap to glow and he watches as Shirou goes to work in dismantling the array. Shirou heads up the stairs and he stays down on the main level, doubting he'd want to see what's up there.

After a few minutes, Shirou comes down, saying in a tense tone, "The cellar."

He gives a sharp nod and they head into the back, it takes them a few minutes to find the entrance and he summons a ball of light. With Shirou in the lead, they walk down the stone steps. He notices a smell that grows stronger. He didn't know what they found as it didn't look as gothic as he expects it to be, but then, to him, it just looks like a table with a pyramid of scrolls upon it.

Beyond the table and the scrolls, there were barrels and looking up, he shivers slightly at the sight of animal skulls strung up about the ceiling. There seems to be runes upon the skulls, not that he can see them clearly, only that they glow. Suddenly, a bunch of arrows fly up and destroy the skulls. It takes a few rounds but Shirou gets them all and he glances towards his fellow anchor, watching the bow disappear.

Shirou walks over to the table and begins to quick read the top scroll. Soon Shirou reads each scroll and then, he destroys them. "Just a record of what the warlock did here." Shirou states.

"Let's go get the others, we're going to burn this whole town just to make sure we got everything." Shirou says, already marching pass him, heading up the stairs.

He merely nods, rather glad that Patamon wasn't around for this loop.

Loop 4a

TK shares a look with his... 'cousin' who's name is Shawn, but then, his current name is Terry as he had checked his wallet. "So... you two are also Loopers?" Asks Gwen while Ben just studies them.

All the while InuYasha, currently named Ivan, seems to be freaking out over the lack of his demonic powers. Yes, InuYasha as in the half-demon from a rather famous Manga and Anime. "Yea... are either of you familiar with this universe?" He asks.

"Nope, but I likely involves aliens." Ben speaks for the first time. "It always involves aliens." Ben remarks with a sigh while Gwen gives Ben a look of disappointment.

"So... where are you guys normally from?" Gwen asks and he shrugs when Shawn shoots him a questioning look. "Well, I'm usually at a camp site in Japan and eight years old. Shawn is usually not human and in the Digital World. As for 'Ash', I'm fairly sure that he Wake to find himself pinned to a tree and a teenage school girl clinging to him."

"How do you know that?!" Ash demands, suddenly in his face.

"Well, for one, you have complained that it wasn't a new moon and your introduction as InuYasha. There's a popular Manga that got made into an Anime series by the name of the male main character, who's a half-dog demon." Shawn pipes in, even Ben's expression shows how interested he is in that fact.

"So I'm famous from your world, huh?" Ash states with a rather prideful look upon his face.

"Well yea." He agrees.

"So wait, you're some half-demon," Ben asks, pointing to Ash first, "and you are some kind of Digital Entity," Ben points to Shawn before turning to look at Terry, "and you are what to him?"

"Shawn is usually something call a Digimon, short for Digital Monster. Species name is Patamon, though I guess if you want a name, Shoya. I'm his human friend and partner, I help him as Patamon assume higher forms." He explains as he holds up his Digivice. "My name is usually Takeru, or TK and I'm typically the Digidestine of Hope."

"And that's your status symbol?" Ash asks and he sighs. Within seconds, a laptop is resting upon the floor. "A little modification to the code and I can use it to store things. It also allows me harness the power that is the reason why I was chosen in the first place."

"Did it take you a few to get it right like it did for Gwen to create her storage space?" Ben asks as he sends the laptop back into his storage space.

Before anyone could answer, a voice over the intercom of the mall tells them that the mall is closed and for them to vacate the entrances. With a lazy shrug and a fixed scowl upon a certain grumpy Anchor, they began to walk away from the mall. "Well, no, I worked with a friend of mine on making modifications, it worked out rather well." And then there's that code to alter my appearance, but I did that on my own. The rest of the powers didn't even need me to enter any kind of code. He thinks to himself.

"So, what about Ben and yourself? I mean, other then aliens, what's your universe like?" Shawn asks Gwen as they walk pass this construction site, only for some one to sigh, Ben it turned out, and says, "Oh look. What are those lights up there?"

It was said in such a flat tone that everyone stopped and looked at Ben for a few seconds before looking up at the sky. Sure enough, there's something coming down from the sky, heading for... the construction site they are just walking pass. "I guess we better go greet the pilot and hear what they have to say." Gwen sighs and they all follow her into the site.

Loop 5

"I can't believe you... you... you sold me, again!" TK shouts at Zoe, they were walking out to the spot where the Spring Summoning is going to be held. "It took me three days, Zoe, THREE, to break that magic nulling collar and then two days for my reserves to be full enough for me to use magic to get off that ship!"

"I don't see why you are upset, you were going to be marrying a queen and she, according to that diplomat, has a fine taste in women. It's not like you'd have much to do, living in the lap of luxury with so many beautiful women, you could finally get the practice you need in the matters of the bedroom." Zoe informs him in an off handed matter, causing him to just give her his best glare, which did seem to cause a minor flinch but nothing more.

"I am so going to get you back for all of this. You won't know when or the how, but it will happen." He informs Zoe in a deadly serious voice. With that, he focuses on their surroundings. He didn't have a single doubt about who he'll be summoning, the question is, what form will Patamon show up in?

Soon enough, they each take their turn at summoning their familiar with him summoning Patamon in the form of a Pegasusmon. A quick kiss sealed the pact, with him whispering to Pegasusmon, "Not One Word."

"Wouldn't dream of it." Pegasusmon whispers back under the disguise of nudging him in the shoulder and he gives his partner a blank look. He snorts and turns to watch the last few summons.

Zoe's turn is the second last, just before a certain Void Mage who isn't an anchor, which he is very thankful for, and can't help but wonder just who she'll summon, her Human Spirit or her Beast Spirit. As Zoe takes her place and does the spell, he's focus upon the spot where the familiar will appear. Smoke begins to appear and then, with a pop, smoke explodes and as it clears, he drops his jaw as she managed to summon a Pixie from Monster Rancher. The sub-breed called Janne, which is a cross between a Pixie and a Durahan.

"Is that an Angel?" "Looks like one, doesn't she?" "Look at that armor..." "... kiss, kiss, kiss, kiss..." "... on the lips! That would be so sweet!" "... dreams to night!"

"So, I'm Zoe, student of this fine academy, and who might you be?" Zoe asks politely while Pegasusmon murmurs soft curses for about a moment before realizing that he isn't a rare Pixie type so the Janne won't be bugging him. His partners murmurs turn to prayer as the Janne answers Zoe, her summoner.

"I am Benita, member of the Sky Wardens." The now named Benita states in Japanese, not that any of their classmates know the language. "How did I come to be here? And for what purpose have I been... summoned?"

He didn't like the smile that is slowly creeping upon Zoe's face. He quickly climbs upon Pegasusmon's back and says, "Fly West! Go, go, go!"

Soon enough, Benita is flying after them, demanding a duel to the death over Zoe's stolen virtue. I don't care what it takes, Zoe will pay!

He thinks as he clings to Pegasusmon's mane for dear life as his partner does some evasive maneuvers to avoid Benita's attacks.

Loop 4b

He studies the crow outside of his window with a slight grin. The crow seems fine and as he opens the window, the black bird flares its wings and caws at him. The crow tries to flap its wings but it's stuck fast in the magical glue that keeps the bird firmly stuck in place along with the bait bowl that's been emptied. As he manages to get the beak, he is already concentrating upon the crow, it relaxes and he quickly plucks the crow from the glue and tosses it into the air.

Within a second, it has recovered and flying away. With the crow gone, 'Terry' begins to clean up the spot, the glue already vanishing now that the crow is gone. Now a crow added to the list. It's still a small list but it's growing. He thinks as he leaves his room, making sure the window is secured shut.

His first acquired animal had been a stray male dog, a husky-border collie mix during his tour of an animal shelters. His second was a cat, also during that visit of an animal shelter, a grey tabby who had been surrendered to the shelter and neutered, not that it affected the morph. Not long afterwards, they used the morphs they acquired to sneak into the local zoo, him using his cat morph while the others used the forms of dog, rat, or ferret to sneak in.

As he places the bowl into the sink, he runs the hot water for a few seconds until it was hot before filling the bowl with said hot water. "Three months already? My, my, how time flies..." He murmurs to himself as he finishes with filling up the bowl with water, he turns it off once he gives his hands a quick through the water, turning the cool water on a bit so it wasn't that hot.

Unsurprisingly, Ash went straight to the power house animals which are namely bears, wolverine, badger, lion, tiger, hyena, and, after much convincing, a dophin. Gwen's collection of animals involved a number of venomous beasties along with a bat, hyena, rhino, and a dolphin. Ben also did those that Ash did but he also did three venomous snakes, bat, monkey, gorilla, elephant, and a scorpion. Shawn's collection of animals were a tiger, black bear, leopard, great horned owl, elephant, monkey, otter, mountain ram, bat, badger, and dolphin.

Soon enough, the frying pan is warm enough that be takes the glass with the egg yokes within it and pours it into the pan. He places the now empty glass into the sink and begin scrambling the eggs as they begin to cook. The bowl waits near to be filled along with what he likes to add to his scrambled eggs. He glances up as his mom comes into the kitchen from the front, at a glance he could tell that she hadn't had a good meal in the last twenty-four hours given the way she is slowly making her way to the fridge, likely for one of her store bought shakes in a can.

Once she got one, she is already gulping it down. "Have a good day at school, sweetie." She tells him before she heads out of the kitchen, likely up to her bedroom. He sighs, it seems that she forgot that yesterday was a Friday and that today, Saturday.

He didn't like her like this, but at least she wasn't a Human-Controller, just a writer, of all the jobs she could have ended up with for a loop. Typically, she works the same job she usually has when they were in their home loop. This loop proved to be a rather interesting one in more way then just the appearance of those other anchors from other universes or the alien invasion that's going on, although it's an interesting weapon they have to fight said alien invasion to begin with.

Lion, wolverine, rhino, cheeta, and dolphin from the zoo, picked up that mustang from that neighboring ranch, animals I've trapped and then released beyond that crow have been a fox, coyote, and hare. Used that tranquilize gun to get a white tail deer stag, bobcat, wolf, and beaver. Then I found that wolf spider, managed not to squish it when I found it, freaky experience being one, not sure why Gwen acquired all those bugs. Fifteen in total for me, not sure what the others have picked up on their own time. Even Shawn's been pretty quiet about his list of animals. He reviews as he turns off the stove before picking up the pan, slowly and carefully pushing the eggs into the bowl.

Soon enough, his breakfast is ready for him to eat it. He is slowly getting use to not having to make enough for both Patamon and himself, although he'll likely return to the habit when they return home. Sitting at the table, he glances to an empty seat, he can't help but feel lonely at times, particularly in the morning and when Patamon possesses his own family outside of he himself. Majority of the time, they're twins, sharing the same parents and older brother.

Thankfully, either Matt or his father seem to exist here, leaving it mostly his mom and himself. Shawn's father is his mom's brother for this loop, not that they get together much as a family. As he muses, he finishes his breakfast, but doesn't feel like getting up right away.

Pushing his dishes and glass off to the side, he summons a laptop and the morph granting cube that's connected to the computer. He checks the reading and copying program going on, blinking in surprise, it seems that it finished about two months ago. With a thoughtful hum, he summons an external hard drive and copies the whole alien device information onto it. Once that's done, he unplugs it and getting up, he finds some tape and a marker, writing Morphing Cube on the tape, he puts it on the hard drive. No longer needing it, it returns to his space pocket.

He disconnects the Morphing Cube but leaves it out. He'll phone Gwen to come and take it, as per their agreement when they returned to search for the cube. Putting the side panel back on, he then begins typing away at the computer, bringing up a decryption program and sets it to work upon the alien information, hopefully, at some point in the future, he'd be able to fix the program to allow for longer period of time in a morph. With the program running and the battery still fine, he banishes the computer and cable back to his storage space.

Taking a few seconds to clear away his dishes, he gets onto the phone and dials Gwen's number. The reason why he has it? They're pretending to date and thus it wouldn't be unusual about the sudden phone calls between them.

The phone rings a few more times before Gwen picks up and he gives her the coded phrase that informed her that the Morphing Cube is ready for her to come and take it.

Loop 6

Well, at least there doesn't seem to be any Pixies around here to bother Shoya... TK thinks as he slaps a bug that landed upon his cheek, walking through the swamp while his best friend and partner flies above. They woke up upon a beach with bits and pieces of wood from a ship. Neither of them recalls being on a ship... as of yet. It might come to them in dreams over the course of the next few months.

They didn't salvage much from the wreck, so he's more then thankful for the storage space he created within his Digivice. He's got plenty of sets of cloths within that space in his current size and he did wonder if he might yet need to get Izzy's and maybe Ken's help with creating a portable washer and drier for his cloths instead of relying upon waking in a place where laundromats are common. He slaps a spot on his left hand as he follows the solid land that winds through this portion of the swamp.

TK's pretty sure that Shoya is either humming or whistling a jolly tune, likely giddy about the fact that he's not getting mobbed by a large number of typically female monsters. Can't blame him after what Zoe arranged for me during our last encounter in Familiar of Zero Loop. He can't help but shutter a bit and make a warding gesture to banish those memories.

With a shake of his head and slaps his neck, killing the bug trying to drink from him. He does his best to ignore the smell as he gets worse. Something dark and shadowy slowly pops up on his horizon, as he heads there, he finds a spring at the foot of this mouth of a cave. Wrinkling his nose, he can't help but make a face as he studies the cave. After a few minutes, he believes he makes out some kind of statue, surviving many attacks viva the wind and the rain.

"Shoya! I've found a cave for us to explore." He calls out upon pressing a button on his ear piece.

"Roger, TK, coming down!" And within minutes, the trees rustle as Shoya comes down through the trees. He uses his left arm to cover his eyes, waiting for everything to settle down.

"Spooky looking, sure you want to explore it?" His partner asks as he summons a pair of flashlights. He hands one to the angel looking Pixie once his has been turned on.

"Might as well. Anything we find we can use later once we get back to civilization." He reasons as he begins to wade through the spring, heading into the cave. He is glad to find that within a few feet, the cave floor is dry and he notices seems within the walls, clearly making the cave a man-made structure. It's not the first time they come across some ancient abandoned building/city/underground building.

They found a few more decorations in the form of dull tiles arranged in patterns or in the form of beings or symbols, icons more likely. Then they ran into spots that clearly witnessed a fight or two. Thankfully, they haven't ran into a skeleton, just rubble or rusty weapons that were likely broke in use. They found cave-ins when the path diverges, even ruined stair cases, although they could likely get up to that level. They didn't see a reason to do so at this point of time, might as well explore where they can before venturing to areas the could be unstable.

They come to a large open space and all about the area are scraps of rusted metal along with Lost Disks. "A grave yard of monsters." Shoya murmurs, it's clear that the sight before them as they sweep the area with beams of light from their flashlights affected his partner, best friend, and fellow Anchor a heck of a lot more then it did him. That should be expected I guess... If it were littered with human bones... He does his best to dismiss that thought and the trail that it wishes to lead him down.

He slowly begins to walk through the gate way and a loud metal screech erupts. "Oh Hell no..." He swears as he looks down to the edge of the door way, it takes him a few minutes to find the laser trap line as things slowly begin to fall to the ground. It's clear that some kind of guardian, likely made out of something durable, is slowly waking.

"Too late to run for our lives, isn't it?" Shoya asks in a flat tone and he studies the hallway.

"No, I think we have a clear path out of here, see that up there? It's jamming the sliding door, keeping it from closing. The real question is, do we want it to destroy the whole ruin as it chases us?" He informs his friend.

"... Right." Shoya sighs and they prepare to face the guardian. Him summoning a plasma gun for himself and some vibrating sword for Shoya to use that Thomas made, all Thomas wanted in exchange for the sword had been two magical staffs that he created and a simply robe that's got a like three spells enchanted upon it, a repair spell, a cloaking spell, and an armor spell, all of which came that Familiar of Zero loop. The flashlights had been banished back to the storage space and with a bit of thought, an orb of light appear high in the air above them, giving them a very good view of the stone dragon lumbering towards them.

Loop 4c

:Who are you people?: Demands the Andalite surrounded by robotic creations sporting some kind of lazer cannons and four legs. :I'd like an answer now.: All four eyes narrow at them.

"Great, another trigger happy alien." Murmurs Ben, he sighs while Ash snaps at the young appearing Andalite.

"We're here to answer that message you sent out. F'eh, if this is how you welcome us then we should have just ignored like I said we should have."

:That doesn't explain where Prince Jake and the other Animorphs are.:

He blinks and replies before the others could do so, "Wait, your a local anchor for this universe? If that's so... then, well, the other native Loopers have likely taken our places in our universes." Or took the place of those who did at any rate. He mentally adds to himself.

:You guys are also, as Marco says, in the Groundhog Day mode?: The Andalite inquires, his tail relaxing a tad, well, that's how he judges it, not like he's familiar with the species after all. They all nod, well, except for Ash.

"Yea, we are all Loopers as Terry said. Ben and I are usually dealing with a larger array of aliens then what this universe offers." Gwen states.

"F'eh." Ash grunts, crossing his arms, not bothering to explain anything about where he came from. While Shawn pipes in, "Ash is usually a Half-Demon in Japan that's typically five hundred years in the past. His actual name is InuYasha."

"Shawn and I also come from Japan, although in a more modern setting. My real name is Takeru 'TK' Takaishi, Digidestine of Hope and Shawn, usually called Shoya when human, is my Digimon partner and best friend commonly called Patamon." Terry informs the Andalite whom's eyes widen.

:I have watched the show called Digimon and read a few volume of InuYasha in its original language.: The alien states as a stick eye looks at Ash and at himself. oes that mean you two also have fake names?:

The young Andalite looks towards Ben and Gwen, Ben piping in, "Well, our last names are different, but Ben and Gwen are our names. We're also cousins and our grandmother is an alien, which makes us quarter Anodite."

The Andalite takes a moment and he can't help but wonder if the alien is sighing, although the tail seems to become more... relaxed. :I see, well, we could likely continue this later. We kind of have incoming Yeerks.: Andalite states. :You may call me... Ax.:

Terry swears that the stalk eyes grinned but concludes that they should find a more... ground level place to continue their conversation.

Loop 7

"Joso!" TK cries out and lines made out of blue energy flare up, soon enough a cube is created upon the scroll. He groans at how the lines don't match up, his cube is just a cm larger then the design on the scroll's square.

"Well, that certainly looks better." His 'older' brother remarks. "At least you didn't cause the scroll to get launched at the ceiling like you did a few tries ago."

"Damn it, Shirou, can't we call it quits for today? I'm expected to leave at midnight to go patrol the school." Eight year old Takeru Sumimura asks. "I'd like to get some sleep before I leave."

It so didn't help that he didn't have his Digivice on him as he does this. He's sure that if he had it on him, he'd have done this perfectly each time he preformed this technique. Though he does have a point about it might be taken and put someplace I can't get at it...

"Well, given your accuracy is much better and you've got the shape down, I guess we can call it. But tomorrow afternoon, we'll resume." Shirou informs him in a firm tone and he nods.

After watching Shirou leave the dojo, he gets up and walks over to the scroll. He starts at the square before looking at the palm of his hand and back again. With a slight shake of his head, he rolls the scroll up and putting it away, he heads for the bathroom to have a quick shower before heading to his room. Soon he's done and he pauses as he turns to look at his current father, who's walking towards the kitchen, having returned from speaking with his publisher.

"Evening... dad." He says, it's rather hard not to say mom as he's use to living with his mom. "I think Shirou is in the kitchen."

"Thank you, Take-chan!" His current father says with a smile and ruffles his blond hair, heading for the kitchen. He smiles softly while a bit of sadness shines from his eyes, he's rather unused to the affection he's getting in the few hours that he's been Awake here in this universe.

He quickly arrives to his room and it's not long before he's yawning widely and deeply. He gets into his futon and within a few minutes of banishing his thoughts, falls asleep. His alarm will wake him at eleven for him to change into traditional Kekkashi attire and head for the school.

- - T - -

"I can't believe I'm a ghost dog!" Inuyasha growls as they head to the school. TK simply sighs, the usual half demon has been circling around that statement since they headed out. He's given up trying to get a word in edge wise although with their destination in sight, he won't be the only one to suffer from Inuyasha's ranting.

He gets onto school grounds, he slowly looks around, taking in the school and getting a feel for the area. Ignoring Inuyasha, he rams the butt of the staff into the ground and does some stretches. Man that staff got heavy! He thinks as he goes through the stretches.

As he finishes, he senses something join them in the school yard. He snatches the staff and glances expectantly at Inuyasha, who is growling while looking up at the roof. His gaze follows Inuyasha's own and he notices some kind of bird perched on the roof.

He brings up his right hand, his index and middle finger up while the rest of his fingers plus the thumb are curled inwards to the palm. "Joso!" He cries out with a quick upward motion of his right hand.

The tell tale glow of his blue kekkai forming appears and the bird Ayakaishi tries to fly out of the range of the kekkai but a green tinted kekkai snags the tail as his kekkai forms around the Ayakaishi, it crows and curses as he glances to his right and then to his left to find Rachel with her own ghost dog hovering near.

"Nice to meet you face to face, Rachel-chan!" TK says with a cheerful smile.

"And you, TK-chan." Rachel returns with a grin while Inuyasha is already in muzzle to muzzle with the other Ghost Dog.

"I can't believe You ended up here! Didn't I say I'd skin you, Laharl, when we meet again?" Inuyasha snarls while Laharl merely pulls back, head going up and begins to ooze with arrogance and sports a condescending tone, "I'd like to see you try! Ahahhahaha!"

He winces slightly at the laugh while Inuyasha snaps and bites down on Laharl's body. The pair fight as Rachel and himself watch, he frowns at Inuyasha's antics but then, he doesn't interfere as he doesn't under stand the history between the pair.

With a sigh he says, "Metse!"

Rachel activates her staff and the Ayakaishi's remains enter into the metal hop. "Well, this is going to be a fun loop, huh?" Rachel muses.

"Well, it'll certainly be lively." Is his reply as the pair of Ghost Dogs continue to cause a scene between biting each other to cursing each other.

To Be Continued . . .

Shadows that Dance: MLP:FiM

I don't own My Little Pony: Friendship Is Magic!

"Why am I the one to take this," Swift Growth points his right hoof towards the magical collar that's been in the family since it's creation, "instead of, I don't know, Well Traveled? Or Star Tracker?" The brown stallion with grass green mane and tail sporting a Cutie Mark of a brown acorn seed within the shape of a mighty green oak asks.

His mother, Metal Honing, a steel colored mare sporting copper colored mane plus tail with a Cutie Mark that is a grinding wheel, sighs and replies, "Your cousin Star Tracker is busy with a study group with Professor Galaxy Mapper for the weekend as for your older brother, he left with that trade caravan heading north."

Swift Growth's father, Fields Crown, a dull yellow stallion sporting dark brown mane and tail who is the proud owner of a Cutie Mark sporting three bundles of golden hay. His father adds in a solemn tone, "And you can do with a trip away from here given your break up with Jewels."

Swift's ears go droop and he looks down at the ground, scrapping his right hoof along the wooden floor of their house. He hasn't taken that particular break up very well, even though it's been two weeks, but then, they had been going out for two years. The mare will be leaving to try her luck in a larger community then Plowville, after all, the mare's special talent is that of a jewels smith. Swift still possesses cloak clasp that Jewels made for him for his last birthday.

"A change of scenery is what you need, son and, hopefully, by the time you get back, you might find that the hurt of the break up is a bit less." His mother says, moving over and placing a hoof onto his right shoulder. Swift looks up and over at his mother before looking towards his father.

With a sigh, he nods as he says, "I guess... Going to be leaving tomorrow morning?"

"That sounds fine. I'll even make your favorite!" His mother says with a bright smile as she lowers her hoof and Swift gives them a slight smile, although he still has his doubts about this trip.

Finally, I'm almost there! Swift Growth thinks to himself, the moon's light brightening up his path. The Mare in the Moon seemingly looking down upon the world this night. Not that it bothers him as it's been five days since he set out on this delivery. He honestly thought it would have taken longer but the Pegasus ponies seem to have scheduled lovely weather throughout the time he's been traveling.

The path leads into this forest that seems to act like a barrier between the sandy cove and the remains of old farmsteads that followed the dirt road. The upcoming cove has this small village, he hadn't learn the name of, resting under the shadow of this cliff. The village's primary trade goods are seaweed and pearls, both items the village folk harvest from various water farms. There had been a marble quarry but it must have run out or they'd still be selling it.

As Swift enters the forest proper, he begins to feel that he's being watched. After a few minutes, the young stallion's ears flicker around before flattening upon his head. Swift moves out of a trot to a walk as he slowly looks around. He thought he heard something flying overhead and as he looks up, he doesn't see anything, there isn't any clouds in the sky so he continues to have a clear sight of the moon.

Feeling rather jittery, Swift Growth lowers his gaze and with a quick glance to his left and then right, he picks up his pace, once more entering a trot. His ears continue to flicker around as he continues to feel as though someone is watching him. It's something that is beginning to think that he should try running down the path, hoping to out pace his watcher. He didn't like this feeling and with the shadows of the forest beginning to look a great deal more eerie then he has experienced before.

That's how they die, they run, they trip, and the monster is on them before they can recover... By Celestia this is beginning to look like start of a horror story. Swift thinks to himself, swallowing heavily and beginning to feel a bit of panic stirring itself up within him.

Swift does his best to keep his breathing deep and even, as he is beginning to feel the panic within lessen, a stick snaps under the weight of something, causing him to freeze. Swift does his best to control his breathing, refusing to give into panic and run headlong down the dirt road. He doesn't move, so focus on fighting the rising emotions that he only sees a shadow suddenly before him and yellow, feral eyes looking into his own, ocean colored eyes.

Then there wasn't any panic, only a desire to sleep, which Swift Growth followed through with.

As Swift returns to consciousness, he feels his whole body encased in dirt and he couldn't move ! There's no fighting the panic that engulfs him and he tries to buck, move from up and down, right to left. Somehow, his snout breaks free of the dirt and within seconds, he's moving his body up, breaking through the soil and he's roaring in fright and anger. Within seconds, he's flying in the air, his wings flapping.

Then Swift is once more in control of himself, his panic gone, vanishing like dew before the morning sun. As he looks around, he finds himself puzzled by something, something that's kind of at the edge of his mind. As he looks around, he notices a pair of shadows waiting for him below. It's then that something clicks and he freezes, his wings stop flapping and thus, he falls to the ground.

As he nears the ground, an instinct enacts itself and he lands on his hooves, having uses his wings to slow his descent to the ground so he can land like he has seen his cousin Star Tracker done. His wings fold to his sides and he studies the pair of ponies that are a few feet away. One of the ponies is a unicorn, a jet black mare sporting granite gray mane and tail looks on with a note of interest with her blood red eyes.

The other pony seems to be a Pegasus of bone white fur, dark purple mane plus tail, with feral yellow eyes. The wings of the Pegasus mare sport a clawed 'thumb' and the feathers of the wings seem rather tiny compared to the feathery wings he's seen upon other Pegasus. Swift also couldn't help but notice that this mare's ears seem a bit larger then they should be.

After a few minutes, Swift decides to look at his own wings, his eyes widen at the sight of his own body, as his coat is now as white as freshly fallen snow. His own wings mimic the wings of that white mare, the 'thumb' moves this way and that, just as he thinks of it. He fans out his left wing and is rather startled by the lack of feathers on the down side part, it reminds him of dragon or bat wings, with 'fingers' fanning out with webbing between them.

As he closes his left wing, his gaze turns to his bare flank and then his midnight black tail. It was the lack of his Cutie Mark that really unnerves him, Swift doesn't recall any stories about how to lose a Cutie mark. If I don't have one... What happened to ME ?! Why do I now have wings ? Why is my color... not what it was? His mind continues to cycle through with those thoughts.

Surprisingly, his emotions see... distant, he did feel panic, fear, uncertainty, curiosity, and thirsty. He blinks his eyes and looks up from the ground that he was gazing at as he was wrapped up in his questions. Swift looks towards the pair of mares and walks over until he's within, what he deems a comfortable distance. Neither mare seem overly hostile, the black mare seems to be faintly... amused while the white mare seems to be delighted by him.

"What happened to me?" Swift demands, channeling his mother as best as he could, including a minor glare.

"You were reborn as my Child." Answers the white mare, she's sporting a look of fondness. "At first, I just thought you were a meal, but then you didn't run ! You fought your fright and that made you interesting."

"Then, when I had you sleeping, I checked your bags. What a delightful item you had brought into our territory! And for Arcana Bolt to boot." The mare continues and Swift takes a step back at the mention of his Great Uncle. The mare smiles, he gets a good view of the teeth that are now like those of a predator.

He runs his tongue along his own teeth to find, they have been transformed into similar fangs. The white mare chuckles softly at his reaction. "Welcome to the family, Swift Dream. I am your Sire, Ruin Dreams and this is your older sister, Eternal Dream." Ruin Dreams tells him, he can't help but gap at the two of them.

"Now, why don't you two get to know each other? A nice warm meal for the two of your to bond over." Ruin Dreams says before turning her back on him and taking off into the air, leaving Eternal Dream with him.

"Come along, brother dear. Might as well get something in you before you Frenzy." Eternal Dream says as she trots pass him. "And trust me, you won't want to go through that ."

Swift look upon Eternal Dream's flank, finding it also bare. With a glance towards the direction Ruin Dreams has flown off into, he turns and follows Eternal Dream. His mind reeling from this whole experience, he rather hopes that this was all just a dream that he'll wake from. He might not know what he is but he sure as Celestia's sun know he's going to wish he'd just stayed within that hole in the ground.

As Eternal Dream leads him out of a cave, he looks up at the sky, there's a cloud in the sky and the moon isn't as full as the last time he's seen it. "How long was I out?" Swift asks as he trots behind Eternal Dream.

"It's been seven nights since your were drained and given our Sire's blood then put into the cursed soil." Is Eternal Dream's answer. "To be honest, that's a fairly short amount of time as the average tend to be three weeks but then, you were an Earth pony, so it was either you'd come out of the ground in four weeks time as a vengeful skeleton or within two weeks as one of the two types of Vampire ponies."

Swift swallows heavily, his eyes wide at the thought. "How many turn into skeletons?" He asks, his tone sports a bit of horror and dread at the answer.

Eternal Dream turns her head and replies, "One out of four become Vampires, the other three go that route. Then again, Earth ponies do have a rather strong connection with the earth compared to Unicorn or Pegasus ponies. It's why they all transform into either a Unicorn or a Pegasus pony before coming out of the soil and taking their place among the Clan's ranks."

"I see." Nope, not really, but then, he does feel rather disconnected to his surroundings. Which continues to make this rather surreal for him.

Eternal Dream doesn't comment, just returns to guiding them through the path that seems to lead into the forest. He stops to look off in the opposite direction and notices some distant light coming from that spot. Swift guesses that's where that village is located. He bites his lower lip, wondering if he could out run Eternal Dream to head in that direction, maybe find his Great Uncle and see if he couldn't reverse this... Vampire condition.

Suddenly, he's lifted off his hooves and is floating towards Eternal Dream, her crimson eyes staring into his own, unknown to him wine red eyes. "You go in that direction now, and you'll Frenzy. Then Arcana Bolt will show up and that will be the end of you." The mare tells him in a matter of fact tone.

"If I were like the others, I'd let you go do just that and see if you're lucky enough to leave the town in one piece but I am not. Relative or not, there's no known cure for being a Vampire beyond cutting the head off and its body turning into ashes." Eternal Dream states in a dead pan tone. "So just stick with me and you won't end up doing something you'd regret."

With that, Eternal Dream's magic lets him go and he opens his wings before he touches the ground. He hovers there, watching Eternal Dream resume trotting down the path. He turns to look at the town again, he so wants to ignore what has been told to him, a part of him wishes to fly towards the light, and yet... He looks towards Eternal Dream and flies after her, once he's close, he lands on the ground and trots after her.

He doesn't like the idea that it can't be reserved but at the same time... He doesn't know anything! He doesn't know what a Vampire is, the closest would be a kind of bat that drank the juices out of fruits, as they don't really grow fruit trees at the farm, the problem never came up so he never paid the finer details of that species of bat any mind.

Everything is just disjointed and nothing feels right! He's no longer an Earth pony stallion by the name of Swift Growth and he's not sure if he's really a Pegasus slash Vampire pony named Swift Dream either. Sure, at some point he'll likely feel more like Swift Dream but isn't right now! He's not even sure who to trust or if he really wants to continue with this existing as a Vampire. Maybe death by his Great Uncle would be for the best... and yet... that seems so... shallow and a cheat.

Then there's that thirst that seems to be growing since they left the cave. Swift discards his thoughts as best as he can and focuses on this rather solid feeling. It's there and it feels so much more real out of this whole experience. It became an anchor as they enter into the forest, the path ending a few feet back.

Within the forest, Swift's ears flickers about, he swears he hears a bunch of something beating. Some are like a tapping, tapping very quickly and lightly. Others are beating to different beats, some calm while others switch between the two. Others beat softly and at an even pace.

He walks towards the nearest even pace beating, as he cocks his head to one side then the other, he pin points the source. Holding his head near the ground at the spot, Swift leaps back a bit as a whole opens up. He glances to find Eternal Dream sporting a look of concentration, looking back, he finds two rabbits coming out of the hole.

He flinches back as terror seems to fill the eyes of the two rabbits, Swift also realizes, with a touch of dismay that he's been hearing the heart beats of the animals around him. As he looks towards Eternal Dream, he tries to hear her heart beat, only to find there isn't one. He touches his chest and finds he also didn't have a heart beat.

A rabbit is thrust before his muzzle and without a thought, he bites into the rabbit and by the time he realizes that his thirst is being satisfied, he finds himself unable to let go until there's nothing left to drink from the rabbit. As he opens his mouth, the bloodless body falls to the ground and he looks over to Eternal Dream. The drained body of her rabbit remains held in the air as the mare is looking satisfied.

"We drink blood?" Swift states, for once, the dullness of his emotions is keeping them from overwhelming his mind. "And I can hear the heart beats of the..."

Eternal Dream flickers her eyes as he speaks, saying, "And you are too young to be able to control the amount of blood you'll drink from any source. If you had gone to that town, somepony would have died as you wouldn't have stopped drinking until all of their blood was drained. In a few decades, you might be able to safely move around the village and take small amount of blood from various ponies without alerting the villagers to your presence."

"As for the hearing, yes, most Pegasus Vampire ponies possess super hearing, then there are others possess a keen nose for tracking beings whom's blood they've tasted." Eternal Dream explains. "Unicorn Vampire ponies possess tend to possess Far Sight or, the rare few, metamorphic abilities, like altering their forms like changing their hooves into paws sporting claws like cat's or growing spikes and scales about their bodies."

"So... You possess Far Sight?" Swift inquires curiously and Eternal Dream nods.

As they stand there in silence for a while, Swift listening to the heart beats of the creatures around him. He slowly begins to guess which heart beat likely belongs to which animal. His mind wonders, there's so many things he wants to ask and yet... He didn't know where to start!

As he looks towards Eternal Dream, Swift notices that her mind seems occupied. He looks around and then at his wings, which he spreads. He tenses his legs and leaps into the air, his wings flapping. He flies around the forest, doing his best not to hit the branches of trees, snapping the smaller branches or rattle leaves off of them. The noise scares off the number of animals and he climbs higher into the air, flying out of the trees tops.

He looks around as he hovers in the air. Having seen the tricks Star Tracker done, he wonders if he should try any of them. He's new to his wings, so he doesn't know his limits with them.

A shadow moves over him and pass him, he looks up and finds that he's not the only Pegasus Vampire flying about over the forest. Every single Pegasus pony he sees flying about seems to range among the wide range of whites and grays. The eyes of those other Vampire ponies are shades of yellow, orange, or red. Stallions and mares seem to be hunting, none speaking, as they listen for something to eat and diving into the forest below.

Swift counts those he sees before they dive down or rise up out of the forest, heading back to the cliff that the village rests in the shadow of. Having counted three score and six, he hears Eternal Dream murmur his name softly and he dives down. "Are all Pegasus Vampire ponies white or gray?" He asks as he comes to land near Eternal Dream.

"So far it seems to be. Much like Unicorn Vampire ponies tend to be shades of black or blue." Eternal Dream explains.

"How large is the... Clan?" Swift asks.

"Near six score Pegasus and seven score Unicorn." She replies and he can't help but be rather startled by the numbers.

"How is the forest not depleted?" He can't help but wonder and she chuckles softly.

"We don't need to feed nightly nor do we need much blood to sustain ourselves. A rabbit every four nights is usual, the need for more blood tends to be when there's going to be a battle with the local Hunters decide to try for the mines." Eternal Dream explains. "It also helps that Arcana Bolt has set up a fertility field about the local watering places within the forest that's aimed at rabbits and hares. It keeps us from preying on the villagers."

"Is that why the Clan can keep so many members among its ranks?" He asks, he did know something about the food chain. The more prey there is, the more predators that can be within the area.

"Doesn't anyone leave to start up another... Clan?" Swift inquires, he dreads that the answer is yes.

"No, we can't leave this location. We have to stick by the curse area with the mine. Nor can we pack any of the soil that's affected by the curse in a crate and leave with it." Eternal Dream tells him. "The magic in the soil expires within days."

"We've tried to sort through the area seeking the focus of the curse but found nothing as of yet." She adds, moving back the way they came.

"What happens to those who don't spend time near the cursed area within the mine?" He asks as they leave the trees behind.

"They lose all sense of self and are tend to get destroyed come morning as they don't remember that Celestia's Sun burns us if we are cause under it's glow."

"So... only way to get destroyed is beheading and sunlight?" He asks and Eternal Dream hums.

"Getting set on fire hurts and causes damage that takes nights to heal from, as long as you fed nightly but as I said, you can heal from that if you get away."

Soon enough, they were within the cave and follows Eternal Dream through the caves until they came to a much more open area, there are various Vampire ponies moving about, most Unicorns seem to be practicing their magic while the Pegasus Vampire ponies are going through what he assumes to be combat maneuvers.

"Eternal! Over here! We could use another horn over here." Cries a light blue Unicorn Vampire stallion.

"Just fly up there speak with Cries Doom, she'll start you on basic maneuvers." Eternal Dream tells him before turn towards the Unicorn Vampire, calling out, "Coming Bone Armour."

Watching Eternal Dream gallop away, he feels rather without a touch stone and looks up. Taking a deep, calming breath, Swift gets into the air. As he gets close to the group, he ask, "Cries Doom? Eternal Dream said you'd set me right?"

A mare sporting a coat that's a darker grey around the chest area and fades out to an off white away from said area. Her mane and tail being midnight black in color. "Ah, your Ruins Dream's latest Child huh? Well then, to the back with you. Watch the others in the unit and mimic what they're doing." Cries Doom tells him and looking at the group, flies to where he's been told to.

"I'm Rusty Vault, Child of Shadow Vault." A stallion sporting dull orange mane and tail who's coat color is a pearl white.

"Swift Dream, Child of Ruin Dreams." He says to the stallion who introduced himself.

Soon enough, the orders were given and he does his best to keep pace with those more experienced members of the unit.

Swift Dream stares down at the village that has long since been transformed into fortified city known as Sea's Grace. The moon isn't in the sky, lighting up the night for anypony, but then, it didn't matter as he can easily hear where the ponies were located within the city. Hunters patrol in groups of four with weapons at the ready, unlike the city guards, they wear leather studded armor.

Day belongs to the City Guard, night however, belongs to the Hunters and Vampires that they defend against. There's been tension of late among both the Vampires and the City ponies. The tension among the City ponies is between those who's families founded the city and those that arrived when it became 'safe' and 'profitable'.

The date it became 'safe' was when his Great Uncle managed to hammer out a treaty between the Vampires and the villagers, that the Vampires would feed only from the animals of the forest and in doing so, the villagers would ensure that the fertility magic that ensures that there's always plenty of rabbits and hares would be maintained. There were number of considerations between the two groups and for a a century after the treaty was signed by both did see peace, for a time.

Three hundred years later and the treaty is on the verge of being broken. All because the latest group of rulers are dismissing the 'myths' of Vampirism in the area. That they can cut down the forest so they can set up farms so they don't have to keep importing food other then seaweed. Swift reviews. Improving their lives and maybe, start going into the mines to see if they can't find ore or gems to help fuel their workshops.

Swift glances upwards, towards his Sire, nieces, nephews, and friends. All were Clan and thus even those few enemies he has among the Clan are kin. To his right, he sees his older sister and younger sister among those preparing to blacken the area, leaving all within the blackness blind, not that it would matter to his fellow Pegasus Vampires as they have plenty of experience in learning how to fight 'blind'.

The signal is given and as the city is now covered in an inky blackness, the treaty will be meaningless after tonight. Not that it was offering much protection these last few decades from 'rogue' Hunters. Thankfully or not, the Hunters had forgotten that the only way to destroy a Vampire was beheading or Celestia's Sun as they wouldn't have left members of the clan on fire and not taken more action then that.

The next target beyond the Hunters and the wealthy will be all the books within the city. Can't make it easy for them to turn the tables on us, now can we? Swift think with a sour note to his thoughts.

The stallion looks off in the direction the sun rises, wondering what Celestia's reaction will be upon hearing about this. He's never met the Princess of the Sun, she had only sent a representative to note the event of the Treaty between the villagers and the Vampires. Which makes him wonder if she wouldn't have books about their weaknesses within her library.

The City below has been part of Celestia's realm since its founding and it's likely that if it had been more established when Vampires started to come out of the mines, it's likely they would have fought against the Royal Guard or even have Princess Celestia visit their cavern home with sunlight wrapped about her, killing the 'infestation' of undead from her lands and curing the cursed area that enables their creation and sanity to continue.

The raid upon the City continues, ponies crying out in alarm, then cursing, other begging for their lives, and others just plain giving orders. Swift Dream remains where he's standing, ears flatten back as the cries of the population continues. He hadn't seen the point in joining those in the attack as he thought there was a more peaceful option. They have plenty of ways to send messages beyond the range of cursed mine using magic and given the centuries, each of the Unicorn ponies had plenty of spells within their possession that they spent time and effort mastering.

The raid ends and as the Pegasus rise up from the darkness, flying back to the mines the magic lets up. Without a word, everypony turns for the mines, some teleporting directly there while others deciding to clean up the area before teleporting away. Swift stays still, listening to the after math of the raid.

As dawn nears, Swift opens his wings and takes to the area, he circles the City. He couldn't help but frown as he thinks he sees a glow flare up but deciding he's seeing things, heads for the mine. He flies to his spot he dug out that is above the spot he was reborn. He uses this spot when he wanted some time away from communal sleeping area.

He's sure that the next night and the following nights, he'll learn his punishment for not following through with the attack. Those that claim to be heads of the various Vampire lines had made it plain that all who didn't could expect a punishment. After all, he hadn't been the only one who had been against the raid and, he doubts it, might not have been the only one who didn't join in the attack.

Curling up in the small space, Swift closes his eyes and falls asleep. Unsurprisingly, nightmares assault him.

"So... we went from two hundred to eight." Swift Dream murmurs as he looks about the others, they were all Pegasus Vampire ponies. "It seems Great Uncle Arcana Bolt expected us to attack the village and left magical instructions to destroy those that attacked it."

They were all mourning the lost of friends and family. "We will mourn our friends and family. We will go through the books and items. The books we will store in the Vault to be preserved by the magic within. The items... we will talk about once we have them gathered up." He tells the others and all seem to be in agreement.

Then, Shadow Cloak, Child of Bone Cloak, asks, "And then we'll avenge them."

"That is doubtful to be of help, Shadow Cloak." Calls Doom, the remaining Child of Cries Doom, snaps.

"To what point would raiding the City be a good idea when we know it's enchanted to destroy Vampires that attack within its walls?" Grey Wolf, Child of Shield Wolf, snaps at Shadow Cloak, giving the charcoal coated Pegasus stallion a glare.

"Even to get disable the enchantment, we'd need magic! And I don't see a Unicorn among our number!" Calls Doom growls.

"Then we find a Unicorn and turn them!" Counters Shadow Cloak.

"It'll take decades before said Unicorn Vampire to master the magics needed to counter the ward!" Grey wolf points out.

"You'd think our Unicorn siblings would have noticed the enchantment before the raid." Murmurs Diamond, Child of Amber.

"Enough!" Swift bellows at the others, flaring his wings.

"We have suffered! We are FEW! We need to protect the Mines!" Swift Dream tells the others in a matter of fact tone. His wings once more folded.

"They are going to be coming here! They are timid now but they are gathering their courage! They will be wary and it is likely that the Royal Guard has been called." He states, looking at each of them.

"And they can't find evidence that some Vampires survived! We will pull back to the more warded areas and we will stick below the tree line." Swift explains.

"Pray that Princess Celestia won't be visiting these mines for I doubt the wards and enchantments will keep us hidden from her light if she decides to flood the mine with it ." He growls, looking at Shadow Cloak and Deer Bane who look ready to disobey. "Or have you forgotten that she is the Princess of the Sun ? You remember the sun don't you? How we burn to death when exposed to it?"

The seven lower their head, likely out of guilt. "Time is on our side, they considered us myths by the time we did the raid and will do so again." He reassures the group.

"The Forests will be destroyed and made into farm land." Deer Bane, Child of Bane Crushing points out after a few minutes of silence.

"I know, but they won't destroy it all at once. Our forest will grow smaller but they may create ranches. We can feed off of the cattle, sheep, and pigs that are usually raised on ranches." Swift assures Deer Bane.

"Chickens are common too. They are about the size of rabbits." Diamond pipes in.

"I don't see why we can't try and talk with the City ponies." Silent Grace, Child of Silent Wind, murmurs softly. The mare is a quite one, fairly shy, even though her coat is a bright red with mane and tail that sports different shades of purple.

"Might as well send a letter to Princess Celestia about our reason for the raid!" Snaps Shadow Cloak.

"That... might not be a bad idea. I mean, we weren't destroyed by the enchantment. The guilty ponies have been destroyed." Calls Doom points out.

"But we're Dark creatures! Why would she let us continue to exist and risk us making more of our kind? And doing that raid again?" Shadow Cloak asks.

"She would demand oaths and likely cleanse the cursed site after studying it to make something that will ensure we keep our minds." Grey Wolf replies with a frown.

He lets them talk, it's not like it hadn't dawned on him that they might be able to make peace with the Princess of the Sun but at the same time, it's likely then that that course of action will ensure they were the last of their kind. It could be that Princess Celestia will have greater resources in finding a cure and... that has always appealed to him. Yet it horrified him as then he'll be... who? After all this time, Swift knew he can't be Swift Growth but without being a Vampire pony, he wouldn't be Swift Dream.

Would he still have his wings? Could he deal with the raw emotions that being alive would bring him? So many questions and so much unknown. We're gambling with our futures now. There isn't any pony to turn to for aid beyond those gathered here. With a sigh and closing his eyes, he takes a deep breath.

"Right, that's enough. We have work that needs to be done. We can continue this at a later date." Swift tells them, he rears up and opens his wings. Within seconds, he's in the air, heading for the communal sleeping grounds.

Soon, he hears the gentle flapping of his fellows and is pleased. For now, let them focus on preserving what they can of the Clan's history and magical practices. He won't be happy to search the dwellings of those he known on a personal level, but then, it's likely the feeling is mutual with the others, which means none of them had to search through the rooms they didn't want to, leaving it for one of the others to do so.

Continue?

Maybe.

The Lost Gate Ch 1: Digimon

I Don't Own Digimon!

"Are you sure you want to play on that server?" The department head says with a great deal of nervousness as the finger hovers over the enter button.

Takato cocks his head to the side, not sure what's wrong with that particular serve. "Yea, I'm sure." The sixteen year old Tamer informs the sale's clerk.

"Its just that, the company has been having some... difficulties with that serve." The clerk says and before he could say something, Guilmon cries out from playing the demo the store has for Nintendo Wii, "Ah nuts! Takatomon, my game ended again."

"Guilmon, that's why it's called a demo, it's not suppose to allow you to play the whole game." The goggle wearing teen reminds his partner once more as he turns to look at his partner and closest friend.

Takato Matsuki turns to face the clerk once more and asks, "Could we please hurry this up? He gets bore easily."

In the end, the clerk hands over the two RPG VR consoles that were pre-programed to log onto the selected internet server. As they left, Guilmon hummed tonelessly to himself as they head to the bakery, after all, they did have to drive all the way across town to find a shop that still had the consoles in stock.

They arrived to find at least ten remaining and Takato had allowed his partner to pick out a colour he wanted for his console while he just grabbed one that was black in colour. Guilmon picked out a red one before the large rookie got distracted by the Wii demo that the store had up.

"Hey Ryo. Monodramon." Takato says as they bump into the other Tamer who's accompanied by Monodramon, for the moment at any rate.

"Hi!" Guilmon chirps with childish enthusiasm as the red Digimon waves a hand. Ryo smiles and nods at Guilmon before claps hands with Takato.

"So, what's in the bag?" Ryo asks and Takato answers, "Just two Sanctum of Forbidden Realms RV consoles, one for me and one for Guilmon."

"Really? Which server do you have programed? I'm on the server Eternal Hunting." Ryo says and Takato answers, "The Lost Gate server for both."

Ryo whistles and after a receiving a few minor tips from his fellow Tamer, Guilmon and Takato say bye to Ryo and Monodramon, continuing to where his motorcycle is.

There were perks to working for Hypnos and owning a special driver's license so that those of them that lack flight abilities could legally own and drive their own vehicles.

About a year ago, Kenta and himself signed up for motorcycle class since neither of their families had the room for them to own their own cars, not even those new smart cars. There had been some problems with the teacher but Yamaki had heard their reasons for wanting something smaller to drive and had arranged for a special instructor to come in and teach them and the rest of the Tamers, though Impmon made a few remarks about the 'wimpy' looking bikes that the instructor had brought in and had been promptly told that he might as well learn how to ride properly and had to pass the examine in order to get his license.

"Ready Guilmon?" Takato asks his partner and the large red rookie Digimon hums in agreement. "Digimodify! In-Training Program activate!" The yellow goggle wearing teen says as he swipes a specialty card that's meant to transform the large dino looking Digimon into his much smaller, and even more hyperactive, in-training form of Gigimon.

It wasn't long before Takato's partner to appear out of the shell of light in his in-training form. "Ready to go for a ride, Gigimon?" The teenage Tamer asks the small red Digimon, kneeling down to pick up the Digimon before the little guy decides to go off to investigate some sound or smell.

"Ready, Takatomon!" Gigimon declares and leaps into his hood of his jacket, a hood designed for the little Digimon to ride in while Takato drove the motorcycle. Within seconds, Takato makes the last few adjustments to the hood to make sure that there isn't any chance for Gigimon to try and leap out.

Once his jacket is zipped up and the bike has started, Takato puts on his red and black helmet before swinging a leg over the seat of the red bike that's decorated with the same black triangle designs that are on Guilmon's body.

Within seconds, Takato signals to get into the flow of traffic and once allowed in, he's on his way home.

- - N - -

As Kouji finishes making the final adjustments to his visor, making sure that it sits comfortably on his face before he lies back onto the couch. Once Kouji feels ready, the Chosen of Light presses the power button and within seconds, light fills his vision for a minute before it vanishes, leaving him in a grey room that has a large book resting on a pillar.

According to the instruction book, that book is the menu that will allow him to begin his game but first, he has to create the character that he wishes to play.

Once Kouji Minamoto touches the logo with the words, Create Character on it, the door located to his right opens and Kouji walks towards the open door then through it and finds himself in a new room that has two statues, one depicting a man and the other a woman.

Kouji rolls his eyes as he walks over to the man's statue and in a flash, the two gender statues vanish and he finds twelve statues depicting the twelve playable races of Sanctum of Forbidden Realms the RV game made by Wireless Software of Frontier Gaming, or the W.S.F.G.

Kouji studies the humanoid horse and walks over to get a better look at the steel plate by the feet, though he had read about the twelve races offered, the book hadn't gone into description of which were which.

Thowrahein: A race of herbivores that prefer the open plains and prairies of Forbidden Realms. They live in a tribal structure and produce some of the finest Shamans in Forbidden Realms.

Kouji backs away before walking to the next, which is a feline humanoid. Once more, Kouji reads the plate by the clawed feet.

Nudian: A race of carnivores that are one of the Forbidden Realms most adaptable races that can be found just about everywhere. Their society structure is varied and are very fine Warriors.

Kouji sighs as he backs a ways from statue and heads for the rabbit humanoid.

Zajacith: A race of herbivores that prefer the dense forests to live in. They live under chiefs and produce fine Druids.

The next statue depicts a canine humanoid and even without reading the plate, Kouji knew which race he'll choose, but even so, Kouji walks towards the statue and reads the plate.

Seathien: A race of omnivores that are one of the Forbidden Realms adaptable races that can be found just about everywhere. Their society have a tendency towards chiefs and are very fine Warriors.

Kouji stands straight and touches the stone statue of the Seathien. Within seconds, a light engulfs the area and suddenly he's in an area that has a 'living' Seathien standing in a center of the room in a circle that has runes on the floor.

Kouji raises an eye brow and begins to look around the room. It wasn't long before he realizes that there wasn't much beyond a certain book that's hovering a few feet from the 'living' Seathien.

The book contained not just fur patterns that were typical of the different canine genus that exist but also body structure, like having the large ears that a certain type of dessert fox has or the short ears and face of a famous white fox that lives in the north.

It takes time but in the end, Kouji choose a steel grey coat to cover the body plan of a humanoid common grey wolf and Kouji closes the book.

Once that's done, the room flashes and the book that Kouji had in his arms had vanished and has been replaced with a scroll that's asking for his character's name.

Kouji takes the feather pen that's hovering next to his right hand and writes Beowulfmon before touching the check mark at the bottom of the scroll.

Once more there is a flash and Kouji finds himself in a new room, only this time there were five different outfits, they were for Warrior, Shaman, Druid, Rogue, and Knight.

The Knight and Warrior classes were similar but there were differences like how the Warrior is more attack oriented while the Knight more defensive oriented, it's similar how the Shaman and Druids play out, both were magic users but a Shaman's magic is geared towards striking hard and fast as while Druid's magic is geared towards support magic like giving others blessings during combat to help increase their endurance in a fight. The Rogue was pretty much a stealth fighter and more often then not prefers using range attacks then getting up front and personal.

With a sigh, Kouji takes the Knight out fit and places it by the 'living' statue that will soon be his character. Once more their is light and this time, when Kouji's vision clear, the teen finds himself in a room, lying on a bed.

And so begins my time in Forbidden Realms. Kouji thinks within his avatar Beowulfmon the Seathien as he sits up right in the bed.

- - N - -

From within his avatar, Marcus Damon evades a punch thrown by his Digimon partner who, too, resides within a character avatar of one of Sanctum of Forbidden Realms races, that of humanoid Kangaroo called a Ropodidian using the name of Flameburst who's a Warrior.

Marcus's own avatar is a Warrior humanoid bear of the race called Kuridae and Marcus decided to call his avatar Kumamon.

In Kumamon's body, Marcus suffers a hit from Flameburst the Warrior Ropodidian. "Ha ha! Got you good, didn't I Boss?" Flameburst asks as the kangaroo like avatar leaps back to evade his Rapid Assault attack.

"Oh yea, Flame? Try this on for size!" Kumamon calls out and he uses Dash Circle to get behind the red furred humanoid Kangaroo and then Earthquake Slam to stun Flameburst.

It was a KO within seconds and so a Thowrahein shaman moves in to heal Flameburst. "If I didn't know any better, I'd think you two hated each others guts, Kumamon." Kumamon turns to face Agunimon the Rogue of the Salalien race, a tallish squirrel like being who's fur is honey colour.

Agunimon is also the head of the guild that Flameburst and Kumamon had joined once they reached level ten. The guild's called The Children of the Digital World, something that just seemed to strike his funny bone for some reason. Kumamon hadn't wanted to join a guild unless it was as head of the guild but he just couldn't help it, not with that as the name.

It hadn't been long before Kumamon and his partner Flameburst to be given the rank of Arm's Master. Kumamon takes pride in the fact that as long as Flameburst or himself were part of a dungeon party, they had about a eighty percent success rate, though both Flame and himself are working hard to push that up to ninety percent.

"If we didn't push ourselves in a simple sparring match, how can you rely on us to lead you guys to victory if we slack off in our training?" Kumamon asks Agunimon and the squirrel humanoid smiles as the honey furred Agunimon answers, "I didn't know, learn to rely on our skills to get us out of a fight seems to come to mind."

Kumamon gives the shorter Agunimon a grin before turning to see if Flameburst is up and ready for another go.

"Later." Kumamon says to Agunimon, heading towards the avatar of his Digimon partner.

Author's comments : I've had this set of stories called The Lost Gate on my DeviantART profile for a number of years. Some comments I received mentioned how similar this fanfic is to Sword Art Online. I received a comment about how similar this is to Sword Art Online and that was the first time I heard of the Anime/Manga. I want to say that I have yet to read or watch said Anime, even now that I have read the Wikipedia entry.

Current Avatar Information **:

Kouji is Beowulfmon, Seathien

Marcus is Kumamon, Kuridae

Agumon (Savers) is Flameburst, Ropodidian

? is Agunimon, Salalien

Takato is ?, ?

Guilmon is ?, ?

The Lost Gate Ch 2: Digimon

I Don't Own Digimon!

Ok, now just to think up a name of my Arvidian. Takato automatically cases aside any names related to his partner and best friend, Guilmon and his advanced forms of Growlmon, WarGrowlmon, Megidramon, Gallantmon, and Gallantmon Crimson Mode. The hazel red eyed Tamer also discarded Goggle-Head and variations like G-Head and maybe end G-Man.

And so he began to muse about other names that he could use. He even tried HazardWarrior, FutureDreamer, and even HolyKnight. So Takato finds himself frowning as he tries to find something that's not already taken.

In the end, he wrote V-Aero and pressed the check mark symbol and for a few seconds, he thought that it wouldn't go through, but it did.

The room changes and he finds himself now expected to decide on a class. With a shrug, he picked the Shaman outfit for his avatar. Within seconds, he finds himself in a room settled on a wooden perch, likely the way the Arvidian race sleeps.

As V-Aero takes time studying his new body, he also takes time to notice the tiniest of details when it comes to the feather's colour. The greyish blue colouration works pretty good and he selected the build of an eagle type, that of a Harpy eagle from the rain forests of South America.

It wasn't long before V-Aero flexes his arms and then his wings, taking time to notice the talons that tip his feet and then compared them to the ones on his fingers. With a sigh, V-Aero leaps from his perch and lands on the ground, his talons clicking on the stone that makes up the floor.

Now to find Guilmon. Takato thinks as he moves out of the set of rooms that were meant for his avatar, V-Aero. It helps that he had a very good idea where his partner could be found.

It didn't come as much of a surprise to find a Roptera with bright red fur around his neck trying to fill his plate to the ceiling. With a sigh, V-Aero approaches the bat like avatar.

"... Don't you think that's enough?" V-Aero asks and the Roptera turns to blink at him before cocking his head to the side with a thoughtful look.

"Takato?" The Roptera asks and he nods as he answers, "I've chosen V-Aero as my avatar's name."

The furry face brightens and it wasn't long before the avatar of Guilmon grins widely at him. "I chose Takatomon as mine!" V-Aero groans as he drop his head to his chest as his right hand goes to the back of his head and rubs the back of his head for a few seconds before addressing 'Takatomon'.

"That was the best name you could think of?" V-Aero asks his partner and the Roptera that is his Digimon partner blinks innocently at him before replying, "I guess I could have tried GuilmonBread or even Pineapple-head."

"Ok, I was wrong, you could have come up with other names." The Arvidian says.

"Excuse me, but I don't suppose I could have some of those steaks?" A new voice asks and with a blink, both Takatomon and V-Aero turn to look at the canine avatar that's addressing him.

"That reminds me, didn't you study the steel plate by the legs when you picked out your avatar, Takatomon? You picked a race that isn't omnivorous, although they do eat some kinds of insects just not red meat." V-Aero asks his partner as he finds it so strange and kind of freaky to be calling his partner by that name.

"Oh, but I can eat bread, right?" Takatomon asks and he nods as he says, "I guess so."

And then he turns to the Seathien and says, "Sorry about that, I'm V-Aero and this is my good friend, Takatomon." V-Aero would have grin if it weren't for the beak, although Takatomon grinned brightly for the both of them as the Roptera takes the steaks and transfers them to the Seathien's plate.

"I'm Beowulfmon." The grey coloured Seathien says and then bows slightly in greeting, a bow which he returned. "Glad to meet you, Beowulfmon." V-Aero says and Beowulfmon smiles slightly as he nods in agreement.

"I don't suppose you mind keeping an eye on him while I fill up a plate myself? He's kind of like a little kid, his eyes sometimes are larger then his stomach." He admits and Takatomon says, "And then most of the time my stomach is larger then my eyes!"

Beowulfmon smiles slightly and nods. "I'll give it a try." The Seathien says and he nods his thanks.

With that, Takatomon follows Beowulfmon while V-Aero moves to the beginning of the buffet.

- - N - -

Privately within his avatar body of Beowulfmon, Kouji can't help but feel a tiny bit out of his depth as he tries to keep Takatomon from eating things that his avatar body can't handle, which turns out to be a tab harder then he thought it would be.

He can't wait for the Arvidian avatar named V-Aero to rejoin them to take back this job. Though Beowulfmon had to admit it was rather odd to find someone with a name so similar to a Digimon's name. Although, I take it its mostly the 'mon' at the end of the name that's the problem. Although, that does make me wonder if I'll encounter others using such names. Beowulfmon muses to himself.

"Takatomon! That's not something you drink!" V-Aero says causing him to look to see what the red furred Roptera is trying to do now. "Isn't it soup?" Takatomon asks and he could see that V-Aero sighs as the birdman's body sags.

"It's for washing your hands in to get rid of the grease." He answers before V-Aero could inform the humanoid bat. V-Aero nods in agreement with his answer and Takatomon says, "Oh... oops."

"Don't worry, boy, these things happen, after all, some of this stuff comes from different cultures and I'm sure the there even going to be stuff that I'll need help identifying." V-Aero says in a warm and soft tone, he can't help but think that these two were brother in real life.

It's already clear which of them is the elder brother. "So, you waiting for someone?" V-Aero asks after a few minutes and he shrugs.

"Not really, I'm just sticking close to the town, doing minor quests." He admits and V-Aero nods thoughtfully.

"Been on long? We've just finished our character creation so we haven't been out of the building yet." V-Aero admits and he smiles slightly. "I've only been on for about four hours game time." Beowulfmon replies.

"Yea? Did you have trouble getting them to set them onto this server?" V-Aero asks him and he blinks, finding it to be an odd question as he shakes his head. "No, not really but then, it's only been out for a week and there were people lined up behind me." Beowulfmon answers.

"It's been out for eight months where I'm from. Most of my friends have them but I never bothered until recently, when certain... things grew too quiet and I grew bored working at my parent's bakery." V-Aero says and now he's puzzled since he's fairly sure that Japan was the first place to have the VR consoles released in the world.

Both V-Aero and himself were busy thinking about this, although V-Aero did keep an eye on what goes on with Takatomon. He's impressed by how patient V-Aero is. "How old are you two?" Beowulfmon asks.

V-Aero smiles as his eyes seem to sparkle as he says teasingly, "I thought we're not suppose to revealed that kind of information." Beowulfmon feels a flare of embarrassment for a few seconds before V-Aero says, "I'm sixteen though I rather not talk about how old Takatomon here is."

"I'm fifteen." Beowulfmon says, it's been about two years since his group's adventures in the Digital world.

"Well, I guess that evens out who's the sempai between us, huh?" V-Aero muses slightly and he nods in agreement.

"So then, you think we could form a group together? After all, I think we're getting off on a good start of a wonderful friendship." V-Aero states with a hint of a twinkle in his eyes.

He gets thoughtful for a few seconds before nodding. "I guess that makes us friends." Beowulfmon says as he holds out his hand to seal the deal and V-Aero claps hands with that out stretched arm. "Friends." V-Aero agrees.

For once in his life, he actually had an easy time making a friend, something that might have more to do with V-Aero's winning personality though.

Author's comments : And here's the second chapter of the story. Just to be clear, the three classes are Druid, Knight, Rogue, Shaman, and Warrior. As stated, Druids are more for buffing in this game while Shamans are more offensive with their magic. Knight is more defensive and Warrior more offensive in battles. Rogue is more for quick battle and sport the usual traits that come with the name, like stealth and lock picking.

Current Avatar Information **:

Kouji is Beowulfmon, Seathien, Knight

Marcus is Kumamon, Kuridae, Warrior

Agumon (Savers) is Flameburst, Ropodidian, Warrior

? is Agunimon, Salalien, Rogue

Takato is V-Aero, Arvidian, Shaman

Guilmon is Takatomon, Roptera, Druid

The Lost Gate Ch 3: Digimon

I Don't Own Digimon!

"Hey Kouji! Wait up!" He pauses and turns to find Takuya Kanbara jogging to catch up to him.

"Hey Takuya." Kouji Minamoto says with a slight smile as the Chosen of Fire matches his pace.

"So... Did you get one?" Takuya asks him after a few seconds.

"I did. Did you?" The Chosen of Light asks and his friend's face falls. "They sold out by the time I arrived with Zoe and Tommy." Takuya says with a sigh.

He gives his friend a pitying look before returning to watching where they're going. "So... what's it like?" The brunet asks.

Kouji presses his lips together as he tries to think of a way to describe the experience, after all, he had played it most of the weekend. He smiles as he recalls most of Takatomon's antics and how V-Aero seemed to have his hands full keeping his little brother out of trouble.

"Well, it's pretty unbelievable and very realistic. There were times where I forgot that the body wasn't even my own." Kouji then get thoughtful.

"So... you met a girl or something?" Takuya asks with a sly smile on his face and Kouji sends a minor glare in the brunet's direction. "Keep your nose out of my love life."

"Or lack of one." He hears a familiar voice pipes in and Kouji just sighs. "Not you too, Koichi..." He groans as they turn to enter through the gate of the high school.

"It's not often I get the chance to act like a brother." Koichi Kimura says as his twin takes his place at his left side. Takuya snickers and Kouji once more just sighs as he shakes his head.

"So, what were you two talking about that involves Kouji's love life?" Koichi asks and Takuya answers, "It seems that Kouji managed to get a RV console for Sanctum of Forbidden Realms."

Koichi whistles and he tells them, "I'm on the Lost Gate server. My avatar is a knight Seathien named Beowulfmon."

"Such an original name." Takuya muses with a roll of his eyes. Kouji elbows the brunet who still likes to wear a hat with a pair of goggles over it.

By the time they entered into the school, the had to split up to go to their lockers. They'd hook up during lunch with Zoe and JP.

- - N - -

"Hey Takato! How was your weekend?" Kazu calls out as the visor wearing Tamer waves him over. Takato smiles slightly as he watches Kenta just seems to hang his head while his partner, MarineAngemon seems to decide to try and cheer Kenta up.

"It was fine, Kazu. Guilmon and I spent most of the weekend playing Sanctum of Forbidden Realms on the Lost Gate server." Takato tells the pair once he's seated at the table.

Henry waves from his seat while totally focused on reading over his notes for his test for his next class, which reminds the reddish hazel eyed goggle wearing teen that he had the same test.

"Really? You got on that server? I heard rumors about that one. Like how none of the players from the same ward ever hook up when they set a time and a date." Kenta says while Kazu's chewing what's in his mouth.

"I know the department head mentioned that there were problems with it. I figured I'd investigate them to see if there's any truth to those rumors. I mean, it can't be as bad as they make it out to be, right?" Takato muses and Henry glances at him while Kazu and Kenta seem to shake their heads.

"I think you just jinxed yourself, goggle-head." Takato turns to his left to find Jeri and Rika standing at the head of the table.

"Now now, I'm sure Takato's self appointed task will pan out." Jeri says as she moves to sit directly across from him, next to Kazu while Rika takes a spot to his right.

"Knowing goggle-head's luck, he'll likely stumble upon some kind of conspiracy that's going to threaten the world." Rika states in a bland tone and most of those at the table chuckle though Takato suddenly felt a chill at the thought.

"I'm kidding, Takato. Lighten up already." Rika says before taking a bite out of her sandwich.

- - N - -

"What is it?" A voice booms within a dark cave.

"Sir... we might have a possible candidate. He calls himself V-Aero and he's on the inter dimensional server." A nervous PetitMamon says.

"Show me." The voice demands after a few minutes and within seconds, an image of an Arvidian with greyish blue coloration. "I see..." The voice says.

"He's been seen in the company of these two." The PetitMamon says as two new images appear, a Seathian and a Roptera.

"So... He might have his partner with him as well." The voice muses, likely more to themselves then to the small Digimon.

"We'll see if he's the one. Try and guide him to the mystery keep, we'll see if he and his friends met with the keep's lord." The voice orders and the PetitMamon salutes the mega before hurrying out of the cave to make sure that the orders are set in motion.

- - N - -

"Is... that... all... you... got?" Marcus Damon rasps out as he stares at the Ogremon that's his opponent.

"I'm... not done... yet!" The champion level Digimon wheezes as the green champion Digimon uses his club to keep standing.

Marcus gives the champion a feral grin as he straightens up while his partner calls out an encouragements. "Way to go, Boss! He's one his last legs, just one more punch at you'll win!" Agumon shouts while a few in-training Digimon hop up and down in excitement.

"Let's end it!" Ogremon growls as the champion tries to stand without using his bone club. "Gladly!" Marcus says.

Within seconds, both the champion Digimon and himself charge forward at each other, his fist raised while Ogremon has his club hold up.

As they get close, something beeps. Marcus and Ogremon pause while Ogremon asks, "What was that?"

"Oh great, not again!" Marcus growls and reaches for the latest com device that DATA Squad send through the gate so that he can talk with his friends and family.

"Can this be quick? I'm kind of in the middle of a fight here." Marcus says when he noticed that it was Thomas phoning him.

"And how many fights have you been in today already?" Thomas asks dryly and he growls in reply.

Author's comments : And here's the third chapter of the story. A Mysterious Digimon with a beef with Zeromaru, the villain makes an appearance.

Current Avatar Information **:

Kouji is Beowulfmon, Seathien, Knight

Marcus is Kumamon, Kuridae, Warrior

Agumon (Savers) is Flameburst, Ropodidian, Warrior

? is Agunimon, Salalien, Rogue

Takato is V-Aero, Arvidian, Shaman

Guilmon is Takatomon, Roptera, Druid

The Lost Gate Ch 4: Digimon

I Don't Own Digimon!

"Hey Beowulfmon! How's it hanging?" V-Aero asks as the birdman approached with the batman.

"It's been interesting." Beowulfmon answers as he observes the pair. Takatomon grins while V-Aero nods at him, after all, unlike Takatomon and himself V-Aero had a beak.

"How about you two? Anything interesting happened in the real world?" The Seathien asks. "Let's just say I think I jinxed myself on yesterday." V-Aero replies while Takatomon's grin broadens.

"Oh? How so?" He inquires as they begin to head to the job billboard before checking their mailbox to see if any of their auctions panned out.

"Well, I don't know if you know this but there have been problems with this server. People make appointment to show up at some point in the real world and wait for their friend to show only to find that they don't. Then when they log in they both get into an argument about how the other didn't show up at the appointment." V-Aero says before adding with a shrug, "Stuff like that."

"Weird." He muses and V-Aero nods in agreement. "Yea, I guess you can say that's why I picked this server. I want to get to the bottom of it, though I'm doing so in my spare time." V-Aero says and Beowulfmon frowns for a few seconds until he remembers something.

"You mentioned your parents own a bakery, I guess that counts as a part-time job." He admits and V-Aero blinks before chuckling. "Yea, I guess it does." The Arvidian admits.

"Oh, look! There's a post with your name on it, V-Aero!" Takatomon says as the Roptera points at said post.

"Really? That's odd... I didn't know there was a mystery keep. I wonder what level it is." V-Aero muses as his hand plucks it off of the billboard.

"Well, it can't be that hard of a dungeon if you received an invite." Beowulfmon muses and Takatomon hums in agreement.

"Well, I guess we'll head over there once we're done checking on our mail and getting our stuff repaired." V-Aero muses and Beowulfmon nods in agreement. "Sounds like a plan." He says as V-Aero touches the accept opinion on the post.

Within seconds the letter breaks apart into data and vanishes, although when they open up their mission log, they'll likely find the post details written within it.

- - N - -

Freaky looking keep. I wonder who designed it. V-Aero muses privately to himself as they come out of the forest that stood between Beowulfmon, his partner, and himself and the mystery keep.

"I don't like this, V-Aero... Something isn't right about that building." Takatomon says softly. "I kind of agree with him on this one, V-Aero." Beowulfmon says and he sighs.

"I get that feeling too, but, well, we do have Town Keys so we can teleport out if it gets out of hand." V-Aero reminds the two, although he, too, would love to back out of this but he just knows that they'll find something worth while at the keep as well. Something that might be the first piece of the puzzle that will help shred light on what's going on with this server.

"True." Both Beowulfmon and Takatomon say at about the same time. V-Aero would have smiled if it weren't for his beak. "Then let's do this before we grow roots." V-Aero states and Takatomon pipes in, "Ooo, that sounds like fun, could we try that next?"

Beowulfmon chuckles while the Arvidian hangs his head as he mentally groans within his mind. Guilmon...

After recovering, V-Aero allows Beowulf to take the lead as they walk down the path that leads straight to the keep's lowered bridge. They did pause as they each moved to the edge of the bridge to look down into the moat that surrounds the keep.

"Impressive, although I find that the hints of glowing red to be mildly disturbing." Beowulfmon muses and V-Aero sighs as he nods in agreement while Takatomon hangs upside down from the chains that were there to pull the bridge up at a moment's notice.

"Takatomon... What are you doing?" He asks as he turns to stare at his partner. It still feels weird calling him by my nickname. V-Aero muses as he waits for his partner to answer.

"Bat's hang upside down and I'm a bat, so I thought why not." Takatomon answers and Beowulfmon replies, "True, but I think there are safer places to roost, Takatomon."

"So please get down so that we can continue into the keep." V-Aero says and within seconds, the Roptera has both feet on the ground and they were ready to continue through the gate of the keep.

"You know, I'm kind of surprised none of Takatomon's items fell out of his being while he was hanging upside down." Beowulfmon muses and V-Aero sighs.

"Well, at least we don't have to lend him anything because of it." He reasons and Beowulfmon hums in agreement before taking his place at the lead of their group.

- - N - -

Well, well, well, what do we have here? A cream colored Nudian muses as she stares down from the battlements.

Author's comments : Sorry about the lack of uploading of the next chapters, I'll be correcting that tonight.

Current Avatar Information **:

Kouji is Beowulfmon, Seathien, Knight

Marcus is Kumamon, Kuridae, Warrior

Agumon (Savers) is Flameburst, Ropodidian, Warrior

? is Agunimon, Salalien, Rogue

Takato is V-Aero, Arvidian, Shaman

Guilmon is Takatomon, Roptera, Druid

? is ?, Nudian, ?

The Lost Gate Ch 5: Digimon

I Don't Own Digimon!

V-Aero can't help but feel that something seems to be watching them. That's not unusual, after all, this is a dungeon. He muses as Takatomon and himself follow Beowulfmon through the courtyard. They all have their weapons already in their hands, Beowulfmon has a sword and shield, Takatomon has his staff, and he has his mace.

Once they're close to the doors leading into the keep, a loud voice suddenly booms down at them, echoing about in the courtyard. "Yet more victims to hazard my domain. Pitiful whelps! Enter if you dare for it just might be the last thing you ever do! Mewhahahaha!" The voice declares and the doors leading into the building are suddenly thrown open as the voice laughs.

"Oh yea, that's definitely a classic villain dialog, wouldn't you agree?" V-Aero muses as they eye the inside of the keep. "At least we know what kind of place this is, right?" Beowulfmon muses in agreement and Takatomon looks faintly puzzled about what they're talking about.

With a sigh, he decides to clarify for his Digimon partner. "It means that we'll be facing mid-bosses before we face the owner of the dungeon." He tells the avatar that contains Guilmon's consciousness. "Oh..." Takatomon says with his eyes lighting up with understanding.

"Well, we might as well head in. Although I'm curious as to what kind of enemies we'll be facing. After all, this game doesn't do undead or the living dead." Beowulfmon states and he nods in agreement, true, they had done other quests but mostly those had been gathering and hunting missions in wilderness area. "We might face demons or devils." V-Aero muses thoughtfully as they watch as the torches along the walls flare to life.

The knight Seathien just nods as they glance about, trying to decide which direction to head in. In the end, they kind of played a game of rock paper scissors to decide who picks the direction they'll walk in. Oddly enough, Takatomon won the game, but then, Takatomon didn't have any difficulty shaping his hands into any of the other two shapes with his new hand structure.

Within seconds of winning the game, Takatomon moves a few steps away from them and then closes his eyes as he points with his right hand. Within seconds the Roptera spins about on his heels. They wait patiently for his partner to stop spinning about and he marks the direction that Takatomon's pointing in. "Oh, there isn't any doors over there." Takatomon says in embarrassment.

"Don't worry about it, Takatomon, that door there is closest to the spot you're pointing too." Beowulfmon says as the gray Seathien points to said door leading into a hallway. "Ok! Let's go!" Takatomon chirps cheerfully and he mentally smiles as he watches his partner take the lead, leaving a bemused Beowulfmon and himself to trail behind him.

- - N - -

"So you want me to investigate this server just because you're getting complains from people who can't connect in the real world?" Marcus asks Thomas while Ogremon seems to be amusing himself by playing rock paper scissors with his partner, Agumon. Unsurprisingly, the green champion manages to win two out of every three games, much to Agumon's annoyance.

"It's a little more complicated then that, Marcus." Thomas states. "But the jiff of it is that we're being hired to check this server out simply because some rich guy's daughter didn't make a love connection." He states and Marcus is pleased to see he can still get under Thomas's skin despite being a world away from the rich teen.

"Will you take the job or not?" Thomas asks and he snorts. "I'm already on that server as a Kuridae warrior named Kumamon. So, sure, I can check it out for you." He tells Thomas with a lazy grin on his face.

"Who sent you one and how?" Thomas asks and he shrugs as he replies, "Some Floramon merchant had a few boxes of them in stock. So Agumon and I just bought them from her. They already were programed to go to the Lost Gate server. I didn't know they're being sold in the real world though."

"How could... When did you get them?" Thomas asks and he pauses to think about it. "I believe it almost a year ago, why?" He asks while Agumon cheers after beating Ogremon in their game with those few in-training Digimon bouncing as they add their cheers to his partner's cheering.

"They've only been out for two month now." Thomas states calmly. He can't help but blink as this bit of information gets kick around inside of his head. He then lets out a whistle as he realizes how unusual that seems to be.

"Makes you wonder if a Digimon created the game, doesn't it?" Marcus muses, he can't help but wish there was a tree or something for him to lean on, he is injured after all and he wouldn't mind spending the rest of the day resting his body. He wonders if he shouldn't just sit down on the ground as a minor bout of dizziness makes him feel off balanced.

"If what you're saying is true, then you almost might want to track down this merchant to find out where they got this merchandise. It just might be the key to solving this mystery." Thomas states and he hums in agreement.

Within seconds, they're saying bye to each other and he presses the disconnect button before he pockets the cell phone. Well, I guess I better start trying to locate this merchant. He muses as he turns to watch the small group of Digimon circle about Agumon and Ogremon as the two play tic tac toe.

He can't help but grin in amuses at their antics as he walks over to the group.

- - N - -

"Huh? What's this? Sanctum of Forbidden Realms? I wonder if Neo dropped this..." Taichi muses as he stares at the box that contains a pretty advanced looking VR console.

"I could always track down Rie and give it to her so that she can give it to Neo." A eighteen year old Taichi Yagami muses. After all, Neo had mentioned he's got a lot of running around to do. With that plan firmly in his mind, Taichi unzips his book bag to put the game and system into it, then he zips it back up.

With that done, he heads out of the University computer building, heading for the bus stop since he hasn't saved enough money to pay for the repairs of his van. He had a pretty good ideas on where to find Rie Saiba now that his classes are over for the day.

Author's comments : And here's chapter 5.

Current Avatar Information **:

Kouji is Beowulfmon, Seathien, Knight

Marcus is Kumamon, Kuridae, Warrior

Agumon (Savers) is Flameburst, Ropodidian, Warrior

? is Agunimon, Salalien, Rogue

Takato is V-Aero, Arvidian, Shaman

Guilmon is Takatomon, Roptera, Druid

? is ?, Nudian, ?

The Lost Gate Ch 6: Digimon

I Don't Own Digimon!

Beowulfmon hurriedly tries to block the blow coming towards him. The blow hits his shield squarely and he hears V-Aero cry out, " Bolt !" A thin stream of lightning shoots from V-Aero's out stretched taloned finger, hitting the troll-like Swornite in the shoulder.

He slashes at the purple being with his sword while V-Aero gets ready to cast another spell. " Rose Aura !" Takatomon says and as the Swornite hits his shield once more with its claymore, the Swornite grunts as it receives damage because of the effects of the Rose Aura. " Flare !" V-Aero cries out and a small fire ball finishes their foe off.

Within seconds the fallen body breaks into data and reveals their loot. "Your turn Takatomon." He tells the Druid and with a nod, the red Roptera moves to bend down to collect the items on the ground. "I got come corn bread." Takatomon says with a smile on his face.

"Alright, I guess we can take a break to recharge our health and mana." V-Aero muses after exchanging looks with him. With that said, they each take out some food and something to drink. They didn't talk as they sat on the floor of the hallway, slowly regaining energy as well as lowering their hunger as well.

"So, do any of your friends have Sanctum of Forbidden Realms?" Beowulfmon asks the pair of brothers. Takatomon glances at V-Aero and the Arvidian replies, "Most of them do, although I never paid it much mind as to which server and what type of avatar they have. Although I do know that one of them is on the Eternal Hunt server."

"So you're giving up gaming with friends to try and figure all of this out?" Beowulfmon asks and V-Aero gets a thoughtful look in his eyes. "It's nice meeting new people, after all, we wouldn't have met if we choice to go gaming with one of our friends on a different server. Besides, it's kind of nice to get away from real life, even if it is only for a few hours. Everyone needs space at times." V-Aero muses thoughtfully and he blinks before smiling slightly as he nods in agreement.

"I guess I get what you're saying. There are times when I really want to throttle a very good friend of mine over the littlest things..." He muses and then glances at the two of them. "I take it you're parents wanted you to keep an eye on Takatomon, right?" He asks and V-Aero looks a bit startled before a slight look a bemusement enters into the Arvidian's eyes for a few seconds and then it's gone.

"I don't find it a chore, looking after him. As much as he does do the craziest things for the oddest of reasons, I just find it hard to imagine my life without him, in this world and in real life." V-Aero tells him and Takatomon looks like he's going to cry.

"I can't imagine my life without you too, V-Aero!" With that, Takatomon launches himself to hug the shaman of the group. They part after a few seconds and he can't help but find the scene touching. That's some bond they got there. Makes me wish Koichi's here with me. Kouji thinks within the Seathien avatar.

He gets to his feet and within seconds the two brothers did so as well. "We best continue onwards." Beowulfmon says and the two magic users nod. "Although, before we go, how about you? Any of your friends got a hold of this game?" V-Aero asks.

"No they didn't. From the sounds of things, it's back ordered too. It'll be a while before they'll get a hold of one." He tells the elder brother. "Oh, well, hopefully they're not too jealous of you then." V-Aero says and he just shrugs as Takatomon begins to fidget for a few seconds with his staff out and ready.

"Let's go." Beowulfmon says and with that, Takatomon takes the lead with him trailing at the end of the group. He felt pretty lucky to be friends with the pair before him. They helped him feel pretty welcome even though they haven't met before they bought this game.

- - N - -

There they are. She muses to herself as she studies the small group, noting the way they stayed alert as they glanced about the large library within the keep. She found it fascinating, watching two of the three ears swivel about on the tops of their head. It's more then likely her own ears did the same but without a mirror handy, she couldn't tell for certain.

So then, will it appear? She wonders as she watches, waiting for the boss to take form before this band of heroes moving about on the floor. She's currently moving about on top of the book shelves, leaping from the top of one sturdy book case to the top of another as she follows the three in hopes for the library boss to reveal itself to them.

After all, she's spent countless days trying to kill this boss in hopes of getting the dagger that is said to drop from this boss. It never matter how many times she's appears in the library, the boss only appears to parties and her last party pretty much didn't make it through to this part of the keep.

It wasn't long before the party of three ran into a small band of Swornites lead by a sorcerer with a pet wind elemental. The Seathien knight goes on the defensive, nothing new with that, while the Roptera Druid weaves a support spell while the Arivian Shaman casts a few bolt spells to get the attention of the sorcerer before charging forward to attack with his mace.

The three manage to kill two of the six Swornite before they're forced to retreat. They drink a few potions as they move around the bend. She watches as the Swornites stop a few book cases away from the party and wait for the party to either show themselves or for the sorcerer to respawn.

With a frown, she takes out one of the mandatory items, a telescope, and looks at one of the party members. She can't help the gasp of disbelief as she read the level that the Knight was at. Within seconds, she checks the Druid and the Shaman, she blanks out for a few seconds before she begins to feel a headache bloom within her mind.

How the blazes have these three manage to make it to the keep at their level? Let alone manage to kill... She frown and then turns to spy down at the enemies below, checking their stats. Ok, this is offically weird, last time I was here, those guards were about level fifty, how come they're at level fifteen? She wonders and with a sigh, she realizes that she'll have to go down there and chat with those three if only to find out what they're doing here at a dungeon that's suppose to range between level fifty to seventy.

Once the telescope is back where it belongs, she silently leaps from book case to book case, enjoying the sensation of weightlessness that it brings. Within seconds she jumps down onto the floor, standing before them as they all turn to stare at her with a great deal of surprise coloring their expression.

"Ok, what are you noobs doing here at this dungeon?" She asks before pausing to say, "By the way, I'm Nekowomon."

"The cat woman monster?" The red Roptera asks as he cocks his head to the side as he regard her. "..." She really didn't know what to say to that since she's never given much thought to what that name sounds like.

Game Data Entry: Swornites

The Swornites are a humanoid race that have purple skin. Their most distinctive features are their tusks that jet out of their lower jaw, long thin pointed ears, and three double jointed horns growing out of their foreheads like a crown. They grow to be about six feet in height and have a wide arrange of eye colors from silvery blue to hot pink to ebony black.

Unlike the twelve playable races, the Swornites have given up co-existing with nature, as such, they're use of magic reflex this despite their ability to summon and control elementals. All of this race's magical abilities are geared towards causing pain and suffering to other. It is not unheard of for Swornite sorcerers to grow powerful enough to part the barrier of their world to bring forth netherworld demons to their world. When they do so, they graduate from being sorcerers to deamancers, demon summoners and users of fel magic.

It should be noted that Swornite sorcerers have been known to experiment on non-sorcerer Swornites, thus resulting in many different forms of Swornites be they four armed varieties of warrior Swornites to those that have natural armor in the form of bony plates growing out of their bodies.

Swornites are a common race that can be found in most of the uncivilized lands. They don't get along will with other races be it the playable races or other villainous races that inhabit the game world of Sanctum of Forbidden Realms.

Game Data Entry Done

Current Avatar Information **:

Kouji is Beowulfmon, Seathien, Knight

Marcus is Kumamon, Kuridae, Warrior

Agumon (Savers) is Flameburst, Ropodidian, Warrior

? is Agunimon, Salalien, Rogue

Takato is V-Aero, Arvidian, Shaman

Guilmon is Takatomon, Roptera, Druid

? is Nekowomon, Nudian, ?

The Lost Gate Ch 7: Digimon

I Don't Own Digimon!

Well, this is unexpected. V-Aero muses as the Nudian Rogue stares at them wordlessly. Then after a few minutes, Nekowomon just sighs as she scratches the side of her head as she gets a puzzled look on her face. Then with a sigh she says to them, "Back to my question, what are you three low level players doing here at this dungeon?"

"I got an invitation to visit here." He pipes in and within seconds, he passes Nekowomon his quest log book. It wasn't long before the Nudian's eyes try to pop out of her head. "But... but... how? Why? You're not even at level twenty yet!" Nekowomon shouts with her hands thrown up into the air before she begins to pace with his log book still in her left hand.

None of them really understood what Nekowomon says as she paces about their hiding place, it's more then likely that she's talking in her species' native tongue. Besides, the vibes she's giving him reminds him of Rika on the war path, somebody's attention that you don't want on yourself at this point in time.

"I wonder what got her all tied up in knots?" Beowulfmon whisper at him and he would have frowned in thought as he tries to decide whether or not to answer the knight.

"Shhh." Takatomon shushes, complete with a index finger before his short muzzle and returns to watching the cream colored Nudian mutter about in a foreign tongue. He blinks in bemusement, kind of surprised that his partner shushed somebody.

"Keep quiet and still, avoid her piercing eyes when she glances in your direction. This is very typical behavior for a woman to go through." He whispers softly to Beowulfmon after a few minutes of Nekowomon not paying any attention to them.

He could tell that Beowulfmon was confused but it seems that his friend did try to follow his advice. Then finally, with a heavy sigh, the cream colored Nudian Rogue stops ranting in her native tongue and then after a few seconds, gives herself a shake before turning to look at them. "Sorry about that, it's just that, well, I'm kind of frustrated about my lack of progress in regards to summoning the boss of this library."

"No problem, although I take it nobody's gotten an invite before?" Beowulfmon asks and Nekowomon nods. "I've never heard of anyone receiving one, true, there are a few quests for this dungeon but mostly people come here to try and get rare loot items. I've been trying for weeks to loot this dagger from this boss but he never shows unless there is a party. My previous attempts at getting a group together haven't gone so well." Nekowomon admits and then hands his quest log book back.

"I knew I should have joined a guild but I do prefer to be freelance." Nekowomon admits with a sigh. "Which guild were you thinking of joining?" He asks the Nudian.

"Well, there was the Moon Hunters, Vampire's Promise, although I was very tempted to join this one guild called The Children of the Digital World." Nekowomon muses and V-Aero almost choked but managed to cough while his partner's eyes light up at the thought of joining a guild, making new friends. "What a... unusual name for a guild." Beowulfmon says and he finishes coughing to echo that agreement.

Nekowomon's emerald eyes light up in amusement as she shrugs. "Anyway, I don't believe you gave me your names." Nekowomon says, changing the subject and V-Aero blinks before glancing at his two friends. "I'm V-Aero, the Roptera is Takatomon, and this is Beowulfmon." He tells the Nudian since neither of the other two seem to be eager to say anything at the moment.

"V-Aero, huh?" Nekowomon muses and gives him a calculated look before turning to study the rest of the party. "Interesting names." Nekowomon muses and he cocks an eyebrow at her which causes the cream colored Nekowomon to look away in embarrassment.

"Ok then, I guess this means you're not interested in teaming up with us to face this boss?" He asks and Nekowomon's ears perk up at the mention of the word 'teaming up'. "Concerning you're the only ones about, I guess it couldn't hurt." Nekowomon says in a casual way that would have caused him to smile if it weren't for the beak.

"Yea, we made a new friend!" Takatomon says cheerfully and within seconds, his partner envelops Nekowomon in a big hug, much to the Nudian annoyance and embarrassment. "I think she's had enough, Takatomon." Beowulfmon muses and within seconds, his partner lets go of Nekowomon.

"Is he always that emotional?" Nekowomon asks softly while Takatomon moves to the edge of the bookcase to look to see if the Swornites had moved. "He's young." He admits in his partner's defense and Beowulfmon nods in agreement.

"Well, I am willing to pay money for the Dagger of NetherGate if the boss drops it as loot." Nekowomon says and V-Aero nods in agreement as they seal the agreement with a handshake. "They're here!" Takatomon calls out in a sing song way.

I blame myself for leaving him alone with Calumon, Impmon, and Terriermon that one Halloween as I helped my parents hand out that candy. He mentally groans as he begins to power up his lightning spell as Beowulfmon and Nekowomon move to aid his partner as Takatomon tries to fend off the Swornite warrior's attack.

" Bolt !" He cries and within seconds the attack snakes through the air, hitting the enemy in the face, causing the Swornite to yelp in pain. Within seconds, Beowulfmon manages to run the Swornite through with his sword while Nekowomon stabs the enemy in the back.

Loot appears and as the others move to face the rest of the Swornite group coming towards them. He picks up the loot before charging up another Bolt spell as his partner finishes charging up an aura spell. Nekowomon managed to dispatch one of the Swornite rogues with only three strike while Beowulfmon struggles with two enemy warriors. His spell hits one of them while his Digimon partner finishes casting a healing spell.

Loot continues to appear about them with Nekowomon's help they finally finish off the remaining Swornites without getting too injured. "Ok, let's roll to see who goes first." Beowulfmon says and within seconds, they all have dice out and he shakes his head as Takatomon cheers at getting first pick with Nekowomon coming in second, him third, and finally, Beowulfmon fourth.

Within a few minutes, the loot's been picked up and they finish healing up. "Ok, is this the group defending the boss or is there another group we'll encounter?" Beowulfmon asks Nekowomon seeing as she's their expert at this dungeon.

"There's a group of Swornite sorccerors that guard the librarian office that the boss appears in." Nekowomon says and with that, they motion for her to lead the way to this office. It made him wonder just what this boss will be like considering what kind of enemies they're encountering so far.

Current Avatar Information **:

Kouji is Beowulfmon, Seathien, Knight

Marcus is Kumamon, Kuridae, Warrior

Agumon (Savers) is Flameburst, Ropodidian, Warrior

? is Agunimon, Salalien, Rogue

Takato is V-Aero, Arvidian, Shaman

Guilmon is Takatomon, Roptera, Druid

? is Nekowomon, Nudian, Rogue

The Lost Gate Ch 8: Digimon

I Don't Own Digimon!

"Well, that was fun." Beowulfmon muses as they finish gathering the loot dropped by the last group before they enter into the office. V-Aero hums as he turns to regard his partner who's currently gliding about the library, leaping off of the top of the book cases whenever he needed to get higher in the air.

"He's a pretty young, isn't he?" Nekowomon muses and he nods in agreement. "He is but I won't want to change a thing about him." V-Aero replies as he recalls the time he raced through a black space with loads of Guilmon look-a-likes flying about in the air.

"Yea well, I think it's time to face the boss so we can head home." The white Nubian says and Beowulfmon nods in agreement. With a sigh, he calls out, "Takatomon! We're heading in now! Are you coming?"

"Coming V-Aero! Weeee!" His partner calls out as he comes gliding down to the ground. "That was fun, I can't wait to do it again!" Takatomon declares after folding the wing membrane back, turning his wings back into arms complete with fingers and a thumb.

"I'm sure we can find a place were you can fly to your hearts content, boy." He says and the Roptera flashes him a bright grin before his partner takes out his staff. He mentally sighs as he checks the time, it's getting late and he has school tomorrow, so they need to head off once they're done with the boss.

With a nod from Nekowomon, Beowulfmon opens the doors and they entered into the office. Within seconds, wind seems to whirl about some diagram on the floor. Within seconds, a transparent figure of a some kind of badger person seems to appear before them. Black scale armor clads the ghost while a rapier and a dagger is being held in the humanoid badger person's hands.

"Feel my wrath! By the name of the Lord of this Keep, you shall go no further!" The transparent boss says without moving his mouth, at all. With that said, the ten foot tall ghost charges them. Nekowomon moves between them and the charging specter.

V-Aero casts Bolt while Beowulfmon moves to aid the rogue. Within three minutes, they kill the boss, it seems that like the others enemies they encounter here in the library, the boss wasn't at a very high level. As Takatomon casts healing spells, he moves to loot the boss since it was his turn.

"The dagger's here." He says and Nekowomon sighs in relief more then likely. It didn't take long before he hands the dagger over while receiving money in exchange.

"Finally." Nekowomon says as she pockets the item. "Well, see you around, Nekowomon." Takatomon pipes and the rogue nods in agreement. "Yea, I guess I might." Nekowomon says and Beowulfmon takes out a Town Key.

"Well, nice dungeon crawling with you, Nekowomon. See you guys later!" Beowulfmon says and soon, there's a flash of light. . .

- - N - -

"Hey Koichi! How's it going?" Takuya asks once Koichi answers his cell phone. "Hey Takuya, it's going pretty good. I just finished my Biology homework, you?" Kouji's older brother asks as he turns down the volume of the TV.

"Doing pretty good. Anyway, is Kouji there with you?" Takuya says and he blinks. "No, he's not, why?" Koichi asks the Digidestine of Fire. "Has he phoned you?" Takuya asks and with a frown, Koichi hums a negative.

"He's not picking up his cell." Takuya says with a sigh. "Have you tried the house phone?" Koichi asks and his friend answers, "Yea but I just got the answering machine."

"I got a spare key for their place, if we meet over there, we can check in to see what's going on." He suggests and Takuya sighs as he says, "Hopefully nothing's wrong." Koichi agrees and within seconds, he's heading out of the house after writing a quick note for his mom.

- - N - -

"..." Beowulfmon was at a lost at what just happened. "Shouldn't you have vanished?" Takatomon asks and V-Aero nods in agreement.

"That's strange. Try it again." Nekowomon says and with a nod, he does so. "I'll try." He says and with all eyes on him, he once more tries to activate the key and once more, it flashes but he's still in the library's office.

"Maybe I should give it a try." V-Aero muses and within seconds, the light flashes but the Arvidian remains where he is with the key still in his talon hand. "How odd..." Nekowomon with a frown and Takatomon scratches the side of his head.

"Should I try?" Takatomon asks and V-Aero nods as he waves his hand. "Give it a go then." V-Aero says and sure enough, it doesn't work for the Roptera either.

"I guess it's my turn to try." Nekowomon says but V-Aero holds up his hand. "Wait a moment, if you do get out of here, are you going to get us some help or what?" V-Aero asks and he blinks before he nods in agreement.

"You seem to think I'll be able to." Nekowomon says and V-Aero tries to explain, "You weren't part of our group when we entered here. So whatever is keeping we three, from exiting out of here, might be geared to prevent us from leaving."

"Makes sense." Beowulfmon agrees. "So I take it you want me to phone the authorities?" Nekowomon asks and V-Aero sighs. "I suggest finding a guild and ask them for help since it we might need them to get out of this keep." V-Aero says and he nods.

"We need help now, not tomorrow." He muses. "Fine, if I get to the local town, I'll contact the most available guild that I can find." Nekowomon promises as she holds a Town Key in her hand. Within seconds a flash of light occurs and they find her gone.

"She got through whatever is keeping us here." Beowulfmon says and V-Aero nods with his hands over his chest. "So... now what do we do?" He wonders after a few minutes and Takatomon seems to be going through the bookcases, taking and piling some of the books on the floor.

"I'm going to build a fort!" Takatomon pipes in and V-Aero chuckles softly. "Well, we might as well help, right Beowulfmon? After all, we can't leave the game until we leave this dungeon." V-Aero says and with a sigh, he moves to help the humanoid bat collect books from the bookcases and help piling them by Takatomon, he felt a strange sense of Déjà vu as this does remind him of an other certain Digital library. . . Only this time, the Digital white cat vanished without causing the library to vanish.

- - N - -

"What do you mean by 'you just found them under a bridge'?!" Marcus bellows after getting a lucky break and finding said merchant on a boat floating down the large river.

"Shouting won't help it not be true!" The merchant cries from her position in the air, being held up there by Marcus's grip at the front part of the Floramon's leafy vest.

Current Avatar Information **:

Kouji is Beowulfmon, Seathien, Knight

Marcus is Kumamon, Kuridae, Warrior

Agumon (Savers) is Flameburst, Ropodidian, Warrior

? is Agunimon, Salalien, Rogue

Takato is V-Aero, Arvidian, Shaman

Guilmon is Takatomon, Roptera, Druid

? is Nekowomon, Nudian, Rogue

The Lost Gate Ch 9: Digimon

I Don't Own Digimon!

"Hey Kouji, you home?" Takuya shouts as he rings the door bell for like the twentieth time since he arrived. The chosen of Fire can't help but be antsy, after all, he hasn't been this worried about a friend for a very long time, like when they were in the Digital world and they were facing off against their enemies during their adventures.

You better be ok, Kouji or I'm totally going to find a way to kick your ass like a soccerball from here to kingdom come and back! Takuya declares mentally as he moves from the door to try and peer through a window. In the end, he returns to the porch and begins to slam his fist onto the wooden door's surface, more to have something to do then in hopes that Kouji would come answer the door.

In the end, with a sore fist, he moves to sit down on the stairs, wondering why Kouji's dog hasn't as of yet began to bark. He lost track of time when he took out his cell phone and began to play one of the many games he's downloaded on it. "Any change?"

He perks up and looks up to find Koichi standing before him. Feeling his face redden slightly, he pauses the game before pressing the power button lightly so that the cell phone would go back to its main display. "No and Jouta hasn't barked once since I arrived." Takuya tells Koichi as he stands up and moves to the door with Kouji's twin trailing behind him.

"Well, I can't say I'm surprised since dad did take Jouta with him to enter into an amateur dog show." The chosen of Darkness muses and he blinks, kind of surprised about that. "I think that in a few minutes, our step mom will be coming home after having a girls night with her friends." Koichi adds as Koichi uses his key to unlock the door.

Once the door is open, Takuya moves to turn on a light switch and when the living room lights up, they find Kouji resting on the couch with his VR console running. "Kouji... Kouji!" He says as he gently shakes the chosen of Light but other then a slight hum coming from the machine, nothing happens.

"Try turning it off." Koichi suggest from his position of behind the couch, Takuya glances at Koichi, noticing the worried look in his eyes. Nodding in understanding, after all, he did have a brother of his own to worry about and Tommy's kind of his presto little brother as well.

Takuya presses the power button and then waits for the humming to stop but it doesn't, the little gadget doesn't seem affected by this at all. With a frown the chosen of Fire presses the power button once more and yet again, it doesn't shut off. Within seconds, he keep pressing said button but nothing continues to happen.

He turns to look up at Koichi and finds that Koichi seems to be biting his lower lip. As he watches, Koichi moves to Kouji's head and yelps in pain as he tries to move the visor from Kouji's head. With a frown, he turns to the cord and decides to try yanking it out. And then . . .

And then he finds Koichi kneeling by him with a very worried look on his face and Koichi asking if he's alright. "Huh? What happened?" Takuya asks as he begins to feel how his back aches and that he's beginning to get a headache to go along with it.

"You tried pulling out the end for the visor and after a light show, you were sent flying into the wall." Koichi says and as he tries to get up, Koichi puts his hands on his shoulders. "No, don't get up, I've already called for assistance. You were pretty out of it, just staring blankly down at the ground, not even blinking." Koichi tells him and that explains why his eyes were threatening to tear up.

"No change?" He asks and Koichi nods as he answers, "No change."

- - N - -

Great, just what I needed to find, a bawl taking place in the guild hall. Nekowomon thinks scratchily as she watches as well over twenty avatars fight it out, she manages to spy out a few of the more well known guilds among the number. Glancing about, she finally spot three avatars, a Salalien, a race of humanoid squirrels, a Thowrahein, a race of humanoid horses, and a Naidith, a race of humanoid spiders.

"Excuse me, I'm kind of looking for some help..." The cream colored Nudian says once she's by their table, she couldn't help but flinch slightly as something large lands a few feet to her left. "What kind of help?" The Salalien asks in bemusement.

"Well, you see, three newbies are stuck in a dungeon." Nekowomon says and the Naidith seems to chuckle. "When aren't they?" The humanoid spider muses and she frowns. "Let me try this again, three newbies somehow got invites to the mystery keep and when they tried to teleport out, their Town Keys aren't working."

That got their complete attention. "What level are these newbies?" The Thowrahein asks and Nekowomon answers, "They're almost at level fifteen."

"Then how could they get a mission to that dungeon?" The Salalien wonders and she sighs. "They received invites to visit. I should also mentioned that the enemies they've currently encountered have underwent a level adjustment as well. But the main thing is, something is keeping them from teleporting out of the dungeon's library." Nekowomon says, making sure to re-empathize the problem.

"It sounds like the mystery dungeon's gone buggy." Naidith muses, making a small joke. "Regardless, I guess we should see if we can escort them out. I'm Agunimon, by the way, head of the Children of the Digital World guild. To my left is Meadow Runner and to my left is Master of Webbing." The Salalien now known as Agunimon says and she can't help but raise an eyebrow at the two.

"Err... Nekowomon." The white Nudian says and Agunimon smiles in a bemused kind of way. "So, who are we rescuing?" Master of Webbing asks and she answers, "Beowulfmon a Knight Seathian, Takatomon a Druid Roptera, and V-Aero a Shaman Arvidian."

With that, they get up and head out of the guild hall. "I'll send a message to Kumamon and Flameburst to see if they're on. If they aren't, then we'll head out on our own." Agunimon says and Meadow Runner pipes in, "Oh boy, we wouldn't want those two to skip out on a chance to kill things, huh?" Master of Webbing snickers while Agunimon just sighs, making her wonder just what that's about before deciding that she'll either find out sooner or later.

I just hope nothing's happened to them. Nekowomon thinks with a frown as she follows the three towards the mail box.

- - N - -

"Well, it looks well constructed, doesn't it?" Beowulfmon muses and V-Aero nods while both of them ignore the fact that help hasn't arrived before they finished construction. "How is it that the roof is staying on?" V-Aero wonders while Beowulfmon shrugs.

"Does it really matter?" Beowulfmon asks and V-Aero sighs while somewhere within the book fort, Takatomon seems to be dozing, it seems that the Roptera got tuckered out, not that either of them blames him, after all, it is late and they did have school in the morning.

"I still have homework to do..." Beowulfmon admits and V-Aero sighs as he lays a comforting hand on the Seathien's shoulder. "Well, we could always try going through that secret passage and see where it leads." He tells the knight, after all, boredom is what likely lead to Takatomon falling asleep on them since they were the ones to put the finishing touches on the outside of the fort, namely the archway that leads inside.

"I'm kind of amazed the boss hasn't respawn yet." Beowulfmon muses and V-Aero shrugs. "I guess..." He says before they both yawn.

"I say we give them an hour to make it here before we try that," V-Aero waves a hand to the hidden door they uncovered when they took the books off the shelves, "After all, I'm sure we could use some new to do and a change in scenery." He finishes.

"Agreed."

Current Avatar Information **:

Kouji is Beowulfmon, Seathien, Knight

Marcus is Kumamon, Kuridae, Warrior

Agumon (Savers) is Flameburst, Ropodidian, Warrior

? is Agunimon, Salalien, Rogue

Takato is V-Aero, Arvidian, Shaman

Guilmon is Takatomon, Roptera, Druid

? is Nekowomon, Nudian, Rogue

The Lost Gate Ch 10: Digimon

I Don't Own Digimon!

Koichi watches as Takuya is guided out of the house and into the back of the emergency vehicle now that Kouji has been loaded into the back. He steps up into the back and sits opposite of Takuya as the doors close. Once his brother is strapped in, the siren is turned on as they begin to head to the hospital.

He had phoned Takuya's home to tell the Chosen of Fire's parents about Takuya's accident. They would likely be meeting them there and then he phoned home to leave a message for his mom. Before he shut the door and locked it, he had left a written message for their step-mom.

Hopefully, they'll be able to figure out what's going on with his twin. He really hopes its nothing major either.

- - N - -

"Takato honey! It's time for bed!" Mei Matsuki calls out before entering into the living room. The mother of Takato Matsuki frowns as she walks towards the couch to find her son lying on the couch with the latest game console active.

"Takato?" Mei asks as she bends down to shake her son. Getting no response, she tries shaking her son while calling out her son's name but it doesn't seems to wake Takato up. With a worried look on her face, she moves to try and turn off the game system.

On seeing that it doesn't work, she calls out to her husband. "Takehiro! Dear, I need you to phone Henry's apartment. Something's wrong with our son! He's not coming to and I've tried turning off his game console!"

- - N - -

Taichi Yagami sighs, he had just finish talking to Mari when he encountered her leaving Rie's apartment building when he decided to check there for Neo's sister. Taichi got into a conversation with his old enemy now friend about things and learnt that Neo already had his VR console, a silver colored one, so the black one within the box he found after talking with Neo didn't belong to his friend.

Then asking if it could be Rie's, Mari had giggled and told him that Rie's already using her's at this moment. Taichi sighs, not really sure what to do with it, Taichi stands outside of Rie's apartment building, trying to decide what he should do with it now.

I guess I could always make a Lost and Found poster to post about the school to see if anyone lost it. Taichi, partner to Zeromaru decides. Once that's decided, the eighteen year old turns his back on the entrance doors leading into the apartment building, heading off in the direction of the nearest bus stop so that he can head to his dorm to make said posters.

- - N - -

Marcus Damon and his partner Digimon, Agumon, finally stop walking in the direction of this bridge that the Floramon merchant and found those VR consoles. Although it's more then likely that all of the evidence that could give them a lead as to who's behind this game and its game console.

"This is going to be a bust." He states as they eat some dry food stuffs. Agumon hums in agreement as the rookie Digimon speedily stuffs his face while Marcus found himself not feeling that hungry.

"I mean, I doubt there's going be any leads for us to follow when we reach this spot!" He continues while his partner nods rapidly in agreement. "Man, I feel like pounding something right about now!" Marcus growls as his free hand clenches into a fist.

"So we're going to do a dungeon when we're done eating?" Agumon asks and he nods. "That we are, I don't know about you, but this just feels like a wild goose chase." The teen declares and then hurries to finish the food in his hand before Agumon tries to steal it from him.

- - N - -

"Since when does this dungeon close up?" Master of Webbing wonders as they stare blankly at the keep who's draw bridge is now resting at the side of the keep's wall. "I think we might have other problems to deal with." Meadow Runner states.

Nekowomon turns around to see what it is that has captured Meadow Runner's attention. "Oh boy." She says as she watches as Swornites riding Pack Drakes begin to come out of the forest behind them.

"Crap, the lowest among them are level fifty-three." Agunimon curses. "This is about to be difficult, isn't it?" Master of Webbing muses and Meadow Runner hums in agreement while Nekowomon nods her head in agreement. "Seems so." Agunimon states calmly while taking out his weapons, they all mimick the humanoid squirrel as they prepare for the upcoming fight against the Swornite raiders.

- - N - -

Henry stares at the limp from of his friend, Takato Matsuki. He had phoned Rika and asked if Renamon and her could go check on Guilmon to inform him about what's going on with his Tamer. After phoning his dad and then Yamaki, Henry then proceeded to get a call from Rika telling him that the same thing seems to have happened to Guilmon.

"Terriermon, don't touch that cord. We don't know what could happen if we disconnect it." Henry warns his partner while pacing about behind the couch, trying to come up with ideas about what could have caused this to happen.

"Momentia, Henry! I'm sure that our goggle-head will be fine if I try . . . this!" Terriermon moves quickly in grabbing the cord and then leaping off of the couch with the cord in hand. "Terriermon!" He shouts and then watches with wide eyes as lights begin to flash before a thin strip of lightning zaps out of the main part of the console to hit Terriermon in the back.

"Terriermon!" Within seconds, Henry's bending over to check up on the rookie, praying that Terriermon's alright. "Mo... men... tia." Terriermon manages to say after a few seconds while he picks up the little green Digimon.

"Terriermon..." He says with a sigh as Henry holds his limp partner. As he glances to Takato's resting form, he's relieved to see that no harm seems to have come to the goggle-head of the group.

"What happened?" Mei Matsuki asks as she enters into the living room. "Just Terriermon being Terriermon. Nothing's really changed with Takato though." Henry tells the concerned mother of his friend. "Mo... men... tia." Terriermon manages to say once more, causing a slight smile to appear on his face as well as Mei's.

As Takato's mother leaves the room, he glances at the clock, wondering when that team Yamaki send will get here to pick them up.

Current Avatar Information **:

Kouji is Beowulfmon, Seathien, Knight

Marcus is Kumamon, Kuridae, Warrior

Agumon (Savers) is Flameburst, Ropodidian, Warrior

? is Agunimon, Salalien, Rogue

Takato is V-Aero, Arvidian, Shaman

Guilmon is Takatomon, Roptera, Druid

? is Nekowomon, Nudian, Rogue

The Lost Gate Ch 11: Digimon

I Don't Own Digimon!

"Will we find food in there?" Takatomon asks and Beowulfmon hears V-Aero sigh while his head droops down to his chest. Beowulfmon just shakes his head as he works on opening the door.

It took him a lot out of him but the door finally opens. "Now we just need some light." V-Aero muses and Beowulfmon nods in agreement. "Too bad there isn't a stick here bout that we can use as a make shift torch." The Seathien says with a sigh.

Takatomon moves to the entrance and then, suddenly, a piercing cry comes from the Roptera's throat, one that causes him to wince while V-Aero's feathers flatten a bit. Before their very eyes, Takatomon keeps doing it for a few minutes before stopping. I guess it's just something to do about his race being based on bats. Beowulfmon muses as Takatomon moves into the passageway.

Glancing at V-Aero, he moves to follow Takatomon through the passageway with the Avrvidian taking up the rear. As time went on, Takatomon got better at using his special talent so that it doesn't cause them to get headaches. The stairs spiraled down in a tight circle, Beowulfmon notices that V-Aero seems to be having some slight problems concerning his wings.

Then, finally, they make it to the bottom and there's a large opening that leads into a hallway. V-Aero sighs in relief and he turns to regard the birdman with a touch of bemusement. "Feel better?" He asks and V-Aero nods as his feathers seem to perk up before V-Aero gives his whole body a shake before his feathers return to their normal positions and fluffiness.

"I never thought about spreading my wings until I entered into that cramped stair case. It felt like I was buried alive..." V-Aero explains and he could only guess what that felt like. "Shh!" Takatomon says as the younger member of the party turns to shush them with a finger before his short muzzle.

"We're not alone!" Takatomon says softly as they halt before their friend. Beowulfmon moves a few steps in front of Takatomon and begins to sniff the air as he tries to hear whatever Takatomon has heard. He didn't really smell anything but he did hear metal clink as if something is walking about in metal armor.

"They're huge!" Takatomon hisses softly as he turns to glance questioningly at the Roptera. "How huge?" V-Aero asks softly and Takatomon blinks as he get a thoughtful look on his face.

"Let's see, the picture I get is they stand this tall," Takatomon says, stretching to the very tips of his toes with his right hand stretching at high as it can go. "Then there's this big at the shoulder." Takatomon says after a few seconds and once more, his arms stretch to the side.

"I wonder if they're Swornites..." V-Aero muses as Takatomon turns to take the lead once more. "I guess we'll find out." Beowulfmon says as he takes out his weapons, V-Aero hums in agreement. With that, Takatomon begins walking and they try and match the youngest member's pace.

- - N - -

Oh look, there's a message from Agunimon. I wonder what he wants. Kumamon muses as he opens up his mailbox. Within seconds, he grins as he reads it. "We're off to the mystery keep, Flameburst! It seems that there's trouble and a group of newbies need help getting out of it." He tells his partner who begins to grin in response to his own.

"Right, boss!" Flameburst cries out and they head off to get their stuff repaired before heading off to join Agunimon and his group. And maybe this will be the lead we need to find out who's responsible for creating this game and its system...

- - N - -

Rika sighs as they wait for those men that Yamaki had sent to gather up Guilmon for examination. The latest call from Henry, they learnt what happened when somebody yanks on the cord in hopes of snapping Takato out of the game. She couldn't help but be relieved that she had cautioned Renamon about touching parts of the game system.

"I wonder what's keeping them in that world." Rika's partner, Renamon, muses and she can't help but shrug. "It just might be a system error." Rika muses and then sighs as she finally spots a group of men in suits with a stretcher coming down the path, heading in their direction.

Stupid Goggle-head.

Current Avatar Information **:

Kouji is Beowulfmon, Seathien, Knight

Marcus is Kumamon, Kuridae, Warrior

Agumon (Savers) is Flameburst, Ropodidian, Warrior

? is Agunimon, Salalien, Rogue

Takato is V-Aero, Arvidian, Shaman

Guilmon is Takatomon, Roptera, Druid

? is Nekowomon, Nudian, Rogue

The Lost Gate Ch 12: Digimon

I Don't Own Digimon!

"What kind of Golems are those?" V-Aero wonders as they stare at the towering forms of moving armor as they patrol within a large room that seems to be a fork. Within the armor that seem to hover in the air, purple spheres of light seem to be moving about in the inner sphere of the armor, giving the armor a purple shine as the suit moves.

The armor itself is an off white with bright emerald runes on the flat parts of the armor, mainly the chest pieces and on the arm guards. The majority of the Golems seems to have horns that point backwards on their helmets with a select few, about three really, have horns that point forwards, giving them the impression of bull horns. These three weren't as broad 'shoulder' as the rest and they seem to float higher in the air then the others, giving them the impression of them being taller then the others of the group.

None of the strange Golems, if they're really Golems, had legs or any sort of weapons, making them wonder what kind of attack they can expect from the patrolling group of floating Golems. I guess we should just get this over with. V-Aero thinks as they all put away their spy glasses, hoping to get information about these strange guardians that were blocking their path.

With a glance at Beowulfmon and his partner, he moves out from behind one of the side of the entrance way. One of the floating suits of armor spots them and they freeze. Dreading the coming battle that's sure to come, he could only hope that he doesn't end up in some kind of coma when they're defeated by these hovering guardians of the Keep.

"Which of you is V-Aero?" A very gender neutral voice asks once the three slender suits of armor come towards them. "I am." V-Aero says and within seconds, a purple light seems to engulf him before the voice says once more, "You and your party are expected."

The other Golems that weren't the three before them move to the sides of the room. "Which door is the one we need?" Beowulfmon asks after a few seconds. "For use to tell you, you will be needed to answer a question, though, be forewarned, if you answer it incorrectly, you will be sent beyond this keep with your memories altered so that you do not recall any of this. Do you wish to answer the question or try your luck in choosing a door?" The voice asks as once more, the three strange Golems come to stand before them, they had moved to the side to allow them into the room so that they can study the door.

They glance at each other and then with a sigh, V-Aero answers, "We'll try the question." The three suits of armor glow for a brief second before the voice gives them the question, "What does Taichi and Zeromaru make when combined?"

He blinks as he asks himself. What an odd question. Is it even relevant to this game?

- - N - -

"Sir? Is that really the question you want to ask?" A PetitMamon asks his boss. "If he really is who I think it is, they should be able to answer this question, proving once and for all their identity! Then I shall get my vengeance on him, one that I've desired for so long!"

The shadowy being leans forward as the Roptera's mouth opens, likely to answer the question his programed minions have asked.

- - N - -

"Don't the chi in Taichi mean one? And Zeromaru means zero zero?" Takatomon asks and Beowulfmon turns to give the younger member of the party a look of disbelief while V-Aero sighs. "One hundred I guess." V-Aero muses and their attention is grab when the suits of armor flare up in a purple light.

"That is correct. You have passed the test, you many proceed Zeromaru." The voice says and before anyone could say anything, the light grows bigger and their surroundings seem to vanish as the light causes him to become temporary blind for a second.

As his vision returns, Beowulfmon glances about, noticing that they're now in a huge room with a large army of Swornites. "Great, just what we need, a face off against an army of minions." He mutters and V-Aero hums in agreement while Takatomon says, "Huh, what's this?"

Current Avatar Information **:

Kouji is Beowulfmon, Seathien, Knight

Marcus is Kumamon, Kuridae, Warrior

Agumon (Savers) is Flameburst, Ropodidian, Warrior

? is Agunimon, Salalien, Rogue

Takato is V-Aero, Arvidian, Shaman

Guilmon is Takatomon, Roptera, Druid

? is Nekowomon, Nudian, Rogue

The Lost Gate Ch 13: Digimon

I Don't Own Digimon!

As V-Aero and Beowulfmon turn to look at Takatomon, his partner pulls some cord that's hanging there. Within seconds, the floor behind the horde of Swornites begins to open to reveal a strange being that holds a Gabumon within its energy based body, one who's shape takes the form of a humanoid lizard with quills growing out of its head like hair. What passes as armor for this being is made out of energy that's a different color.

"A Digimon . . ." He hears Beowulfmon says and he adds in agreement, "A Gabumon." V-Aero mentally frowns, trying to think of why that Gabumon is here, in this game. "He's not in the greatest shape, is he?" Beowulfmon says softly and he nods in agreement while his partner sighs.

"Why couldn't it have summoned a table filled with food?" Takatomon wonders and he chuckles slightly as V-Aero shakes his head slightly as he readies his weapon. "I guess if we rescue the Gabumon, we'd be allowed to leave the game." Beowulfmon muses as the Seathien moves to stand before Takatomon and himself.

"Likely." He agrees while Takatomon twirls his staff for a few seconds before holding it firmly in both of his hands. " Rose Aura !" His partner declares and the Swornites begin to come towards them.

"So we met face to face, huh? Let's see how well you and your party will do against my army of Swornites, enemy of my master, Zero!" The energy lizardman declares as the spear that the being is holding points right at him. "Why do they keep calling you Zero?" Beowulfmon wonders and he shrugs, already charging up a spell while Beowulfmon moves to fight one of the grunts that's gotten too close to their group.

That's what I would like to know. Although, it sounds like this Zeromaru must have been something if one of his enemies has went to all of this trouble to get vengeance on him. V-Aero muses as he watches as his spell hits one of the Swornites that were coming to flank Beowulfmon, causing said enemy unit to focus its attention on him.

Grimly, he begins to engage said unit in battle, careful to make sure that Beowulfmon didn't get over his head while Takatomon casts healing spells on them. V-Aero can only hope that his partner remains unmolested by the Swornites since otherwise, they'd be more or less screwed up in this battle since he highly doubts that Beowulfmon and himself will have time to pull out their collection of healing potions to help restore their HP.

- - N - -

As Flameburst and Kumamon arrive beyond the forest, they can't help but pause at the sight that greets them. Where did all those Swornite raiders come from? Kumamon wonders for a few seconds before letting out a war cry as he leads the charge forward, head long into the nearest bunch of units that were moving to flank a cream colored Nudian.

Within seconds, two of the eight raiders have fallen, one to his partner and another to him. "Looks like you got a bit of trouble, eh?" Kumamon muses as he slams the butt of his axe into the ground, causing a minor earthquake while Flameburst uses Blade Rush to attack one of the stunned raiders. "You could say that." The Nudian says before she moves to take out another of the stunned raiders as he moves to attack one as well.

In time, Kumamon makes his way to his Guild Leader. "Hey Agunimon! How are you guys holding up?" He calls out while Master of Webbing's Fire Storm hits in the middle of the enemy's main body while Meadow Runner stays close to the shaman. "Well enough, Kumamon. I'm not sure where these reinforcements are coming from though. No matter how many we take out, they receive the same number of back up units." Agunimon says before sighing.

"Frankly, it's beginning to get a little tiring." The Salalien leader says and Kumamon hums as he casually kills one of the Swornite rogues that were mixed in with the grunts and the spearmen while the main body made up of Raiders come in from behind the wall of walking units. "So you haven't managed to get into the keep to get the newbies out?" He asks and Agunimon nods in agreement.

"Keep is closed up, the bridge is drawn up so we can't get in." Meadow Runner pipes in and Kumamon glances towards the keep to see that as Meadow Runner has said, the bridge was up. He frowns, not liking that one bit.

"I can see why that's troubling." Kumamon admits before he declares, "Then we should find out where the reinforcements are coming from and put a stop to them!" Agunimon and Meadow Runner exchange looks while Master of Webbing points out, "And who can we spare to go do that?"

"I'm sure that between Kumamon and myself, we should be able to make it to their back lines." Agunimon muses thoughtfully and he nods in agreement. "Which would leave Flameburst behind to help us." Master of Webbing muses and he glances at his partner and the cream colored Nudian.

"Although... Who's the new recruit?" Kumamon asks and Master of Webbing answers, "She's not a recruit, she's the one who asked for our help. It seemed Nekowomon had hooked up with said group inside of the keep before they found they couldn't use their keys to leave the dungeon, they asked her to find help."

"I see." Kumamon says and so, they drift over to where Nekowomon and his partner are fighting before Agunimon and himself head off to do their mission to investigate where the reinforcements are coming from. "You're in charge of their safety while Agunimon and I are gone, ok Flameburst?" Kumamon tells his partner and his Digimon partner nods in agreement.

"You got it boss!" The Ropodidian says as he gives him a salute before refocusing his attention on the incoming attackers. With that done, Agunimon and him began to fight their way towards the edge of the battle field that's littered with not just enemy troops but also with loot from fallen Swornites.

Hold on tight, Agumon! We'll put an end to their supply line of back up troops. Kumamon thinks as Agunimon and himself slowly make their way towards their target.

- - N - -

"Koichi?" Takuya asks and he moves to the side of the bed where his friend is resting. "Yea Takuya?" Koichi asks as he stands where Takuya can see him.

"Any word about what's going on with Kouji?" The Chosen of Fire asks as Takuya turns his head to look at him. "Nothing." Koichi admits with a sigh and as Takuya is about to say something, the door to the room opens and Takuya's parents and younger brother enters into the room.

As Takuya's mom rushes towards the bed, Koichi backs away, he couldn't help but notice the worried look on Takuya's family. For a moment, Koichi can already imagine the looks on his mom, his dad, and his step mom's face.

The Chosen of Darkness sighs as he moves to head out of the room, leaving Takuya alone with his family, he did have the room number that his twin is resting in, he might just head over there to see if there's any change.

Kouji . . .

Current Avatar Information **:

Kouji is Beowulfmon, Seathien, Knight

Marcus is Kumamon, Kuridae, Warrior

Agumon (Savers) is Flameburst, Ropodidian, Warrior

? is Agunimon, Salalien, Rogue

Takato is V-Aero, Arvidian, Shaman

Guilmon is Takatomon, Roptera, Druid

? is Nekowomon, Nudian, Rogue

The Lost Gate Ch 14: Digimon

I Don't Own Digimon!

"So, what's the verdict?" Rika asks Yamaki when the blond arrived into the room where most of the Tamers were waiting with Takato's parents. All of them waiting on news of what's going on with Takato and Guilmon. Those that were pacing quit as everyone turns to look at the head of Hypnos, waiting for Yamaki to answer her question.

As the door closes behind him, the blond man's lips press. Then Yamaki finally says, "We have yet to know the true cause of what's keeping Takato and Guilmon in the game world. We do understand why we haven't been able to shut down their connection though."

The tension in the room is felt by everyone as they wait for Yamaki to continue speaking. It didn't surprise Rika when a dead zeppo lighter appears in the blond's hands. "At this moment, Takato and Guilmon's conscious minds are not currently housed inside of their bodies at this moment. Since this technology is new to us, we're not sure if this is what's suppose to happen or if someone has trapped them within the game on purpose." The lighter clicks before opening once more to be clicked shut once more.

"Will Takato snap out of this unharmed?" Mei asks and Yamaki answers as the lighter in his hand clicks closed. "We must have faith in your son's abilities. After all, he has his partner with him so we know that whatever is going on with them, they have each other." Yamaki replies.

- - N - -

"That's the cheapest looking Gate Arch I've ever seen!" Kumamon hisses and Agunimon can't help but agree as they stare at the feeble wooden gate that's lashed together with ropes and chains. The few sorcerers that were manning the Gate Arch are accompanied by enslaved elementals.

"Just think of it like this, Kumamon, we'll have an easier time destroying it then the one at Ashglow Temple." He points out and Kumamon grunts in agreement, the memory of losing so many party member during that quest in that dungeon. Agunimon can't help but be thankful that they had a few high level Druid capable of reviving the dead, it help a great deal in that dungeon.

"I guess so." Kumamon says and the Salalien sighs. "Anyway, I believe I can get close to set up a few of these bombs as long as you distract the lot, which shouldn't be too hard, all things considered." Agunimon says and Kumamon flashes him a feral toothy grin before slowly stalking forward, towards the edge of their cover.

With a shrug, Agunimon soon wills himself to vanish from view before slowly moving to circle behind his current location so that he can set up those bombs in hopes of destroying the the Gate Arch before the next squad of Swornites teleport here using said gate.

- - N - -

" Bolt !" V-Aero watches as his spell hits the transparent lizardman who currently holds captive a Gabumon. The lightning spell hits the boss, streaks of lightning arc over the surface of the armor while V-Aero charges forward to get in close to hit the boss with his currently enchanted mace.

Beowulfmon and Takatomon were both finishing off the few remaining Swornites and they should be joining him in fighting this boss. Just managing to duck under the incoming spear point, V-Aero's mace hits the energy based lizardman in the knee cap with the head of the mace entering and exiting out of said spot with little effort. Caught by surprised, V-Aero reacted too slowly as the spear hits him in the side, sending him to the floor on his left side.

"V-Aero!" Takatomon yells out and V-Aero rolls as the spear point tries to spear him. It really doesn't help that these wings are making it slightly painful to roll about on the ground. V-Aero thinks as he unfolds his wings once he's on his knees.

Then as the spear comes towards him, V-Aero flaps his wings as he quickly jumps backwards. The spear misses him and it wasn't long before Beowulfmon comes to block the next blow with his shield. "I really need to get one of those." V-Aero mutters as he rotates his left shoulder before extending his left wing fully before refolding it up onto his back.

"Good to know you're already thinking about the future." Beowulfmon muses as the Knight moves to engage the boss in closer quarters. With a sigh, V-Aero rummages through his pack for a certain potion. Once the Arvidian drinks the potion, he feels a great deal better and filled with more energy.

Giving himself a shake, V-Aero once more moves in to aid the other two members of the party in attacking the being that holds a Digimon captured. The boss hasn't said a word since that bit about calling him Zero, which is fine by him since they hadn't really come here for a chit chat. Although, this is the most single level grinding experience that we've been through as of yet. V-Aero muses as he moves to fight along side his partner, Takatomon.

"I think if we get that Digimon out of there, the boss will vanish." Beowulfmon states as they pull a few feet away from the lizardman. "It's worth a shot." V-Aero admits and it wasn't long before both Beowulfmon and Takatomon were eyeing him.

"What?" V-Aero asks. "Well, you do have a set of wings that aren't your hands..." Beowulfmon says and blinks in startlement at that statement. "Well, I guess that's true." He admits with a sigh as he turns to regard the rookie that's floating about in the boss's midsection.

"I'll need a running start to get into the air though." V-Aero tells the pair and they both nod in agreement. So, as they move towards the boss, he moves to the other side of the room. "I hope this works." V-Aero mutters out loud to himself once he feels his wings touching the wall behind him.

After a few seconds, he finally begins to run towards the lizardman made up of transparent energy. With his upper body leaning as forward as it can go while he keeps his balance, he begins to flap them and slowly, very slowly, his talon feet were no longer clicking on the floor.

Veering to the right, V-Aero slowly climbs into the air. Soon he's circling a few feet below the ceiling of the room. Ok, I can see the appeal of having wings. V-Aero thinks to himself as he finally feels confident that he's not going to plummet to his death.

Giving himself a mental shake, he focuses on why he's in the air. Within seconds, he enters into a dive that's to take him right into the heart of the boss. Just as he enters into the body of the boss, V-Aero managed to have his hands outstretched so that he might grab the rookie.

His eyes close automatically as he enters into the energy prison that holds the rookie Digimon. V-Aero feels numb as he begins to breath once more. "Watch out!" Beowulfmon cries out as his beak parts as he coughs a bit.

Then, suddenly, everything goes white . . .

- - N - -

" TAKATOMON! " Guilmon finally shouts and suddenly, the red rookie is already rolling to his side as the virus rookie has already pulled off the visor to look around.

"Guilmon, calm down!" Renamon says after teleporting into the room after hearing his holler. "Takato was right next to the boss when it exploded! Is he alright? Is that Gabumon with him ok?" Guilmon asks, his yellow eyes pinning Renamon just by looking her right in her eyes.

"Holy crap! How did that Wild One get in here?" Someone calls out in the hallway.

Current Avatar Information **:

Kouji is Beowulfmon, Seathien, Knight

Marcus is Kumamon, Kuridae, Warrior

Agumon (Savers) is Flameburst, Ropodidian, Warrior

? is Agunimon, Salalien, Rogue

Takato is V-Aero, Arvidian, Shaman

Guilmon is Takatomon, Roptera, Druid

? is Nekowomon, Nudian, Rogue

The Lost Gate Ch 15: Digimon

I Don't Own Digimon!

"Watch out!" Kouji shouts only to find himself in a very unfamiliar room and connected up to a machine. "Kouji!" He hears Koichi say in a concerned tone.

As Kouji breathes rapidly, it takes him a few seconds before he manages to finally calm down. "Kouji?" Koichi asks him and Kouji smiles slightly as he turns to look at his twin.

"How did I get here?" He asks and Koichi seems to relax a bit as his brother explains the events that lead not just him, but Takuya to be checked into the hospital. Well, I guess that answers that. Kouji muses to himself with a sigh.

"So, what happened? I mean, you did shout pretty loudly when you woke up." Koichi asks him. "We got an invite to a dungeon called the Mystery Keep. We hooked up with a high level rogue while in the library who had been trying to farm for a dagger that drops from the library boss. Once we defeated the boss, we tried teleporting out but only Nekowomon managed to teleport out while V-Aero, Takatomon, and myself were stuck." Kouji explains.

"In time, we grew bored so we started building a fort with the books that's collected on the cases. After clearing off this one section, we found a hidden door. We decided to wait a bit for a rescue party before exploring it." He admits with a sigh, his mind replaying the trek through the spiraling stair case. "We then came to a large fork with floating golems. We were giving the choice between picking a door or answering a question."

"We picked the question and once we answer it correctly, we were teleported to a place where we encountered a horde of enemy units and when Takatomon pulled this cord, a energy lizard boss showed up." He can't help but frown as he thinks about the Digimon that was floating within the boss. I wonder what happened to that Gabumon. . .

"What's wrong?" Koichi asks. "Floating within the boss was a rookie Digimon, Koichi. And what's odd is both V-Aero and Takatomon knew what a Digimon was as well." He admits as he recalls how V-Aero named the species of said Digimon.

"What do you mean?" His brother asks and Kouji replies, "They identified said Digimon as Gabumon, how would they know that if they haven't encountered Digimon before?"

Before they could continue their conversation, a nurse enters and it wasn't long before he's getting a check over.

- - N - -

"Where am I?!" Takato glances over to the rookie Digimon that's just woken up. Guilmon pipes in, "Hi! I'm Guilmon." And then Calumon pipes in, "And I'm Calumon, you want to play?"

The Gabumon's eyes widen as the rookie turns to look in their direction while he's getting examined by one of the medical staff in the employment of Hypnos. "Humans!" The rookie wearing a fur pelt cries out in alarm as he also points at them.

"..." Nobody really seems to know what to say to that. "Well, yea. I'm Takato by the way, Guilmon's Tamer." Takato tells the panicky rookie. "Where am I?!" Gabumon demands. "You're in the human world." Renamon says, appearing in the room, startling him and the Digimon.

The Gabumon's eyes widen and then, the rookie faints. "..." Nobody really knows what to do with the Digimon, so they just decided to wait until the rookie woke up on his own once more. I wonder what happened to Beowulfmon... Takato wonders while Guilmon begins to poke the Gabumon's furry pelt.

- - N - -

"What the . . .!" Before their very eyes, the enemy Swornites, be they Raiders or Grunts, they all vanish, leaving loot behind. "Look at the Keep!" Flameburst cries out and Nekowomon turns to see what it is that's grabbed the Ropodidian.

"The keep..." Meadow Runner says, trailing off. "It's disappearing!" Master of Webbing cries out and she could only just stare wide eyed at the sight. "The newbies . . ." Nekowomon states, remembering why they were there in the first place.

"They can't survive that." Flameburst says and she agreed with that. "But still, why is the keep disintegrating?" Master of Webbing wonders and it seems that nobody has an answer, even when once the remains of the building is gone, trees rapidly began to grow.

"I guess that's one dungeon's that's closed indefinitely." Master of Webbing says dryly before they begin to move about the area, collecting the loot that's laying about. "This is going to take a while." Nekowomon muses as she pauses in sorting through her bags, making sure she's got enough room to put away the most of the rare or uncommon items that she's finding laying about.

Luckily, a few of the items that have been dropped were improved slot bags, allowing her to carry a larger amount of loot away from this site. This has definitely been a profitable night. Too bad Neo's not on that much or that the others have their own consoles. I'm sure Taichi would enjoy this game. Thinks Nekowomon, trying to figure out which of the races would appeal to her good friend, Taichi.

- - N - -

"Well, that sucks." Kumamon states and he knows that Agunimon likely agrees with his statement. "True. Although if they're vanished here, they might have vanished where the others are." His guild leader muses and with a shrug, he returns to collecting loot off the ground, a task that slowly caused him to drift away from Agunimon.

Hopefully, this isn't a dead end that I fear it is. Kumamon thinks with a sigh.

- - N - -

"Sir? Is that suppose to happen?" PetitMamon asks now that the Mystery Keep has been reduced to a forest.

"That dungeon's served its purpose. Now, now we can start the next phase. Have the patch ready to be released by the end of the month. For now, we'll allow Zero and his friends to recover from the feedback." PetitMamon's boss states and the little Digimon nods. "It will be as you've ordered, master."

As the screen vanishes, PetitMamon heads out to go speak with those in charge of the software of the game.

Current Avatar Information **:

Kouji is Beowulfmon, Seathien, Knight

Marcus is Kumamon, Kuridae, Warrior

Agumon (Savers) is Flameburst, Ropodidian, Warrior

? is Agunimon, Salalien, Rogue

Takato is V-Aero, Arvidian, Shaman

Guilmon is Takatomon, Roptera, Druid

Rei (V-Tamer) is Nekowomon, Nudian, Rogue

Invite Only: Danny Phantom

I don't own Danny Phantom or Vampire the Masquerade!

Looks like I'm not the only one to receive an invite to this particular party. Muses one Daniel Fenton, a relatively young member of Kindred society. He's not very eager about this, if anything, it is rather suspicious given that he is without a clan.

Caitiff is the official name among those who are Camarilla. There were many nicknames that applied to his 'clan', none very flattering. So why invite me to this shindig?

No answers come forth as Danny comes before the gate of the manor. "Invitation?" A fuzzy voice asks and he rolls down the car window, flashing the invite at the camera.

A buzz activates and the gates open, he puts the invite on the seat next to him before driving through. As he pulls up to the entrance, a human is waiting for him. Putting the car in park, Danny is sure to grab the invite before opening the door and stepping out of the car.

The man approaches and without a word, gets into the vehicle. Soon his car is driven away while he walks through the door, another servant opening it for him. As the door closes, the servant escorts him to the hall where the party is held.

It wasn't long before he is in need of his manners as he approaches his host, Vlad Masters, or should he say, Prince Masters as the Ventrue has recently ascended to the 'throne' of the city in the recent decade after the previous Prince was driven to disgrace due to a ghost. He's not sure the details on the event, as it had happened before he arrived in the city as a mortal, let alone when he was Embraced.

"Welcome, young Daniel. I hope you didn't have any trouble with security." Prince Masters greets him, no hand offered to shake.

"I ran into no trouble as I had kept the invite on my person, sir." Danny replies, not feeling comfortable being near the Kindred that can call down a Blood Hunt on him if he gives the other the slightest reason. "I thank you for the invite." He states.

Soon enough, he drifts off towards a familiar face, Tucker Foley of Clan Toreador who's speaking with the infamous Sam Manson of Clan Brujah. Danny had previous spoken with Trucker concerning computers and a few other selected topics. Unlike the typical Toreador, Tucker's passions are geared towards all things electrical, waxing poetry about his PDA and Smart Phone.

Although they look to be the same age, Tucker had been Embraced six years ago and hasn't aged a night, physically and only recently has been allowed to stand on his own two feet. He does enjoy Tucker's company previously, even if it kind of creeps him out when Tucker begins to hold the PDA or Smart Phone to his cheek and begins waxing poetry about how much he loves the item. Although this is the first time I recall him speaking with Sam.

As he gets closer, Danny reminds himself that they are in an official social setting. "Evening Mr. Foley. I don't believe we've met, I'm Daniel Fenton of the Caitiff." He says, he does his best to keep from grinning at the look that Sam gives him as she crosses her arms and gives him a frankly, blank look.

"Ah yes, Dan... Mr Fenton, it's good to see you. I hadn't expected that you'd receive an invite as well." Tucker says with a wide grin and eyes seem to be dancing with suppress laughter.

"A Caitiff, huh?" Ms Manson murmurs, her eyes glowing with suspicion. "Funny, I would have thought that our Oh High and Mighty Prince was going to only invite those with... Class and Breeding." There's a lot of venom in her tone as she adds that, causing him to become rather self conscious.

"Well, it surprised me as well, but well, here I am." Danny replies, not particularly liking the look Sam is giving him. He can't help but fidget under her seemingly accusing gaze.

"Ah, this is Sam Manson of the Brujah. As you can see, she's rather suspicious of Prince Master's motives for this party tonight." Tucker pipes in. "Which, of course, is par course of her clan. You know, rebel against authority and protest against the brutality of turning animals into Ghouls."

"So she's not against humans becoming Ghouls?" He asks curiously.

"Oh please, there's like, six billion humans in the world and barely any wild places left for free born animals to roam! I bet in fifty years, there won't be any tigers left in India let along in Russia!" Danny takes a step back as Ms Manson speaks rather passionately about how soon the only beautiful predators will be the ones behind bars, in zoo breeding programs.

It's clear that Ms Manson is very passionate about this as she continues, it kind of sounded like a usual topic for her. Danny glances towards Tucker and notices that the Toreador looking faintly bemuse as he nods his head at what he assumes are familiar ques. A few of the others that were near all see to have no trouble ignoring the passionate rant from the Brujah.

Moving closer in a clear and noticeable manner, he whispers to Tucker, "Is this something she usually preaches about, I take it?"

Tucker just nods his head and within seconds, Ms Manson turns to him, asking, "Don't you agree, Mr Fenton?"

Before he can decide how to answer that, Prince Masters wants their attention. It seems everyone's attention swings towards the Prince. "I would like to have everyone's attention." Once it's silent, the Prince continues, "Now then, I'm sure many of you know each other and many of you have likely noticed a fresh face. As I see he hasn't had a chance to mingle with everyone, I shall be the one to introduce him."

The look in the Prince's eyes as he look directly at Danny made him wish he could turn invisible right then an there. "Daniel Fenton, Clan Caitiff... or at least that's how he calls himself. In actuality, he is of Clan Salubri."

Clan what? Danny wonders as outrage begins to ring out among the Court.

"CUT! And what the hell, Vlad?! That wasn't something you were suppose to share!"

*** * * * ***

Ghost Writer's niece, Can't believe he even has a sibling , interrupts the LARP, glaring at Masters. Vlad lets out an annoyed grunt as he puts on the airs of someone who's far too important for someone like her. "I don't see any reason to draw it out. It's not like I am willing consented to continuing this fantasy, the sooner this game is over the sooner I can go back to recreating my life."

"Oh, so you no longer wish for my help in that?" Maleficent, a ghostly sorceress that he had the... pleasure of meeting about couple of years ago, inquires as she comes floating down from her perch.

Vlad looks rather uneasy while Cassie, the niece of Ghost Writer, continues to glare daggers at Masters. "And you signed a contract!" Cassie snarls, her hands going towards the pack she carries around. "This one!"

Cassie holds up and out the contract. Most of the other people at the LARP seem to be upset over the ending of the scene as well. Then again, most of those present were here because they wanted to be here, it's the odd one out that didn't volunteer to be part of these sessions of role-playing. If not for the blackmail of that particular incident , I would have likely been dragged into it by Sam.

He glances at his steady girlfriend, sure enough, Sam has her arms across her chest and an annoyed look upon her face. I still think it's scary that the two of them are in the same room together. Danny thinks, glancing towards the Sorceress before looking back at Sam.

"Yes, well, I'm sure I can do it by myself." Vlad stubbornly states and he shivers at the cold smile that graces Maleficent's face.

"Perhaps after the breech in contract has been addressed." Maleficent mentions and that seems to cause Cassie's eyes to light up.

"What kind of effect is this breech?" He asks curiously and Maleficent turns to look at him, delight in her eyes, kind of making him wish he hadn't spoken up.

"Oh, I'm sure I that Cassie's imagination will lend itself to something suitable." Is Maleficent's reply. He's more then glad when her focus is once more on Vlad.

"Give me time and I'm sure I can have something to pay the breech." Vlad says, it's clear he's confident in finding a way to buy out of whatever this breech is.

"That's stupid. In the story, Maleficent is a vengeful Fae and according to stories, the Fae are really big in keeping to their word." Sam says, somehow coming to stand next to him. "He won't be buying his way out of this breech."

"You know, something about her is really familiar..." Tucker says. "Something about a gym class..."

"Ah, well, yea, she did show up a couple of years ago, back in high school." Danny admits, No point in denying that we haven't fought before.

Cassie floats down to the floor and, soon, moves about Vlad, who protests and continues to wheel 'n' deal his way out of the ramifications of breaking his contract. Sure, it's likely that the pair used the old Stick and Carrot route to get Vlad to sign the contract but Masters did fall for it. He feels a bit of pity for the older Halfa but then, it's not like the other has done much to try and ask for forgiveness from the general public or whatever.

"You know, did we ever find out why she was at the high school? I mean, she's fairly classy and likely has refined tastes, so what could she want with teenagers?" Tucker muses, it's not the first time that his best friend has shown he is attracted to Maleficent.

"I don't think I ever asked her while I was interrupting her at the school." He states with a shrug. Not that I didn't find out about it later.

"So... she threatened you? I mean, if Sam says she's vengeful then..." Tucker asks. "I mean, Cassie said you were the first to agree to attend this LARP."

"I can honestly say she didn't threaten me with magic. We just talked." Danny tells Tucker. About how I should tell Sam, at least, of the Race and promised not to tell anyone about it unless I wanted them to know if I agree to participate in this LARP.

"Really? She just showed up out of the blue, no shots fired from you? Not even a misunderstanding?" Tucker exclaims, giving him a look of disbelief.

"What can I say? She got me in a good mood." He says, adding, "It was like she was waiting until I was before showing up."

"Sorceress." Sam points out.

"A cat." Cassie says abruptly. "He'll be a natural as a kitty cat."

"Now wait a..." Vlad didn't get a chance to finish his statement as a white flash erupts, momentarily blinding those looking at Masters. As his vision returns, Danny begins to chuckle and quickly, the room erupts in laughter while a navy blue and silvery white tom cat is standing where Vlad once stood.

Quick as a whip, Cassie has Vlad in her arms and within seconds, causing the cat to purr. He's pretty sure that Vlad didn't stand a chance while one of the LARPers addresses Maleficent, "Ah... are we going to continue with the LARP? Is it the end of tonight's session?"

"I do believe this is the end of tonight's session but you may stick around and enjoy the refreshments." Maleficent addresses the room and soon, people begin to do as they want.

"So... who'd going to be the new Prince?" Another LARPer asks curiously.

"I'm sure Cassie will come up with something." Maleficent replies primly. Soon enough, Maleficent fades from view, either becoming invisible or just teleporting away.

"So... refreshments?" Tucker suggests, motioning towards the bar. They were serving drinks, both varieties.

"I think I got some homework to do." Danny admits.

"The job of a hero is never over." Tucker states.

"I think I'll stick around. See you at the apartment, ok?" Sam says, after giving him a quick kiss on the cheek.

"Sounds like a plan." He says, giving her a warm smile. He takes out the keys, dropping them onto her hand. "Just encase you want to leave before Tucker."

Sam nods, they hug each other and once she's stepping away, Danny transforms into his Ghost form. With a thought, he turns invisible and takes off, phasing through the walls and ceiling. Once he's above the gate, he finds himself trapped in a green sphere.

"A moment, please." Maleficent says and he turns around to find her behind him. The sphere vanishes as they look at each other.

"You know, I thought we already had our chit chat last month." Danny states to Maleficent.

"We had a discussion then and now we're having another one." She tells him. "You do realize you had nothing to be ashamed about. I was the one who fell for the taunt by a known rival."

"Yea, well, I rather not be on the receiving end of horse jokes." He states.

"Very well, but you still have the medal and my offer be there when you tell her is still there." She tells him and he nods.

Turning, he continues flying through the air. Letting himself enjoy the way the wind moves through his hair and across his skin. For now, not letting what ifs and could be plague his mind.

The End

Author's Comments: Yea, I started this back in October 20th of 2014 and just got around to completing it tonight. I had a bit of a run, preparing for a D&D game that I'm the DM of and was itching to type some more.

To learn more about how Maleficent and Danny meet, check out the earlier chapter entitled Maleficent's Choice which is Chapter 64 .

Strawberry Goblin Part 1: Re:Monster

I don't own Bleach or Re:Monster!

A mist slowly curls about the floor from the window. A fat gibbous moon shines through the window as a sleeping teen sleeps on, oblivious to the Hollow outside of his window. The mist continues to pour out of the shell like mask while stalk eyes numbering half a dozen watch its back for any restless Shinigami or Spiritually empowered humans seeking to stop it from its self appointed task.

The mist slowly fills the room as minutes tick by, slowly raising to blanket even the teen upon the bed. Seeing this, the Hollow shifts the properties of the mist, soon it changes from a sleeping mist to a highly poisonous one with paralyzing properties. Not that the Hollow need have worried, the teen sleeps on and within seconds, the poison takes hold.

It chuckles softly to itself as it seems that its task went on without a hitch. Its eyes turning to focus on the dying ex-Substituted Shinigami.

Thud!

The Hollow's head is pierced with a glowing arrow and the Hollow breaks apart while a pair approach, one of them sporting a face painted up.

He watches expectantly as Ichigo expires only... no soul appears within the room. The Captain curses but waits and waits for the teen's ghost to appear only it never does.

Day 1

Ichigo feels warm and at peace, sure, he feels something next to him but it doesn't really concern him much. It seems sudden but, he feels like his body it going through something, he's getting squeezed out and soon, that warmth is gone, the cold shocks him enough for him to open his eyes. Everything is out of focus and he whimpers, he knows he's whimpering and his body begins to shiver.

Try as he might, his limbs seem foreign and he can't really believe the sight of a green face looking down at him. There's a cry and sounds erupt, not that it matters to him as he's more interested in getting warm again.

Soon enough, something covers him and after a while, he gives up on trying to make sense of what's wrong with him along with this situation. He feels so tired as he feels himself being put down. The last thing he manages to do is to look to his left. A green baby of some kind is laying there and it takes him a second to realize, that they were the same size!

With that, he finds himself unable to stay awake.

Day 3

Ichigo slowly wakes to find that he seems to have grown much larger then the day before and with more control over his body. In fact, as he sits up, he studies his green skin hands and even gives himself a pinch. His face soon sports a scowl as he realizes, he has no fucking idea what happened to himself or how he ended up in his current circumstance.

He gets up and glances to the sleepers that surround him. He makes sure that the cloth is knotted before carefully picking his way pass the other sleeping whatever they are. He comes to a stop near the entrance of the sleeping quarters as he looks to the left and then to the right.

He picks a direction and its not long before he comes across an older looking green skinned being. "Hey, where are we?" He asks and the other comes to a stop to answer him.

"Our home cave. If your hungry, go grab something from outside to eat. Your grown enough to feed yourself now." With that, the other continues on their way.

He scowls after the older one, but now that its been mentioned, he does feel rather hungry. He places his right hand over his mid-section as it grumbles. With a 'tsk' he follows after the older one, soon he comes to the entrance of the caves and without much of a look back, heads out into the sunlight.

The sun's light is bright, he quickly shields his eyes for a few seconds as he listens to the sounds around him. Everything is as it should be and yet... Minor things came across as different, he's not sure what as he lowers his hand and he walks into the forest, although he's sure to pick up a sturdy stick off the ground. It's not like anyone handed him anything to defend himself with, which could mean that it wasn't dangerous around here or they just don't hand out weapons to those who don't know how to use them yet.

"Better safe then sorry." Ichigo murmurs to himself as he explores the forest. He keeps an eye out for anything that looked like it could be food.

After a few minutes, he comes across something that pretty much wasn't a normal rabbit. For one, it sported a horn and for another, it raises up onto its hunches as it spots him. They stare at each other, he slowly begins to scowl and makes a shooing motion.

Only as he's turning away does he realize his error as he barely has enough time to use his stick to parry the incoming horn as he is leaping backwards. "Well, well, well, aren't you a blood thirsty rabbit?" Ichigo remarks with a slight smirk while the horned rabbet moves to charge at him once more.

"I could use a fight, so thanks for proving me with one!" He says as he charges. He finds it hard to push the horn out of the way using the stick but he does manage to punch the sucker with his free hand.

Again and again, the horned rabbit charges him and he, barely, manages to keep the horn from nailing him. He gets a few scratches and he is getting frustrated at how the rabbit seems so intent on fighting him instead of fleeing. His stomach growls as he pants as he rests his left hand upon his mid-section.

The stick had been discarded due to it snapping on the fourth whack on the rabbit's body. He growls as his face becomes stony, wishing he had grabbed a large stone instead of a stick. Or demanded a knife or something more sturdy then a stick! They could have given me a warning about insane killer rabbits too! Ichigo mentally growls, wishing for Zangetsu as this fight would have been over by now.

"Goblin Ore! There you are... oh gods, a Horned Rabbit!" The rabbit turns to the new comer and charges at them.

Ichigo moves, grabbing the rabbit by the neck. Keeping the horn before him, he does his best to strangle the blood thirsty beast while the one who called out to him, calling him Goblin Ore seems to have stopped panicking.

"Get a rock and smash its head!" He snaps at the other, glancing towards the non-bald green being. With a nod, Goblin Bei, looks around for one as he continues to wrestle to keep his grip on the neck of the horned rabbit.

Soon, Goblin Bei approaches with a rock being held in both hands and it takes a few tries but the rabbit's skull is smashed. He lets goes and signs, he feels the adrenaline rush leave him feeling drained while Goblin Bei. "Thanks for your help, I couldn't have done it with out you, Bei." He tells the other.

"Really?! But... but you didn't get speared by its horn! You were the one who kept it from spearing me!" Goblin Bei exclaims, some tears seeming to threaten to fall.

"Are you a... girl?" Ichigo can't help but inquire.

"What did you take me for? A boy?!" Goblin Bei exclaims with a glare before she huffs and looks away.

So... the girls are the ones with hair? He muses and notices that Goblin Bei seems to be drooling a bit at the sight of the dead horned rabbit. "So tasty looking..." She murmurs to Ichigo's amusement.

"What to share it?" He asks and Bei's eyes light up as she gives him a quick look. A bright smile and she reaches to grab the dead rabbit.

He can't help but stare as she wrenches a leg off and begins eating it raw . He kind of gulps at her before realizing just how hungry he is. Seeing him looking at her, Bei offers him the rabbit.

With a hum, he takes it by the neck. He looks at the horn and takes hold of the skull plus horn. It takes a bit but the horn snaps off and he studies it for a few seconds before his stomach whines at him. Using the horn, he does his best to gut the rabbit.

Though disgusted at himself, he finds himself enjoying the raw organs and meat. It takes Bei and himself some minutes to finish off the meat and organs. They both relax, their stomachs filled with a filling meal and after some minutes, he asks, "So... you were looking for me?"

"Oh, yea! Goblin Gran wished to give us a lesson and I volunteered to look for you! They said you got up earlier then the rest of us to forage for food but hadn't returned." Goblin Bei answers and he nods in understanding.

"Well, we best be heading back then." Ichigo says and gets to his feet with his right hand grabbing the horn he snapped off. Bei does the same and he takes the lead, heading back in the direction he recalls coming from. He wonders just what kind of lesson they'll be getting once they were back at the home cave.

Day 7

Ichigo takes some time to study the spear he's crafting using a flint flake to shape the point along with cutting off the minor little branches that had been on it. He had used a large flint hand axe to cut the branch from the tree once he settled on it being perfect for his needs. He spent the last three nights figuring out how to chip flint to get the necessary edges for him to create what he wishes out of wood as he's not allowed to touch, let alone use, any of the metal weapons in the treasury.

"Hey Ore! Will this do?" Goblin Bei asks as she approaches, she's carrying a thin branch that's been recently torn from a tree trunk.

"Yea, sure, just put it there, in the pile." He tells her and she smiles at him. With a nod, he hums as he adds the new spear to the small fire pit he has going to harden the tip. He's got three done so far.

"I don't see why you put them in that fire." Goblin Bei remarks and he picks up one of the previous two.

"The point is harden." He explains, offering her the chance to touch it for herself. Bei does touch it and it's clear she does notice that he was right. He puts it back down.

"How many before we go hunting?" Bei asks curiously as he picks through the pile for the next branch to be shaped into a spear.

"I think went we have six." Ichigo replies as he pulls his chosen branch from the pile. Taking a look at the flint flake, he reaches for the large piece of flint and chips another flake off the chunk.

Goblin Bei moves to sit across from him, watching intently as he uses the flint flake to cut off the excess bumps and branches along with the bark. He goes through a few flint flakes while also being sure to take the spear from the fire pit, even adding a few of the cut off bark and branches to keep the fire from going out.

"Can I try?" Goblin Bei asks and he nods in agreement, handing her the latest flint flake before chipping a new one for himself to use.

He keeps an eye on Bei as she works on mimicking him while working on his own. It takes her longer and he even allows her to chip her own flint flake, which causes Bei to beam at him with pure happiness at the trust he's putting in her.

She is my twin sister... she's family. Ichigo thinks, his thoughts drifting off to the various answers he pumped out of Goblin Gran. There's so much that he doesn't really understand, particularly why he ended up reincarnating as a Goblin instead of human. Given the choice, he would have pick human as that's what he was before and pretty much what he expected to continue to look like after he died.

How did I end up in this world? Why do I still have my memories? They are still here, nothing's faded... He thinks as a slight frown grows, though he's staring at the wood in his hands, his gaze is more inwards though. Then there's the fact that I can Rank Up if I met the right requirements. Into a Hobgoblin, whatever they are.

Goblin Gran had been rather impressed with the questions he's asked but a number of her answers hadn't left him very satisfied.

Then there's the part concerning how Bei and himself had been conceived, he feels anger well up within about the fact that his father, Hobgoblin Pu, had raped their human mother. He didn't even know which of the eight captive women were his mother and from the sounds of things, Bei and himself also have some half older siblings from previous rapes, from both sides. Some they were related to through their mother and the others through their father.

Yes, there's low fertility between Goblins but that didn't make what they were doing with those women right. Yet, he doubts he'd be able to do anything about their situation as he's just a young Goblin. He didn't have any kind of pull among the community to do anything to improve the situation.

He's so tempted to leave but that wouldn't do anything, which he couldn't tolerate as he so wants to do something! Sure, he's a monster but he's got morals damn it! It wasn't black and white either, just shades of grey, which annoys him so damn much! Humans have recently taken an interest in this part of the mountains along with the forests that surround it. There have been attack on the community by humans in the past and likely will in the future. That doesn't excuse the treatment of those women who were taken captive from the last group to attack but at the time, the community need to replace those it lost in those incursions.

There's on going friction between Humans and Monsters, but at the same time, there's friction between various Monster species, which prevents them from joining together to repel the incursions of the native Humans.

It's a powder keg here and something is going to spark it, causing everything around here to go to Hell! Fuck damn it, I am not a politician! What the fuck can I do to settle things peacefully? Goblins aren't even that high up in the ranks of Monsters! He rants to himself. And nobody seems to care about what that could mean for the future of the area!

With a slight closing of his eyes, he gives his head a slight shake. It takes him a few seconds to remember what he was doing and he takes some time to inspect the spear. He focuses on finishing it after he checks on Bei's progress, it seems she hadn't noticed him drifting off from the task at hand.

By noon, they each had three spears each while he also had that horn from killing his first horned rabbit. Between Bei and himself, they had grown use to hunting the blood thirsty monsters and had started to collect the horns from those rabbits they have killed.

Today though, they were doing to try hunting something different. They heard about some otter monsters hanging out at the large river north west of the caves. Ichigo's fairly sure that the skins would make fine fur lined cloths. He has been practicing skinning by doing so with the rabbits, making some knapsacks out of the leather for the community, which earned him some gratitude from those of his age group. He doesn't bother wondering at the blood relation between himself and the others, he's content with just the one sister at this point.

It takes them sometime but they do find the minor waterfall that feeds the river. They scout around the area until the spy their quarry, they number four but they were much larger then the horned rabbits they had grown use to hunting. Climbing the nearest tree, he takes sometime to study the otter monsters, they seem to be about the size of boars but longer in the body. They also have brightly color fur, primarily lightning white with a rich light blue for the underbelly, chin, and neck.

He motions for Bei to join him in the tree. Once she's safe within, Ichigo moves up onto a more solid and longer branch. He takes a spear and prepares to throw it using the spear thrower he made before making any spears. With a spear balanced upon it, he readies himself and picks out a target.

The spear arches as it is launched from the spear thrower and hits the lower back of one of the otter monsters. It bellows out in pain, the others become alert and another spear arches through the air, killing on viva the ribs, likely piercing the lungs. The remaining two are on the move, charging towards their tree, the injured one is doing its best to join the healthier ones.

To his minor shock, a ball of water is launched up at him from the injured one. It startles him as he never expected any kind of attack other then teeth and claws coming from what he considered a beast, sure it's a monster but it still came across as a simple beast. Thankfully, Bei manages to keep her wits and kill the one had almost made it up the trunk of the tree. He pulls out the horn and waits until the other otter is directly under him before leaping out of the tree, the pointed end getting it in the back of the skull.

The injured one hisses and launches more balls of water at him as he pulls the horn out of the dead otter monster. He does his best to get in close, it quickly lunges at him and bites him in the shoulder while pinning him to the ground. He does his best to bring the horn into play, it's clear that these otter is stronger then him and he knows he has to end this soon. It takes him a bit but finally, he stoves the point into the throat.

It thrusts about, he manages to get out of the way and does his best to keep distance between himself and the thrashing monster. After some minutes, it stop and with a whine, the last breath exits out of the monstrous otter.

He stares, he knows he's going into shock, how can he not know? He begins digging around within his knapsack and begins to apply pressure onto his wound. It's really bad given the size of the muzzel compared to himself. Bei quickly comes to his side and he does his best to tell Bei how to help.

He fights against falling unconscious, long enough for Bei to arrive with the freshly picked herbs that he asked for. He does black out as Bei begins to prepare them to be applied to his bite injury.

Day 8

There's a coolness upon his upper body. It takes Ichigo some minutes to recall what happened before he blacked out. He turns his head to the left to find Bei sleeping next to him, cuddling his left arm. "Bei..."

"Ore... Ore!" Bei exclaims once she's fully awake. She looks happy and worn out. She's soon blabbing on about the events that happened after he blacked out on her.

Of how she finished putting those herbs and berries on his wound and binding it with that cloth he had turned into bandages, she had done her best to drag all the dead otter monsters near him. Of how she then went in search for a minor cave, finding one a bit up behind the waterfall. Of clearing it out of seven colored bats before bringing him into it and then working on the otter monsters, skinning them like he taught her along with creating meat racks after butchering them, again as he had taught her.

"I'm proud of you, Bei. You remembered to keep a calm head and what I taught you instead of panicking and forgetting everything in that moment." Ichigo tells her and she tears up upon hearing that. "I couldn't have asked for anyone better to attend to me."

I just wish... it never happened in the first place. I should have stuck to attacking them at range instead of going close quarters with that one. Injured or not, I almost died because of that. He mentally berates himself while Bei does her best to regain control over herself.

"Is there anything else I can do for you, Ore?" Bei asks him as she leans over him.

With his right, he brushes her blond bangs as he pokes her in the forehead gently. She backs up and he sits up, he gets a better look at their surrounding before turning his attention to his bandages.

"We better unwrap that and see how bad it is. Clean it, get fresh herbs and berries, apply them, and re-bandage it. We'll have to make more bandages out of my cloth, I guess we'll have to fashion pants out of the otter skins." He tells Bei, who nods.

"I'll go and the herbs and berries! Wait until I get back to unwrap that, ok? Also, here, you haven't eaten anything other then those nuts yesterday!" Bei says, once she's grabbed a few slices off meat off the nearest meat rack, handing it to her.

"Remember, no unwrapping until I get back, Goblin Ore! I don't want you trying anything until I get back!" Bei tells him sternly and he nods as he can't help but remember the Twins from his previous life. He feels his throat tighten at the expression as she takes a moment to study him.

Confident that he would do as she asked, Goblin Bei heads out, leaving Ichigo to regain control over himself as his right hand balls up about the meat. It's hard to believe that he's only eight days old, it already feels so much longer since he's been reborn as a Goblin named Ore. Yet, he still can't get over the fact that he'll never see his old friends and family ever again.

After a while, feeling emotionally drained, he begins eating the meat slices that Bei had handed him. Once he's done, he gets up and answers the call of nature. He looks out of the cave, doing his best to use only his right hand to cup water so he can quench his thirst.

He moves to go through his knapsack and takes out the chuck of flint, noting that it's a bit smaller then it had been, likely due to Bei making skinning flakes. He smiles slightly as he feels proud of his pupil as it seems that she's eager for any skill he can teach her. Looking over at the racks of sliced meat, he reminds himself that he won't always be eating raw meat, that one day, he'll teach Bei how to cook, once he gathers the necessary equipment and ingredients.

For now, he'll have to settle for teaching her how to roast and smoke meat, when they, again, had the free time. Bei returns but not alone, he is on guard as the strangely green human like being walks behind his twin sister. "Goblin Ore, meet Hobgoblin Xan! He says he can heal you! Isn't that great?"

Hobgoblin? This is the Rank Up from Goblin? Ichigo can't help but think as he studies the much taller and not bald goblinoid. "Ah, nice to meet you?" He murmurs.

"Well! Let's take a look at that bite, shall we? I must say, I'm impressed that you knew the right herbs to send Goblin Bei for concerning your injury. Not many bother to learn how to heal using herbs." Goblin Xan remarks as the blue hair Hobgoblin directs him to sit.

He does so given that if Xan is an expert doctor, that the other was much more familiar with herbal remedies then he, given that Hobgoblin Xan must be older then them both. He keeps his face stoic as the bandages are unwrapped and Hobgoblin Xan tuts at the look of the wound. He gets a look at it and his heart drops as it looks rather infected.

Then, Xan touches him and he stiffens as the hand lights up, then the light spreads into him. Before his eyes, the infection heals and then the wounds soon close until it looked like he never got bit in the first place. He also feels cooler, he hadn't realized how hotter his body temperature had been until now. "How... how did you do that?!" He can't help but exclaim in awe.

He knew that the Medical Crops could do something similar and it brings up the question of, could he learn to do the same. "I've trained to become a cleric. It took me months to learn the ropes of it but, well, I must have done something right or else I wouldn't have been able to heal, you know?" Hobgoblin Xan explains in a modest tone.

"Wow, really? That's pretty cool! You must be in high demand for your services back at your community!" Bei gushes while Ichigo notices something flash in Xan's eyes at that particular statment.

"I've pretty much been traveling on my own, you know, exploring, looking for other Goblin communities. I've only met one other besides my old one. I guess there's one near here?" Xan asks and Bei nods while Ichigo does his best to figure out if he should press the issue of what happened between Xan and his birth community.

If my luck holds true from my previous life, I'll get my answers in the next few days and it'll end with I facing the bad guy. He mentally muses with a slight frown. He sits back and listens as Bei and Xan trade questions and answers. What looks pass on Xan's face at certain question, he made note of but still didn't press.

After a few hours, with Hobgoblin Xan's help, they bundle up the meat in the otter skins, using a local plant root as rope, and carried the bundles back to the home caves. The older Goblins were surprised to see both Bei and himself alright while also welcoming Hobgoblin Xan. It wasn't long before Goblins gathered around to listen to how Bei and himself killed those monster otters. Many were clearly impressed that, yet again, Bei and himself managed to bring back meat to the cave. Much to the gratitude of the whole community, then again, most of them harvest plants for food along with insects, which means that few if any Goblins bother to learn to hunt.

Or survive their first hunt to grow better at doing so. He muses as he recalls how blood thirsty those horned rabbits are and the likely high mortality rate that occurs due to that aggression.

Day 10

"Please! Take us with you, Gobore! Gobbei!" Goblin Hu and Goblin Mu exclaim, bowing at them both. Goblin Mu sporting light brown hair and her cloth done up toga style with a snaggletooth coming from the bottom right lip while Goblin Hu was one of those that sport totally white eyes. Goblin Hu and Goblin Mu are in the same age group as Bei and himself, which could make them cousins or maybe half siblings viva their father.

"Fine, but you'll have to do as I tell you." Ichigo states, slightly annoyed as he had just finished some armor for Bei and himself to use. Yesterday, they found some armored tanuki, they were devil to kill due to the plates, which he quickly realized the potential so he had them hunt for as many as they could before evening set in and the more powerful monsters begin to roam the area.

He made leather shirts with over lapping plates for Bei and himself most of last night. He's also boiled some leather to be used are shin and arm guards while using wood and leather to make each of them shields. He had thought of using the collection of horns to make armor but created some spear throwers out of them instead, which had been hard work.

Picking up a couple of spears from the pile, he plans them before the kneeling pair of Goblins. "Here, you can use these. If anything comes at you, stab it with the pointed end." He tells them and as he turns, he glances towards Bei, she kind of seems to have mixed reactions like anger and yet pride with excitement pretty much overwhelming everything else. Then again, this will be the first time they'll be wearing armor for protection.

They killed more horned rabbits, giving the two new comers time to learn how to use their spears. As they get into some tall grass, Bei cries out as she whacks something, he runs in her direction and seeing the snake, slams his shield into its striking head as it sails over Bei's own shield.

"Night Viper!" Goblin Mu cries while Goblin Hu manages to stab the tail and Bei's spear enters into the night viper's back of the head, killing it.

"We just killed a Night Viper! Gobbei, that was amazing!"

"Did you see Gobore just hit it with that thing on his arm!"

The two gush between them while he uses a flint dagger to cut off the head in case it's venomous. He does his best to hold the neck of the body so that the blood will drain from the body while the three talk excitedly. As they quiet down, it's decide to move out of the tall grass before they get attacked again.

They walk out and when he deems that he's got as much blood as he could out of it, he curls the viper's body before adding it to the wooden basket on his back.

By noon, he begins to look for materials for crafting. He couldn't carry much and looking at Goblin Hu and Goblin Mu, he realizes that he should have lightly given them their knapsacks so they could help carry stuff for him.

Hindsight is twenty twenty. He concludes as he leads the group back to the home caves. In the entrance way, Hobgoblin Xan seems to be rather popular with the Goblin women as the Ranked Up goblinoid is telling them tales of sights he's seen in his travels.

The other Goblins perk up at their arrival and the four of them were soon swarmed as the Goblins help to take the heavy meat baskets from Bei and his backs. He feels someone looking at him and looking up, finds Hobgoblin Xan looking at him with that same expression as before. The one that is puzzlement mixed with thoughtfulness.

What? I shouldn't share what I hunt with the rest of the community? Waste all that meat? He mentally muses towards more experienced Hobgoblin, but like usual, the other wasn't a mind reader so he receives no answer to his mental inquiry.

Day 11

With rain coming down, Ichigo decides to teach those interested in how to make those baskets that Bei and himself had been wearing yesterday. As he's doing that, there's some wrestling going on that Bei has joined in on. She's won against a number of opponents and is currently taking a bit of a break.

As he looks over the group of thirteen, they were busy weaving the thin stripes of wood between the stick frame work. Some among his pupils seem to be further along then the others but he didn't see any need to make corrections as they all seem to pick up on said mistake before he pipes in to point it out. After a few minutes, Ichigo looks towards another group, it seems Hobgoblin Xan has decided to mimic him and seems to be giving a lecture on healing herbs and berries along as what they can be used for.

After sometime, the basket weaving is over and one of his students, Goblin Sou, challenges him to a friendly match. Accepting, as he's been kind of itching to test himself against his fellows, he follows Goblin Sou to the make shift ring.

"Ready, Gobsou?" He asks and the other grunts.

His opponent charges at him headlong and being familiar with this tactic, he dodges out of the way before moving behind Goblin Sou, locking the arms and doing his best to lift Goblin Sou off the ground. Then he moves forward, doing his best to pin Goblin Sou to the ground, pushing the other's face into the dirt floor.

Soon he is declare the victor and he lets go. Soon enough, another challenger steps up and so it goes. He has it slightly tough due to his body being inexperienced in the moves he recalls from his previous life and so it takes its toll on him but he continues on until he's won against all challengers.

Then Bei politely asks him to step away so they can then continue with their matches. It's clear that Bei wishes to try and mimic his success in the ring and he grunts as he walks out. He finds a spot to sit and watches her, already thinking about the fact that he'll need to work out if he wants his old hand to hand skills to become ingrained and instinctual.

He's pretty sure Bei will be willing to help him and learn somethings from him as well.

As even falls, he heads to his workshop to begin to work on creating some armor for Goblin Hu and Goblin Mu for when they come out hunting with Bei and himself. He looks up to find Hobgoblin Xan entering.

As he works, they talk about things and he gets some answers to his questions that Goblin Gran hadn't answered to his satisfaction while answering his share of questions that Hobgoblin Xan puts to him.

It was an informative few hours.

Day 14

What the hell is that? Ichigo can't help but think at the sight of a dog headed monster. It's wearing armor that harkens back to samurai attire along with a katana resting along his shoulder.

It takes him a few seconds before he recalls hearing of a monster that fitted what he sees before him. A Kobold. He recalls, although to be fair, he kind of imagined a dog walking around on its hind legs when he heard of them from Goblin Gran.

He holds up his arm, signally for them to wait. He stands and approaches the Kobold, walking up to it. It turns towards him, clearly narrowing its eyes as it prepares to draw its sword.

"I just want to talk." He states, he can't help but noticed how the Kobold's eyes flicker with surprise, at him although he's at a lost as to why.

"And what, Goblin, do you have to talk about?" The Kobold inquires in a tone that pretty much oozes superiority and indulgance.

It was a tone he's heard plenty of things in his previous life and he's also beaten those who have used such a tone before. "I was wondering where I can find the ore for iron. Given that you have such a fine sword, I thought I would ask you."

The Kobold snorts and its muzzle becomes the equivalent of a sneer or he assumes it is while the Kobold replies after a few seconds of having such a sneer plastered upon its face, "Like a lowly monster like a Goblin knows anything about metal working. Just because some stupid human female decided to make you some armor, piss poor attempts at that, doesn't make you special."

He glares at the Kobold and gives the signal for the spears to be thrown. Anger bubbling within and though the Kobold manages to deflect the first doesn't keep it safe from the other two. Once the two were in the Kobold does he move forward with his flint knife.

He guts the Kobold, causing it to get this surprised expression. Wrenching the katana, which is huge and he needs both of his hands to even hold it, he uses all his strength to cut the Kobold's head off. The others surge forward, congratulating him on the deed.

It wasn't long before they strip the cloths, armor, and anything else from the body. Then, much to his horror, the three begin to eat the Kobold!

He glances toward the head of the Kobold, realizing that yea, not only had he pretty much order its death but it seems he's expected to eat it as well.

Looking up, he can't help but wonder how this became his life and promises that no matter how long it takes, he'll get back at the one who killed him. Maybe even do the Goblin thing and eat them. He thinks before Bei asks if anything is wrong.

"Nothing beyond wishing I could weld this better." He answers, lifting the katana slightly and they seem to accept that answer. It takes him a few more seconds and the expectant looks from the others before he had his first taste of the Kobold.

Sadly, it wasn't hard to keep the meat down so he joins the others in consuming what they can of the Kobold. What they didn't eat, they striped from the body and added it to what they've killed already as well as carry the armor and stuff back to home cave.

The armor, katana, and the non-edible stuff joins the treasury and he gets another look at the eight women that are held off to the right of said treasure room. He swallows hard and turns his head from them before walking away, already noticing that it seems that at least one of them seems to be pregnant again.

Day 18

They return to the waterfall with the intent on doing some fishing. Hobgoblin Xan decided to join them, claiming he wanted to search for more healing herbs and such. Ichigo figures they camp in the cave that Bei had found earlier so he can teach them how to smoke meat and fish.

Using some flint axes, they begin constructing the smoke house and he demonstrates how it works using the horned rabbits they caught along the way. Using make shift wooden nails, he tests to make sure its sturdy outer cover of the newly constructed building.

He digs a minor fire pit and lights a fire, invoking slight awe with Goblin Hu and Goblin Mu. He feeds it some dry wood and leaves it to burn within the smoke house. He instructs Goblin Hu and Goblin Mu to check on the cave, giving them each a torch encase those bats had returned while Bei and himself approach the river with fishing spears.

He takes his time studying the fish within, noting a few fairly large suckers within. He looks towards the waterfall as a swarm of seven colored bats fly into the sky. A few minutes later, the pair looking slightly worst for wear approach but both seem very pleased with themselves.

"Right so, you see the fish? You want to aim slightly below the image of the fish on the surface." He explains as he hands Goblin Mu a fishing spear while Bei gives Goblin Hu one. "The surface image is slightly off from where the actual fish is located within the river."

"Now, what me." He tells them and remembering his own advice, he patiently waits until he found one that's large enough and still enough for him to try for. With a slight throw of the spear, he pulls the spear out and the fish is caught on the many wooden slivers that make up the point. It wiggles but unable to escape.

Each of the other Goblins look delighted and then serious. Each moving along the river, finding a spot and looking for a sizable fish to spear. As he puts the fish into a basket, he returns to the river to try his luck again.

By the time evening has fallen, Goblin Bei speared six fish of varying sizes, Goblin Mu speared four fish, Goblin Hu speared the most at nine, and himself at four more besides that first one. Hobgoblin Xan joined them with a basket of herbs while also adding some fruit and mushrooms to their meal.

He made sure to wake throughout the night to check on the smoke house and ensuring that the fire is still going on. Adding fresh branches to keep the fire going. He isn't sure if he's doing this right but, he figures you had to start some where.

Day 22

"It's Hobxan!"

"He's with Gobore and the others!"

"Their still alive?!"

"Look at all they brought back!"

Ichigo feels his eyebrow twitch at the various comments that the approaching Goblins murmur out loud without a thought of their feelings.

"Yea! The meat was smoked! It'll keep longer that way!" Goblin Bei boasts, not at all bothered by the various comments.

Hu and Mu also add in their own boasts, "I caught the most fish out of all of us! Even more then Gobore!" Hu boasts.

"I made this cloak out of various seven color bats all by myself!" Mu boasts.

In the end, he just sighs and allows his various burdens to be taken from him. They had each been using a thick pole to carry what they couldn't carry on their backs or on their person. He made some bark boxes for the meat and in the leather bags held various raw material that he found, namely salt in that bat cave which he used to saturate the fish to absorb the moisture from the fish while also adding it to the roasted meat, adding flavor to the fresh horned rabbit meat.

He looks towards Hobgoblin Xan, there's a look in the others eye that he didn't like and made him uneasy. He trusts his intuition on the matter and something going to happen, something he'll need to do something about.

Day 28

Ichigo gets up and soundlessly, moves towards the entrance. Sure enough, like last night, Hobgoblin Xan is sneaking out of the caves. Tonight, he'll follow the other into the night, dangerous or not, he wants some answers, damn it, and he'll have then tonight. Taking only a horn from a horned rabbit with him as he didn't want to lose track of the Hobgoblin.

He counts to twenty before following after. He keeps the snapped horn in his right hand as he does his best to move through the forest, heading west for a few hours. Barely keeping Hobgoblin Xan in sight until Xan is standing in a clearing, approaching someone stationed on a large stone that stands at the center of the clearing.

"Are things arranged, Hobgoblin?" A cloaked person seemingly appears before Hobgoblin, asks in a contentment.

"All most, I just need to place the last one and..." Xan murmurs in a subdued tone.

"And another nest of pests is wiped from this world." The cloaked being remarks. Xan just looks away but the cloaked being uses a sword to raise Xan's head to look at him.

"Don't look so depressed, you want your community spared, don't you? Well, others must fall in their place." The cloaked one remarks. "So, why don't you go back and finish the job? Remember, it could be your community this is happening to instead."

Hobgoblin Xan seems to tremble but in the end, turns and leaves. He remains and manages to keep from crying out in shock as, after sometime, another cloaked being appears within a foot of his hiding spot.

Soon there's three in the clearing as the one that appeared next to him, walk forward, into the clearing. The one of the rock also leaps down and lowers the hood, showing the features of a human.

This time, as they speak, he can't help but notice that something about the language seems different then from before.

"I think we should rid ourselves of that Hob, its getting close to wanting to rebel against our orders." The man sporting black hair and an golden hoop earring on their right ear says.

"As long as it thinks its nest is still alive, it'll obey. We could probably get another two nests out of it before that happens." The one who had spoken earlier says.

"We could have at least given it poison to give to the captive women." Says the third, who turns out to be a woman. "It would be a mercy for them then them dying the same way as their rapists."

"That would only arouse suspicion among the pests." The first speaker remarks. "Maybe we can do so when we don't need it any longer." He adds after a few tense seconds.

The woman doesn't say anything but marches off towards the other side of the meadow.

"Next she'll want to rescue them and welcome them back into civilized society." Remarks the first once they seem confident that the woman was out of ear shot.

He really didn't like that one. He'll have to make sure that one died painfully.

"It is a trying time working as we have." The second man states in a bland tone, making Ichigo wonder if hooped earring meant with the man or this situation.

"Bla, we get the job done don't we? So what if some peasants suffer the same deaths as those pests? If they didn't want that fate, then they should have ended it before they got caught or bite their tongue before giving birth to litters of those pests."

With that, the man follows after their woman companion and the other man seems to watch the other walk away for a second before following suit. Neither turned to look in his direction, much to his relief.

He licks his lips and after sometime has passed, he moves around the edge, he has a good grip on the horn, although his right arm is shaking as he knew what he had to do. He didn't want to, by Kami, he didn't want their deaths to be at his hands but he has to save the community. There's only one quick way to do it as trying to find whatever was planted in the caves won't work as it'll take time to convince the others of what's what.

Finding their camp, he find all three asleep with only three horses. He focuses on the humans, it takes a while before the hoop earring falls into a deep sleep. With a soft prayer to whatever Kami is listening, he sneaks close to hooped earring. With a quick thrust, the point goes into the man's throat and the horses sound the alert.

He already nabs the dagger from the dead man's belt and slices the last man's throat, leaving him to try and stem the bleeding as he faces against the woman, who fights with a short sword and a long sword. He does his best to stay defensive as the woman coldly uses her advantage of height and reach to attack him. The look in her eyes is of steel and of resolve, he pities that he couldn't give her the fight she deserves but he has to use what he has.

As he back up, he is sure to grab the horn, seeing an opening, he ducks and rolls forward. He jabs the horn into her mid-section, thrusting it as high as he could reach. He moves to the side, slicing her hamstring as he does so. He hurries her as she now fends him off with only one sword while the other hovers around the horn.

It takes an hour before an opening comes up. He takes it and although he is run through with the sword in his right shoulder, the dagger in his right flies into her forehead. She drops and he pulls out the sword from his shoulder. He feels something occur within him, but he ignores it for now as he searches through the pouches and sacks.

He finds a generous number of potions and without a thought, picks on of the health potions, downing it. It goes to work and he feels a hell of a lot better. He glances towards the tied up horse, he sighs. He feels so tired and something tells him, he needs to go to sleep.

With a sigh, he moves over into the woman's sleep roll and does so.

Your Level Has Reach The Designated

You Have Cleared The Special Requirement "Something" "Special Action"

You Have Cleared The Special Requirement "Something" "Special Action"

You Can "Rank Up" to "Hobgoblin-Variant"

Would You Like To "Rank Up"? Yes Or No

Would You Like To "Rank Up"? Yes Or No

Ok... whatever, I just want to sleep now.

Gobore has obtained "End and Origin"-Ruling "Divine Protection of Great God"

Gobore has obtained "Healing"-Ruling "Divine Protection of Demi God"

To Be Continued

Strawberry Goblin Part 2: Re:Monster

I don't own Bleach or Re:Monster!

Day 29

"Wha... what... you... and... I can't believe... dead..." Is what Ichigo woke to, he groans and sits up. He opens to eyes to find Hobgoblin Xan just staring at him with wonder and fear.

"Your community is gone. They were talking about killing you." He tell Hobgoblin Xan in a flat tone, only to find his voice seemed to have... changed. He looks down as he brings his hands up, his skin is now black and the sleep roll seems to be a heck of a lot smaller.

He senses Xan stiffening and he turns, looking into Xan's yellow eyes with his chocolate brown. "They figured you were getting ready to rebel, if not after the destruction of my community then one of the future ones. Given their attitude, you should be surprised, they themselves might not have destroyed your birth community but that didn't mean it was spared."

"People like that, if they rank something to be the level of an insect, then they don't see why they should keep promises made to said insect." He tells Hobgoblin Xan flatly. "What honor is there in a dealing with Monsters or keeping promises to such beings."

He gets up from the roll after Hobgoblin Xan doesn't respond, look off at some other point. Getting to his feet, he feels chilled in a spot that had been protected before by leather pants. Looking down, sure enough, the pants are ruined although he catches a glimpse of something on his chest. It appears to be a lizard in light blue tattooed on his right breast.

But the chillness to his parts keeps him from continuing staring dumbly down at the tattoo, although he glimpses his hair and it's orange, running a hand through it, he also finds it rather long, particularly in the back. He'll have to see if there's a mirror among the items to get a look at himself.

With a curse, he snatches the blanket from the sleeping roll, using it to cover himself. With that taken care of, he mentally goes through what he knows and stiffens at two skills he knows and yet, doesn't recall ever learning.

Spear of the End ? Complete Regeneration ? He questions to himself and as he review the almost month, he doesn't recall any Goblin using either.

"Hey, Hobxan, how does one learn Spear of the End ?" He turns to ask the other.

Hobgoblin Xan stiffens while staring wide eyed at him, it seems that Hobgoblin Xan's knees give out and he kneels on the ground. "You Ranked Up to a Variant, a powerful God Blessing on you but for it to be Great God of End and Origin..."

"Well, I also seemed to impressed the Demi God of Healing. I recall obtaining that Blessing as well." Hobgoblin Xan seems to be rather speechless at that.

After waiting for a few seconds for Hobgoblin Xan to recover his tongue. He begins his search for a mirror among the belongings. Oddly enough, he finds one among the man who's throat he sliced, he would have thought he'd find one among the woman's possessions. He nearly drops the mirror upon seeing his face, he look so eerily like his previous incarnation, given he was a teenager, it really didn't help matters much. His hair is the same shade of orange with his eyes... it's only the fact that he possesses black skin and pointed ears that remind him that he wasn't Human but a Hobgoblin.

As he recovers and begins looking for a suitable weapon for himself along with finding something to eat among the trail rations when he hears a cry, "I think I saw Hobxan enter this clearing!"

"Bei? Over here! He's kind of recovering but still in the waking world!" Ichigo calls out.

He looks off in that direction, it takes some minutes but soon, Bei comes charging into camp before coming to a stop. Her eyes widening at at the sight of him. "Yo, Bei. I kind of Ranked Up after killing this Humans."

"Goblin... Ore? No, Hobgoblin Ore! Wow! But, we were suppose to do it together!" Bei exclaims, he's pretty sure that the last part likely wasn't meant to be said out loud.

"Well, it was kind of something I just had to do. For the safety of the home cave." To keep Hobgoblin Xan from continuing being their tool. He explains. He didn't see any reason to let her in on the blackmailing the trio had been doing on Hobgoblin Xan as it really was up to him to tell the others, to explain himself.

Hu and Mu also join them, each looking rather in awe at him, likely due to him being a Hobgoblin Variant. He finds it hard to believe that just yesterday, he had been as tall as them and now, he kind of towers over them by a bit.

"Well, let's get this stuff back to the caves." He says, taking charge.

Soon, even Hobgoblin Xan aids in packing up, he likely should have expected that they also butchered the Humans, eating their fill before finishing with the task. He stifles a sigh at their action, it seems that Hobgoblin Xan also eats what he can. Thankfully, they didn't seem to pressing him to eat any of it, then again, he had eaten his fill of trail rations while they had been butchering the Humans.

It takes some time, mostly as he rigged up a sled for Hu to pull while Bei and Mu use a pole to carry some of the stuff and Hobgoblin Xan and himself do the same between them. He can't wait to get back so he can work on creating cloths that fit his new body.

On their way back, they didn't encounter any being. Soon enough, they approach the caves and Goblins come out to first greet them then gawk at him. As they made it to the entrance, the Goblins swarm about and aid in taking the various items from them.

"Hobore killed three Humans! Can you believe it?! On his own!" Bei brags on his behalf.

"Blessing of a God is on him! A really powerful one!"

"Look at his hair! Why is it orange?"

"Is that a lizard marking on his right breast?"

"Oh! Tell us how you did it, Hobore?! Please!"

That sentiment is soon echoed among the various members of the cave. Bei sends him a puppy dog look and what remained of his resolve to retreat to his personal workshop without telling anyone what happen crumbles. My sisters always seem to have that effect on me. He admits with a mental sigh.

"I was near the clearing with the standing stone when some three humans arrive, I had been out looking for something to challenge myself with." Ichigo begins. "None among them seem to have noticed me hiding, one got fairly close but nope. I was safe."

"They seemed to have made camp at the other side of the clearing. As they headed in that direction, I waited. After some time, I followed in that direction, keeping to the forest edge." He knew the next part will be easier as it'll be a heck of a lot more truthful then the first bit of his story.

"Given it had been spur of the moment venture and I had thought I'd run back to the home caves at the first sign of danger. I had been armed lightly." Ichigo explains.

"Thankfully, due to that, I didn't need much of anything outside of what I had. I waited until they were clearly asleep before killing the black haired one using the horn, right into the neck. As the horses sounded the alarm, I managed to grab one of their daggers. Within seconds, I slit the throat of the other one."

"Though this gave the third, which turned out to be a woman, the time needed to get out of her sleeping roll as well as arm herself. With a long sword and a short one, she attacks, using her reach to her advantage."

"As I was pushed back, I manages to grab the horn still sticking out of the dead one's throat. When I saw an opening, I roll in under her swing and jabbed the horn into her belly followed by cutting into her muscles of her lower leg by her knee. And so, all I needed to do was wait for her to tire. At the end, I got speared in my right shoulder while I sent the dagger flying into her forehead."

"I searched for a healing potion and downed it. With it, my wound healed and I soon grew tired. Making sure that the horses were still there, I walked over and fell asleep upon my foe's sleeping roll." He finishes. "Waking to Hobxan being amazed at the deaths of the three Humans, killed by myself."

"What happened to the horses?"

He shrugs, though it's likely that Hobgoblin Xan freed them. He didn't recall seeing them upon waking nor their bodies.

"They must escaped their restraints." Hobgoblin Xan states.

It takes a few minutes before he manages to escape being center of attention. He lets out a sigh as once within the workshop and then moves among his things within, noticing how much smaller and toy like his tools currently are. Thankfully, given his previous experience in making his tools, he should have an easier time of it.

He begins by going through the leathers he should still have about. It takes sometime but he manages to make himself another pair and then a shirt. He looks up toward the entrance, spotting Hobgoblin Xan standing there.

"You didn't..." Hobgoblin Xan murmurs, trailing off.

"It's your business, it's for you to admit to." He states simply at Hobgoblin Xan. Plus, it'll only cause trust issues when we don't need them.

Hobgoblin Xan comes into the workshop proper and moves to sit down, he finishes up with his new shirt. Putting it on, he moves to sit across from Hobgoblin Xan. Hobgoblin Xan looks him right in the eye and begins his tale.

"I had been meeting with a Human Cleric since I was three months old. A kindly old Human male who, at first, I thought was blind."

"By the end of my fourth month, I learnt otherwise and when I confronted him about why he was teaching me, he said that he had come to the spot to wait for his future student. That it turned out that student was to be a Monster, a Goblin, he had his misgivings about me only when I didn't alert my birth community did he come to trust that I was indeed who had been destined to meet and train."

"We were having skirmishes with a neighboring group of Kobolds and I so wanted to help my community that when I meet Victor, I mean the Human..."

"You can call him Victor, it's his name after all." He tells Hobgoblin Xan, who blinks before smiling slightly and continuing.

"Well, as I trained under Victor, I began to use what I learned to aid the injured. By the time I was a year old went I ended up joining a raiding party. It was there that I learn the opposite of what I was being taught by Victor. I learnt how to use poison to paralyze and kill. I used magic to heal my fellow Goblins."

"My efforts paid off and we finally ended the threat the Kobolds posed."

"Victor, he... he began to cover philosophy over who holds the right over who should live and who should die."

"It was confusing and I won't deny, I had a headache much of the time. The things we talked about... it only made me wonder about what was the point, of everything."

"For a time, I refused to eat meat or used my magic to heal injuries. When Victor asked why I had stopped, I exploded at him, telling him my doubts and why I thought he even began to talk about it. I mean, should any being beyond a God be responsible for taking another's life? Isn't there enough room for all races, Human or Monster?!" Hobgoblin Xan looks down at his hands which have become clutched in his lap.

He sympathizes, given the culture he's been born into, those were some hard questions to answer. Even with his previous life, he still questions his own place in the scheme of things or what purpose it serves for him to have been reincarnated here instead of joining the Soul Society like he expected upon his death.

"Right or wrong, beings will cause harm to each other. Some out of what they thought to be honor, others duty, and then there's those who do just because they like to cause pain or out of some sense that doing so will increase their power base." He remarks with a sigh and it seems to startle Hobgoblin Xan looks up at him.

"Humans aren't united as a single nation, are they? They must fight among themselves." He muses and Hobgoblin Xan nods, still kind of shocked that he clearly did know a little about philosophy or caught on quickly to how it works.

"Please continue." He requests and Hobgoblin Xan takes a moment before nodding.

"Yes, well, by the time I had lived to see spring thrice, I finally achieved Rank Up. I looked so different! I was so much taller and for a few days afterwards, I spent a lot of time going through the treasures we had collected. I was even allowed to be alone with the Human women, all eighteen of them..."

"By the time I headed out to visit Victor, he had died. He taught me how to read and write, he left a note. Telling me how proud he was, knowing that when I read it I would be a Hobgoblin and thus, I can do what I can to enact change among my community."

"Two weeks later, Humans were spotted and I approached them unarmed, wanting to speak with them. You met the three and they made a deal with me once I learnt what they had planned. I wanted them to spare my community and, well..."

"They let you think you did." Ichigo summarizes and Hobgoblin Xan nods.

"I should have demanded proof, a chance to visit before I came here."

"They would have killed you outright then. They couldn't give into your demand and if you had remain stubborn, then, well." He reassures Hobgoblin Xan.

"You seem worldly and yet, your are barely a month old." Hobgoblin Xan notes after a few seconds.

"I... In my last incarnation, I was called Kurosaki Ichigo, a Human from another world though. I ended up in a otherworldly war where a power mad asshole wanted to become a God. I killed him but I had to sacrifice my powers to do so. It had only been three months since then, maybe four by now. I don't even know how I died, only figured it out when I realized that I was a Goblin and yet, I recall my old life perfectly."

The look of amazement was evident in Xan's eyes. "Really?! And you still...'

"What they were doing made my blood boil and I while I could try to talk with the Goblins here about what you were planting around the cave, I figured the humans knew how to trigger it. I didn't know how they could and trying to get them to talk... I granted one of them a swift death, the other suffered, while the third, well, she died in battle so she wouldn't end up like those women we have. I think it's an end she preferred."

"The world I came from? Only Human existed. I use to have the ability to see the departed and then I met a girl... I ended up becoming part of a world that protected and guided the departed souls while fending off and purifying these angry ones called Hollows, those that entered into the World of the Living, they preyed upon humans and those departed spirits that lingered." He explains.

"The girl? She was what was called a Soul Reaper and if not for her, this Hollow would have killed by younger sister. I became a Substituted Soul Reaper and went on to purify the various Hollows that preyed upon my home town. In time, I got involved in the Soul Society and the brewing war between three of their traitorous ex-Captains and their army of modified Hollows." No point in complicating things with details that don't really matter. He decides.

"Wow, that's, well, wow." Xan states, wrapping his head around the information he shared. "No wonder you caught the Great God's attention."

He hums, guessing that by End and Origin, it was something not unlike Death and Soul or Spirit. "I haven't told anyone, it's kind of unbelievable story. Then again, you gave me the truth about yourself so I did the same."

"You should have told me earlier!" He turns to find himself getting slapped by Bei, who's clearly been there for a while, listening in on their conversation.

"And you! You, well, you shouldn't have trusted those Humans blindly!" Bei turns on Xan, much to his amusement while he rubs the spot his twin sister had slapped.

He's kind of noticing a pattern at this point and decides to apologize, "I'm sorry, but, can you blame me for not sharing that? How was I to know you'd believe me with such an insane, weird tale?"

Bei turns to him and says, "I believe in you, Ore and if you said that it was true, then, it is. Your not a liar." Then she gives it a few more seconds of thought before adding, "Well, unless you want someone to come clean with their secrets I guess."

"I'll have to remember that in the future." He promises and Bei presses her lips while studying him before giving him a nod.

"See that you do!" Bei states before walking over to some part of his workshop to begin work on a project.

"So, you and her...?" Xan asks leaning forward with a raised eyebrow.

"She's my twin!" He hisses back at Xan, giving the other a glare.

"Oh, well, really?" Xan asks and he just nods as Xan kind of bring a hand behind his head, clearly embarrassed.

"Why don't we go grab the stuff you planted for the Humans? That way, we won't have to worry about them going off if another unit of Humans come to check up on the progress of those three." He says as he gets to his feet.

"Oh, yea. Sure." Xan gets up and he's sure to grab a sack for Xan to use before following after Xan to dig up whatever things the Humans had given the other to plant about the cave.

Day 33

"So that's an Orc." Ichigo murmurs at the sight of the pig faced Monster that somehow managed to increase its stink. Once more, he is leading a hunting party consisting of Bei, Hu, and Mu due to his desire to spend some time away from the caves due to a conflicted issue within himself. He led them south for a bit and then east, towards a valley.

It took them some hours to travel to said valley and they were also keeping an eye out for caves to use for later in case they don't have time to get home before evening. They had found one, but it seems that a demon spider has built a web at the entrance. He's confident that they can deal with it later, likely with fire and spears.

He'd teach them archery if he knew the basics of it and just because he's seen Uryu fire those energy arrows doesn't automatically mean he can even begin to mimic what Uryu did with wooden bows and arrows. And he likely did start his training with those before going around firing off those energy arrows. He muses as he kind of wished he did know how to use one as it could come in handy about now.

He doubts he'd be able to approach the Orc at all, maybe the Monster would have allowed a Goblin in close quarters but not a Hobgoblin. Nor did he want to send any of the others to make contact. As he ponders this, the Orc seems to finally sense it wasn't alone.

Suddenly, something just stinks and the Orc is running, charging really... right in front of where they were hiding while holding up its mace. As he pinches his nose, he watches as an arrow hits the Orc. As they watch, a sword welder engages the Orc while a ranged fighter continues to fire arrows in the Orc's direction.

Elves. He realizes upon spotting the ears and how human they appear. The stink remains, even with the Orc dead.

"Well, that's what, the fourth Orc we've found in the last two weeks?" The sword fighter muses, neither seem to have noticed the group spying upon them.

"Second Orc to be found in this valley. Must be an operation near." The archer considers thoughtfully.

"Must be southeast of here, likely at the other end of this valley." The sword fighter remarks with a grin.

Without a word more, the two follow the dirt trail that's evident near the top of the valley.

"I can't believe they just left perfectly good meat laying around!" Hu huffs after the two Elves have left their sight.

The others move forward, the stink lingers while he continues to look off in the direction the pair had gone as he moves to join the others where the Orc's body lies. He picks up the mace, noting that it's made out of metal. Which causes him to wonder if by operation, they meant mining operation.

"I wonder what Elves taste like?" Mu wonders and he sighs, not that he could blame them, he's hungry too.

The body is striped before they begin to butcher the body. He accepts a portion of an arm, noting that the Orc tastes like the animal it looks like. Maybe I should just try experimenting to see what plant can enhance the flavor?

"You know, maybe we should follow after? I mean, tomorrow, to see if we can kill one ourselves!" Bei muses with a slight wistful tone.

The other two echo that sentiment, then again, he wouldn't have minded getting into a fight with that sword fighter with his acquisition from the treasury, that woman's short sword. "We likely won't have to wait long, they should be sending someone out looking for this one later." He tells them. "If only to learn what killed it."

And ate it. He thought was pretty much implied as they quickly finish eating their fill and did their best to take the remainder of the body back towards that cave they came across earlier.

"Can we kill the demon spider without you, Hobore?" Hu asks politely and he nods, replying, "Sure, have fun."

He sticks near the pile of belongs along with the Orc meat as they huddle together to plan their course of action, with Bei pretty much being the leader of the trio. Sure enough, Bei started a small fire and they each picked a fresh branch, using some of the Orc's bloody cloth to wrap around one end. They set that cloth on fire and then put out the small fire. They set about enacting whatever plan they came up with.

Both Hu and Mu approach the web and set it on fire using the torches, the spider leaps from its hiding place while Bei uses the spear thrower to launch a spear at the spider. It kind of penetrates but it does cause the spider to go for Bei. The other two also use their own spear throwers to launch spears into the spider's body, both getting between the legs while Bei charges forward, waving the torch in its face.

He notes the 'hair' that the spider sports and unsurprisingly, the spider catches fire. The rest of the time is spent tag teaming the spider as well as launching spears into its body. Finally Mu tosses the torch into the cave and with both hands, charges the spider head on. The spear gets shoved into the mandibles of the spider. A killing blow as the spider.

"Might want to put out those fires before they give away our location." He advices as the three cheer at their success before scrambling to do as he suggests.

They use dirt to smother the flames, while they were doing that, he enters into the cave. Picking up the torch that Mu had tossed, he studies the walls, it seems that there's some old marks that were made by picks likely. Must have been a mine of some kind. He decides as he touches the wall.

He continues on in with the torch, not that he needs it particularly as it kind of screwing with his vision but for now, he thought it could be useful as he doubts anything that favors the dark would willingly approach something carrying a light. After some minutes, he comes towards a path beginning to slant downwards while the other just goes off to the side. He follows that one to find the beginning of what appears to be evidence that miners had also lived within this cave.

With a hum, he turns around to go fetch the others. It looks like they have a nice spot to use during their time here. Though he might want to put some kind of trap before that tunnel leading down and in the hall leading to what used to be living quarters for the miners.

They spent time cleaning up the quarters as he heads out to gather a few samples of local herbs.

Day 34

Parrying the incoming mining pick, Ichigo leaps backwards and then to the right as the Orc tries to back hand him. The Orc bellows in anger as the other Monster tries to slash at him horizontally while he goes for the arm that's holding the mining pick, he gets the Orc in the wrist and the mining pick falls to the ground while Mu shoves a spear into the Orc's neck. He manages to slash the neck, it continues to try to attack him but soon collapses.

He looks around the clearing, noting that both Bei and Hu had also worked together to bring an Orc down between them. They were all panting, they had only just woken up to find the pair of Orc nosing around the cave entrance. Neither of the pair seem to think of sending one off, heading back to their camp to inform their leader of the presence of the small group of Goblins plus a Hobgoblin.

"Well, looks like bacon for breakfast." He murmurs out loud.

"That sounds good, I'll take a helping too!" Mu adds cheerfully and he sports the ghost of a smile before he clears his blade of Orc blood before sheathing it.

He begins to work on undressing the Orc, confident that if either Bei or Hu needed first aide they would have called him over to examine said injury. Mu seems to be testing the mining pick, though its a bit heavy for her in her current Rank.

Checking through the pouch, he notices those strange stones that upon touching made him think of a particular element. As he touches one now, he can't help but think of water. With a shrug, he puts it back into the pouch and adds it to the pile. Soon enough, they have their flint knives out and they were butchering the Orc.

Mu and himself pick which organs they want to consume raw before they continue with their work, being sure to carry the meat into the prepared area within the cave. They made sure that at least two of them stood outside while the other two carried in the meat. They then took turns heading off to the river that's at the bottom of the valley to clean themselves of Orc blood and extra.

Feeling refreshed from cleaning himself of such, he takes some time to enjoy his surroundings. It's a beautiful world if you discount the whole, Monster eat Monster battle for survival going on. He muses as he sits on a rock in a fresh pair of pants and shirt. His sword resting on his lap as he waits for Hu to finish cleaning up.

The days really add up. Ichigo reflects to himself. From his count, it's been thirty-five days since he was born and oddly, he doesn't recall meeting his father. He likely has seen his mother among the captive women that the community keeps for breeding purposes.

He can't deny that he's felt that particular urge. It's either much stronger now that he's a Hobgoblin or he was still too young to worry about it. He hadn't touch any of them, the last time he'd seen them had been before they left on this little trip. It also looked like they were about to have another generation of Goblins by the time they returned from this trip, pretty much the reason why he wanted to leave the home cave honestly. Is that even normal? Don't they worry about being able to support another generation soon so after already having one barely a month earlier?

No answers were forth coming to those questions. "Ready, Hu?" He calls out, noticing that the Goblin is out of the water and in the process of getting some pants on.

"Ready!" Hu calls back and he nods, he gets off the rock and they head back to the cave.

The trip is uneventful and by the smell coming from within the cave, it seems that the two girls are doing some cooking, namely a simple soup with some edible plants and roots. Sure enough, the two were tending to their own fires. He looks up to be sure that the smoke is still escaping out of the recently cleaned smoke hole.

His attention returns to joining Hu in sitting where wooden trays plus bowls were waiting. He's crafted them in the days leading to their leaving the home cave. He spent two days preparing and packing what he thinks they'll need.

As the girls fill their own bowls and plates, he gets up, being sure to do so with his tray. Hu does the same once he's standing, they soon filled their respective plates and bowls, they sit down to eat. As they eat, they discuss their plans or rather, if their plans to explore the tunnel to day is still on.

"We're still going to explore that tunnel, right?" Bei asks him.

"Yea, we'll have to set up some traps at the entrance of the cave. We wouldn't want to get ambushed coming out of the tunnel." He replies.

"I wonder if we'll find some Spirit Stones? I mean, that's why this mine was created for, right?" Mu muses.

"Didn't any of the Orcs have any on them?" Hu wonders.

Ichigo shrugs while the others muse about what kind of Spirit Stones might have been mined around here. According to Goblin Gran, the most common of these stones are typically of the four elements. Earth, Fire, Water, and Wind. I wouldn't mind finding a Lightning Stone, though the question becomes how to create a sword with one in it? I don't really want to go around raiding just to possess a weapon that already has one in it. I wonder if I can find stuff to pay for the making of one? Those Elves, they might be more approachable then the local Humans. If I had all the materials plus some other goods, might we come to an agreement?

As he comes out of his thoughts, he finds that the others had gotten up for seconds and thirds. With a shrug, he takes his tray of dirty bowl and plate, adding it to last night's dirty items. They'll have to do some washing soon but, he's more interested in checking out of rest of the mine.

Seeing that he's ready, the others quickly finish their meal and go about grabbing their weapons along with empty knapsacks for any loot they may find within the tunnel. He puts on his armor before he checks his sword and is sure that his flint knife is securely on his belt while his knapsack's seams weren't going to fail on him. He also grabs some length of rope and a pouch with healing herbs and bandages.

Before leading the others out of the living quarters, Ichigo takes a look at the others. Each of them are wearing their plated shirts, pants, helmets, shin and arm guards. They each have two spears along with flint knives on their belts.

With a nod, he heads for the entrance. It takes them about forty minutes to gather and set the traps for the entrance. Secure in the knowledge that it's good to go, Ichigo leads to the tunnel that leads down, they have to disable the traps he set the night before but they manage it rather quickly. He's thankful that they don't need torches to see within the tunnel, it's in part to their racial abilities.

After sometime walking down the tunnel, it levels off for a few minutes until they come to a large room that sports a total of five tunnels, each spiking off in different directions. As he approaches a tunnel, one of the ones on his left, he jerks to look to where Mu is as she shouts, "Slime!"

He turns to watch as Bei joins Mu in fighting the Slime, which is green in color. They spear it and whack it with their respective spears, it doesn't seem to be working very well and as the Green Slime surges into the room, they back away.

With a frown, Ichigo holds up his right hand. He focuses on Spear of the End spell that he knows. A small ball of black energy appear within the slightly clawed hand and with a flick of his wrist, the spell flies towards the Green Slime and watches as the spell not only kills the Green Slime but also causes a slight crater to form where the Green Slime had been. He's rather surprised at how effective that spell was, particularly as according to Hobxan, the spell was the weakest out of the End Spells as all introductory spells were.

That isn't very reassuring. He thinks while Hu and Mu are surprised that he knew a spell while Bei seem more interested in the effects, even picking up this ball that seems to be all that remains of the Green Slime. "Let's get moving. That might attract unwanted attention." He states and motions for them to follow him down his chosen tunnel.

The tunnel he picks sports a colony of a variant of demon spiders that while tiny compared to a regular demon spider, they live communally and are bald with bone white color sporting glowing yellow skull upon the large part of its body without any horns upon the head. Being the size of a Hobgoblin's fist, they have a hell of a time killing the increasing number of demon cave spiders. He ends up using Spear of the End at least thrice before they retreat. He notes how he got splattered with some of the spider's innards.

He's slightly exhausted from using that spell in such quick succession. As they take their time, recovering, he finds himself becoming tired, it doesn't take a genius to realize that it seems that the variant of demon spiders they just encountered seem to possess venom that induces the victim to sleep. Grinding his teeth, he turns to look at the others mostly focus on the incoming attackers, they slumped and soft snores coming from each, his eyes were having trouble focusing due to the venom.

He moves a seemingly heavy hand about the front of him collecting some of the spider bits and blood. He licks the stuff off his hand, which, kind of seems to help keep him awake. As the horde of small spider monsters approach, he does his best to consume more bits of those spiders. He even walks over to where the others are and pick spider parts from them.

As the horde of spiders approach, he is mostly recovered from the venom and engages them again, being sure to eat those he spears with his sword. After he's eaten more then a dozen in a row, maybe even three dozen, the venom of the spiders don't seem to affect him. He wonders if his acquiring immunity might have something to do with how many of the spiders he's consumed.

Not seeing much point to think about it, he mostly ignores the issue for now to focus on the spiders, even feeling up to firing a Spear of the End towards the nearest group of cave spiders approaching the sleeping companions. He isn't sure how long it takes him but the horde of spiders comes to an end and he collects the dead ones. With a look around the room, looking for any that he's missed.

Feeling rather tired and sore, he checks himself to find himself covered in bites and scratches. He attends to his wounds, cleaning them out. He considers seeing what his other spell, Complete Regeneration, can do but seeing no need to use it to heal himself, he mostly plays look out as he waits for them to wake.

He doesn't know how long they slept, as someone stirs, he doesn't really look in their direction, a bit more alert to anything that might come to investigate the latest noise.

"Ah Gods, my armor! My Helmet! My Pants!" He is slightly confused until he turns to find Bei, it had to be Bei given that the hair is blond, is nolonger a Goblin but a Hobgoblin, the usual green color variety but she does sport some markings, a rusty red in color upon her arms and forehead. He's thankful for the foresight of bringing additional cloths that were sized for Hobgoblins just encase the others Ranked Up while they were away from the home cave.

A glance at Hu and Mu reveals that they were still the same, which makes sense given how often it had just been Bei and himself gone hunting. It shouldn't take them long to also Rank Up. "I brought more armor and cloths meant for Hobgoblins for this reason."

"Eat at least two dozen of those. Hopefully, you'll pick up immunity to their venom like I did." He states, nodding towards the pile.

"Two dozen?" Bei murmurs with a slight frown.

"Four groups of six." He explains as Bei doesn't seem to know how many that was.

"Oh!" And Bei walks over, he adverts his eyes and head as she creates four piles of six out of the pile. She eats them, one after the other, as he gets up to investigate the tunnel where the spider colony claimed. He wants to make sure they got them all.

The deeper he went the webbing seems to sport cases of silk bundles. He cuts into each of the bundles to find mummified large rat monsters within in the first few. He gets into a large room where the bundles contain human remains along with what metal of their tools that remain. He finds a interesting knife, as he swings it, water bolts come flying out of the point. Experimenting shows that he can get water to appear without swinging it hard, mostly it just splashes out, which pleases him as he realizes that the knife possessed a Water Stone.

He puts it on his belt and continues. Most of what he finds in regards to metal items were simple iron and bronze along with coins made out of gold and silver. He adds the coins to his belt pouch while adding the slightly rusty pick heads, belt knives, daggers, arrow heads, and axe heads into his knapsack. He finds raw ore at spots, piled up, likely once held in wooden barrels and crates. The webbing in this part is much older and has become sparse except at these other tunnels that lead into this mining spot.

He finds more spiders to kill as the cave variant of Demon Spider sense him within this part of their colony. After some minutes, he decides to come back with the others. He's sure they'd want their chance at killing more of these spiders as well.

As he returns, Hu and Mu have woken, Bei likely retreated back up to the living quarters to get armor that fits. It seems that Bei had passed along his suggestion to eat the small Demon Spiders. The pile looks low and the two nod in acknowledgement of his appearance.

"Found a large mine at the end of the tunnel. There's piles of ore just laying around as well as mummified Humans. Found some metal weapons," He says, swinging his knapsack from his shoulder and onto the floor. "Pick a metal knife yourselves. You'll need it. We can see what we can do about the rust later."

They eagerly pick through the knapsack, eager to own their own metal weapon. "Bei Ranked Up." Hu muses and Mu nods as they finish picking which knife they'd like.

"You two might be getting there too, you know. Before we head back, you two might be Hobhu and Hobmu instead of Gobhu and Gobmu." He remarks and they get these eager looks on their faces with a tint of hope.

"Really? You think we're that ready?" Mu asks him, her eyes sparkling.

"I don't see why you wouldn't. I mean, you both are at..." He trails off.

Mu touches her left index finger to her temple and after a second, replies, "Level eighty-nine."

Hu does the same and replies, "Level eight-nine."

Ichigo blinks and he touches an index finger to his temple, he is startled when information seemingly pops into his head. He lowers his index finger and huffs, kind of disturbed at the use of the word level. It reminds him of video games and causes him to wonder just what was the level of the three humans he had killed as it's likely the experience he got from killing the three on his own had been enough to push him to the right level to Rank Up.

"Eleven more levels for you two to go." He replies and they nod.

They can hear Bei coming, she jogging down the ramp, he smiles as Bei rejoins them. "Ok, ready to continue!" She says in a chipper tone.

With a nod, he leads them back down the tunnel, it seems that some of those cave spiders were in the possess of reclaiming the tunnel, thankfully, even if none of the others received complete immunity to the spider's venom, they had developed a resistance to it. Their moves did become sluggish and their hand eye coordination did slip, but they remained able to fight and move.

He does make use of Spear of the End , he is sure to space the spell attack out as they push their way into the mine. He's fairly tempted to just use his flint knife and one of the metal parts to start a fire to set the webs aflame but decided that would only alert the other inhabitants and something more dangers and powerful will likely investigate the cause. Ichigo doubts that the Demon Spider Variants were all that caused the mine to be abandoned, plus, they didn't know how big the mine is or what else could be calling these tunnels home beyond the Green Slime and the colony of Demon Spiders.

"Let's head back up. We can continue exploring tomorrow." He says to the group after they filled their own knapsacks with ore.

He lets the others take point, bringing up the rear of the group encase the spiders or something else try to attack them from the rear. Going to have Bei weld an Orc mining pick tomorrow as she's big enough to hold it in one hand. Might have to see about carving some handles for some of the axe heads we recovered from those web bundles.

We need to get them something for close combat beyond a simple metal knife. He muses as they safely make it to the living quarters, which seems to take hours given what each goblin is carrying in their packs. Once he's put down his heavy knapsack and done some stretches, Ichigo heads back to the tunnel to check the traps at the entrance.

To Be Continued

Aliens, Really? Really!: Animorphs

I don't own Animorphs and High School DxD!

By the Satans? Terry's mind comes to a stop as a blue eggish shaped space ship comes to land down upon the abandoned construction site. He's been trailing behind a group of human pre-teens, well, he assumes they were, the blond boy comes across as the runt of the group.

As the Devil tries to wrap his mind about the fact that something is actually happening in his territory, but it looks like he's already got to modify some memories. Do I have to report to the Leviathan? Terry wonders as he listens and watches as a blue being sporting four eyes, no mouth, and a long tail tipped with a fairly decent looking blade.

"Wait a minute, just hold your horses!" Terry exclaims, forming a T with his hands, one of the boys, Jake, pauses in walking into the space ship. "What is your military rank? How can you be sure you are the last of your ... race on this planet?" The member of House Oriax asks, moving closer, sure, he's ten years old but his Mother spent eight years ensuring he's educated well beyond his peers.

The dark green haired Devil becomes the focus of the whole group's gaze, most seemly forgotten he was there it seems by their expression. "That's what your worried about?! Really?" The darker skinned boy, M-something, exclaims. "That's your reaction to All of This ?!"

"I'm a Devil, more importantly, I'm the Devil in charge of this area." Terry states, it's not like it matters as they won't be remembering this at all. "Terrance of House Oriax, cousin to the current Great Marquis of the Oriax House." More like second cousin. He mentally adds.

"Yea, good one. And I'm secretly a nymph." Comes the snarky reply, it's clear none of them believe that and Terry sighs, including the blue furred alien.

Terry looks around before moving his right hand in a clear pattern, leaving sickly green glyphs in the air as he draws a Magic Circle in the air to secure the area of the construction site. He ignores the soft gasping and the suddenly intense looks as he finishes the circling. He takes a moment to study it before activating it by placing his hand at the center. The glyphs flash and vanish as magic pulses, creating a warded sphere that won't allow either intruders into or those within out of this place without his permission.

So much for a few years of vacation away from responsibilities to my race. He thinks sourly as he does his best to keep a professional look to his features. "Welcome to the Buffy level world layer." Terry remarks dryly after a minute of disbelief silence.

That seems to jolt the others out of their currently stump. "I'm a male, seriously, I really am." M-something states and he just nods.

"Yea, I know. You don't have the muscle to be a nymph." Terry states, his gray eyes glinting with some humor. It's a tidbit of information that likely went over their heads and he's fine with that.

"Now then, might we begin our beginning of diplomatic negotiations? Assuming that you have such power to do so on behalf of your race upon this world, of course." He says as he brings his arms to his sides as he turns his gaze to the bleeding out alien.

"Can you at least heal him?" One of the girls asks and he sighs while it looks like the blond boy seems to be in agreement with that sentiment.

"I don't know his biology, I don't know how his kind respond to magic, or I would have done so upon securing this area." Terry admits rather blankly. "At the moment, he's the only source of information about his race, why they are here, and about the worlds beyond our galaxy. Trust me, if I could do anything for him, I would."

:Would you allow me to Acquire your DNA?: The alien asks and Terry frowns as he considers that. Doing his best to ignore the various looks he's getting from the pre-teens.

"I don't think that's outside of the realm of possibility. The question is more how would you go about doing that?" He asks after thinking it over, after all, blood of a Devil can be used for many things.

:I just need to touch you. You will feel relax for a minute or two but none the worst for wear.: Is the alien's reply and he lets out a sigh.

"I doubt that will be harmful to either of us." Terry admits and walks over in a careful manner, after all, he's kind of curious to see what will happen and why they needed his DNA.

Once he's near, he offers his left hand, doing his best to not stare at the tail sporting a sharp looking blade but into the alien's face. He feels a number of fingers touching his forearm, far more fingers then any being that he knows of owning. A relaxing feeling does wash over him but that's all. The feeling passes and he blinks his eyes rapidly before taking a few steps away.

"Ok, so, now what?" The blond boy wonders while Terry studies the alien, his eyes going towards the wound and back to the face. Noting that the wound hasn't healed.

:Just watch and don't freak out. It doesn't hurt, no matter how painful it looks.: The alien reassures the group, which just causes Terry to rise a skeptical eyebrow at that.

The alien closes both sets of eyes and then, slowly at first but faster, part of the alien begin to move, many shrinking while others just altering their shape. The face of the alien begins to sport a slit that after a few moments, becomes a mouth while the blue fur of the face retreats, leaving behind pale white skin, a shade lighter then Terry's own. The nose changes and begins to grown out as the lower part of the alien's skull seems to become a lower jaw. It's not long before the face resembles that of a human, though the hair upon the head that remains is still that alien's shade of blue fur.

Terry sighs as the two girls blush and look away from the naked man that is laying where the alien had been. Blue is most definitely his natural hair color from what Terry can see and as he looks the man over, notices that yip, the wound is nowhere to be found. The body is clearly athletic in build, swimmer or runner, he can't really say as he's no really into sports of any kind to really tell. Again, the man is a shade paler then Terry himself and he can't seem to see any sighs of devil wings.

As the man opens his eyes, they sport the same color from before, maybe a bit more in human range of color shade but still the same. The blond boy gets up and help the man get to their feet and once upon his feet, the alien gets this look of surprise before examining himself, clearly stunned by something. "Dude, here!" M-something says, taking off his sweater and tossing it to the blond boy, who looks puzzled for a second before handing it off to the now human alien.

"This is... how? I only... What?" The alien wonders out loud in English, there's a few slurs with the s sound but passable.

"Well, good news, you're not a Devil. Unless you feel something on your back?" Terry inquires and he feels the others look at him, pointy in the chest area. "We have wings, we just don't deploy them all the time."

"I don't look, look like you." The alien says, drawing out the o sound in look and giving the last look a hard k sound. The offered sweater soon found a place tied about the alien's waist.

"Well, you can't ID Devils through our blood. We're magic race after all. We don't even suffer from inbreeding like humans or non-magic inherit species." Terry explains and it's clear someone's eyes light up at that detail while the others just seem to realize that yes, he is talking about magic as if it were a thing, a real and influencing force in this world.

Straightening, he feels something take a rather big crack at the ward he placed in this area, his eyes moving towards the source. It's an odd feeling as clearly they weren't using magic to try and force their way through it, so he knows it'll hold but it's just, odd that he even felt them try . "Ok, what was with the, well, you know, one minute you were a blue centaur and the next, a man."

"It's called Morphing. I was directing Jake into getting the device from my ship so I can gift you all with it before dying to give you all a chance to escape." The alien explains and Terry's attention returns to the current man, focusing on the free information that the alien is handing out. "Though it seems that there is another option. As you can see, upon morphing, any wounds, injuries really, can be healed by doing so. Typically, you become a genetic clone of the DNA donor."

That explains his surprise then. And if that's the case then what could happen if he were to Acquire an Angle or Fallen? Terry muses but does his level best to keep his attention on the here and now. He'll have plenty of time to think on such things later.

"You can only stay in a Morph for two Earth hours or you would become what we call a Nothlit , never being able to return to your birth form." The alien tells them and Terry can't help but get a thoughtful look on his face while the alien continues on explaining about Morphing. "If you can Acquire more DNA of a certain species before assuming that shape, you can combine the samples to create a unique morph of that species. Which is why I am surprised to already have a unique human morph from just Acquiring Terrance's DNA."

"Thank you." The alien says in a very sincere tone upon looking at Terry. Terry just nods his head and the alien then gets a serious look upon his face, he just sighs and does his best to stand comfortablity as he's more then likely going to be here for a while and it's beginning to look like he's not going to be modifying these humans' memories about tonight.

Call it a feeling but Terry is fairly certain that the alien will fight him on that subject and, at this point, Terry knew he'd be called a fool to not use that once they finally get around to making a bargain with this alien. Terry does his best to listen, ignoring the various shutters he senses from the ward. He's confident that his ward will hold against whatever energies are trying to force their way through. After all, if it's not magic then its nothing for him to worry about.

- T - - - X - - - T -

Location: Underworld

As they get off the train, Terry leads currently human morphed War-Prince Elfangor-Sirinial-Shamtul, shorten to War-Prince or Prince Elfangor as his full name is a mouthful, even for a Devil like him, towards a clear space set aside for Devil to use for Teleport Circles. They had a meeting at 6 pm with the Leviathan of the four Satan concerning not just the War-Prince's presence in his Territory but also future contact between Devils and Andalites plus the whole Yeerks trying to enslave humans and have already deported a number of them beyond Earth. Devils will be coming into conflict with Yeerks sooner or later when it comes to collecting powerful humans, it just so happens that the Yeerks seem to be sticking to one location in the wide world that is Earth, so they have been flying under the radar for the most part.

Too be fair, the Sharing, the title alone seems to be something an Angel would coin. They've been pretty squeaky clean and doing their best to come across as a good organization in order to lure charitable people into their ranks to help promote the best values human tend to preach about. I thought they had ties to one of the local churches. Terry muses as he takes the both of them to the local market, it's 10 am and he did promise to play guide for the War-Prince.

It's been four months since their meeting and beyond doing his best to keep the resistance group coined Animorphs doing only spying mission with attempts at saboteur of what they can, he hadn't been very successful in his efforts but as they did assault the local pool without any warning to him so of course most of the escape Hosts were re-captured. They almost lost Tobias, the boy almost suffered the fate of getting stuck in the morph of a Red-Tailed Hawk, surprisingly enough, the War-Prince was very much on his side of that argument about wasting his life and abilities just because he had a crappy home life.

Terry himself would the very next day, begin to fake the needed documents, purchase a house, create a bank account plus fanatical history, and a job in his family's company branch he's head of, just so the War-Prince could officially adopt the pre-teen as his son. Allen Samuel Tenant is the name the War-Prince now goes by in human circles, emigrant from New Zealand and Head Developer of Project Era, it was just a made up project he created in his company. It seems the War-Prince actually does plan to make something, what he doesn't really know or care as the company was just a shell company for the Oriax House to laundry money from criminal activities that they have contract with. It's a cover that Allen seems to be happy with, it also seems to give the alien War-Prince a much needed distraction.

It wasn't just from grief of his comrades dying but he wasn't going to pry. Given time, Terry pretty sure that he'll find out what secrets the War-Prince has, not that it helps as he is curious about War-Prince Elfangor as a person and his surprising familiarity with human culture. Given that Andalites don't have mouths and seem to be strictly projectile Telepathic race, he can't help but think the fact he has a mouth and has to communicate verbally should have more of an impact. Then again, he's, and the Animorphs, not even sure how the race even feeds without a mouth in the first place.

He knows that the War-Prince often wakes up early, usually an hour before dawn, and uses a Crow Morph to fly out to the edge of the limits to just run before returning back to the house viva the same morph, he's made sure that 'Allen's' day starts later in the morning just to give the alien as much time he needs for this ritual running. The alien also does so again after 6 pm, although it's not uncommon for the War-Prince to miss the evening run due to helping Tobias with school work or just spending time with the pre-teen. Terry can't help but wonder about all that running, it couldn't just to stay fit, right?

As Terry finally collections his thoughts for a few minutes, he allows the War-Prince to soak in their current location after making sure they were clear of the Teleportation Circle. "Welcome to Lilith's most popular shopping district. Lilith is the current Capital City of the Four Satans' Territory!" The now eleven year old Devil chimes as the War-Prince looks ready to do some exploring, his birthday was a month ago.

Taking the lead, he begins to walk towards the walk ways. "Before the current Satans came to power, Lucifaad had been the Capital of the Satans." He cheerfully explains, a few of the fellow walkers spare the pair of them any real looks, likely assuming that the War-Prince is part of his Peerage.

Not that Terry has received a set of Evil Pieces or even has one inside of himself. His Mother was very clear about her stance concerning those items and none really fought her on it. Not that he wanted something like it inside of him, but it grinds on him all the same that he wasn't even offered the chance to decline.

Terry keeps studying the War-Prince out of the corner of his eye, noting the way that the alien soldier's gaze keeps going up to the sky, likely due to surprise of the fact that it looks similar to the surface's own. "The current Satans have done much to match the sky with that of the surface, even going so far as to create an artificial moon and to darken the sky at night." He explains.

"Why go to all that trouble of creating something so big? Or altering this place's natural appearance?" Asks the current tourist.

"To help the Reincarnated Devils settle into their new life here in the Underworld." Terry explains. "And yes, humans do become Devils, just not in the style you've heard or read about."

Taking a moment to make sure that the War-Prince's focus is upon him, Terry explains how that they add to the Devil population. "You see, when our private civil war ended, our numbers weren't great. You look at us and think we're no different from humans, right? Well, not wrong, we are capable shape-shifters, some better then others in that particular field. We may live longer lives but it's unlikely any married couple can expect to have more then one kid every few centuries." Terry frowns as he considers something. "Needless to say we created something to transform other species into Devils. Maybe by doing so, our fertility rate might see a rise. Maybe not." He says before deciding on sharing something that might give the War-Prince food for thought for the future.

"Take for example the current Lucifer, Satan Sirzech. He was born before the civil war, which happened some centuries ago. He was born to House Gremony, the sole heir of the family's house." Terry explains. "After the Civil War, he married and upon ascending to his current rank, he left the House behind, leaving them without an heir. It's only now that there are rumors going around that only recently, he's parents have finally birthed a new heir, giving him, a fully grown Devil and married with his own wife, that he now has a younger sibling." He pauses, letting that sink in before saying, "Though truthfully, I think it's more his parents are trying more frequently to have another then now then there actually being a sibling at this point, but, well, if there really was one... They'd be keeping it hush hush for the usual reasons."

"I'm sure you've figured out that if there's Devils then what other mythical beings could exist, right? Like Unicorns? Maybe even Angels of a certain book, right?" Terry slows and turns his head to look over his left shoulder.

The War-Prince gives a slight nod and Terry can't help but smirk as he says, "All those myths have some truth to them. Yea, Angels exist, and yea, some of them Fell from Heaven viva Sinful Vices, most notably, Wrath." With a snort, he continues, "I know a few Angels have skimmed close to my territory in the past, kind of odd but I dismissed it. They never lingered for more then a day or two."

And now I have a good idea of why they were there in the first place. The green haired Devil mentally muses sourly. It was one of the reason why the territory became available as the previous holder just didn't want to deal with that kind of fallout of dealing another Faction, particularly the Church investigation that has likely been launched due to the strange issue. Sloth was the Sin one Ulik Dantlion, Great-grand uncle of the current Great Duke of House Dantlion followed and abides to.

"Controllers praying to God of Heaven." The War-Prince murmurs, likely not noticing how a few of the surrounding Devils, including Terry himself flinches slightly that the mention of that god. "Couldn't they have noticed the Yeerk?" The alien asks, his attention once more focused upon Terry.

Terry looks away and begins to walk again as he thinks of a way to answer that, it's not like he's an expert on what magic Angels have access too. "They likely didn't see the point in using magic to examine the person in question." He muses in a thoughtful tone. "It was clear they weren't hurt nor was anything overly wrong with their respective lives that could match whatever urgent prayers they were getting. So, they left, not seeing any point in using magic when it could be depression."

"Magic isn't the solution to ever problem we run into and we ourselves have a limited, healthy pool of magic to draw from. Its why I can't set up a ward about the territory to mark all the Controllers, let alone keep people from getting to and from the pool." Or cause the magical death of every Yeerk topside let alone in the pool. If it were just placing the glyphs into the dirt or common stone, then sure, in about a year, but I would need special materials, prepare the various sites, etc... Yea, not happening. Terry privately admits inside of his own head. If I was, I would be able to rival one of the Dragon Kings.

"We may need to start looking for a space." The War-Prince states, jolting him from his mental muses. He nods stiffly and picks up the pace.

Terry finds a place renting private rooms by the hour that seems to be an illusion space. He picks one that has the room in a tropical location, not really paying any mind to his selection. Once secure within the room and making sure they were under a large tree, the War-Prince de-morphs, the process is rather quick and just as painful to watch as any of the previous times he's seen this happen. How can that not be painful ?

They spent the rest of the hour just going about the room, checking to see how real the plants and catching one of the animals to see if the War-Prince could Acquire DNA from them. The answer was, nope, they were as illusionary as the rest of the room. A few spot clearly were glitches and sometimes they encountered plants with the wrong color or bad shading. Terry wonders what the point of this brand of magic slash tech it was suppose to do but left off, he didn't need know, really. It was clearly still getting worked on and had years to go before its potential will be realized.

The room served to give the War-Prince some time in his true body without anyone the wiser. He did cast a privacy ward but nothing overly special, just one to obscure their looks and spoken conversation. Checking his watch, Terry notices its pass lunch and after some inquiries, heads for an Italian dinner for them to have a meal.

Once they were at a table, they talked about basic things like money, what's grown here, what's imported, what kind of history the Devils have with Angels and the Fallen, and him confirming or correcting what mythical beings and creatures exist. The War-Prince did sample many dishes, drinks, and desserts, heading to the rest room to de-morph as necessary as they wheedle away the afternoon at the dinner. Terry pays the bill with only a slighted eyebrow at the total, being sure to leave an average tip for the waiter.

They have an hour and a half to wander about before their meeting. Terry does his best to recall what places of note were nearest to the building they were headed for or if they could get a bit of a tour of the building. He does feel his nerves begin to get the better of him, he's just eleven for Hell's Sake! It's just going to be the War-Prince, the Leviathan, and himself. Alone. In a room. Together.

His first time meeting with a Satan and he's bringing her news of an alien invasion plus a news of life beyond their corner of the universe. It's something he's done his best to ignore but, well, as the meeting draws closer, Terry just wishes the meeting gets postponed or maybe canceled as his mind chews on the various parts of the events over the course of these pass months. Like involving humans, humans who he's not allowed to enter into any kind of contract with them viva his own with the War-Prince. Humans with knowledge of the Supernatural World, or, as he had accidentally coined it, the Buffy layer of the world.

Yea, Marco just loves making remarks related to that show. And yea, he did get nicknamed the Angel of the group, for some bizarre reason. For one, he's not a Vampire and for another, why to Heaven's Gates would he be a haunted corpse? He's a living being, thank you very much plus he doesn't wear leather in any color or given any of them a silver cross necklace. Not that the cross would have burnt him any...

Terry blinks as he finds himself staring up at the building where the meeting is to be held. "How much time until the meeting?" He finds himself asking the War-Prince.

"Fifteen minutes." Is the answer to that question and Terry can't help but wonder why he just didn't tell his House about this alien situation?

Then the thought of his Mother getting involved and Terry feels something settle upon him, giving him the needed push to head inside and to just, to just be numb. From everything he recalls about the Four Satans, he's more then willing to put his faith in them then in any agenda his Mother would ever have. Terry would rather put his fate in their hands then his cousin's. After all, his cousin and other blood relatives were the ones to leave him to his Mother and her idea of his upbringing and education.

Once Terry speaks with the Devil at the desk, they sign in and he's given directions on which Teleportation Circle to aim, he heads does so, being sure to be touching the War-Prince on the cloth about the right wrist. They speak with Satan Serafall's secretary, he does his best to ignore the expression on the other Devil's face upon their realization that he's Terrance Oriax, not the War-Prince. He mostly just kept his mind blank, doing his best to stay comfortably numb as the War-Prince inquires and receives directions to the nearest rest room.

Five minutes pass before the War-Prince returns and as 6 pm arrives and passes, they are still waiting. As 7 pm approaches, the doors of the office opens and the secretary enters the office, the doors closing behind them. Ten minutes later, the Devil exits out, doing their best to look professional while doing their best to snubbly inform that they were allowed in and that they mustn't be long. As Satan Serafall's time was very valuable, its clear they thought they were wasting that valuable time.

Terry gets to his feet and with the War-Prince, merely walks pass, not really acknowledging the Devil. They weren't important right now, nope, and he's certain that once everything was said and done, someone might be looking for a new job. After all, this appointment was made four months ago, there wasn't any reason to keep them waiting for the past hour beyond trying to do some kind of power play or maybe trying to get them dismissed simply due to his age.

The door closes and Terry feels his emotional numbness fade as he finds himself coming to a stop at the sight of one Satan Serafall Leviathan. Black hair done up in a pony tail with blue eyes, she's currently wearing navy blue business suit. She seems to be fairly bored, if Terry could judge the expression.

"I know why those Angels were showing up." Terry blurts out after a few moments of silence, pretty much the only thing that really comes to mind. He winces at the lack of polite chit chat or, you know, manners but he just couldn't think of anything.

"Oh?" Satan Serafall draws out with a slight rise of her right eyebrow. Terry swallows, his mouth feeling rather dry as he nods.

"Well, ah, may I introduce War-Prince Elfangor-Sirinial-Shamtul of the Andalite Military. He can better explain the situation." Terry admits, yes, he feels like dirt but to be honest, he just can't help it. Plus, the alien should have more experience at this kind of thing, right?

"Greetings Serafall Leviathan. I am War-Prince Elfangor and I bare ill tidings for Earth as a whole." The War-Prince says, smoothly stepping closer to the desk. Once in the middle of the room, the War-Prince proceeds to de-morph and it's clear that the Leviathan's gaze sharpens while focusing solely upon the alien as the cloths that the War-Prince is wearing seemingly melts away as soft pops of bone and muscle realigning sound out.

:I am an Andalite and what I have demonstrated is technology that my race have developed that allows us to pass among other species unnoticed.: The War-Prince explains and the alien continues, :Land Holder Terrance Oriax of House Oriax has explain that there isn't much he can do without informing either his House or the Satan of Foreign Affairs.: Pause. :I am to understand that you have the power to create more... firmer ties between our people?:

The Levianthan glances at Terry before saying, "Yes, I have the full backing of my fellow Satans to make official stances on behalf of the Devil Faction." Pause. "Are you certain you have the backing of your military?"

:I am likely most highest ranking surviving officer of our forces in this part of space.: The War-Prince state simply and Terry just stands back, very much aware that for now, he's just a piece of furniture at this point.

Serafall watches as the pair leave her office. She's rather thankful that the young Oriax Devil brought this matter to her personally and not to his House's attention. This way, they, the Satans, have time to think of how to break this bit of news to the seventy-two Pillars, allies, and other Factions.

A glance at the clock shows that it's been six hours since they started. She had locked the door, keeping her current secretary from eavesdropping on this meeting. The beginning of many. Serafall muses to herself as she leans back in her chair.

Aliens. They have an actual alien invasion happening in the US of A. One that's been on going for a few years already. She'll have to check to see who held that Territory before and subtly question them to see if they had any inking of this beyond the odd activity of Heaven's Angels.

Still, they have an infestation of Yeerks, a race of bug like aliens that infect a Host for a max of three days before needing to leave the Host to feed in a pool. They have alien Hosts here as well. Serafall sighs as she rubs the bridge of her nose.

I need a hobby, something to help relieve this stress. Serafall muses as she pulls her hand away and returns the chair back to its usual position. She needs to arrange a meeting with the others and break the news to them.

Still, it does make her wonder the effects of a Devil with this Morphing ability and they already have someone they can have as a lab rat. Oh well, first things first.

The End... Maybe?

Magic plus Morphing Equals Monster!: Ani

I don't own Animorphs and High School DxD!

A chill going down his spine wakes Terry from his day nap. Rolling off of his bed, he gets up, conjuring a plain white long sleeve shirt to cover his bare upper body as he quickly walks to his front door. He reaches the door as the bell rings.

Opening the door, the green haired Devil can't help but freeze at who's at the door. It's been two weeks since that meeting with Satan Serafall Leviathan and there hasn't been any new orders concerning his conduct or inquiries about his progress in learning to make use of the Morphing ability that he now possesses. "Satan Beelzebub, please, come in."

He moves to allow the older, more powerful Devil into his residence. Terry hadn't thought he'd have a face to face meeting with another Satan so soon. I would have thought Asmodeus would be the one to contact me before Beelzebub.

The elder Devil enters, a seemingly bored expression upon his face. Ajuka Beelzebub's green hair is a fair lighter shade of green then Terry's own. Almost gray blue eyes already moving from studying Terry to the decor of his residence as he closes the door and locks it. His mind still trying to catch up to the fact that there's a Satan right in front of him, who came to visit him instead of ordering him to visit them.

The Satan is already moving deeper into the house, Terry is slow to follow behind. "Office?" The Satan inquires.

"First landing of the basement, sir." Terry manages to state in a bland and, hopefully, polite tone. When he renovated the residence from the previous owner, he made sure to have his office space in the basement instead of on the first or second floor.

They move towards the stairs as Terry continues to tries to remember the manners his Mother made sure to teach him. The Beelzebub moves to give him room before the door in a polite gesture to unlock the protections he set up within and about his office. Within seconds, they both enter into his office and its here that Beelzebub acts, Circles flash into existence and fuse throughout the space, securing it fair better then Terry likely could in the same amount of time.

A slight smile graces Beelzebub's face with a slight tilt of his head. Terry moves to take the seat behind the desk, an irony given that he's not the one in control of this meeting. As he settles down in the fairly comfortable chair, Beelzebub simply conjures a chair to sit upon. A throne like one that reminds him of the kind he's seen in the few RPG games he's played, mostly the table top kind as they have some very beautiful images within their pages.

"How may I aid you, Satan Ajuka?" The eleven year old Devil asks with his arms upon his desk. The time is twelve forty pm according to his computer screen that's facing him.

"Land Holder Terrance Oriax, how has your study of this Morphing technology coming along?" The elder Devil inquires.

"I have found it to be fairly thrilling, although I have had trouble keeping my magical nature from mutating the Morph." Terry takes his time to recall the trouble he's had keeping his magic from flaring up during the change into a Morph. "I Acquired a male Crow as my first Morph." Oh boy, wasn't that fun? Three wings, four sets of eyes, and glowing green feathers... "My first time, well, I recorded the whole event. The mutations to the Morph caused by my magic was very memorable, each time I tried, each result of my Magic were fairly unique with the most common mutation being green feathers."

Interest clearly graces Beelzebub's being and he continues, "It took seventeen tries of reining in my magic to finally take the form of a common crow. It wasn't an exact clone of the donor of the DNA, much like what happened with War-Prince Elfangor using the DNA Acquired from myself."

"My second selection for a Morph was a male African lion from the local zoo." Terry explains after a few seconds of silence. "Same problem came up only it took me only four tries before I assumed the form of a mundane lion and yet again, I didn't turn into a clone of said lion." Yip, a lion that's eleven foot long, flaming green mane, eyes, and tail tip with sleek black fur, midnight blue fangs and claws. "Oddly enough, the mutation was very stable and came up the same each time. I came up with a theory about why. Which lead me to Acquire a female ferret and a mare next, I had formed a few theories at this point that I wanted to confirm."

"Oh?" Pipes in Beelzebub and Terry nods, continuing on with a slight reddening of his cheeks as he is kind of embarrassed about the gender of the two he mentioned.

"Yes, it's impossible for a Devil to Morph into the opposite gender. I tried but nope, both times, male along with the fact that the smaller the Morph, the more unstable the magical mutations." Acid dropping from saber like fangs, snow white sporting neon green, flashing pattern... "Three tries to turn into a mundane stallion and seven tries for the ferret." Leather wings covered in dark green fur, three hooves upon each foot, jaded ebony horn upon the brow, glowing white eyes...

"I take it the stable mutation forms are still accessible by your self?" The current Chief Advisor for the Technology Department and Creator of the Evil Pieces asks.

"Yes." Terry says simply. "I can transfer the videos of each attempt until I succeed onto a CD if you would like to view them at your leisure."

"Only four... Morphs or have you Acquired some more since the last two?" The Satan asks and he frowns as he tries to think of how to answer that.

"As of yesterday, I did a trip to a relative's Minotaur ranch and managed to Acquire a young bull." Terry admits. "I haven't attempted to Morph into one, I didn't feel overly pressed to make an attempt. I also wished to have at least the War-Prince Elfangor present to record the result." Not sure if my magic will mutate the Minotaur or if I end up simply in the form of a mundane bull.

"I see." Beelzebub hums, his right hand moves under his chin as the elder Devil's eyes seem to be focus inwards. Terry watches his visitor, doing his best to keep his face blank while trying to keep his body relax. Though he doubts he succeeds very well to the Satan's likely experienced eyes in that regards, then again, the Creator of the Evil Pieces system seems to be lost in his own head, more then likely secure in the fact that he, Terry, didn't pose any kind of threat to their person.

As silence settles in the office, Terry resides himself to whatever plan the Devil has for him, for there's something the Beelzebub wants of him and he could only guess it has something to do with a test concerning Morphing. Why else would the Satan remain content to plot and plan over the previous report? So, a demonstration, but here? No, I doubt it. Most likely his lab. Question will be if we'll be alone or with company.

Terry glances down at his appointment book, most of today and tonight was mostly meant to be spent going over scripts from a high-school contest along with checking online for any new events the Sharing are setting up for next month. There's no point trying to blackmail the more public leaders of the Sharing, all that will do would be to bring the organization to the spotlight and increase their recruitment drive simply due to that same attention. Launching investigations would only cause them to gather new Controllers with higher access to human society.

"Well then, let us be off then, shall we?" Terry jerks his head, his focus is once more on his visitor. Beelzebub standing once more in his office, the conjured chair vanishing.

"Ah, oh, yes, of course." Terry stammers, pushing some magic into his own conjured shirt as he gets up from his chair. He then conjures some sandals for his bare feet just as Satan Ajuka Beelzebub begins to create a Teleportation Circle to the Underworld, likely directly to his lab.

Closing his eyes, he feels the magic take hold and within seconds, Terry opens his eyes to find himself in a lab along with the other three Satans lounging about and his mind just blanks along with his emotions. The three pretty much ignore him, casually greeting their fellow Satan. The red haired Devil is Sirzechs Lucifer, the one with no hair is Falbium Asmodeus, and of course, the lone woman is Serafall Leviathan.

It's not long before he kind of feels his emotions surging under the enforced numbness along with random sentiments. Terry finds his throat feeling rather tight and his tongue to be lead weight within his mouth. The muscles of his shoulders are already aching from keeping his wings from flaring from his back. The urge to flee, flee fast and far trying to crack the icy layer of numbness.

Then he hears a howl from another room, one that likely belongs to something large and most likely canine in nature. Terry turns his head towards the wall that looks like it can move to reveal the other room. A hell hound? He muses dully.

Terry finally moves from the spot, moving towards one of the tables while the Satans seem to be still talking among themselves. Looking about, it takes him a few seconds to guess where he's to stand to demonstrate his Morphing ability. Wonder which Morph they'd want to see first? He wonders as he does his best to not look in their location.

After about twenty minutes, Terry feels someone's eyes on him. His mouth goes dry as Beelzebub calls to him, "Please move to the circle, Terrance." He's not sure if he should be happy that Beelzebub remembers his first name or not.

Nodding stiffly, the youngest Devil in the room moves to the yellow circle, once in the center he turns to face Satan Ajuka. A number of machines come online, a few of the screens that he can see show himself at different angles. He does his best to keep his breathing as even as possible now that he has all of their attention focus upon him.

"Now then, please Morph either of your smaller animals." His fellow green haired Devil tells him and Terry decides on the crow. It's more familiar to him then the ferret, after all, it's the form that allows him to fly about, stretching his wings as it were.

Keeping his magic firmly under his control, Terry focuses on growing smaller and on growing feathers. Soft pops come from him as his bones alter while his skull slowly elongates while feathers grow. His vision alters and it takes a few seconds to stabilize. The changes that were physically finish and the final step has the instincts of a crow bubbles up. Familiarity with the crow's instincts allows him to keep his grip on the 'controls'.

"Good, good! Stretch your wings a little, please." Terry merely caws in acknowledgement, deciding not to use thought speak just yet. Flaring his wings, Terry crouches and leaps into the air, he begins to flap his wings.

After a few seconds, he climbs into the air and begins to circle about within the circle. Flying helps him calm most of his emotions while he feels the crow's interest in a number of shiny metal wires, chips, and the blinking lights. Terry allows him to cushion himself within the instincts for a few seconds, he hears a conversation but he doesn't listen to it, more interested in keeping the crow within from acting on its urges.

"Now then, please land but before you de-Morph, try casting a spell." It takes a few seconds for Terry to realize that was directed at him and without thinking, replies, sending to everyone in the room, :Yes sir.:

"What was that?" A startled voice asks and a bemused voice replies, "Though speak, it's the native way the Andalites talk. It's not telepathy, just thought broadcasting."

Terry moves into a landing, going for a hovering touch down. Once his talons click, it takes him a bit to dig deep within him, gently moving pass the crow's instincts to touch upon his very much restrained magic. Before touching, he tries to decide what spell to use before just deciding on a simple light spell. Light flares about him, startling his crow's instincts but he keeps the crow from reacting as he does his best to keep the light stable, waiting for Beelzebub to tell him to stop.

"Ok, thank you." Terry lets go of his magic and the light fades. He hadn't thought to see if he could use magic while in a Morph, he had been too busy trying to keep his magic under control when he Morphs into mundane beasts.

Stretching his wings a bit, Terry begins to de-Morph, the first part of the Morph to go was the last part to happen, the crow's instincts retreat from his mind and he didn't keep his magic in check as it helps speed his return to his natural form. Then he finds himself standing in the circle without his shirt or footwear, he quickly conjures a white shirt and sandals as soon as he notices this. His face heating up slightly over the fact he is under dressed.

"Well done, now then, please morph into either of your larger Morphs, don't rein in your magic please." Beelzebub states and he nods in acknowledgement.

Terry considers which of the two to use before taking in the size of the circle into account. Stallion it is. He decides and unlike with Morphing into the crow, he just focuses on the want to become a horse and with very little effort, his body is already shifting as his wings from his back erupt from his back. By the time he falls forward, his hands sport three toes tipped with hooves and covered in dark green coat. The stallion's instincts surface just as his horn finishes growing and his body finishes growing, twenty hands in height.

"Impressive, most impressive." Terry hears the Leviathan say in approval, he flickers an ear towards that direction. "Indeed." It takes him a second to realize it was the Lucifer who spoke, he shifts his right wing a bit while he moves his head, looking towards Beelzebub while he feels the stallion within trying to take actions concerning the Satans, like chasing Asmodeus, Beelzebub, and Lucifer out of the room, herding Leviathan away from them, or fleeing the room due to the smell of an unknown canine.

The smell of the canine makes him nervous, Terry does his best to keep from entering a blind panic as he hears the soft growls from said canine. He shakes his head, causing his white mane to move back and forth and sweeps his tail. Once more, he hears more then listens to the conversation going on around him, he is more focus on keeping the stallion's instincts under control.

His ears go back as a particular canine growl bark echos, he flares his wings as he rears up as his control over the stallion's instincts overwhelm him. His wings flap as he lets out a bellowing throaty scream. His magic lashing out to the primal emotion, causing a bit of a wind storm to stir up. As he mentally fights to regain control, he hears a calm, soothing voice approaching.

As Terry wins, he finds that the Lucifer is standing next to him, gently stroking his neck. :Sorry, I was warned that prey instincts can be overpowering, particularly their flight instincts.: He admits sheepishly and privately to the Satan next to him.

"Give it time, it's quiet an impressive that you managed to stay as calm as you have been, given present company." The red haired Devil reassures him while continuing to stroke his neck.

After a few minutes, Beelzebub gestures for the Lucifer to move away, saying, "Alright, I have enough data as of now concerning this Morph."

Terry lets out a sigh and proceeds to de-Morph, which has him once more without either conjured item, which as he moves to stand, he recreates them. Oddly enough, he finds his emotions not as intense as before, although he does feel a bit mentally exhausted. Hopefully, he won't have as much trouble with the Minotaur's instincts, they were carnivores after all. Then again, I could just end up a mundane bull.

Ignoring that thought, he waits for Satan Ajuka to try to Morph the Minotaur. Terry notices that the Asmodeus is still awake, which he recalls is an unusual state for the elder Devil, well, according to gossip that has been passed to him. As his nervousness begins to rise, the Beelzebub says, "Ok, I believe I am ready for you to try the Minotaur."

Nodding, Terry closes his eyes and begins to visualize the young bull Minotaur that he Acquired. He feels his magic bubble like it seems to do before he Morphs for the first time. Then, after a few minutes, the image of the Minotaur fades as his magic stills. Then his body begins to alter, only this time, his magic seems to... hum? His own magic seems to be undergoing a change, not much of one but, it's the surface flavor, its texture, maybe, that seems to have altered. As he tries to pin point what about it had changed, he can tell that its only on the surface though, below, it still feels the same.

The pops end and as he opens his eyes, he feels instincts rise up, not fully like that of the stallion's or that lion's. The smell of the canine and the noise stirs the Minotaur's instincts, causing his ears to move and him to snort while giving his head a toss. He keeps a firm grip on his magic while asserting his own control over the instincts of the Minotaur, which do try to fight him but he finds fair easier to dominate then his previous experiences.

Confident of his control, he begins to take a look at his new Morph. Surprisingly, his coat isn't green, it's black though with a touch of white on his muzzle. His horns, from what he can tell, are as black as his coat. Moving his arms, he clutches and clutches the 'fingers'. Moving his tongue, he tries to see if he can form words but it's no go as he feels his throat being too thick and his tongue to be too heavy, inflexible.

"Hmm, that's interesting... Yes, how odd..." Terry hears the Beelzebub murmur softly. "Try that light spell, please."

He nods and his magic seems kind of slow, kind of sticky but as he draws below the surface, it reacts as it should. With his hands before him, he wills a ball of light to form in the space. His magic keeps wanting to do something different if he didn't keep his concentration on how his magic flows, which lightens his grip upon his Minotaur instincts but it seems that the Minotaur within seems fascinated with the ball of light so the bull's instincts are fairly calm, even though the canine seems to be come a great deal more active behind that wall.

Likely been fed Minotaur meat on a daily basis. He concludes while doing his best to keep the ball stable, which is taking more and more out of him in a mental sense. Finally, he loses the connection and finds himself panting, a bit physically weak from keeping the spell going.

"Seven minutes and thirty-one seconds... Hmmm... Interesting... Yes, thank you, you can revert now." Satan Ajuka Beelzebub tells him and he grunts while he feels hunger begin to take hold within the Minotaur's instinctive drive.

Given his exhaustion, both mental and magical, it takes some minutes to de-Morph and he just doesn't have the energy to conjure the shirt or footwear. Being fairly tired, Terry doesn't overly question who's the one to send him back to his residence, he wants a snack and his bed.

Within ten minutes, he's in his room, on his bed, letting his exhaustion carry him off to dream land.

As the young Devil vanishes, Serafall reflects on what she witnessed concerning young Oriax. "I thought we were going to have him try the Cerberus." Falbium muses.

"I learnt that he had just Acquired that Minotaur just yesterday and hadn't given it a try. It works out better this way, it'll be a reward at some point in the future." Ajuka states and she nods in agreement.

"Now we just need to borrow one of the humans. It shouldn't be that hard, given it'll allow us to see if they can Morph into magical beasts like young Terrance can." The Devil muses as she glances towards Sirzech with an expression of inquiry.

"Very interesting, and none of you heard him that time I was at his side?" The red head asks once more and she replies, "Yes. It's something they can do, select who they wish to converse with. Which aids in their spying on the invading bugs."

"Useful, that. Then they would need a way to converse. Interesting that they managed to keep that when transformed." Falbium remarks.

Then a musical tone echos and all turn to look towards Ajuka to find him already moving to answer the phone. "Why yes, he is here, hang on, I'll get him on the phone right now."

Checking the time, Serafall notices that she's going to be late for her fitting of her new costume for the new TV series that test audiences seem overly approving of. "Looks like I best be off. See you guys at our next meeting." She says before activating a teleportation circle.

To be continued . . .

Magicians are Human, Right?: Animorphs

I don't own Animorphs and High School DxD!

"... and that's why we need to know more about Devils." Marco states upon Terry opening the door. The eleven year old Devil can't help but tilt his head to the right as he look up at the much taller human teen.

"Real smooth, Marco." Rachel is clearly wearing a bemusing expression while Marco does his best to hide his embarrassment by countering with a comment involving how diplomatic Buffy can be in the show as Terry moves to permit the group of teens into his house. He wasn't really following the flow of the conversation going on between the blond girl and the usual joker of the group.

Once the Animorphs enter, Terry closes the door and locks it. The teens quickly moving to sit about his sitting room that's near the wide window, doing their best to bunch up, making him feel like the fox among the hens. "So... why do you need to know more about Devils?" Terry inquires as he moves to one of the chairs who's backs facing the window.

To be honest, he thought they'd work up the nerve for this conversation a month into their association. Particularly Marco given his mother is reported to being dead, likely wanting to be assured that his mother is either dead or still alive. Heck, I figured Cassie would be inquiring into magic concerning how it's used to heal people.

As a silence slowly takes on its own life, Terry reflects on the fact that, it's been little over a week since his unscheduled meeting with the Four Satans. It's nearing lunch time and it's a Saturday, so it's clear that they plan to do their best to spend this weekend trying to learn something about the Supernatural World or about him, at the very least.

"Can anyone learn to do magic or do we have to make a pact with a Devil to do it?" Tobias' eyes widen, clearly suddenly wanting to sink into the floor, the kid can be very confident and rather bold when it comes to fighting, outside of it... A cute, harmless looking rodent that most females coo over. He admits to himself.

"Magicians do require the ability to make use of the energies commonly known as Magic." Terry answers in a slow manner. "As a Devil, I am a Being of Magic, although I will admit that not every Devil can use their Magic beyond simply existing."

"As for the whole making pacts with Devils in order to use Magic? Doesn't happen as often as it once did, what with them getting organized into their own World Council." Terry admits, after all, Melphisto is on that same council. "These days, Rating Games viva the Evil Piece system are far more popular these days then creating their own Order of Magicians when it comes to status among the newer generations of Devils."

"The Evil Piece system?" Cassie repeats and Terry sighs, unsure how any of them will react to the idea of humans converting into Devils through the means of magic items done up as Chess pieces. There's no denying that Devils have abused the system to their own ends, converting a human who they fancy only to discard them in some fashion when they find the next must have member of their Peerage, pretty much causing trading away the new Devil for an Evil Piece or treating them in such a way that they turn on their 'loving' patron, becoming 'Stray' Devils and having some form of bounty on them.

"Devils had a civil war between two differing thoughts on the course of how our race should continue on into the future. The Old Faction, as they are known, wanted to keep up efforts of enslaving humans. They believed in the ideals that the original Lucifer used to convince our Ancestors to his cause, that our very existence is about acting on our most basic impulses, of us just slaughtering beings just because we could." Terry kind of dodges the question, doing his best to explain some history as to why the Evil Piece system came into being.

"Real heart warming stuff there, Angel." Marco pipes in and he glances towards the teen before leaning back in his chair, countering, "There's a reason the very name Devil causes people to imagination a chuckling, pain loving, soul crushing being then something a kin to ill tempered, whimsy, word bind, tricksters like the Fae or the kind of impression you get at the mention of a Unicorn."

"So never trust a Devil? Really not helping your image here, Terry." Jake points out and he shrugs. As far as Terry is concerned, they need to know not to trust someone just because they are a member of an 'allied' species. They would always be better off learning to trust individuals of a species then the whole species themselves.

"They lost, the Old Faction." Cassie states and Terry nods.

"And we didn't execute their whole forces due to the fact that our race couldn't deal with the fallout of those deaths." Terry tells the Animorphs and watches how long it takes for them to draw their conclusions to that statement. Once it's clear they kind of got the idea, he either confirms or corrects their guesses, "The new Satans saw that the path our race was on was going to lead to our extinction and fought to take over the leadership of our race. With our numbers at a new low, thanks to that civil war, we needed a way to quickly increase our numbers." He sighs, "We had entered into a kind of Cold War with Heaven and the Fallen, which has entered into some kind of presto-peace these days and couldn't appear to be weaken from said war, even when it's clear we were."

"So the Evil Piece system?" Tobias questions. Cassie's own face is rather unreadable at this point while the others' faces shone with curiosity.

"It converts other species into Devils." Terry tells them. "Not just humans, I'm talking about races like Dragons, Youkai, Gaints, Vampires, Werewolves, Reapers ..." Marco's expression at the mentioning of Vampires clearly means he's going to be talking about those by the end of the afternoon. "The pieces are done up like Chess pieces, with the King always residing in the Head of the Peerage, them being the King of the others. One Queen piece, a pair of Bishops, Knights, Rooks, and eight Pawns with those who end up with said piece being, oh so originally called after said piece that converted them into Devils."

Cassie's eyes narrow after a minute of thinking this over, he's in no rush to talk about this subject. "What happens if the piece is taken out?"

"Still a Devil, just lacking the boosts said piece grants." He replies.

"And these boosts are?" Rachel asks before Cassie does.

"Queen is as versatile as its game piece, granting physical and magical boosts." Terry begins to list said information. "Bishops get boost to their spells and natural magical abilities. Knight get a speed boost, Rooks strength and durability, and Pawns gain the ability to temporary transform into any of those piece with permission of their King in a fight."

"All I know is that the King seals a portion of the holder's magic, in doing so, it allows the various pieces to be used on the recently dead, the body needs to be intact for it to be successful." Terry explains. "I don't know how they were created nor do I own a set of Evil Pieces. It's something a parent of mine put their foot down on."

"So, how do we know if we have any talent in magic?" Jake asks curiously and he runs a hand through his green hair while the teens exchange looks, with Tobias somehow looking like a hopeful kick puppy.

"Well... I could get beginner books, it's more of a question of which style would be best. And yes, there's two styles that I'm aware of, Western and Eastern." Terry admits. "But the thing is, the War-Prince pretty much bargained to be the involved in any Supernatural deals involving you guys, so if you really want to learn magic, you're going to have to talk him into signing off on the thing."

They clearly hadn't known about that little fact given the various surprised looks. "So, he pretty much stepped in as our parental guardian in this huh? So, he's our what, God-Father?" Marco pipes up while Rachel asks, "So does this mean we have to stop this discussion here? I mean, I kind of want to hear about these Rating Games along with what fashions are popular among Devils."

"I don't see why I can't keep answering your questions, but I do have access to ViceWeb so we could move this to my office." Terry admits. "Plus access stream TV from the Underworld."

"Wait, you mean you can stream TV shows viva the internet?! Seriously? What's next, three D TV? Interactive movies?" Marco dramatically demands and Terry shrugs, saying, "Well, most tech gets used for a few years in the Underworld before being pushed into the Human world viva our human companies, unless humans develop such on their own, then we just take that and do some modding to fix a few problems."

"So... cars?" Cassie asks and as they stand, Terry replies, "Humans, same with fridges. I think we tried for electronic cars, but, well..." He gestures by the end and Marco snorts in amusement while the others smile in bemusement, waiting for Terry to lead them to his office.

Location: (Not Spoiling it!)

"Huh, so one just became active then?" A cultured male voice says into the phone. "Yes sir, and they have already fled. Heading towards the area Angels have been most interested in as of late." The lackey's confirms, clearly unsure of this particular development.

"In that direction... It's got a new Owner, if I recall?" The first speaker asks and the lackey answers, "Yes, a Terrance of House Oriax, was ten years old when he was given the title of Land Holder, he is son of Helen of House Oriax, second cousin to their Great Marquis."

"Helen, huh? I haven't heard much from her in recent years..." The speaker muses, recalling said female. "Any idea who his sire is?" She never married, not for a lack of trying on her family's part. He muses with a humorless smirk.

"We've tried compiling a list of Devils who had known relations with her. None share Terrance's hair nor share enough features to confirm anything." DNA testing won't show anything, what with Devils being magical in nature.

"I'll review what you have assembled on young Terry then, be sure to send it, no matter how rough." The first speaker orders and the reply is, of course, "Yes sir."

"Is there anything more to report?" And then the lackey begins to give him update on other agendas along with profit reports.

All the while, the male's thoughts circle around the Sacred Gear that just went active and of the spawn of Helen Oriax.

Location: Jester's Spine Estate

Closing the file, Helen Oriax places the fold onto her desk with the others. The files were of humans that her Terrance has had regular contact with, human friends and owners of frequented restaurants to employees and clients. She had moved a few off to the side, studying the file concerning one Allen Samuel Tenant and his adopted son. "What kind of project do you think Project Era is about?" She asks the spy master, one code name Owl.

"It's a game system. This Allen is more interested in creating a title game for this system then in creating the system itself, which means he already has the system completed." Owl responds in a gender neutral tone, using a spell to eliminate any gender voice tone.

Helen hums as she taps the file, she has her suspensions about this Allen. No human has natural blue hair, not without a supernatural heritage lurking in the family tree. "He's trying his best to make it as realistic as possible, so I foresee it taking him a few years to get all of it into coding." Owl continues, though she wonders if this Allen has plans on 'discovering' a way to speed this up, likely some new software or hardware.

Helen's golden eyes flicker to the paused recording of her son and Allen entering into one of the Satan's office buildings. "Satan Beelzebub's visit does seem to indicate high technology is involved." The visit to Satan Leviathan also indicates non-Devil ancestry. She muses.

"No idea of how long their meeting had been?" Helen asks and Owl nods, replying, "The security spells the Beelzebub are slowly fading, we are unsure the number set up to begin with. The holes we carefully created within the wards for our uses have been either written out or trapped." The house that she had warded personally for her Terrance is now beyond her control, not something she likes one bit, but can't do anything about as of right now.

"We'll wait a year before suggesting an examination of the wards to see what needs to be re-powered or re-worked." Helen decides, not likely the fact she has to wait or that the house is not off limits in her magical security. "See if you can't get a human to try to get into his office by October to copy the computer's hard drive."

"I hear that Heaven is seeking to speak with the Satans concerning stationing an Angel in Terrance's Territory. It seems they have been assembling resources to investigate this odd issue of theirs." Owl informs her, this was new news to her and Helen glances at a particular map on the wall of monitors that shows the sightings of said Heaven's agents, including those the Church had sent.

"Any new connection your circle has dug up?" Helen asks and Owl shakes their head, "Nothing beyond being members of this Sharing organization." Ah yes, that latest volunteer social club that's only starting to make waves among the humans of that State.

"Are we sure this Sharing has no Supernatural connections?" Owl asks her, as she's the one more active among Magicians, something it seems Terrance is following in her foot steps, unknowingly. Helen can't help a slightly smug at the thought, oh, Terrance knew she was skilled in Magic but likely doesn't know to the depth of her skills, knowledge, or even her full connections. She is fairly certain that she numbers among the top fifty magic users among Devils. "None." She says confidently.

"Terrance has been researching them by mundane means." Owl informs her and glances towards the masked Devil. "It's odd, they are a rather clean organization. No scandals or negative gossip." Owl continues on and she frowns, considering before remembering the date of its founding.

"It's a young organization, they must be putting pressure on their members to maintain a certain level of decorum. Give it time and its rotten core will begin to show." She says in a dismissive tone, after all, it's just a human social club, so of course its just a matter of time negative press begins to dirty the Sharing.

The next order of business is more in the usual vein, which rumors making the gossip rounds have a hint of truth to any news concerning Stray Devils looking to make a few 'bucks'. Soon enough, their meeting comes to a close, she having to attend a party concerning the newest TV Show that the Leviathan is trying to promote, some kiddie show for Devils involving a transparent plot of magic girl something, it's still looking for their lead, or at least that's what gossip says.

To be continued . . .

Discussion over Tacos: Animorphs

I don't own Animorphs and High School DxD!

Elfangor isn't sure what to make of the expression his son, both naturally and adopted, is making this morning. It's Sunday and the Animorphs, as they decided to call themselves, had spend most of yesterday visiting the young Devil, asking Terry questions about Devils and the like, probably. It kind of looks like the look those puppies and some adult dogs give but then, Tobias is human and thus lacking the fuzzy faces and expressive movable ears.

It stirs some kind of human instinct and although he's already reached over, ruffling his son's blond hair, it hadn't really gone away. So, as he walks out of the kitchen, the plates at the sink, he glances back at Tobias before continuing up to his room. He has a meeting to get to, it seems that Gafinilan-Estrif-Valad had survived the battle. Elfangor had created a minor web site using a particular, agreed on cypher to feel out if any of his fellow Warriors had survived the destruction of the fleet.

As he opens the window, Tobias asks, "Ah, well, we kind of what to learn to use magic. I mean, we're going to end up interacting with that side of the world and Terry mentioned that we need to you to sign off on it. So, will you?"

Elfangor blinks turning to his son, not really knowing how to response but there's this look, this one really seems to tug on his emotions. Loren would know what that looks means... He thinks to himself before feeling guilt over the fact that he hasn't broached the subject of trying to restore her memories. He hasn't dared look for her, not when he still don't know how far to trust the Devils with some of his most important secrets, those closest to his 'heart' as the human saying goes.

"If any of you have the talent for it, then I don't see why you can't learn the skills to make use of that talent." Elfangor admits after realizing that the look upon Tobias' face seems to be taking a more emotional wrenching turn. "At the moment, I have a lead to check on, to see if its genuine then we may have another experience Warrior to add to our ranks or at least, help train you."

Tobias' eyes light up and beams a smile as he agrees though that turns into concern at the idea he might be heading into a trap. "Do you want back up?" Elfangor shakes his head, saying, "I don't want you to change your plans on my behalf. I recall were going to a movie this afternoon, weren't you? You guys have this weekend to relax, after all."

"Yea, I guess..." Tobias admits and Elfangor wishes Loren was here, she desires to be a part of their son's life, aware of the invasion, and standing by his side in this. He begins to de-Morph, waiting until he doesn't have a mouth to say, :And perhaps we can do something later tonight, when I get back? Just the two of us?:

"Like going flying together?" The young teen asks and he nods his head in reply, which causes the blond to grin. "See you later then." And Tobias heads back down stairs, likely to make a phone call.

Within seconds, he's already Morphing into his Crow morph, he had done research on far flying birds and had recently acquired a duck, an American Coot, he hadn't been picky about gender. Once outside of the limits, he'll switch Morphs. Once done, he flap hops to the open window and once through, flies off, his mind on the location they agreed upon.

- T - - - X - - - T -

Location: Meeting Spot

Elfangor notices a man near the agreed upon spot. He had been racing about the location, in the form of a grey squirrel, checking to be sure it isn't a trap. So far, so good, though he would prefer if his Morph's instincts would stop wanting to follow after a particular female squirrel, he hadn't known the gender of the squirrel he had acquired up until now and he guesses it could be worst. He could be the female and the male could be trying to get his attention.

:Warrior Gafinilan?: Elfangor privately broad casts and the man stiffens, ah, so it seems his target has arrived. He climbs down the tree and darts towards the man as he is slowly glancing around the area.

"War-Prince?" He hears the man inquires just as he makes it to the other's leg. :I see you have success in Acquiring a human morph.: Elfangor muses with his tail twitching and it takes all of his control to stand still.

It takes the man a few seconds to notice him and there's a soft snort. He moves off to a few feet before he begins to de-Morph and soon, the other does the same. :Sir, it is good to see you alive.: The Warrior tells him.

:I feared the worst.:

:I almost didn't, to be honest. Visser Three himself tracked my ship down to its crash site. I was very despite and wounded.: Elfangor admits, he allows his guilt at his welcoming his dead by said enemy to show. :A small group of natives had noted my approach and had arrived to the site. I had plans for a last stand while giving the group the basics on the enemy and gifting them with a way to fight.:

With his main eyes, he studies Gafinilan's slow realization of what he just admitted. :You didn't, right?: His fellow war veteran and he gives the equivalent of a guilty smile to the other. :You did? But, the the Law!:

:I will deal with the fallout of that Law. And yes, I still have my ship along with the device.: Elfangor pauses. :Humans are not the only intelligent race upon this world.:

Gafinilan's expression becomes rather bewildered then serious. :The reports seemed thorough upon this planet.: Elfangor chuckles as he moves his weight a bit, before explaining, :I have entered into diplomatic relations with the race known as Devils. I have spoken with their diplomatic leader and worked out the beginnings of our contact.:

:They have abilities that are highly unusual and technology advancements ahead of the ones available to humans.: He continues. :I Acquired one and the Morph was not a clone of said Devil. Nor did I Acquire their unique abilities.:

Now it's clear that Gafinilan looks like he just smacked him with his tail blade, :Are you sure? That is not how it works...: Elfangor just nods and begins to Morphs. Once done, he says, "The Devil had dark green hair and had been ten years old. As you can see, I have blue hair and an adult. Oddly enough, the blood results say I am human. As I said, they are an odd race and they are not the only hidden species upon this world."

:Sir, my disorder, it's, well...: Gafinilan admits after some silence hanging between them and it takes Elfangor a few seconds to recall just what disorder Gafinilan suffers from. :Mertil, sir, he's allergic to Morphing. He lost... he can't regrow his... tail.:

Elfangor would have been horrified once, but now, now he can see how to use this, after all, he can't spend as much time needed in the Underworld, not when he's got a job`to hide behind. "They may have ways to treat your disorder and maybe, maybe, do something about the allergy, if only just once to allow Mertil to regrow his tail." He admits slowly. "You see, they have other ways to disguise themselves through their own abilities... Illusion spells I think, and we kind of do look like one of the races native here, I believe. Centaurs."

:You want us to ingrain ourselves with these... Devils?: Gafinilan asks and he looks into his fellow Andalite's main eyes as he says, "You'll be in a better position to see more of their culture then I, in the Underworld. Plus, their leaders are interested in our experiences beyond this solar system along with what other threats there can be beyond just the Yeerks."

:If you are sure, War-Prince.: Gafinilan states in a neutral tone, the use of his title a reminder that he is the higher ranking Warrior between them. He sighs, but he's sure that Gafinilan will see why when the time comes, after all, just because most races on this planet don't have space travel technology doesn't mean they aren't more advance in other ways, capable of things their technological know how can't match, not right now.

"Please take me to Warrior Mertil." He asks once he checks to be sure his spelled cell phone is in his pocket. He'll need to phone Terry once he's seen Mertil with his own eyes. Terry should be able to ward whatever spot Mertil is recovering at before bringing them medical supplies, maybe a healing potion of some kind?

